Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2013

http://archive.org/details/christianherald35unse

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JANUARY 3, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 1. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

LAURETTA

From a Painting by Jules Le Febre

Questions and Answers

E. H. B., Naperville, Ill. There is an old story which runs something like this: Two armies once met on a field of battle, one army large, the other small. The general of the large army sent an ambassador to the other commander asking him to surrender, because he did not want to cut the small army to pieces. The second general, calling out three men, commanded the first to leap from a precipice, and he obeyed; the second to put a dagger into his heart, and he obeyed; the third obeyed another fatal command. The general told the messenger that his entire army was composed of men like these. The leader of the larger army, upon hearing this report, immediately surrendered. Where can this story be found? Is it legendary or historical?

The story can be found in Baxendale's Dictionary of Anecdote, paragraph 3994. No names are found in connection with the narrative, but there is no reason why it could not be historical. Incidents of courage and obedience as striking as this are found in the authentic histories of Greece and early Rome. This incident is said to have occurred in the ninth century, the characters being a king, with 20,000 men, and a young general with 500.

Rev. E. P. Boynton, Kendallville, Ind., writes, apropos of a recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG concerning the sinlessness of Christ: "The Bible nowhere says that Christ 'could' not sin. It does definitely and plainly imply that Christ could sin. The mere fact that he was tempted is proof of that. Either Christ could sin, or, in his utter ignorance, he thought he could, or there could have been no real temptation—that, I am sure, is self-evident. If Christ could not sin, there is no merit for him whatever in the fact that he was 'sinless.' If Christ could not sin, then there is no inspiration and encouragement for us in the fact of his pure and spotless life, and much of the Gospel's sweetness and power is gone for me, and gone from the message I have to deliver to men who are tempted and tried to the utmost. It is not merely that Christ in us is able to keep us from sin, but that Christ in our place was able to keep from even a suspicion of sin, that appeals to us mightily and makes the Gospel message sweet and rich to us."

A. D. Y., Plant City, Fla. Please explain Rom. 5: 7.

The passage is "For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die." The apostle is illustrating the fact of the Atonement by the facts of everyday life. He says it is hard to find one man who will die for another, even if that other be righteous; but that for a man who is really good (a stronger, warmer word than righteous) some might be found who would be willing to die. Then follows the keen application: Though we were neither good nor righteous, yet Christ died for us.

F. O. B., Grand Island, Neb. There is a man at Westerville, Neb., said to be 117 years of age. I should like to ask, if this man had saved a cent a day for a hundred years, what the sum would amount to, figuring compound interest at seven per cent.

$3,170.37.

Mrs. E. D., Central Bridge, N. J. Will you please explain through THE MAIL-BAG the meaning of I. Tim. 5: 24-25?

Some men's sins are so open and flagrant that they are convicted before being brought to trial. Others hide their sins so that the conviction comes only after investigation. Likewise some good works are of such a nature or done in such a way that they cannot escape detection; and even good deeds done secretly will ultimately become known. "Enquiry will bring them to the light of day in spite even of the wish or humility of the doer."

H. E. F., Durand, Wis. The brethren of Jesus are named in the New Testament as James, Joses, Simon and Judas. In Matt. 12: 46; Matt. 13: 55; John 2: 12, and Acts 1: 14 they are generally understood to be proper brothers, all being named together conjointly with the mother of Jesus, and the same is inferred from John 7: 5. Some of the early church writers, however, held that they were merely relatives or cousins (sons of Mary the sister of Jesus' mother) it being a common custom to call all immediate relatives, nephews, cousins and half-brothers, by the general designation of "brothers" or "brethren." Further, the early fathers of the church held that Mary, the mother of Jesus, had no other children. The question still remains open whether they were not the sons of Joseph by a former marriage, and therefore half-brothers to Jesus. On the other hand Matt. 1: 25 and Luke 2: 7 favor the view that they were brothers and that Jesus was the "first-born." Sisters of Jesus are also mentioned in Matt. 13: 56 and Mark 6: 3, but their names are not given. Much has been written on the subject without positive determination, although most modern commentators hold to the opinion that the "brethren" in question were the sons of Joseph and Mary and that Mary's mother's sister had two sons, named James and Joses.

Reader, Fruitvale, Cal. There are a goodly number of good people who say nobody, under our present order of society, can be in a legitimate business and be a practical Christian. Now, would Jesus, if he were on earth to-day, be an upholder of the present capitalistic system, or would he condemn it?

Jesus said it was a hard thing for a rich man to enter into the kingdom; but he also showed, in the parable of the talents and other parables, that riches, properly regarded, and not held as a personal possession to be used for selfish and worldly purposes, but as a trust to be applied conscientiously, may be made a source of blessing. There are many men of large wealth who are useful members of society and who administer their means wisely and conscientiously. Besides, we are not to be the judges of the hearts of men. It has become a habit with many to condemn wealth and its possessors indiscriminately; and it is true that there is much in the present conditions of society that is open to legitimate criticism, but honest men of strict integrity can be found in every honorable line of business, and an active life is as much respected to-day as when Prov. 22: 29 was written. A man who directs his efforts mainly to the acquisition of wealth, without regard to its responsibilities, incurs great spiritual danger. For the use we make of our talents and opportunities we shall be held strictly accountable.

Mrs. M. A. S., Akron, O. Would it not be a good idea to have the Ten Commandments taught to the children in the day school and Sunday School? Neither Jews nor Catholics could object.

The idea is a good one. No person or sect could offer any reasonable objection to this. The Ten Commandments are rarely taught to children now. Every child should be made to learn them.

R. J. A., Puyallup, Wash. The tithe is of the "increase." See Deut. 14: 22-28; 26: 12, also the 28th chapter of same book, and other related passages. If we act conscientiously, we will not "rob God" by multiplying our expenditures until nothing is left for his work. "The liberal soul shall be made fat," and this especially applies to the character of our gifts to God's work. While we are not to devote to that work money which we may rightfully owe to our creditors, we can exercise self-denial in many things, so that our tithable "increase" (or, if no increase, then our surplus over and above all proper expenses) may be such as to assure a liberal gift to the cause of religion.

H. H. W., Camden, N. J. A friend asked me what the length of Noah's Ark was, and how it could have contained two of a kind of every animal.

According to the directions in Gen. 6: 15, the Ark was 300 cubits long, 50 cubits broad and 30 cubits high. Bible students have been greatly puzzled over the length of the cubit, which seems to have varied greatly in ancient times. It is evident, however (from Deut. 3: 11), that it was taken as a measure from the human body, and may have been either from the wrist to the end of the third finger, or the entire length of the lower or forearm, from the elbow to the wrist, or even from the elbow to the finger-point. One authority, Celsus, says the cubit was identified with the ulna or under and larger of the two bones of the arm. The Egyptian cubit, which the Hebrews may have taken, measured six hand-breadths and the Jewish Rabbins (as the Mishna states) assigned six hand-breadths to the Mosaic cubit, while Josephus says a cubit was equal to two spans, the span being equal to three hand-breadths. Ezek. 40-5: 43-13 speaks of the cubit "which was a cubit and a hand-breadth" which was the Babylonian cubit. It would thus seem that the Ark, though its size cannot be confidently stated, was a very spacious vessel, probably exceeding 500 feet in length, fully 85 feet broad and over 52 feet high. In 1609 Peter Jansen of Horn, in Holland, built a vessel of these proportions and found that it would stow fully a third more cargo than ships of its size built in the ordinary manner. It had 3,600,000 cubic feet of space, and after nine-tenths had been assigned for food storage there was still room for 7,000 pairs of animals, each with 50 cubic feet of space. It was, in fact, a huge floating storehouse rather than a ship.

A. R., Woonsocket, S. Dak. Define the meaning of the old saying, "Hope against hope." Has it any parallel in the Old or New Testament?

The phrase, "Hope against hope and ask till ye receive," is found in Canto V. of Montgomery's poem, The World Before the Flood, and has become a familiar saying. Though the precise language has no parallel, there are many expressions that convey the same meaning. Pope, in his Essay on Man, wrote "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," and Ps. 146: 5 conveys the same idea when it says that when all other expectations fail, our hope is still in God. Paul (in Rom. 5: 4; 15: 13, and also I. Cor. 13: 13, and many other passages) makes hope one of the chief Christian virtues. A fine passage, which might be construed as hoping against hope, is Ps. 119-81.

HELPING MEN WHO HAVE "TOUCHED BOTTOM"

To the Editor of The Christian Herald:

DURING the last six months I have had the pleasure of intimate acquaintance with the work of the Labor Settlement of the Bowery Mission, and as the work of the Settlement here in Wakefield has impressed me so favorably, I wish to write of a few benefits that it has brought to the community, as well as to the church of which I have the honor of being the pastor.

In the first place, the Labor Settlement in Wakefield is a strong rebuke to the men who frequently pass through the town as vagrants, able to work for an honest living, but too lazy to be independent. The parsonage, as a rule, is the stop-over restaurant for these "knights of the road." Formerly they had to be dealt with according to the particular needs of each, and this not only used up considerable time, but it often encouraged the indolent to greater vagrancy. Now we direct them to the Labor Settlement, where they can earn their bread by sweating over a bucksaw. I believe this is permanent charity. At least, the tramp never comes back.

Moreover, the men from the Settlement attend the various meetings of the church, and their ringing sincerity tends to stimulate the members of the church, the younger people in particular, to greater appreciation of the strength and efficacy of the Gospel of Christ. Young people in the church of to-day need to see Christianity applied. They want to see the Gospel actually work. And when the men from the mission modestly tell what God has done for them, our Christian people at once take notice of a power actually working around them, even to the salvation of men hungering and thirsting for righteousness. I gladly bear witness to the new interest in spiritual affairs shown by the church because of what they have seen and heard as they have watched the growth in the lives of the men from the Settlement. Not once have I heard it said: "What a burden these men are!" On the contrary, it is frequently urged: "What a blessing they really are!"

Perhaps the one feature of the Settlement work that appeals most to me is the way the men are gripped for Christ, the way they are braced up in manliness and Christian virtue. It is not enough that the Settlement shall be a clothing store or a restaurant or a workshop for the poor men who touch the bottom in their unfortunate plight. The Settlement must be an altar to these men, where they can catch a glimpse of their possible manhood, as well as their awful sinfulness. This work the Labor Settlement is satisfactorily accomplishing. The men are being transformed into new creatures in Christ Jesus. Under the consecrated leadership of Rev. Mr. Conway, all the men who come to the Wakefield branch of the Settlement are given a vision, and an opportunity of realizing the vision, of a life strong in manliness, pure in Christliness, and noble in conduct.

It is solely because I believe the work is splendidly realizing the Kingdom of God among men that I have written these words of sincere appreciation.

Faithfully yours,

Wakefield, New York City. JOHN W. LAIRD,
Pastor of Grace M. E. Church.

[The Bowery Mission Bread Line, now in full operation and feeding over one thousand homeless and destitute men and boys every morning at one o'clock; the Free Labor Bureau, which brings thousands of the unemployed in contact with employers every season, and the Labor Settlement, where "down-and-outs" are helped back to self-supporting manhood, are all worthy of the generous assistance of our readers. Contributions for the work of the Bowery Mission should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.]

Miscellaneous

A. L. C., Elmwood, Okla. No statistics on the subject.

J. M. S., New Berlin, O. The song book used at Ocean Grove Camp Meeting last season was entitled: Ocean Grove Songs.

A. G. E., New York. Send the deed to the official registrar at the county seat of the county in which the property is situated, accompanied by the recording fee.

E. L. P., Ashtabula, O. No, suicide is nowhere justified in the Bible. It is a crime against God and man. See Paul's advice to the Philippian jailer to do himself "no harm"; also Job's brave resolve even in the midst of his worst afflictions to wait patiently "all the days of his appointed time."

L. A. A., Indian Fields, N. Y. The discussion on "how much does a convert cost?" which we published on November 8, practically exhausts the subject. We do not see how anything could be added to advantage. It is obvious that owing to differences in methods and in comparative outlay, the cost will always vary largely in different localities.

J. E., Owensdale, Pa. The name of David's mother is not given in Scripture. The reference to Abigail, one of the members of Jesse's family, in II. Sam. 17: 25, is frequently misunderstood. The Nahash there mentioned is either another name for Jesse or it refers to Nahash king of Ammon, one of whose wives afterward became the wife of Jesse, as stated in the chronicles of the Jewish church.

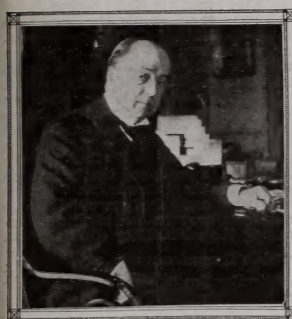
Rev. J. R. R., Cauthornville, Va. Paul, in the passage you quote, was making a cautionary observation for the benefit of parents who unreasonably, and perhaps selfishly, opposed their children's marriage. Such opposition should always be well founded. While the apostle in no sense means to reflect against parental authority, he evidently considers that it may be carried too far. He nowhere recognizes the parent's right to dictate the choice of his child in marriage.

A. C. T., Willcox, Ariz. No one can even approximate the time that has passed since the Creation. The best scholars can only conjecture, and they differ greatly. The dates you see in the margin of many Bibles were calculated by Archbishop Ussher, who lived in the seventeenth century, and whose object was to trace human history backward and forward from the time of Christ. They have nothing to do with the time of creation. The Bible itself (see Gen. 1: 1) gives no clue, but simply says: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

NEW YORK, JANUARY 3, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME



Hon. P. C. Knox, Secretary of State

State Department Building, Washington, D. C.

W. McNeir, Chief Clerk, State Dept.

OUR RUSSIAN TREATY ABROGATED

By WALDON FAWCETT

NEVER, perhaps, in the history of the United States has a serious breach between our government and a friendly power been precipitated so suddenly as in the present strained relations with Russia. For after only a few days of really active agitation, President Taft on December 18 abrogated the existing treaty between the United States Government and Russia.

After seven hours of debate the Senate, on the following day, adopted the resolution which ratified Mr. Taft's action. All attempts to change the wording of the resolution by amendments were defeated, and the final vote of 72 to 0 represented the full strength of the Senate in attendance. The cause of this abrogation is Russia's persistent refusal to honor the passports of American citizens of Jewish faith. The issue is by no means a new one. At frequent intervals for years past the American public has been aroused by recitals of the annoyances to which American Hebrews traveling or attempting to travel in Russia have been subjected. There has been from time to time much agitation of the subject, and various measures of protest have been proposed. But despite the fact that this resentment has been gathering force for so many years, the present radical action of the President came as a surprise not less because of its suddenness than by reason of the unanimity with which our national lawmakers gave it their endorsement.

The remedy to which the national legislators have had recourse is presumably the most effective that can be applied under such circumstances. The abrogation of a treaty between two powers—and particularly a treaty of long standing—is always a serious matter. It is not, to be sure, in any sense equivalent to a termination of diplomatic relations such as is likely to be followed by open warfare, but it indicates serious popular dissatisfaction in the country thus severing sentimental ties. More serious yet, it sadly disturbs if it does not entirely interrupt commercial relations between the two countries. Thus in the absence of a mutual understanding between the United States and Russia, American firms and individuals can do business in the Czar's domain only at their own risk. In short, there is engendered an international coolness that might lead to more serious ill-feeling.

It is more than likely that the officials at St. Petersburg little expected such decisive action by the American Government. The passport discrimination issue has long been the subject of diplomatic interchanges with Russia, and President Taft in a message sent to Congress soon after it convened in the present session reported that progress was being made. These assurances, however, failed to inspire the confidence that might have been felt had it not been for the length of time this issue has been pending, and the reputation of the Russians as skilled diplomatists, adept in the art of prolonging negotiations which include the possibility of an adjustment to their disadvantage. Undoubtedly the popular agitation of this subject throughout the United States during the past few months has been carried on more energetically than at any time in the past, and the protests voiced have carried the more weight by reason of the non-sectarian character of many of the mass meetings of protest. Thus the committee which recently appeared before the Foreign Relations Committees of Congress to urge action was headed by one of the most prominent Hebrews in America—Mr. Oscar S. Straus, former United States Secretary of Commerce and Labor and former United States Ambassador to Turkey—and included in its membership prominent representatives of other religious beliefs, clergymen such as Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D., Rev. Madison C. Peters, D.D., and Rev. Donald C. MacLeod, D.D.

A specimen United States Passport bearing an official number and the State Department Seal.

Mr. John A. Towner, Custodian of Treaties, consulting the recently abrogated Russian Agreement.

The treaty which has been terminated had been in force since the year 1832. The paragraph which is pertinent to the present controversy as fixing the status of American citizens reads as follows: "The inhabitants of their respective States shall mutually have liberty to enter the ports, places and rivers of the territories of each party wherever foreign commerce is permitted. They shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of said territories in order to attend to their affairs, and they shall enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce."

The United States House of Representatives, by a vote of three hundred to one, declared that the government of Russia had violated this treaty by refusing to honor, on account of race and religion, American passports duly issued to American citizens, and that in the judgment of Congress the treaty, for this reason, should be terminated at the earliest possible time. There is little doubt that the resolution as passed by the House could have been immediately adopted by an almost equally decisive vote in the Senate had it not been desired to defer action in the upper house for a short time in the hope that with such evidence of the temper of Congress Russia might be the more ready to terminate satisfactorily the diplomatic negotiations which have been in progress to this same end. President Taft,

Continued on page 21

A SERMON

By

Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D.*

The Art of Peaceable Living

TEXT: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." Romans 12:18

SOCIETY included but three classes—the poor who were beggars, the rich who were sycophants, the soldiers who for gold fulfilled a tyrant's will. Midst such conditions traitors were found in the Senate, poisoners were in the palace, while hired spies knelt side by side with praying Christians. Soon also fierce persecution arose. The disciples experienced the horrors of the dungeon, the thumbscrew and the fagot. Becoming fiendish in cruelty, Nero clothed the Christians in garments dipped in pitch and tar, and used their blazing forms for lighting up his garden party. Outraged and threatened with extermination, the disciples bethought themselves of swords and shields.

How could they live in peace with their destroyers? Instinct whispered: "Defend thyself!" Self-interest said: "Meet storm with storm, and stroke with stroke." But in the moment when persecution was fiercest, Paul urged non-resistance. He bade the disciples meet the spy with pity, meet the jailer with gentleness, meet the executioner with forgiveness, thus heaping coals of fire upon the head of each enemy. In that hour the persecutor made sharp his sword, and Nero starved his lions to-day, that to-morrow the beasts might be the fiercer for human blood. When all was ready the murderers leaped upon the unresisting disciples. Then, indeed, did Christ's disciples go forth as sheep midst wolves. Then did the dove go forth to conquer the eagle and hawk. Having pledged universal conquest to these sons of gentleness, Christ sent his peacemakers forth midst all the thunder of universal battle.

Difficulty of Peaceable Living

Paradoxical, indeed, Christ's principles of right living. "Abhor that which is evil, yet love the evildoer; live peaceably with friends, yet maintain peace with enemies." What unique contradiction meets us here! History tells us of a Roman soldier who was condemned to beasts in the Coliseum. When the lion sprang into the arena, it stopped, startled by the voice of the soldier. A moment later the lion was crawling at the prisoner's feet and licking his hands.

The event proved that once, while passing through the African forest, this soldier chanced upon a lion suffering from a thorn that had passed through the foot. By extracting the thorn he made the wild beast to be his friend and a pet, only to meet the lion years later in the arena. Strange, indeed, would it be if this story were true, yet less strange than that such a man as the beloved disciple, John, should by his gentleness extract the fangs of cruelty from a Nero or a Domitian—monsters, these, who exceeded untamed lions in fierceness. Yet good men and true are commanded to maintain peace with all men, while also maintaining an uncompromising hostility against every form of iniquity. But how can Moses, heir to the throne of Egypt, abhor the cruelties perpetrated upon his enslaved brethren and yet live peaceably with the tyrants who abused those he loves? How can David, dodging the javelin that Saul hurled, hunted like a partridge upon the mountains before the cruel king, live at peace with the tyrant who pursued him? How can Paul live peaceably with the mob at Ephesus, who stoned the scholar through the streets and left him half dead by the wayside?

The Victory of Peace

And yet, if Christ abhorred sin and breathed forth words that were like flames of fire consuming men's iniquities, he also maintained peace with Judas, who betrayed his Master, and with Pilate, who tortured the Man in whom he said he found no fault. Leaving this word, "Blessed are the peacemakers," as a watchword for his disciples, Christ sent them forth to war against iniquity, indeed, but also to live peaceably with the transgressor, whose sins they must needs destroy. And if we recall the early conflict of Christianity with heathenism, and review the story how it conquered the Roman world, we shall find that the disciples achieved their victory because they were peacemakers and peacelovers. It has been said that each persecuted Christian by his courage and Christian spirit conquered his own jailer and executioner.

An Era of Quarrelsomeness

Full eighteen centuries have passed, and once more has come an era when peacemakers are despised, and physical force is enthroned. So far is mankind from believing in peacemaking that England's emblem is not the lamb, but the lion; and America's banner is emblazoned not with the dove, but with the eagle, with its beak and talons; while Russia's symbol is still the bear.

The foreign nations, whose harbors are crowded with torpedo-boats and warships, whose strongholds bristle with cannons—these nations that stand over against each other like armed fortresses, and to-morrow may cause Europe to tremble with the march of armed men—these peoples exhibit anything save a belief in social progress through peaceloving and peacemaking. To-day the world believes that progress rides forward upon a powder cart. The angels' song of "Peace on earth" has given place to the song of the bombshell and the shriek of the cannon-ball. If the sword has fallen from man's hand, it is that it may be replaced with the pistol.

That nation ranks first among the nations that has the greatest number of ironclads and the largest standing army. Upon the tomb of the old Christian scholar who lies buried in Carthage is carved an open book and a lighted lamp. For the sage loved to lighten each good man to the truth and the light. When an English yacht anchored off Constantinople the owner lost overboard some treasure, and sent a diver down to recover it. But the diver hurried back horror-stricken, and refused to return because he found himself midst human bodies standing up in the water, each being held down by a sack filled with stones. Surely peaceableness is not characteristic of the Turk! Should we choose a symbol for the Turk it would not be the dove, but the butcher-knife, and a tight noose for the neck.

The Conflicts of Life

In view of the fact that the feuds of the past have cost this generation the rich treasures of antiquity, it would seem as if former feuds would fully satisfy man's love of conflict. Yet, strangely enough, ours is by way of pre-eminence an era of strife. Society has become litigious. Our age has cheers for him who is a good fighter and rides rough-shod over opponents on his way to certain victory. Gentleness is despised, brute force is enthroned.

Peaceableness is counted lack of fire and spirit. Many suppose that a meek man is one in whom the red blood has been bleached out white. The tendency to quarrelsomeness appears in industrial strife, in political feuds, in the increase of litigation. Indeed, the history of the labor troubles with their strikes, lockouts, and riots, both in England and America, of the past few years, is such as to remind us of the wrangling of tigers and lions, and the cruelty of sharks; killing not to consume, but merely for the delight of killing.

What quarrels also hath competition bred! During the middle ages, not infrequently, some prince for the amusement of his courtiers would place swords in the hands of two men condemned to death, rewarding the victor in the deadly duel with his freedom. In that hour when desperate men fought for life itself, men performed marvelous feats of swordsmanship. With flashing rapier the knight literally created a blue circle before his breast. These old-time battles between knights interpret to us how modern competition has come to mean life for one merchant and death for another. Just as the builder lifts his ax upon this forest tree, and hews it into a column for his temple; just as he takes marble from this quarry and iron from that mine, and ravages forest and field for treasures with which to make strong and beautiful his house or factory, so, under the name of competition, a man chokes off the market for his neighbor, or through an unscrupulous trust despoils his brother of his possessions, and, causing one man's business to topple down in ruins, selects from the heap such treasures as he needs for his own enrichment. As a woodsman goes into the forest to hew down the tree he needs, so the modern youth is taught to make his talent sharp against those of his fellows whom he needs to build into the structure of his career.

The time was when two citizens appealing for the suffrages of the people, fulfilled all the laws of courtesy and public seemliness. But ours is an era when an aspirant for public honor despises gentle words and courteousness. Rather does he attempt to drown his opponent in a flood of billingsgate. In a meeting held for purposes of reform one citizen indicted another citizen, equally honorable, and termed that opponent a "vampire," a "traitor," a "sycophant," a "whited sepulcher," "food for the lamp post." Later on it developed that these two citizens were as one as to the matter in hand. In the last analysis, no enemy could find ground for such language, save that the two men held slightly different views regarding the advisability of free trade.

Public Quarrelsomeness

The modern disinclination to peace appears in the statement that there is one lawyer for every one hundred citizens. From this fact we infer that fifty of these citizens must be having a great deal of trouble with the other fifty, and that their quarrels must not only be frequent, but violent and long, to keep one lawyer constantly busy in settling up the strife of fivescore men who ought to live in peace and quiet. In the home, also, every tenth marriage is dissolved by divorce. Even in the ecclesiastical realm the quarrelsome traits sometimes appear. The time has gone when a council can imprison a man or take away his property for what is called heresy. But in modern times a more exquisite form of punishment has been invented—one that despoils men of reputation and ecclesiastical rights. Midst the universal strife, many are longing for the return of "the gentleman of the old school"; courteous, gentle, refined, a maker of peace, and a lover of peace. Meanwhile, Christ's word reigns supreme. For blessed, indeed, are the peacemakers. He who seeks peace alone is the architect of God's enduring civilization.

Should we search out the reason why meekness and gentleness are in disrepute, we should find the explanation in the fact that many regard peacefulness as a sign of inferiority, confusing it with lack of spirit and courage to resent insult. But meekness is not mere dulness or deafness. Gentleness is not lack of strength. Peacefulness does not betoken insensibility; it is not the endurance that belongs to the slave crouching before his master; nor the quiescence of the trader who restrains his tongue that he may drive the better bargain; nor is it the conscious investment of the wily politician who flatters his constituents—whose votes he seeks, but whose persons he despises.

Nothing taxes man's ingenuity so much as the task of peaceable living; the using men, yet not abusing them; the securing of the proper ends of business for one's self, without injuring the happiness or prosperity of others. By reason of peculiarities of temperament and education and circumstances, life is full of conflict and each day threatens to be an incessant battle. Ours is a world where competition is fierce; where the mouths exceed the loaves; where there are more hands than tools; where every place is spoken for; where statesmen call each other politicians; where lawyers term each other pettifoggers; where physicians call each other quacks; where merchants compete with merchants for success as general struggles with general for some fortress or battlefield.

The Final Art—Peace

What an art is the art of smooth living! Would that our era, founding schools of astronomy and biology, would also found a school to teach the science of peaceable living. For when every other art has been secured and every other science mastered, there still remains the art of so carrying the faculties through life as to make men and not mar them; as to bless men and not blight them. The classic story tells us that the goddess mother grieved when she saw that her earthly child must make his way alone through life's thorns and thickets. In love, therefore, the goddess drew near to the boy and taught him how to parry and protect himself. Going into the forest, she pointed to the bough that made the best bow. She taught the boy how to

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 3, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Hon. P. C. Knox, Secretary of State

State Department Building, Washington, D. C.

W. McNeir, Chief Clerk, State Dept.

OUR RUSSIAN TREATY ABROGATED

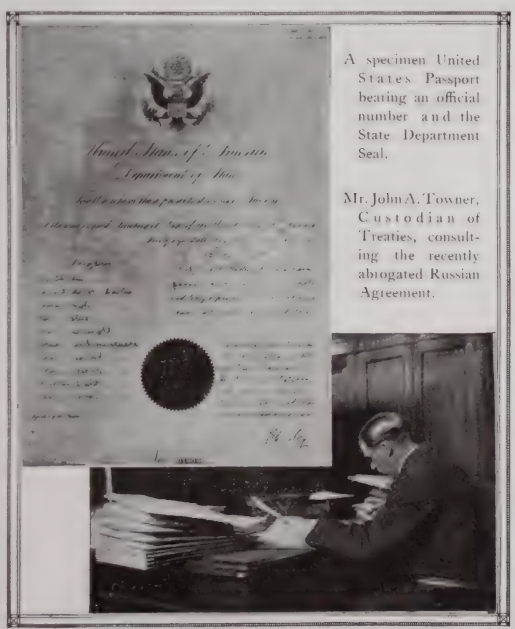
By WALDON FAWCETT

NEVER, perhaps, in the history of the United States has a serious breach between our government and a friendly power been precipitated so suddenly as in the present strained relations with Russia. For after only a few days of really active agitation, President Taft on December 18 abrogated the existing treaty between the United States Government and Russia.

After seven hours of debate the Senate, on the following day, adopted the resolution which ratified Mr. Taft's action. All attempts to change the wording of the resolution by amendments were defeated, and the final vote of 72 to 0 represented the full strength of the Senate in attendance. The cause of this abrogation is Russia's persistent refusal to honor the passports of American citizens of Jewish faith. The issue is by no means a new one. At frequent intervals for years past the American public has been aroused by recitals of the annoyances to which American Hebrews traveling or attempting to travel in Russia have been subjected. There has been from time to time much agitation of the subject, and various measures of protest have been proposed. But despite the fact that this resentment has been gathering force for so many years, the present radical action of the President came as a surprise not less because of its suddenness than by reason of the unanimity with which our national lawmakers gave it their endorsement.

The remedy to which the national legislators have had recourse is presumably the most effective that can be applied under such circumstances. The abrogation of a treaty between two powers—and particularly a treaty of long standing—is always a serious matter. It is not, to be sure, in any sense equivalent to a termination of diplomatic relations such as is likely to be followed by open warfare, but it indicates serious popular dissatisfaction in the country thus severing sentimental ties. More serious yet, it sadly disturbs if it does not entirely interrupt commercial relations between the two countries. Thus in the absence of a mutual understanding between the United States and Russia, American firms and individuals can do business in the Czar's domain only at their own risk. In short, there is engendered an international coolness that might lead to more serious ill-feeling.

It is more than likely that the officials at St. Petersburg little expected such decisive action by the American Government. The passport discrimination issue has long been the subject of diplomatic interchanges with Russia, and President Taft in a message sent to Congress soon after it convened in the present session reported that progress was being made. These assurances, however, failed to inspire the confidence that might have been felt had it not been for the length of time this issue has been pending, and the reputation of the Russians as skilled diplomatists, adept in the art of prolonging negotiations which include the possibility of an adjustment to their disadvantage. Undoubtedly the popular agitation of this subject throughout the United States during the past few months has been carried on more energetically than at any time in the past, and the protests voiced have carried the more weight by reason of the non-sectarian character of many of the mass meetings of protest. Thus the committee which recently appeared before the Foreign Relations Committees of Congress to urge action was headed by one of the most prominent Hebrews in America—Mr. Oscar S. Straus, former United States Secretary of Commerce and Labor and former United States Ambassador to Turkey—and included in its membership prominent representatives of other religious beliefs, clergymen such as Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D., Rev. Madison C. Peters, D.D., and Rev. Donald C. MacLeod, D.D.



A specimen United States Passport bearing an official number and the State Department Seal.

Mr. John A. Towner, Custodian of Treaties, consulting the recently abrogated Russian Agreement.

The treaty which has been terminated had been in force since the year 1832. The paragraph which is pertinent to the present controversy as fixing the status of American citizens reads as follows: "The inhabitants of their respective States shall mutually have liberty to enter the ports, places and rivers of the territories of each party wherever foreign commerce is permitted. They shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of said territories in order to attend to their affairs, and they shall enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce."

The United States House of Representatives, by a vote of three hundred to one, declared that the government of Russia had violated this treaty by refusing to honor, on account of race and religion, American passports duly issued to American citizens, and that in the judgment of Congress the treaty, for this reason, should be terminated at the earliest possible time. There is little doubt that the resolution as passed by the House could have been immediately adopted by an almost equally decisive vote in the Senate had it not been desired to defer action in the upper house for a short time in the hope that with such evidence of the temper of Congress Russia might be the more ready to terminate satisfactorily the diplomatic negotiations which have been in progress to this same end. President Taft,

Continued on page 21

A SERMON

By

Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D.*

The Art of Peaceable Living

TEXT: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." Romans 12:18

SOCIETY included but three classes—the poor who were beggars, the rich who were sycophants, the soldiers who for gold fulfilled a tyrant's will. Midst such conditions traitors were found in the Senate, poisoners were in the palace, while hired spies knelt side by side with praying Christians. Soon also fierce persecution arose. The disciples experienced the horrors of the dungeon, the thumbscrew and the fagot. Becoming fiendish in cruelty, Nero clothed the Christians in garments dipped in pitch and tar, and used their blazing forms for lighting up his garden party. Outraged and threatened with extermination, the disciples bethought themselves of swords and shields.

How could they live in peace with their destroyers? Instinct whispered: "Defend thyself!" Self-interest said: "Meet storm with storm, and stroke with stroke." But in the moment when persecution was fiercest, Paul urged non-resistance. He bade the disciples meet the spy with pity, meet the jailer with gentleness, meet the executioner with forgiveness, thus heaping coals of fire upon the head of each enemy. In that hour the persecutor made sharp his sword, and Nero starved his lions to-day, that to-morrow the beasts might be the fiercer for human blood. When all was ready the murderers leaped upon the unresisting disciples. Then, indeed, did Christ's disciples go forth as sheep midst wolves. Then did the dove go forth to conquer the eagle and hawk. Having pledged universal conquest to these sons of gentleness, Christ sent his peacemakers forth midst all the thunder of universal battle.

Difficulty of Peaceable Living

Paradoxical, indeed, Christ's principles of right living. "Abhor that which is evil, yet love the evildoer; live peaceably with friends, yet maintain peace with enemies." What unique contradiction meets us here! History tells us of a Roman soldier who was condemned to beasts in the Coliseum. When the lion sprang into the arena, it stopped, startled by the voice of the soldier. A moment later the lion was crawling at the prisoner's feet and licking his hands.

The event proved that once, while passing through the African forest, this soldier chanced upon a lion suffering from a thorn that had passed through the foot. By extracting the thorn he made the wild beast to be his friend and a pet, only to meet the lion years later in the arena. Strange, indeed, would it be if this story were true, yet less strange than that such a man as the beloved disciple, John, should by his gentleness extract the fangs of cruelty from a Nero or a Domitian—monsters, these, who exceeded untamed lions in fierceness. Yet good men and true are commanded to maintain peace with all men, while also maintaining an uncompromising hostility against every form of iniquity. But how can Moses, heir to the throne of Egypt, abhor the cruelties perpetrated upon his enslaved brethren and yet live peaceably with the tyrants who abused those he loves? How can David, dodging the javelin that Saul hurled, hunted like a partridge upon the mountains before the cruel king, live at peace with the tyrant who pursued him? How can Paul live peaceably with the mob at Ephesus, who stoned the scholar through the streets and left him half dead by the wayside?

The Victory of Peace

And yet, if Christ abhorred sin and breathed forth words that were like flames of fire consuming men's iniquities, he also maintained peace with Judas, who betrayed his Master, and with Pilate, who tortured the Man in whom he said he found no fault. Leaving this word, "Blessed are the peacemakers," as a watchword for his disciples, Christ sent them forth to war against iniquity, indeed, but also to live peaceably with the transgressor, whose sins they must needs destroy. And if we recall the early conflict of Christianity with heathenism, and review the story how it conquered the Roman world, we shall find that the disciples achieved their victory because they were peacemakers and peacelovers. It has been said that each persecuted Christian by his courage and Christian spirit conquered his own jailer and executioner.

An Era of Quarrelsomeness

Full eighteen centuries have passed, and once more has come an era when peacemakers are despised, and physical force is enthroned. So far is mankind from believing in peacemaking that England's emblem is not the lamb, but the lion; and America's banner is emblazoned not with the dove, but with the eagle, with its beak and talons; while Russia's symbol is still the bear.

The foreign nations, whose harbors are crowded with torpedo-boats and warships, whose strongholds bristle with cannons—these nations that stand over against each other like armed fortresses, and to-morrow may cause Europe to tremble with the march of armed men—these peoples exhibit anything save a belief in social progress through peaceloving and peacemaking. To-day the world believes that progress rides forward upon a powder cart. The angels' song of "Peace on earth" has given place to the song of the bombshell and the shriek of the cannon-ball. If the sword has fallen from man's hand, it is that it may be replaced with the pistol.

That nation ranks first among the nations that has the greatest number of ironclads and the largest standing army. Upon the tomb of the old Christian scholar who lies buried in Carthage is carved an open book and a lighted lamp. For the sage loved to lighten each good man to the truth and the light. When an English yacht anchored off Constantinople the owner lost overboard some treasure, and sent a diver down to recover it. But the diver hurried back horror-stricken, and refused to return because he found himself midst human bodies standing up in the water, each being held down by a sack filled with stones. Surely peaceableness is not characteristic of the Turk! Should we choose a symbol for the Turk it would not be the dove, but the butcher-knife, and a tight noose for the neck.

The Conflicts of Life

In view of the fact that the feuds of the past have cost this generation the rich treasures of antiquity, it would seem as if former feuds would fully satisfy man's love of conflict. Yet, strangely enough, ours is by way of pre-eminence an era of strife. Society has become litigious. Our age has cheers for him who is a good fighter and rides rough-shod over opponents on his way to certain victory. Gentleness is despised, brute force is enthroned.

Peaceableness is counted lack of fire and spirit. Many suppose that a meek man is one in whom the red blood has been bleached out white. The tendency to quarrelsomeness appears in industrial strife, in political feuds, in the increase of litigation. Indeed, the history of the labor troubles with their strikes, lockouts, and riots, both in England and America, of the past few years, is such as to remind us of the wrangling of tigers and lions, and the cruelty of sharks; killing not to consume, but merely for the delight of killing.

What quarrels also hath competition bred! During the middle ages, not infrequently, some prince for the amusement of his courtiers would place swords in the hands of two men condemned to death, rewarding the victor in the deadly duel with his freedom. In that hour when desperate men fought for life itself, men performed marvelous feats of swordsmanship. With flashing rapier the knight literally created a blue circle before his breast. These old-time battles between knights interpret to us how modern competition has come to mean life for one merchant and death for another. Just as the builder lifts his ax upon this forest tree, and hews it into a column for his temple; just as he takes marble from this quarry and iron from that mine, and ravages forest and field for treasures with which to make strong and beautiful his house or factory, so, under the name of competition, a man chokes off the market for his neighbor, or through an unscrupulous trust despoils his brother of his possessions, and, causing one man's business to topple down in ruins, selects from the heap such treasures as he needs for his own enrichment. As a woodsman goes into the forest to hew down the tree he needs, so the modern youth is taught to make his talent sharp against those of his fellows whom he needs to build into the structure of his career.

The time was when two citizens appealing for the suffrages of the people, fulfilled all the laws of courtesy and public seemliness. But ours is an era when an aspirant for public honor despises gentle words and courteousness. Rather does he attempt to drown his opponent in a flood of billingsgate. In a meeting held for purposes of reform one citizen indicted another citizen, equally honorable, and termed that opponent a "vampire," a "traitor," a "sycophant," a "whited sepulcher," "food for the lamp post." Later on it developed that these two citizens were as one as to the matter in hand. In the last analysis, no enemy could find ground for such language, save that the two men held slightly different views regarding the advisability of free trade.

Public Quarrelsomeness

The modern disinclination to peace appears in the statement that there is one lawyer for every one hundred citizens. From this fact we infer that fifty of these citizens must be having a great deal of trouble with the other fifty, and that their quarrels must not only be frequent, but violent and long, to keep one lawyer constantly busy in settling up the strife of fivescore men who ought to live in peace and quiet. In the home, also, every tenth marriage is dissolved by divorce. Even in the ecclesiastical realm the quarrelsome traits sometimes appear. The time has gone when a council can imprison a man or take away his property for what is called heresy. But in modern times a more exquisite form of punishment has been invented—one that despoils men of reputation and ecclesiastical rights. Midst the universal strife, many are longing for the return of "the gentleman of the old school"; courteous, gentle, refined, a maker of peace, and a lover of peace. Meanwhile, Christ's word reigns supreme. For blessed, indeed, are the peacemakers. He who seeks peace alone is the architect of God's enduring civilization.

Should we search out the reason why meekness and gentleness are in disrepute, we should find the explanation in the fact that many regard peacefulness as a sign of inferiority, confusing it with lack of spirit and courage to resent insult. But meekness is not mere dulness or deafness. Gentleness is not lack of strength. Peacefulness does not betoken insensibility; it is not the endurance that belongs to the slave crouching before his master; nor the quiescence of the trader who restrains his tongue that he may drive the better bargain; nor is it the conscious investment of the wily politician who flatters his constituents—whose votes he seeks, but whose persons he despises.

Nothing taxes man's ingenuity so much as the task of peaceable living; the using men, yet not abusing them; the securing of the proper ends of business for one's self, without injuring the happiness or prosperity of others. By reason of peculiarities of temperament and education and circumstances, life is full of conflict and each day threatens to be an incessant battle. Ours is a world where competition is fierce; where the mouths exceed the loaves; where there are more hands than tools; where every place is spoken for; where statesmen call each other politicians; where lawyers term each other pettifoggers; where physicians call each other quacks; where merchants compete with merchants for success as general struggles with general for some fortress or battlefield.

The Final Art—Peace

What an art is the art of smooth living! Would that our era, founding schools of astronomy and biology, would also found a school to teach the science of peaceable living. For when every other art has been secured and every other science mastered, there still remains the art of so carrying the faculties through life as to make men and not mar them; as to bless men and not blight them. The classic story tells us that the goddess mother grieved when she saw that her earthly child must make his way alone through life's thorns and thickets. In love, therefore, the goddess drew near to the boy and taught him how to parry and protect himself. Going into the forest, she pointed to the bough that made the best bow. She taught the boy how to

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

BEGIN THE YEAR WITH CHRIST

BEGIN the year with Christ, my friend,
Begin with him the year;
Step boldly out on untried paths
Without a shade of fear.
He sees the way, he knows the path
O'er mountain top or vale.
He'll lead thee with his own right hand;
With him thou canst not fail.

A glad new year, if here or there,
This coming year shall be,
So free from doubt and anxious care
If he but walk with thee.
Then nestle close thy hand in his
And sing along the way,
And he will whisper words of cheer
To brighten every day.

Pittsfield, Me. MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

The Art of Peaceable Living

Continued from preceding page

fit a sharp stone into the end of his spear. She showed him an herb that would extract the poison from his flesh in the event of a wound in battle. She taught the youth how to sail his little craft amidst opposing currents. She pointed out the hidden rocks. Divinely taught, the child became a hero, and walked the earth like a crowned king. Happy indeed those parents who rise up early and sit up late to teach their children how to live smoothly and peaceably with their friends and neighbors. Of such parents it may well be said, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they are the children of God."

Hitherto our earth has known but one happiness-maker and one peace-producer. Passing through life, Jesus Christ loved peace and pursued peace as other men pursued gold and fame. Having made peacemakers blessed, he entered into the kingdom where peace is perfect. Happy the community whose citizens imitate Christ's example and so walk and work and bargain with men that without strife, like the silent sunbeams, they bless all who come within the radius of their life. Happy also the church, all of whose sons and daughters move through life exhaling benefactions, healing enmities, soothing strifes, being like unto those fruit trees that, filling the orchard with fragrance, stretch their boughs over the garden wall and drop bounty upon each passerby.

For he who lights the lamp of aspiration in his brother's breast and never through quarrel quenches it; he who meets scowls with smiles, storms with calm, indignity with manly forbearance, is indeed become the son of God and the architect of civilization. Of one general it is said that his presence through inspiration and stimulus was worth a regiment of men. Thus one buoyant, cheerful, serene, and self-sufficing Christian man or woman, whose personality exhales peace, means good fortune to the republic. The real beauty of the Christian life does not appear until gianthood has become gentle, until the man of war has inflected his strength toward peace, until the hero disdains to break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax. For the man of peace is he who bringeth judgment unto victory.

ANVIL STROKES

..WORDS fitly spoken are not fitfully spoken.

..THE envious spirit invites an early old age.

..YOU cannot drive away a fit of the blues by getting red with anger.

..WHO is mastered by unruly tempers lives in spiritual anarchy.

..THE occasion which calls for less than your best is not an opportunity for self-improvement.

..IF ONLY the well-spent days should be counted, some very long lives would be exceedingly short.

..CRITICISING the preacher is a cheap way some folks have of getting out of paying him anything.

The Source of the Healing

By EUGENE THWING

A WEEK or two ago I heard a very interesting hospital sermon by the head of a great Christian hospital. Now, let me tell you something about this hospital sermon and what, outside its own current of thought, it suggested of special comfort for the coming year.

The double ministry of Jesus in "preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people," was the theme, and the head of the great hospital emphasized the fact that Christ "never divorced these two ministries." The wonderful record of his work for the suffering multitudes was selected from the Gospel narrative and retold impressively. "No wonder," exclaimed the preacher, "that his fame went throughout all Syria. In their eagerness they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them."

After he had been healing and teaching for barely three years, he told his disciples that he must leave them and that "the works that I do shall ye do also; and greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to my Father."

Then the preacher spoke of the splendid work done by the hospital under his charge, as a fulfilment of the promise—as an actual and literal carrying on of the same blessed work to which Jesus gave so much of his time while walking to and fro through Galilee. The hopelessly crippled had gone into the hospital, and had come out walking. The weak were made strong; the sick were made well; the dying were snatched back from the jaws of death; the "garment of praise" was given to many "for the spirit of heaviness."

. . .

HEALING of the sick is one of the first, the most imperative, and the most beautiful works to be done in the world, especially by following the great Physician. Foreign missionaries have always found it the surest way into the confidence and into the heart of heathen people. Home missionaries, in the city or on the frontier, have the same experience. Everywhere, among all classes, the very best credential the Gospel can have is that it goes hand in hand, inseparable, with sympathy, and love, and helpfulness for human weakness and need.

No work for the coming year will bring greater joy or richer rewards to the worker than the ministry of healing; the lessening, by whatever degree, of the great sum of human suffering. That is the chief reason THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is so much loved, and its readers are such a happy multitude. More and more these readers—these partners-in-work with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—are becoming accomplished and aggressive as the world's makers of joy.

. . .

YES, that is inspiring and beautiful, but sometimes we want much more. It isn't enough to know that the blessed Saviour and Physician went up and down the hills and valleys of Galilee "healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." It isn't enough to know that "his fame went throughout all Syria," and that the eager multitudes thronged upon him with their diseases and their torments, their weakness, their blindness, and their sorrow, and were healed, every one. It isn't enough to know that he has sent his disciples, innumerable, into the world to do the works that he did. It isn't enough, even, to know that we, ourselves, are among these very disciples, giving our hearts, our time, our money, our strength eagerly to the appointed work as well as we can.

We want him. We cannot join the multitude in Galilee, but we need him just as much as they did. We refuse to think of his blessed miracles of healing as things of a past day in Palestine. We refuse to think of them as available now only by proxy. We want to feel his own tender, healing touch on the sore and quivering body. We want to hear his own gentle voice of love, full of sympathy and understanding of our pain, soothing and speaking peace to our tortured hearts.

And this is just what we may have. Indeed, we have had it again and again. Why should we ever forget it and fail to take what is for us just as truly as it was for the multitudes in Galilee two thousand years ago?

. . .

IS IT to be supposed for a moment that any physician or surgeon, no matter how great his technical skill, if he is a godless man, can do as much for the healing of the patient as the man, similarly equipped, who, in addition, is full of the spirit of Jesus? Who, then, is the real physician?

Two men were telling each other of their wonderful experiences in withstanding sickness. One said that he had been under a very unusual strain for a long time and his friends had marveled that he did not break down.

Spent and weary—every nerve aching, and head throbbing with the pressure of work done under forced draft—it seemed inevitable, when at length he sought his bed, that the night would be restless and the morning dull with pain.

This is what he did: Kneeling at his bedside he told the real Physician, frankly, about his case. He had been compelled to work longer and harder than the laws of health permitted. He must meet certain responsibilities and obligations, and must not spare himself. Now he was very tired and sore. Would not the dear Physician, in the circumstances, forgive his trespass on fixed physical laws and give him five hours of good, refreshing rest, and let him rise renewed in strength and free from pain in the morning? The request was granted many, many times.

How often we complain, as the psalmist, whose "soul refused to be comforted," and whose "spirit was overwhelmed." Our pain or our sorrow is too much to bear. "Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies?" Then like the psalmist, we are ashamed, and we say, "This is my infirmity." All we need do is to go to the Physician who heals now just as fully and lovingly as then. "He healeth the broken in heart and bindeth up their wounds." He does it in secret, when we go to him direct, and he does it through his agents, in whom his Spirit is the operating power.

"His fame went throughout all Syria" twenty centuries ago. His fame has gone throughout all the world to-day. We are helping to spread it. We are going to do more than ever this year to bring the multitudes to him for healing both soul and body.

RESOLVE AND ASPIRATION

I'LL lay my hate upon the shelf
And love my neighbor as myself;
Of all to whom a wrong I've done
I'll ask their pardon—every one;
I'll feed the hungry, clothe the poor,
Give cheer to all who seek my door;
Ascribing all to primal cause,
I'll murmur not at Nature's laws;
Though dark the way from earth to heaven
Accept my lot as God hath given.

I'll do the right and shun the wrong,
Whene'er I can and get along,
But should I err of heart or head,
I hope at least it may be said
(Of course, I mean when I am dead):
"He did the very best he knew,
He gave to each his earthly due—
Engaging not in selfish strife,
Content to live the Simple Life."

JAMES MURPHY WARD.

The Print of the Nails

THERE is a strange legend of old St. Martin, writes J. R. Miller in The Examiner. He sat one day in his monastery cell, busily engaged in his sacred studies, when there came a knock at the door. "Enter," said the monk. The door opened and there appeared a stranger of lordly look, in princely attire. "Who art thou?" asked St. Martin. "I am Christ," was the answer. The confident bearing and the commanding tone of the visitor would have overawed a less wise man. But the monk simply gave his visitor one deep, searching glance and then quietly asked, "Where is the print of the nails?" He had noticed that this one indubitable mark of Christ's person was wanting. There were no nail-scars upon those jeweled hands. And the kingly mien and the brilliant dress of the pretender were not enough to prove his claim while the print of the nails was wanting. Confused by this searching test-question, and his base deception exposed, the prince of evil—for he it was—quickly fled from the sacred cell.

This is only a legend, but it suggests the one infallible test that should be applied to all truth and to all life. There is much in these days that claims to be of Christ. There are those who would have us lay aside the old faiths, and accept new beliefs and new interpretations. How shall we know whether or not to receive them? The only true test is that with which St. Martin exposed the false pretensions of his visitor: "Where is the print of the nails?" Nothing is truly Christ which does not bear this mark upon it. A gospel without a wounded, dying Christ is not a gospel. The atonement lies at the heart of Christianity. The cross is the luminous centre, from which streams all the light of joy, peace and hope. That which does not bear the marks of the Lord Jesus cannot be of him.

A Slight Misunderstanding

NIGHT was coming on, the storm was increasing and some of the deck fittings had already been swept overboard, when the captain decided to send up a distress signal. The rocket was already lit and about to ascend, when a solemn-faced passenger stepped up.

"Cap'n," said he, "I'd be the last man on earth to cast a damper on any man's patriotism; but seems to be this here's no time for celebratin' an' settin' off of fireworks."

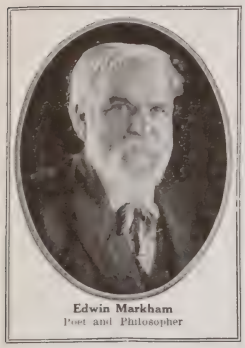
ENLARGEMENT

WHAT great things in our own days have we done,
For liberty, and progress, and the right!
Surely we have revealed a lordly might,
And what our fathers strove for we have won.
Look, how our paths have widened to the sun!
We have enlarged our lattice to the light,
Our old age slopes more gently and more bright;
We have smoothed the paths wherein the young feet run.

Yea, verily, the boundaries of our world
We have enlarged; our flag is now unfurled
Over a vaster reach of lands and seas;
Our peoples have grown one in heart and aim,
Coequal heirs and builders of our fame.
And one in human nature's charities.

What "Best Gift" Can 1912 Bring?

A National Symposium to Which Many Distinguished Americans Contribute



Edwin Markham
Poet and Philosopher

"What in your opinion would be the best gift the New Year could bring to the American people?"

THIS exceedingly interesting and timely question, which was lately sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to a number of representative Americans, foremost in the wide field of national thought and action, has elicited many remarkable answers. In almost every instance, the replies show that the writers have been inspired by the highest motives, and whether the sentiment expressed has reference to the material or moral well-being of the nation, it is in every case one that is prompted by a true appreciation of what is most needed for the betterment of present conditions. There were a thousand alluring and delightful things they might have chosen, had they been minded to select mere transitory benefits; but they have looked at the problem with patriotic eyes. A large proportion of the letters received indicate the desire to see such a development of character as will lift the whole country to a higher plane and give it a clearer view of that "righteousness which exalteth a nation."

Among the writers are statesmen, generals, admirals, governors, mayors of great cities, leading divines, famous poets and novelists, well-known artists and other professionals. With such a variety of minds, it was inevitable that the point of view should vary considerably; but this variety gives added charm to the presentation. The principal letters are given below and deserve a wide reading, as showing the perspective of broad-minded, thoughtful Americans in regard to the present conditions and most immediate needs of our people.

* * *

"A New Social Passion to Translate Christianity into Action," Writes Poet Edwin Markham

THERE is one gift for the American people that would top all others as the Matterhorn tops the anthills at its base. I refer to the gift of a new social passion, a passion that would impel men to organize society in the spirit of the Good News of Jesus. We produce in great abundance the necessary things of life, but we have not yet learned how to distribute them righteously. We need to discover the economics of the Kingdom of Heaven. We need to find a way to make the Golden Rule the working principle of the industrial order. We have committed this Rule to memory: we now need to commit it to life. We believe in brotherhood: we now need to find a material basis for brotherhood. We believe in Christ: we now need to create a working-form for Christ.

West New Brighton, S. I. EDWIN MARKHAM.

* * *

"Compulsory Military or Naval Service," Writes Rear-Admiral Richard Wainwright, U. S. Navy

COMPULSORY military and naval service for two years for all sons of citizens between the ages of seventeen and twenty. The character-training for two years would be the capstone to free education, would furnish the country with better citizens, would protect the country against all foreign aggressions, and would give the enlightened American people that due weight in the council of nations that tends toward universal peace. RICHARD WAINWRIGHT.

Washington, D. C.

* * *

"The Ratification of the Peace Treaties by the United States Senate," Writes Governor Hay of Washington

IN MY OPINION the best gift that the New Year can bring to the American people would be the ratification by the Senate of the arbitration treaties now pending between the United States and Great Britain and the United States and France. M. E. HAY, Governor.

Olympia, Wash.

* * *

"That the Whole Nation Might Live Up to the Golden Rule," Writes Governor Colquitt of Texas

IF THE American people could all make up their minds to observe and live up to the Golden Rule and do unto others as they would have others do unto them, it would be the happiest New Year a new year could bring to the American people. O. B. COLQUITT.

Austin, Texas.

* * *

"For Americans to Cease Making Money Their God and Learn to Live Sanely," Writes Paige Harrison, Artist

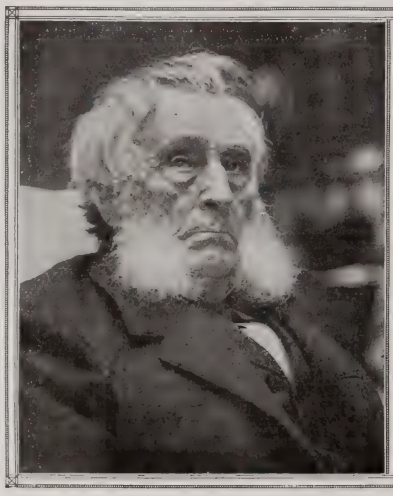
THE best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be the ability to place money in its true relation to the other things of life, the ability to be "passing rich on forty pounds a year," the ability to get joy from the truly joyous things — beautiful music, beautiful pictures, beautiful books, sunlight, flowers, and the songs of birds—some of which can be had for the asking wherever our lot may be cast, whether in the city slum or the loneliest country village. As a people, we have so long been waging war against the brute forces of nature that the mere conflict has come to represent life itself to us; and having conquered the wilderness, we continue to battle for money—as an end, and not a means to an end. In Germany, England, France, Italy, the public picture galleries are filled daily with true picture-lovers, who come from all classes of the population. In America they are a desert, save on Sunday, when every language of Europe but English is heard in the subdued murmurs and exclamations of admiration from the slow-moving throng.

Plymouth, Mass. BIRGE HARRISON, N.A.

* * *

"Adequate Laws to Stop Lynching," Writes Rear-Admiral Schroeder, U. S. Navy

THE best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be a set of laws and methods of judicial procedure and scale of punishments which would render possible and certain a prompt administration of justice and meting out of swift and adequate punishment for misdemeanors and more particularly for crimes. Leaving aside the consideration of crimes against property, I think Americans would hesitate in applying the term "civilized" to any other of the so-called civilized countries in which uncontrolled mobs were to perpetrate atrocities so fiendish as those to which we are becoming accustomed in this otherwise fair land. One such crime, unpunished, breeds familiarity



Editor of The Christian Herald,

Bible House,

New York City, N.Y.

Dear Sir:

The best gift we could wish the New Year would bring to the American people would be a repeal of all Tariffs upon imports and the conversion of every Custom house into a Store house for our imports.

Yours very truly,

John Bigelow

November 27. 1915.

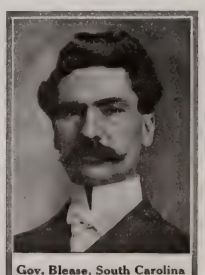
The Late John Bigelow's "Best Gift"—"Repeal All Tariffs on Imports." His Last Public Letter

Gov. Colquitt, Texas

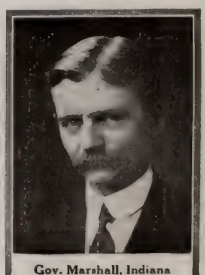
Dr. R. A. Torrey

Will N. Harben

Gov. Clark, Alaska



Gov. Blease, South Carolina



Gov. Marshall, Indiana

Great Minds Discuss the Problem

Statesmen, Generals, Governors, Mayors, Poets and Preachers Give Their Choice of the "Best Gift" with its horrors and renders its repetition more and more frequent; and the complacency with which it is viewed by society at large (almost) is painfully evidenced by the failure of the authorities to carry out the law and punish the offenders. When the actors and passive spectators in such scenes pose to be photographed; when the editor of a paper publishes in his own paper that he glories in being one of a band who burned a negro, and yet a coroner's jury gives a verdict that the victim came to his death at the hands of persons unknown; when a thousand men burn a wounded negro in broad daylight publicly, and an American crowd afterwards cheers the acquittal of one who had actually confessed being an active participant in the crime—it seems that a terrible poison is permeating our racial veins.

Washington, D. C. SEATON SCHROEDER.

. . .

"An Awakened Public Conscience," Writes Governor Cruce of Oklahoma

AN AWAKENING public conscience resulting in each individual citizen doing his full duty as a citizen of the nation, thereby insuring to the American people just and righteous government, administered by honest officials in the interest of all the people. LEE CRUCE, Governor.

. . .

"Riddance of Public Slanderers, Who Bear False Witness for Bribes," Writes Governor Clark of Alaska

THE best gift? Riddance of the public slanderer. I mean from those persons who, for filthy lucre, or passing fame, or the purposes of the demagogue, knowingly bear false witness against public men and measures, thereby striking at one of the cornerstones of self-government, which is the intelligent confidence of the people in those elected representatives of theirs who are honest and earnest and—but for the foul tongue of slander — of good repute.

WALTER E. CLARK.
Juneau, Alaska.

. . .

"To Make Us Worthy, as a People, of Divine Blessing," Writes Governor Osborn

A FULL understanding of our national and individual dependence upon the Supreme Power and an earnest effort to be worthy, as a people, of divine blessing.

CHASE S. OSBORN,
Governor.
Lansing, Mich.

. . .

"To Open Communication with the Spirit World," Writes Will N. Harben, Author

IN response to your interesting question, I agree with Dr. James H. Hyslop in the opinion which he recently expressed in an interview published in the New York Times, that there could be no greater gift to the whole world than for the Society for Psychical Research to produce indisputable scientific proof of a life after death. The immediate result of such proof on our present blind morality would be as astonishing as it would be satisfying. That I cling to the hope of such a discovery may be due to a rather vivid imagination; but I would rather regard it as due to intuitive inner whisperings of occult truth in response to an inexpressible yearning of years, and a certain fitness of such proof into a divine scheme of development. WILL N. HARBEN.
New York City.

. . .

"The Election of Theodore Roosevelt," Writes Amelia E. Barr, Author

I THINK the greatest gift the New Year could bring the American people in A.D. 1912 would be the election of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt as President and directing genius of its destiny. We need a President who can do things and who is not afraid. That the politicians do not want him is the best of all reasons for asking from the New Year the desire of the people and the patriots—Theodore Roosevelt—for our next President. AMELIA E. BARR.

. . .

Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder
United States Navy

"A Clearer Realization of Spiritual Things," Writes Governor Marshall of Indiana

IN MY OPINION, the best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be a realization of the fact that the things seen are temporal, while the things unseen are eternal; and that national righteousness must be builded not upon laws and ordinances, but upon the righteousness of the individual man. THOS. R. MARSHALL, Governor.

. . .

"To Save the Nation Through Better Training of the Child," Writes Hannah K. Schoff, President of the National Congress of Mothers

IF THE American people could realize that infant mortality, disease and crime are the result of lack of proper care and training of the little children, and would set themselves to remedy this with earnest purpose and with practical, intelligent methods, it would be the greatest advance in American life. It is because of our belief in the infinite possibilities that exist in every little child that the National Congress of Mothers is organizing the parents of the whole country to study the needs of children and to give each one the opportunity which will insure his best development physically, morally and mentally.

HANNAH K. SCHOFF.
New York City.

. . .

"A Clear Vision of Right Living," Writes Rev. F. F. Shannon, D.D.

I THINK the best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be the gift of a new appreciation of righteousness. It is forever true that righteousness — and righteousness only—exalteth a nation; exalts it in all true prosperity, in all wholesome joy, in all noble service, in all brotherliness at home, and in all kindliness toward all peoples. We are a wonderful nation, and a sublime vision of Him whose name is Wonderful will make our country more wonderful and useful in transacting the august business of national and individual life. This, I think, is by all odds the best gift the New Year, under God, could bring to the American people. FREDERICK F. SHANNON.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

. . .

"A Return to Plain Living and High Thinking," Writes Margaret E. Sangster

THE best gift which the New Year could bring to the American people would be a return to the simplicity of a former day. Plain living and high thinking, a recognition of Almighty God in the ethics of home and business life, and the strengthening of the family bond, would save the republic from drifting

Continued on page 10

THE SPEAKER'S ROOM
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
WASHINGTON, D. C.

December 9, 1911.

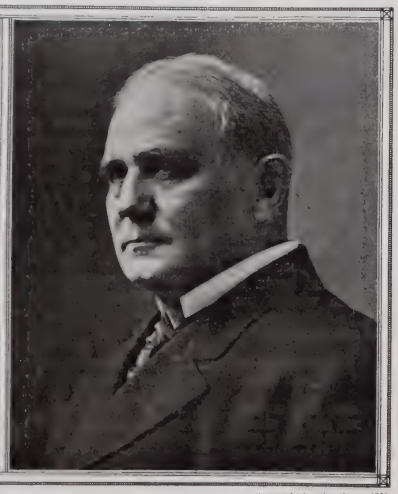
Editor Christian Herald,
Bible House, New York City.

Dear Sir:

In my opinion the best good the New Year can bring to the American People is continued peace with all the world.

Truly your friend,

Champ Clark



Copyright by Clinedinst, 1911

Speaker Champ Clark's "Best Gift"—"Continued Peace with All the World"

Pastor C. M. Sheldon

Mr. W. R. Moody

Gov. Cruce, Oklahoma

Mrs. Hannah Schoff

Maj.-Gen. Carter, U. S. A.

Gov. Hay, Washington

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President | GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor | THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Blessedness of Giving

HOW much genuine joy and blessing the gifts of generous-hearted men and women bring to both givers and receivers at this season! Every year multiplies evidence of the fact that there is in this land of ours a great army of God's children who delight in doing his will and in reaching out a friendly hand to others. Their attitude toward the poor and unfortunate, to whom they are ever kind, is to us a continuous revelation of Christlike sympathy and helpfulness. It is not merely that they give material help—they give themselves, their love, their prayers, their counsel, and they do this with a modesty that thrusts aside all desire of worldly recognition. Herein lies the real secret of true benevolence, the art of giving while the giver himself remains hidden behind his gift. During the last few weeks, hundreds of such instances of noble, self-sacrificing generosity have come within our knowledge—cases that remind us of the famous "rule" of John of Doncaster:

"What I gave, I have;
What I spent, I had;
What I kept, I lost!"

And when we give ourselves for others, for the love of Him who gave himself for us all, our gift, be it great or small, is one that cannot fail to bring joy and blessing.

"According to Our Faith—"

SEVEN governors, two admirals, one general, three authors, a poet, an artist, four mayors and a number of ministers are telling us on another page their New Year wishes for the American people. Suppose any one of them, or all of them, were really able to "wish these good things on us"! Suppose they were not only wishes, but gifts! Suppose these fine things should come true, or at least begin to come true, in 1912! Two or three wishes are expressed about which there might be differences of opinion; but for the most part they are for things we all agree about as desirable.

Let's change these wishes into horses; let's be princes this year, riding, instead of beggars afoot! Can it be done? Let us see.

There are something less than ninety million people in the United States. Just about one in ninety reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Suppose this big one-ninetieth should determine to bring these wishes down out of the skies of thought to the ground of our streets and fields, the floors of our homes and shops.

"A genuine revival of religion" is Dr. Torrey's expression of the greatest need. You say: "Of course an evangelist would say that." But hear Governor Blease of South Carolina: "The best gift the New Year could bring the American people would be a strict obedience to the divine injunction, 'Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself!'" Governor Marshall wishes that we might have the "realization of the fact that the things seen are temporal, while the things unseen are eternal." Governor Osborn wishes for us "a full understanding of our national dependence upon the Supreme Power and an earnest effort to be worthy, as a people, of divine blessing." All this means what Dr. Eaton calls in the wording of his wish "a profound spiritual awakening."

Others wish the best kind of physical and mental prosperity to our people—a chance to work, the practise of kindness, cure of deadly ills, leisure for culture, and other high gifts. They are all things that can be done.

How?

If one million CHRISTIAN HERALD readers should pray, pray as they never prayed before, for the "profound spiritual awakening"; should ask God to smite us, or scare us, or shout to us, or whisper to us, or make some mighty sign to us which should turn hearts everywhere toward him; if we should pray that his Spirit come down, fiery, omnipotent, into our hearts, and into the hearts of our neighbors; if we should do that and should mean it, and should persist in doing it and meaning it, such changes would be wrought in our thinking and the thinking of our friends that our prayers would soon be turned to blessings, the wishes to facts. A million people praying, adding their prayers to the prayers of other millions, urging still others to join them in the praying, would mean that countless hearts would begin to burn with a more ardent love for God; and all these millions, loving God more warmly, would soon learn new secrets about the magic of loving one's neighbor as one's self.

Shall we ride this year, looking upward—or plod on, face downward toward the dust? One million people praying desperately that God's will be done in America this year! One million people determining not only to pray but to believe, and not only to believe but to work! Will you begin to pray now, you who are one of the million—and every one is one-millionth of the whole, one-millionth, for whose prayer a silence is waiting, a blessing hanging high that will descend somewhere if the prayer is uttered?

"Turn our hearts to thyself, O God. Send conviction and salvation upon us. Show us the difference between right and wrong, and save us so that we shall love the right and do it. Show us our sin, and show us how it may be undone; show us thy righteousness, and how we may receive it. Make us love thee so truly that we shall serve thee practically by helping others. Turn us to thyself so that we may lead others to thee, and to gladness, and to soundness of soul and mind and flesh. Take possession of our nation for thyself. Tell me now what I can do to prepare the way for the coming of thy Spirit into the lives of the people and of the land I love. Amen."

The Russian Treaty Abrogated

IN ABROGATING the treaty of 1832 with Russia, our government has taken a step which must command not only the approval of American citizens but the respect of right-thinking people everywhere. Our position under that treaty, in view of the course of Russia in its treatment of American passports, was an anomalous one. It was not a Jewish question, for it affected the whole status of American citizenship and especially the manner in which that citizenship was regarded abroad. Our government represents the principle of absolute freedom of religion, which it guarantees to all its citizens. It is bedded on this foundation rock. Not only do we assure our own sons and daughters of this right, but we extend the same privilege to the citizens of other countries while on American soil. We have a right, therefore, to expect of those governments with which we are on friendly terms, that they should recognize this principle by according the same privilege to American citizens within their jurisdiction. This reciprocity is accorded to us everywhere except in Russia. Our diplomatic remonstrances have been ignored, and our citizens—not merely Jews, but Protestants and Catholics—have been treated as criminals, because they claimed the right to worship in the religion of their fathers. Russia's persistent violation of international courtesy in this respect has put our country to open shame.

It was inevitable that there should be an end to such conditions, and the unanimity with which both houses of Congress endorsed the President's action, correctly reflected the overwhelming sentiment of the country in favor of breaking the treaty. This has now been accomplished, and the way has been prepared for a new treaty by the Senate resolution, which is couched in firm yet temperate terms. The situation was not one calling for jingoism; for while there was ample provocation for reflecting upon Russia, the moderate procedure was the wiser, and will accomplish the same purpose.

When the old treaty was drawn, nearly eighty years ago, it was impossible to foresee conditions which have arisen in recent years. If we may judge from the temper of the Russian people themselves, they have little real sympathy with the persecuting and exclusive spirit of the bureaucracy. That spirit, which found expression in the brutal persecution of the Jews at home and in violent animus against those who, after having become citizens of this republic, revisited Russia, is a relic of the old Jew-hating and Jew-baiting days, and is out of keeping with modern civilization. It is, moreover, a remarkable fact, apparent all through history, that those governments and peoples which were active persecutors of the Jews have been visited with retributive punishment for that special offense. This extraordinary truth calls to mind the words of the prophet who, when asked to curse the house of Jacob, replied by blessing them: "Blessed be every one that blesseth thee, and cursed be every one that curseth thee."

Our course in this whole matter is one that cannot fail to impress other governments with the American love of justice, and also with the fact that American citizenship the world over must have a higher meaning and be more respected than heretofore.

Why Not The Hague?

FILLED with the spirit of human kindness and the love of peace, a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD writes to inquire why the "Little Father"—the Czar—does not take his dispute with Persia to the Hague Court, if he really believes that Russia has a grievance against that country. Unfortunately, this is about the last thing he may be expected to do, although he originated the Peace Court for the settlement of just such quarrels. Persia itself has appealed to The Hague, but there has been thus far no responsive note. It has been aptly said that "the largest room in the world is room for improvement," and this applies with special pertinency to the present attitude of Russia and England toward Persia. Within a few months, with the able assistance of Mr. Shuster and his associates, Persian finances have been regulated, graft eliminated, a constitution adopted and the government put on a sound business basis. This, however, doesn't suit either of the two great "Christian powers," which are said to have agreed on a joint plan involving the dismemberment of the ancient kingdom, under conditions that have all the characteristic earmarks of a huge land-grabbing scheme. Mr. Shuster, as the friend of Persia and of fair play, has thus far so successfully blocked their plans that his dismissal is demanded on the diplomatic pretext that the "interests" of the two governments have not been sufficiently considered. It is not improbable that before this, the "Little Peace Father's" Cossack regiments may be knocking at the gates of Teheran, threatening everything but peaceful measures if Shuster should persist in remaining. It is evident that the Czar means to have quiet and peaceful relations with Persia, even if he has to fight for it. The Hague Court is too far off, and besides, he is in a hurry.

General Notes

—EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH of Austria is apparently failing. His health has given much concern to his relatives lately.

—PRESIDENT EMERITUS DR. CHARLES W. ELIOT of Harvard, who started a few weeks ago on a trip to India and Japan in the interests of international peace, became suddenly ill while in Ceylon. An operation for appendicitis was necessary, and was performed at Kandy. Dr. Eliot is reported as convalescent and rapidly regaining his accustomed health.

—IT IS DIFFICULT to understand the "method in the madness" of the vandals who deliberately mutilate public paintings or statuary. The historic canvas of "The Battle of Lake Erie," adorning one of the stairway landings in the capitol at Washington, was cut by some unknown person on December 19, a strip two feet long and two inches wide being severed from the lower left-hand corner of the painting. Fortunately, it can be replaced, the strip having been found on the floor.

COULDN'T STOP TO EAT

I have received the premium—The Women of the Bible—and have read it through. It was so interesting I could scarcely stop to eat. It is a fine description of the Bible women; some good, some bad, but that is true of the women of to-day. The Almanac, too, is grand and instructive. Many thanks for the.

Shellsburg, Ia. MRS. MARTHA JOHNSON.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, January 3, 1912

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	2
Our Russian Treaty Abrogated (Illustrated) By Waldon Fawcett	3, 21
The Art of Peaceable Living. Sermon By Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D.	4, 5
The Source of the Healing. By Eugene Thwing	5
What Best Gift Can 1912 Bring? Symposium (Portraits)	6
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	8
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	9
The Cup of Pride (Illustrated) By Edwin Markham	11
Shepherds. By Marie Conway Oemler	11, 18, 19
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	12, 14, 15
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	13
Our Comfort Corner. By Margaret E Sangster	16
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	20, 21
What the Bond-Buyer Has a Right to Expect By Allen G. Hoyt	22
Winning Young People. Christian Endeavor Topic	23
New York's "First Citizen" Dead	23

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Entombed Miners Dead

NEARLY a hundred men went down into a mine in Briceville, Tenn., Saturday, December 16, and only five of them came out alive. The explosion killed some suddenly and their mangled bodies were soon found. Others ran to the various labyrinths of the mine for safety and escape, and the black damp suffocated them. The rescuers came upon two men who had been made insane by the tragedy, and who ran screaming away from those who had come to save them and were lost. Men attempting an escape made chalk marks on the walls, hoping to be traced and rescued. The first miner of the five who were rescued to reach the surface was William Henderson, fifty-five years old. He came from the entry quite unassisted and resisted efforts to carry him home. "Oh, let me walk," he protested, but without avail. Henderson made the following statement of his experiences: "We bratticed up the entrance to the mine room. With our coats we fought back the afterdamp that came through the cracks in the brattice, and then stuck our coats and other articles of wearing apparel in the hole of the brattice. We had lights, our dinners and each of us had from a half to three quarters of a gallon of coffee and water in our dinner pails. We remained in this room quietly for several hours, burning one light and taking turns at eating. Late Saturday evening Arthur Scott and Dore Irish left the room and attempted to make their way back and reach the entrance of the mine through the overpass. That was the last we saw of them. The next morning we made our way, the air having been purified by the fan, into the entry and passed over into No. 18, endeavoring to find the way out. We ran into gas and were forced to go back to Room 2 in No. 19, where the air was pure. We remained there until discovered." No pen can describe, nor imagination conceive, the awful sorrow of the families of the Cross Mountain victims. Brother miners worked in desperation to release the entombed men. Individuals and organizations gave their sympathy and help, but the agony and loneliness were unspeakable. We who enjoy the arts of civilized living, and the warmth of comfortable homes, do not realize how much it costs some men to furnish these for us. What awful risks they have to take for the welfare and happiness of their fellow men! Nor do we recognize what a debt of gratitude we owe them. They are an industrious, hardy, brave set of men. The families of the dead miners of Briceville will have the universal sympathy of the nation, and whatever material assistance they need. Rev. E. M. Ritchie, pastor of the Methodist Church at Coal Creek, and other ministers and priests, were present with their sympathy and services. This is but another one of the numberless tragedies that remind us of the uncertainty of life, and call attention to the injunction of the Master:

Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. (Matt. 24: 44.)

Try the Bible

Rev. Dr. Jowett made an address at the one hundred and second anniversary of organized Bible work in New York City recently, which emphasized a very important truth, that of the practical experimental use of the Bible in everyday life. He urged men to cease looking for errors in the Scripture but to try it. He said: "Too many people know the Bible only as literature. It is as if they knew the guideposts of a country and nothing of the climate. They take up the Bible as literature and not as a revelation; they go to the Bible as students, but never as sinners; with curiosity, but not with need; they know the letter and not the spirit. They do everything with the Bible except try it. That is the one indispensable thing." Never say of the Bible that it is obsolete when you have not read it. Try it and you will know its truth. The practical application of the Word to the salvation of the soul is mentioned by the apostle:

The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith, which we preach. (Rom. 10: 8.)

Policeman Handsomely Rewarded

Lieutenant Lyons of the New York City police force was a patrolman on his beat near the ferry at West Twenty-third Street fifteen years ago. It was then that a woman, accompanied by a six-year-old child, came to him in great distress and told him that thieves had picked her pocket, and that she had not a cent with which to pay her carfare to Elmira. Lyons let her have the money and he never heard a word from her from then till the other day, when a tall, well-dressed man walked into the Charles Street Station and asked, "Are you Lieutenant Lyons?" Lyons said he was. The stranger continued: "I have a nice Christmas present for you. I am here to tell you that you have been left $20,000." Lyons could not believe his ears, and then, thinking that the man was playing a joke or was crazy, said: "Now, look here. I am busy with my roll-call. I do not want any of your funny business." "It's the truth," replied the stranger, and he handed Lyons a copy of the will which had remembered him. It took quite a little time to identify the woman who had left him the money. Then he called to mind the penniless woman whose carfare he had furnished, and the fact that at the time she took the number of his shield, and his name. The policeman is one of the most useful members of society. The reward he is likely to get for his fidelity and courage is the night robber's dagger or bullet. It is a beautiful thing to see the tangible recognition of the manliness and large-heartedness of the policeman, and substantial gratitude for a friendly act performed. Good deeds are not done for reward, or they would not be good; but it is the tendency of virtue and noble service to secure a reward. The modest people who humbly do duty and serve others will be surprised with the rewards that lie along the pathway of life, and in the great world beyond.

Thou shalt do that which is right and good in the sight of the Lord; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest go in and possess the good land. (Deut. 6: 18.)

Fatal Fanaticism

On the day that Rev. Frank W. Sandford was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for the death of members of his sect through his blind religious fanaticism, Mrs. Eliza Thorpe, of Macon, Ga., undertook to walk on the water by faith, and sank down into it and was drowned. After attending a meeting of the "Holy Roller" religious society she became inflamed with the enthusiastic belief that she could walk on water and that God would hold her hand and keep her from sinking. She ran down to the river, took off her shoes and cloak, and waded into the water. She kept on till she stepped beyond her depth, when the current caught her and swept her under, and when they recovered her body ten minutes later life was extinct. Nearly a hundred persons on the bank witnessed the tragedy. The danger of our time is not too much but too little faith. Now and then we find persons like Sandford, whose fanatic faith brought punishment by the courts, and Mrs. Thorpe, whose abnormal religious zeal made her a suicide. There are laws in the natural world as imperative as in the spiritual world, and if they are broken inevitable penalties will fall. There are larger answers to faith than most people would believe, and yet there are more limits in the operations of law than an insane fanaticism will admit. Poor Mrs. Thorpe had no right to presume that, because Christ held Peter up while he walked on the water, such a miracle would be wrought in her behalf.

And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he said, Come. And he walked on the water, to go to Jesus. (Matt. 14: 28, 29.)

SCENES FROM THE BRICEVILLE MINE HORROR

Schoolhouse to Which the Bodies of the Victims Were Taken Anxious Watchers at the Entrance to the Shaft of the Cross Mountain Mine

A Boy Hero

A savage Newfoundland dog, acting as though he were mad, broke his chain in a yard at Blake Avenue and Hinsdale Street, Brooklyn, the other day and ran toward some children who were playing near by. Harry G. Edis, a truck driver seventeen years of age, who was delivering goods in the neighborhood, seeing the dog running after and snapping at the frightened children, ran to their rescue, and the dog attacked him savagely. The boy accepted the challenge, and having no weapon—not even a rock or stick—he entered upon the desperate contest. He seized the brute by the neck and wrestled with him for some time. The animal in his attempt to get at the boy's throat rose on his hind feet almost as high as the boy's head. Though young Edis was bitten terribly in the hands and arms, he did not give up the fight, but only continued it the more vigorously. At last he got a grip with both hands on the dog's windpipe, and throwing him to the ground, choked the life out of him. He coolly went to the doctor's office, had his wounds cauterized, and then went back to where his dead antagonist lay and carried the body to the police headquarters that the Board of Health might determine whether the dog was mad or not. This boy is a magnificent specimen of the real hero. Not one boy in a thousand of reasonable courage would tackle empty-handed a dog of that size, presumably mad. But this boy was afraid the little children would be hurt, and he did not think of himself for an instant. He dared and took all the risk for others and became a hero worthy of the notice and admiration of the people of the country. What a splendid example this boy set to the young men, and in fact to all the people of the land, obeying the injunction:

Quit you like men, be strong. (I. Cor. 16: 13)

The Telugu Mission Diamond Jubilee

THE Telugu Baptist Mission is one of the most flourishing on the foreign field. Of the 60,781 communicants of the Baptist Church in South India, under the direction of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, 56,500 belong to the Telugu Mission, which extends from the region north of Madras to territory beyond Secunderabad. In the year 1910 1,554 converts were baptized by the workers of this Mission, which includes about 140 churches. The Mission supports 640 schools, enrolling 16,000 students.

The Diamond Jubilee of this work celebrated recently brought together a notable company of clergymen and missionaries and was an occasion of enthusiasm and blessing. In 1836, Rev. S. S. Day began his work in India, from which the Telugu Mission has grown. Present at the Jubilee, celebrating the work of this pioneer and its splendid results, were Dr. T. S. Barbour of Boston, Foreign Secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Professor A. W. Anthony, D.D., of Bates College, Maine, a member of the Board of Managers of the Society, Dr. C. N. Patton, Home Secretary of the Board of Foreign Commissioners, Dr. J. S. Chandler, of the Madeira Mission, Rev. D. Gilman, Dr. E. W. Kelly from Burma, Rev. G. G. Crozier, M.D., and Rev. S. A. Boggs from Assam, and Rev. G. H. Hamlin and Rev. H. E. Wyman of the Free Baptist Mission in Orissa.

Special attention was paid through the Jubilee Conference to the subject of Christian education. The subject of Church Federation was also given a prominent place in the deliberations. Great enthusiasm was kindled when it was announced that the British and Foreign Bible Society, in a spirit of Christian courtesy and kindness, had made it possible for the Baptist Church to unite with this organization in a union version of the Telugu Bible, which will be satisfactory to all the churches. Another great step in Christian union, as well as an advance movement in education, was a unanimous resolution to amalgamate the college work of the Mission with the work of the Christian College of Madras.

The great event of the session was the laying of the cornerstone of the Coles-Ackerman Memorial High School at Nellore, for whose erection Dr. and Miss Cole of New York contributed $10,000. Resolutions were also passed at the Conference in support of the International Peace Movement.

During the seventy-five years of the Baptist work in Telugu there have been approximately 100,000 conversions. One of the most encouraging features of the work is the fact that many of the recent converts have been from the higher castes. One young missionary alone, the Rev. E. O. Schugren, baptized 133 high-caste converts in 1910. The outlook for the future is full of promise.

Native Christians Leaving a Tent Meeting During the Jubilee at Nellore

What "Best Gift" Can 1912 Bring?

Continued from page 7

into degeneracy, and establish it in honor among the nations.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.
Glen Ridge, N. J.

. . .

"A Profound Spiritual Awakening," Writes Rev. Charles A. Eaton, D.D., of New York City

THE best gift which the New Year could bring to the American people would be a profound spiritual awakening. As we blow up sterile soil with dynamite in order that the trees planted therein may find space and welcome for their roots in the deep subsoil, so it is necessary to disturb the spiritual nature of men in order that entrance may be found for high thoughts, ideals and purposes. For almost a generation we have been living on inherited moral force in this country. We are facing problems which can only be solved by an enlightened and awakened moral judgment. The great need of the hour is a deeper religious experience and a sturdier moral discipline on the part of the individual. This would be the greatest gift which the New Year could bring to America.

CHARLES A. EATON,
Pastor, Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York.

. . .

"A National Hunger and Thirst for Righteousness," Writes Pastor Charles M. Sheldon, Author of "In His Steps"

IF I were the New Year, and had it in my power to bring just one thing to the American people, I would bring to them the hunger and thirst for righteousness. The greatest need we have to-day is not a need of abolishing poverty, or giving people more things, or wiping out the causes of disease, or solving the problems of temperance reform, housing of the people, day's wages, or anything of the sort. But the great need of the people, rich and poor, high and low, old and young, white and black, is the need of right living. There are some terrible conditions in our American civilization. There is hatred between white and black. There is the curse of drink, especially the making of it. There is the fearful passion of lust and uncleanness among all classes of people. There are murders, 10,000 last year. The whole country which we love is in need of the righteousness of the eternal God. If I could give that to this country as a New Year's gift I know that all the rest would follow.

CHARLES M. SHELDON.
Topeka, Kan.

. . .

"The Discovery of a Consumption and Cancer Cure," Writes Julia Marlowe

IN MY opinion the best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be a cure for tuberculosis and cancer.

JULIA MARLOWE.
New York City.

. . .

"A Genuine Revival of Religion," Writes Professor R. A. Torrey, America's Great Evangelist

IN MY opinion, the best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be a genuine revival of religion in the power of the Holy Spirit. Not a work gotten up by man's machinery, but a real work of God sent down from above in answer to the prayers of true and earnest followers of Jesus Christ.

R. A. TORREY.
Limerick, Ireland.

. . .

"Greater Reverence," Writes W. R. Moody

A DEEPER sense of reverence would be the greatest blessing we could have just now. The attitude of the present generation toward God is characterized by an easy familiarity that denotes superficial thinking, and as a natural sequence of the attitude towards the forms of law and order, is resulting in social disorder. If 1912 would bring to the American people greater reverence, it would result in healthier conditions in our religious and social life.

W. R. MOODY.
East Northfield, Mass.

. . .

"Opportunities for Leisure and Artistic Enjoyment," Writes Walter Damrosch

SUCH an ideal economic condition that every decent man may be sure not only of plenty of bread to eat for himself and his family, but also plenty of leisure time to devote to the real object of life, the cultivation of art and the adoration of beauty.

WALTER J. DAMROSCH.
New York City.

. . .

"Less Fear of Evils that May Never Happen," Writes Major-General Carter

A KEENER appreciation of the benefits of the advanced civilization of which we are a part, and less fear of evils which may never arrive.

WM. H. CARTER,
Major-General, U. S. Army.
Washington, D. C.

. . .

"To Love God and Our Neighbor More," Writes Governor Blease

THE best gift the New Year could bring to the American people would be a strict obedience to the divine injunction, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself."

COLE L. BLEASE, Governor.
Columbia, S. C.

. . .

"To Bar Drinking, Gambling and Idleness," Writes Governor Gilchrist

THE mothers have more to do in training the sons and daughters than the fathers. The best gift that could be given the children—the future American people—is the knowledge that no one can accomplish results who gets drunk, gambles and won't work.

ALBERT W. GILCHRIST.
Tallahassee, Fla.

SEVERAL mayors give their interpretation of the best gifts for the New Year.

Leading Mayors on the "Best Gift"

Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, of Boston, Mass., writes: "The best gift would be to increase the sense of responsibility on the part of the rich to those who are less fortunate, and a cessation among the poor of the spirit of discontent, in so far as it leads to bitterness and vindictive action rather than to self-improvement."

Mayor Samuel L. Shank, of Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "The best gift the New Year could bring would be a substantial and permanent decrease in the high cost of living and some definite plan formulated to bring a closer relationship between the producer and the consumer."

Mayor William S. Jordan, of Jacksonville, Fla., writes: "In my humble opinion, the best gift would be that the equality of opportunity should be made a fact as well as a theory in this republic. To bring it back to this basic principle and to set it once more truly and firmly on its foundation of 'equal rights to all,' is the greatest gift the New Year could bring."

Mayor Darius A. Brown, of Kansas City, Mo., writes: "The best gift would be such changes in the social, economic and industrial conditions that the following results would be accomplished:

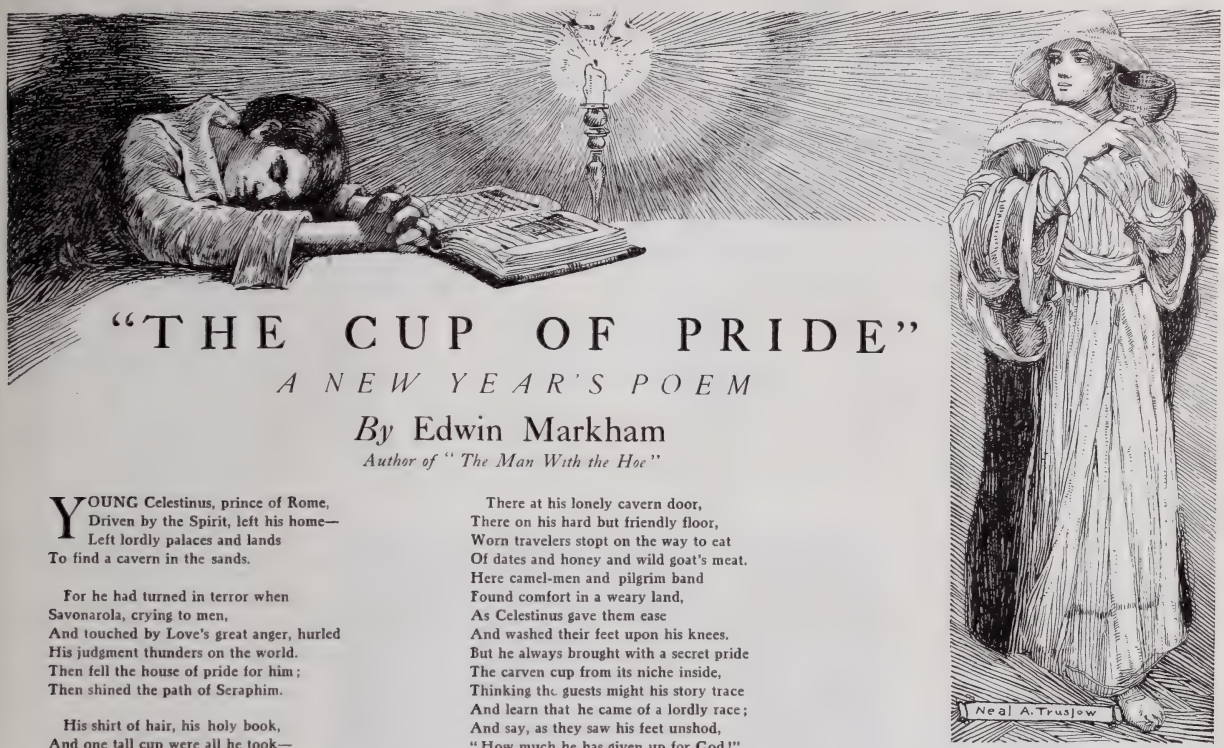
"First. That every man who honestly desires to do so would be given an opportunity to secure employment at such compensation as would enable him to adequately provide for himself and his family.

"Second. That the attitude of society toward the male and female delinquent will be such that when they honestly desire to live a decent and virtuous life, every possible encouragement and support will be given them.

"Third. That every man and woman will be judged, not according to their social or financial position, not according to what they think they are, nor according to what others think they are, but according to what they really are.

"Fourth. That the masses of the people will be given so square a deal that there will no longer be any necessity for charity and philanthropy."

President Russell H. Conwell, of Temple University, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "The greatest need of the American people is to fear hard times sufficiently to make them feel the need of God's care, and incline them to seek his protection."



"THE CUP OF PRIDE"

A NEW YEAR'S POEM

By Edwin Markham

Author of "The Man With the Hoe"

YOUNG Celestinus, prince of Rome,
Driven by the Spirit, left his home—
Left lordly palaces and lands
To find a cavern in the sands.

For he had turned in terror when
Savonarola, crying to men,
And touched by Love's great anger, hurled
His judgment thunders on the world.
Then fell the house of pride for him;
Then shined the path of Seraphim.

His shirt of hair, his holy book,
And one tall cup were all he took—
One carven cup whose lettering told
Of his princely race and their deeds of old.
So out by Elim's seven tall palms,
With sound of penitential psalms,
And aching knees and fastings long,
He strove to purge away the wrong
His deeds had heaped in those wild years
When he had sown the seed of tears.

But not alone with prayer and praise
Did Celestinus build his days.
He led afar a little stream
To glass the dawn and the starry beam.
He scooped each day the sandy hole
That held well-water as a bowl,
To gladden the conies in their play
And hearten the camels on the way.
He made the stream that was so lean
A winding path of trembling green,
Where vine-leaves lifted and white pease,
And barley for the wind to tease.

There at his lonely cavern door,
There on his hard but friendly floor,
Worn travelers stopt on the way to eat
Of dates and honey and wild goat's meat.
Here camel-men and pilgrim band
Found comfort in a weary land,
As Celestinus gave them ease
And washed their feet upon his knees.
But he always brought with a secret pride
The carven cup from its niche inside,
Thinking the guests might his story trace
And learn that he came of a lordly race;
And say, as they saw his feet unshod,
"How much he has given up for God!"

And yet in his prayers the hermit cried,
"Lord, have I purged away my pride?
Am I little and humble in Thy sight,
And moving hourly toward the light?"
And God was listening to this, and glad;
Till at the end of a happy year,
He turned to the angel Arabad:
"Go, for this child is very dear—
Go to the sands this soul to save."
So came one night to the hermit's cave
A pilgrim with starry eyes and grave.

Quickly the hermit smoothed a seat,
Spread for the traveler bread and meat,
Pouring the goat's milk foaming and cold
Into the cherished cup of gold,
The goblet carven with curious grace
To tell the glories of his race—
Their births, their deaths, their princely reigns,
Their daring deeds, their splendid pains.

Softly they talked with bite and sup,
Yet spoke no word of the boastful cup.
But lo, in the hush of the desert night,
When sleep on Celestinus fell,
There shined round the pilgrim a mystic light.
And he rose and took from the hermit's cell
The lordly goblet loved too well,
And bore it away in his camel-pack
And faded to air on the desert track.

But he sent on the hermit's soul a dream
That threaded the dark like a starry beam,
Bringing these words from the world's extreme:
"Your goblet, brother, I must destroy,
As we take from a child a perilous toy.
Let go of the past, both deed and date:
Only your own act molds your fate—
Only the man you are to-day
Counts when the judgment angels weigh!"

S H E P H E R D S

By MARIE CONWAY OEMLER

A Two-Part Story, of which this is Part Two

IT WAS a perfectly horrible time, however—the kind of time you look back to and wonder if you didn't dream it in a nightmare. The whole house smelt of carbolic; and a horrible waiting feeling seemed to have settled down on it—and us. You've got to go through it yourself to understand just what I mean. There was a great yellow sign on the house; and it was so quiet inside that every time the doorbell rang it sent prickly caterpillars wriggling up and down your spine.

Father was the only one who went out—he had to, you see. For there were lots of our people going through the same thing—and worse. Mrs. Delany's little Mary went, in spite of the antitoxin. Father was on the rush from morning until night.

Upstairs Mr. Harwood and Allie nursed Jimmy and Florian, and downstairs Cissy and I cooked and washed dishes and did the best we could. Cissy burnt her arm and hid it with her sleeve, and we didn't know anything about it until long afterward, when Allie noticed the scar on her wrist, and Mr. Harwood covered it with a bracelet. And every morning Mrs. Merrivale's big red automobile stopped outside the house, and she herself came to look at Mr. Harwood through the window. She deluged us with fruit and wines and jellies, which Cissy used to share with the parish.

Father used to stand at the foot of the steps, while Mr. Harwood, with his head tied up in a towel, and a clean sheet pinned over his clothes, would stand at the top, and call down, in his pleasant voice:

"No change for the worse yet, thank God!"

He kept insisting right along that they'd come through all right. But diphtheria is really a dreadful thing, it seems. Jimmy's case wasn't so bad; but Florian had a hard time—it looked as if he couldn't fight it off, even with the antitoxin. Most of the time he wasn't conscious at all.

I remember the worst night of all, when they said he was at the turning-point. Cissy and father and I knelt in our old study. We couldn't sleep, and we couldn't pray—at least, I couldn't. For Jimmy's my chum, you know, and Florian's the baby. Cissy says she dreams of that night yet, when she's eaten too much.

Father looked older and grayer and sadder than I'd ever seen him.

Upstairs everything was perfectly still, except when you'd hear Allie's light foot, or Mr. Harwood's heavier tread. It was dawn when he came to the head of the stairs and called:

"Jimmy's asleep. And Florian's passed the crisis, and he's asleep, too. They've pulled through!"

Cissy and I clung to each other, but father knelt down on the floor, and cried.

Say, you never saw kids pick up like those two did. They got well in jumps, Allie said, although she was very careful, and kept them in bed a frightfully long time, it seemed to me.

And then Mrs. Merrivale's big auto came, and carried Mr. Harwood off. And that's the last we saw of him. And Allie had time to draw a long breath and wonder about her broken-up confirmation class.

"Oh, that's all right," said father. The bishop left so suddenly that everything had to be deferred. He has returned, however, and I'll get your class in shape again, Allie, and do the best I can with it."

So Cissy sent her dress to Annie Fennis, and father found another teacher for the class—Allie had her hands too full of Jimmy and Florian

Continued on page 18

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER IX—Continued

THE district court room was crowded when the great trial of Brander Cushing for manslaughter in the famous naval factory horror came off.

There had never been such a case in Dockville. Brander Cushing was in many ways its foremost citizen. His wealth, his position, his skill, his national prominence, all combined to make the trial one of commanding interest.

He had hired the most skilful lawyers that money could retain. He was going to make the fight of a lifetime for his liberty. For as the trial proceeded he grew more and more convinced that his position was desperate. All the delays and technical quibbles that the law permits had been used, and now the case had reached its most intense stage in the calling of witnesses who had survived the horror.

The first witness called by Silas Fleming was the Fire Battalion Chief.

After any number of objections had been offered by Cushing's lawyers, the court ruled that the chief could tell his story in his own way. Then with all its harrowing details he told the story of the awful catastrophe.

A negro porter was called next—one of the common heroes of the tragedy. He testified:

"The elevators ran until they couldn't run. We were putting in the switch cables till they were overrun with water. They stuck. The circuit breakers were blowing out. I had too much on my car. The car gave way. They jumped down and everything, on top of me. Because of the smoke I could not see where the floor levels were, and had to open my doors at random. They were holding my hands and pulling my hair and jabbing me in the face. I do not know what I hit. The door would not close and all the glass came down on me. They fell on me and I could not stop them. They slid down the ropes. They jumped on the roof of my car. About twenty jumped on top of the roof. Even when the cars were far below them, the girls continued to jump, and their bodies wedged in between car and shaft. Above one elevator nineteen bodies were found so. It did not take long to finish the elevators." And he added with an ashen face, "I haven't had a good night's sleep since."

Silas Fleming, with a significant look at the jury, now called Hermosa Howard. Hermosa took the witness stand, which was directly in front of where Brander Cushing was sitting. In substance her testimony was as follows:

"We ran first to the elevator, and the man was not up. We knocked on the door, and he didn't come. We then turned to the stairway door. It was locked and there was no key there. . . . I tried to break it open, and I couldn't. . . . There was a woman forty years old there who was burned—Mary Herman—and Bessie Bischofsky, and there were others, and they were next to me and with me at the door; and I said to the woman, 'You try! You may be stronger.' She said, 'I can't.' So then I said, 'Let us all go at it!' And we did. I can swear positively the door was locked."

Cross-examined by Cushing's lawyer the story of her rescue by Sidney came out with glowing—yes, startling — clearness. Hermosa acted out parts of it. At points in her narrative different ones of the jurymen stood up. People in the court room swayed back and forth as Hermosa told how Sidney braced his foot on the board, and men and women in the audience held on to the backs of the benches in front of them as she told of the falling board and Sidney's hair-breadth escape. A sound of applause rose over the room, quickly suppressed by the court. Brander Cushing's counsel looked pleased at the impression made by this witness. The jury would surely take some account of this service so bravely rendered by Brander Cushing's son.

Athanasia was called.

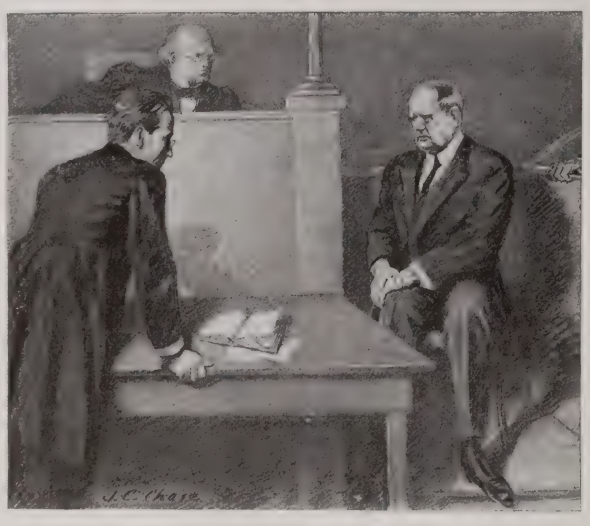
Athanasia faced the crowded room with a calm face, but the red spot glowed deep on her cheek as she glanced first at Hermosa and then at Brander Cushing. After the preliminary questions, "You were with Miss Howard and the others at the door by the elevator on the seventh story?"

"Yes, sir."

"Describe what took place there."

"We crowded up to the door and pushed on it. I am sure it was not locked. I saw it give way a little. I thought I would be dead, too. . . . But the smoke and flames were terrible, and some of the girls said it was better to be smashed than burned, and they wanted to be identified. They didn't want to jump, they was afraid. They was saying their prayers first, and putting rags over their eyes so they would not see. Up on the seventh they were jumping, too. I heard Yetta say to Natie, 'You jump first.' But when she had said her prayers she said, 'No; let me jump now.' Then she began to raise her arms as if she was talking to some one up high and then she jumped."

In the afternoon, Fleming brought on one of the janitors, who produced a blackened lock with the bolt shot back. This lock he claimed to have found near the broken passage and stairway at the head of which Hermosa testified the girls beat with their fists so vainly. This lock evidently made a great impression on the jury.



"'You admit the papers were served?' asked Fleming. 'I do,' was the reply"

It was the end of the second day before Brander Cushing was summoned. The witnesses had been disposed of with great rapidity. There had been little cross-examination.

Cushing was called by his lawyer first to testify to his knowledge of the locked doors. He made out a clear case of not guilty, at least in the minds of the spectators. But the jury was impassive. Silas Fleming did not cross-examine this testimony. All he did at its conclusion was to reach out over the table and shove the blackened lock a little nearer the two rows of jurymen.

Next came the matter of the fire-escapes, and Brander Cushing's responsibility. The deputy fire marshal had been put on to swear that the papers had been duly served. Severely cross-examined, he was evidently embarrassed and confused by the fact that no record of such service could be found with the fire department. This made an evident impression on the jury which all Silas Fleming's ingenious questioning could not remove.

It was Brander Cushing's lawyer's turn to question his distinguished client in rebuttal.

The afternoon was wearing away. The lights had just come on. Every one was tired and strained nervously by the rehearsal of the tragedy. Hermosa's face turned wistfully, with a mysterious deepening, toward Sidney. Athanasia, stooping even in her seat, never let her gaze waver from Brander Cushing's face. And he, with Sidney confronting him, now leaned slightly forward as the lawyer put the question:

"Mr. Cushing, were these papers that the deputy fire marshal swears were served on you ever served?"

Brander Cushing looked steadily at Sidney as he answered.

CHAPTER X

THE lawyer repeated the question, Brander Cushing was so slow about answering.

"Were the papers ever served on you, Mr. Cushing?"

"They were."

"The two words fell into the intense silence of the room like reports of an explosion. The lawyer leaned forward in amazement and said,

"They were not?"

"They were."

Again that dropping of two words into the deep silence of the court room. Then a rustle like a sigh from all together ran through the audience like water running over glass.

The judge, who was a trifle deaf, spoke sharply to the court stenographer.

"Read the question to the witness and his answer."

"Question: Were the papers ever served on you, Mr. Cushing?

"Answer: They were."

The stenographer sat down. The judge leaned forward over his desk and eyed Cushing as if another man had come in and taken his place on the witness stand. As, indeed, he had. Silas Fleming had risen, one fat hand on the big table littered over with law books and papers. His lips were parted and his big eyes were staring. Sidney had also risen and stretched out an arm towards the witness. It was his word that broke the dead silence.

"Father!"

And then he sat down and bowed his head on his arms.

Athanasia Ward was sitting on a bench just back of Sidney's chair. She bent forward and stretched out her arms. Her hands could not quite touch Sidney. Hermosa, seated beside her, drew her back. On Hermosa's face there was a tear, and her heart was beating fast. Over all the court room passed again that breath of intense interest following the moments of stupefied suspense. Again the silence was broken by Brander Cushing's calm, cold voice.

"The date of the service of the papers was September the 18th. The deputy marshal served them in my office at the shipyard in the presence of myself and my son."

Brander Cushing's counsel turned to Silas Fleming.

"This witness seems to belong to the prosecution," he said. With a strange look at Cushing, he sat down.

"You admit the papers were served?" asked Fleming.

"I do."

"On the eighteenth?"

"On the eighteenth."

"In your office?"

"Yes."

"In the presence of your son?"

"Yes."

"Where are the papers?"

"I destroyed them."

Silence.

"Your honor," said Fleming in a low voice, "I have no further questions." He bowed to Brander think something had fallen against it outside in the entrance to block it."

Continued on page 14

Astonishment was in the faces of judge, jury and spectators. Silas Fleming suppressed an oath. Hermosa held up her hand solemnly to warn Athanasia of her oath to tell the truth. But to all questioning and cross-questioning, Athanasia simply repeated the same story in the same words, as if she had committed them to memory. Nothing could shake her testimony. When she finally went down there was a look on her face such as few martyrs wear and a bewildered judge, jury and audience. Only on Sidney's face there had crept during the last few minutes an expression of wonder and shame and sorrow that grew as the trial proceeded.

Silas Fleming called one of the Italian girls who had escaped in some miraculous manner she was unable to describe.

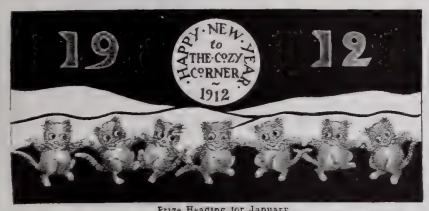
She said in substance:*

"We started to run, and the flames came out all around. Some of us began to catch fire. Almost none jumped till they were on fire. And those who weren't had to keep away from those who were. The flames were near me. My mouth was full of smoke. I wanted to get on a table and jump. But the windows were too crowded, and I seen so many bodies lying dead on the ground that I

* A part of this scene has been copied from a newspaper account of an actual court trial. Credit should be given. I do not know the writer. C.M.S.

HAPPY COZY CORNER DAYS

A HAPPY NEW YEAR



Prize Heading for January

MY DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: January is the time of beginnings, and another Happy New Year begins for us here in the Cozy Corner. What a happy, busy twelvemonth we have spent together! for it was about this time last year that we began really to know one another.

I have many surprises to tell you about that are tucked away in Cozy Corner plans for 1912; but I shall not fill this New Year's message with plans and promises. You must watch very closely and discover for yourselves that what so many of you so often say about our little Cozy Corner Department in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is constantly true of it: It gets better and better all the time. And I thank you, my dear, hearty, ambitious boys and girls, for inspiring it, because you do.

Many young people will join our ranks this year who have not been with us before, because THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is constantly making its way into new homes everywhere. A Happy New Year to you all, and a glad, warm welcome into the Cozy Corner. We want every boy and girl in the homes where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to be with us this year. Remember, the Aunt in the Cozy Corner wants to be a very real part of your boyhood and girlhood. And when we are all older we shall love so dearly to look back on the time when we worked and played together in Happy Cozy Corner days.

Very lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

SOME NICE WORK BY OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

My Dolly

I cried and cried
When my dolly died.
"You will get another,
Just go play with brother,"
Said mother gladly,
While I wept sadly.

Jennie Moore and Mamie Lack
Brought their dollies, dressed in black.
We covered her with flowers white—
The service in the sweet sunlight—
I cried and cried
When my dolly died!

When the service was over,
We buried her in a grave of clover.
I hung some crape on my doll-house door,
And stood and cried some more.
Oh, I cried and cried,
When my dolly died!

Illinois. MAXIE LYONS, age 11.
First prize, gunmetal watch.

A True Wolf Story

MANY years ago, when the Middle West was nearly all wildwood land, my great-grandfather, then a young man, started from Ingham County in Michigan to the town of Dexter, a distance of nearly forty miles, to buy a piece of land on which to grow corn. At dusk on the first evening of his tramp he heard the first cry of a wolf, then another and another. He knew by this time that wolves were following him. He cut a stout stick and trimmed it as he hurried on his way. Soon the wolves were so near that he turned and faced the pack, thinking he would soon be overpowered and killed. As they crowded closer he kept them at bay as best he could with his stick, and all at once in his nervous excitement he began to whistle. Strange as it may seem, the wolves drew back at the sound, so he walked backwards for a long time, whistling as he went, the wolves following at a safe distance, and as long as he whistled they came no nearer. At last he could whistle no longer, for his lips were paralyzed, and no sound would come. Then slowly and softly and in a high, piping voice he began to sing. Grandmother says, "I suppose that never a man ever sang with so much terror in his heart before." After a time, exhausted and dazed but still singing, he reached a settler's house and in the morning took up his journey again in safety.

GOLDA UNDERHILL, age 11.
Prize, Brownie kodak.

I Made It Myself

OUT of one-by-four planking I made a dandy tool-box. This is a diagram of it; almost any boy can make one. In the compartments we keep nails, staples, punches, chisels, wrenches, pincers; outside on one side a horizontal leather strap holds the hatchet; outside on the other side a vertical strap and a bent staple holds the saw, and everything is compact and in place. The barn tool-box, 18 inches long by 8 inches wide, is a family institution; we could not get along without it now.

JACK CADY, age 13.
Prize, Brownie kodak.

Among First Prize Winners

Anna Bunting, 13, Canada; Charles Huffman, 9, Iowa; Blanche Jones, 11, New Jersey; Elda A. McCaw, 13, Massachusetts; G. Raymond Schrader, 15, New York; Maggie Redfern, 17, Washington.

The names of forty-two boys and girls, who recently have won Supplementary Prizes, and of thirty whose names are on the Cozy Corner Honor Roll for work that is above the average, have been crowded out this week, but will be published in next week's CHRISTIAN HERALD.

An Enigma

I am quite a useful article,
And found in many a form;
I am seen upon the ocean
In sunshine and in storm;
The doctor prescribes me
When your throat isn't right;
When the settler builds his cabin
I help to make it tight.
I am scarce upon the prairie,
But in the forest found;
And I am quite abundant, too,
Where little dogs abound.

All who guess the enigma correctly and enclose a two-cent stamp to cover postage will receive a Cozy Corner Souvenir for January.

Good-Night Verse

The day is gently sinking to a close;
Fainter and yet more faint the sunlight glows;
Where thou art present darkness cannot be;
Midnight is glorious noon, O Lord, with thee.

The Care of Cut Glass

Cut glass is easily chipped. It is best, therefore, to wash it, one piece at a time, in a wooden tub or a padded dishpan. Never put cut glass in very cold or scalding hot water.

To wash: Make a suds of Ivory Soap and lukewarm water. Let the glass remain in the suds a few minutes. Then go over it with a medium stiff nail-brush. Rinse twice in water of same temperature as the water used for washing. The first rinsing water should be clear. To the second, add a little bluing; bluing gives a brilliancy to cut glass that cannot be produced in any other way. Dry with a soft flannel or a piece of cheesecloth which has been washed. Polish with soft tissue paper.

If you have a great deal of cut glass and use it frequently, it is a good idea to provide yourself with a supply of jewelers' sawdust, which can be dried and used over and over again. After washing the cut glass, place it in a box and pour sawdust over it. Rub the glass with handfuls of sawdust, and it will soon be dry. Any sawdust that may have attached itself to the glass can be removed with a brush.

Ivory Soap . . . . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

Answered Prayers

Miss E. A., Ohio. "The Lord has answered my prayer and I thank him for it."

S. J. C., Howe Cove, N. Y. "In answer to prayer I saw a father and mother converted."

Mrs. G. L. H., Troy, N. Y. "I want to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answer to prayer."

E. P., Blue Springs, La. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness through answered prayer."

Mrs. K. C., London, Ont. "God has raised my daughter from a sick-bed in answer to prayer."

M. S., Wallace, Idaho. "God answered my prayer during the dreadful forest fire at Wallace, Idaho."

Mrs. P. K. S. "My son was in great trouble. I asked God to help him and he has answered my prayers."

Mrs. A. O. V., Utica, N. Y. "I want to testify how wonderfully the Lord has brought me through awful affliction."

M. K. F., Cambridge Springs, Pa. "I was in very deep trouble over some temporal matters. I took it to God in prayer and he most graciously answered."

C. C. R., Zion City, Ill. "I have received answers to many prayers in the last year, and find that God's word is 'yea' to them that believe."

Subscriber, Lafayette, N. Y. "I acknowledge the return of a son who left home. This is only one of the many prayers which have been answered."

Mrs. N. E. H., LeRoy, Ill. "I want to acknowledge my gratitude to the Lord for answering our prayers and restoring me after a severe affliction."

Called Higher

William Williams (79), of Primrose, Ia., was called home on July 20 last.

Mrs. Eleanor R. Shaw (76), of Akron, O., has passed to the reward of years of service.

Mrs. William P. Goodall, nee Julia Boon, aged 78 years, of Macon, Ga., departed this life on September 21, 1911.

William M. Martin (66) died at his home in Charlotte, N. C., on September 1. He was for many years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. A. P. Hodgdon (87), of Boothbay, Me., passed to her rest on July 7 last. She had been for twenty years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Neil G. Reid (70) died at Ann Arbor, Mich., on October 22. She had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the past twenty years.

Mrs. Charles Darby (80), of Antioch, Ill., passed to her eternal rest on February 17 last. She was for many years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mr. S. M. Dearth (78) died on November 5, 1911, at his home near Franklin, O. He had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a number of years.

Mrs. E. E. Brayford (72), of Hood River, Ore., was called home in August last. She had been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for over twenty-five years.

William D. Botkin, of Bixby, Okla., passed away on June 6 last after a long illness. He had been for many years a devoted Christian and a subscriber to this magazine.

Rev. Alva Byers, of Salem, Ore., passed away recently at the home of his daughter. Mr. Byers, who was 79 years of age, had been in the active ministry for forty years.

Hardy Roses FREE!

WE GIVE FREE with each 50c order for garden or flower seeds ONE SPLENDID ROSEBUSH.

This rose blooms profusely from May until frost. It is hardy, and even the first year is literally covered with lovely roses and buds. A wonderful rose for pot culture in the house. Your choice of either pink, yellow or white.

Three of These Rosebushes Free with each $1.50 order for garden or flower seeds. Get a 50c order apiece from two of your friends and enclose with your own 50c order—for this we will send you three of these hardy rosebushes.

Send for Our Free Catalog Now—study over our Hardy Shrubs, Spring Bulbs, Small Fruits. An hour spent visiting a couple of your friends will give you 3 handsome rosebushes, free. Get the roses started early. Send for catalogue this week to Griswold Seed Co., 245 S. 10th St., Lincoln, Neb.

Seeds, Plants, Roses,

Bulbs, Vines, Shrubs, etc. Hundreds of car lots of FRUIT and ORNAMENTAL TREES. 1,200 acres, 50 in hardy Roses, none better grown. 47 greenhouses of Palms, Ferns, Ficus, Geraniums and other things too numerous to mention. Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, Roses, Small Trees, etc., by mail, postpaid. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Immense stock of SUPERB CANNAS, the queen of bedding plants. 50 choice collections cheap in Seeds, Plants, Roses, etc.

68-Page CATALOG FREE Send for it today and learn the real values. Direct deal will insure you the best at least cost. 58 years.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Box 809, PAINESVILLE, OHIO (21)

Famous Quartette
THE RESULT OF Free Music Lessons

Mandolin and Guitar, Two Difficult Instruments, Easily Learned in Their Own Homes

Any Instrument Taught

Read what Mr. P. Gatz, in the above picture, wrote after finishing his course:

"Having completed your mandolin and guitar course, I think your school the finest in the country for correct playing. There is no doubt about one becoming an accomplished musician through correspondence."
(Signed) P. GATZ,
Leader of the Vienna Quartette.

Just Fill in and Send the Coupon
Request by postal or letter will do

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
225 Fifth Ave., Box 7, New York City
Gentlemen:—Please send me particulars how I can learn the instrument after which I have marked X, with the aid of your FREE COURSE OF LESSONS. It is understood that this places me under no obligation and that my only expense while learning shall be for the necessary music, which amounts to about two cents a day.

Piano	Guitar	Cornet
Organ	Mandolin	Cello
Violin	Banjo	Sight Singing

The illustrated booklet you will receive is very interesting and contains much useful information.

Name .....
Address .....
.....
Clip Coupon and Mail Today
Instruments supplied when needed, cash or credit.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 12

Cushing as he had never bowed to any person in his life. The judge seemed to wake from a dream.

"That is all, Mr. Cushing. Call the other witness, Mr. Fleming."

Sidney took the stand. All eyes were on him. In that brief experience he had aged. No one could know the depth of feeling that flooded his soul as Silas Fleming put the question to him almost mechanically:

"Were the papers of notification for the erection of the fire-escapes on the naval factory building served on your father in his office by the deputy fire marshal?"

"They were."

"On the eighteenth of September?"

"Yes."

"You saw them yourself?"

"I did."

Silence.

"That is all." Fleming bowed again. Sidney stepped down. The jury as a man followed him as he went and sat beside his father. On the faces of both of them there was a look that every man respected. An awed silence pervaded that dingy old room where so much of human sordidness and dirty guilt had been common. And men looked into one another's face with parted lips, asking questions silently, still baffled by the event.

Silas Fleming turned to the judge.

"That is our case, your honor."

He sat down again and whispered with his colleagues, and then rose to make his summing up to the jury.

Evidently Silas Fleming was not himself. His characteristic bullying, aggressive, storming manner that went naturally with his massive, ponderous arms and shoulders had received a distinct shock. He made a brief statement of the facts of the fire, but did not emphasize the fact of the locked door. At the end he dwelt briefly on the fact that the accused had admitted the service of the fire marshal's papers and that the case of the State against him was thereby sustained. And then he closed with this remarkable appeal to the court:

"May it please this court and jury, the astonishing confession just now made by the accused puts this prosecution on a new basis. As the prosecuting attorney, I beg to ask the jury to bring in a verdict tempered with mercy. There is no proof that Brander Cushing was responsible for the locked doors. For his negligence in the matter of failure to provide the fire-escapes as required by law, I plead, your honor, for indulgence to be shown as far as possible."

With this astonishing peroration, Silas Fleming sat down.

And then the counsel for Brander Cushing rose to reply.

This lawyer, a keen, fully equipped corporation counsel, skilled in all the technical subtleties of evasion and temporizing and the making of black into white in which long years of practise had made him master, had been whispering to Brander Cushing during Fleming's hesitating and halting address. Evidently the whispering had not resulted in anything satisfactory, for when he rose his face betrayed a baffled look.

But as he went on, he warmed to the defense of his strange client. He dwelt on the fact of his lifelong honesty and probity, of his many acts of kindness shown to the people in the factory and the tenement, and in his own shipyard. He reviewed the evidence with keen analysis and proved conclusively that Cushing had not been guilty of ordering the doors of the factory rooms to be locked. And then he launched out into a magnificent appeal based on this man's son's heroic act at the scene of the disaster. It had nothing to do with the charge against Brander Cushing, and every one knew it; but nevertheless it had an evident effect on the jury. And at the close, he touched on the admitted confession of the service of the papers, but pleaded with real eloquence for a verdict that would not consign to a future of shame and dishonor a man who had committed one fault in a whole lifetime of honorable and kindly deeds.

The judge, an old man, cautious, cold of intellect and bearing, charged the jury.

He sharply criticized the counsel for Brander Cushing for bringing forward as an argument Sidney's action as if it had any bearing on the case. He coldly reviewed the testimony in regard to the locked doors and emphasized the accused's confession, and reminded the jury that the indictment under which Brander Cushing was being tried covered both manslaughter and criminal neglect. If he was convicted on both counts it meant a penitentiary sentence of twenty-five years. If the jury should find for criminal neglect only, the law fixed the penalty at ten years for the maximum and five years for the minimum imprisonment, with a thousand dollars' fine.

The jury filed out. There was question with the court as to the time for waiting a verdict. The judge announced that the court would await the usual hour of adjournment, and if the jury did not arrive at a verdict by that time, adjournment would succeed.

In this waiting period, while a subdued murmur and buzz passes through the room, let us look into Brander Cushing's soul and seek for the reasons that have brought about this deep crisis of his personal history.

From the moment Sidney had promised, on that night of his return from Washington, to stand by his father in the denial of the service of the papers, Brander Cushing had never had a moment of real peace with himself. Sidney had requested his father never to mention the matter again, and during all the driving energy of the work at the shipyard, not a word had been spoken about it. But in spite of his most desperate efforts mentally, Brander Cushing never once succeeded in blunting a naturally keen sense of justice which he possessed. The thought of his own perjury did not disturb him greatly. He was one of those men who can say quite glibly, "Oh, I don't care whether there's a future life or not. I'd just as soon die as not." But it was different when Sidney, his own son, was involved. He loved him with a passion that was the accumulation of a love that had no other channel of expression. His friends were very few. His wife had died when Sidney was a baby. He had no brothers or sisters. His entire forceful, dominant, vital, abounding personality went out towards this young man so like himself outwardly, so strong and brave and generous and open-hearted. He loved him more than he loved himself. And the thought of forcing this bright, clean spirit into perjury filled his soul with fear.

The trial had stirred Brander Cushing to the depths of his deep nature. He had endured all the tortures of self-condemnation as witness after witness had told the horrible story of that result of his own carelessness. And then, Athanasia! He saw at once through the transparent guilelessness of the girl's evident but vain attempt to shield him by perjuring herself about the facts of the locked door. And her reason for it? Sidney! His mind, extremely keen and swift, searched his memory of her face as she sat in the court room, her gaze fastened on Sidney, the wistful, child-like, hopeless look that betrayed her feeling without any effort at concealment. What! This crippled, hunchback girl ready to perjure herself and contradict her dearest friend for the sake of his son and himself! And he, Brander Cushing, eager to thrust his son into the lifelong infamy of a lie

Continued on next page

15.95 AND UPWARD
AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. It is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1134 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

Plant GREEN'S TREES, SHRUBS, PLANTS and VINES

For over thirty-three years people with discriminating tastes have been relying on Green to offer suggestions for pretty lawns and gardens through his annual catalog.

Reasons for Buying of Green

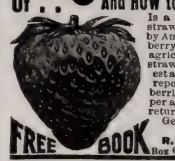
His trees, plants, vines and shrubs are of high quality and true to name. You are half of your money by buying direct of Green. Green's products are northern grown, hardy, and free from scale. Green has a national reputation for fair dealing.

Send for GREEN'S 1912 CATALOG. If you send now, at once, you will also get Green's Book—"Thirty Years with Fruits and Flowers"—FREE.

Established 32 years. Capital $100,000

GREEN'S NURSERY CO., Box 18, Rochester, N.Y.

Great Crops Of . . STRAWBERRIES And HOW to GROW THEM



Is a complete treatise on strawberry culture written by America's greatest strawberry expert. Indorsed by agricultural colleges and strawberry growers of highest authority. Government reports show that strawberries yield more dollars per acre and give quicker returns than any other crop. Get our book and learn how. IT'S FREE!

FREE BOOK

R. M. KELLOGG CO.
Box 670 Three Rivers, Mich.

STOKES' SEEDS

"Seed catalog time" is here and I have a beauty with colored illustrations and a free proposition with cash prizes which you will be interested in.

Send for a copy today—free if you mention the (name of paper).

Walter P. Stokes, Seedsman
Dept. 40, Philadelphia

Wonderful Fall Bearing Strawberries These new berries are a great success. They bear fruit every fall as well as spring, three crops in two years. They have yielded as high as 10,000 qts. to acre in Aug., Sept. and Oct. of first year, with us. We cannot get enough fruit to supply demand. I know of nothing quite so profitable. We are also headquarters for Plum Farmer, Lombard and Royal Purple Raspberries, Watt Blackberry, Early Ozark Strawberry, Hastings Potato. Catalogue of all kinds of Berry Plants free. Address and Almanac for 1912 has 224 pages with many colored plates of fowls true to life. It tells all about chickens, their prices, their care, diseases and remedies. All about Incubators, their prices and their operation. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It's an encyclopedia of chickendom. You need it. Only 15c.

L. J. Farmer, Box 255, Pulaski, N.Y.

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK on POULTRY

C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 905, Freeport, Ill.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 cycle. Write for special offer.

We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL and prepay freight on bicycle.

FACTORY PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalogs and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer.

Tires, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, half prices.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. M 71, Chicago, Ill

MAKE MONEY RAISING POULTRY

Easy—Fascinating. Poultry always in demand. Get Ready Now. $10 Starts You The Advance, 100 egg incubator and 100 chick brooder, value $12, both prepaid $10. We've started hundreds with this outfit. Order today or write for full description how to start, etc.

ADVANCE MFG. CO. Box 67, Greenville, Ohio.

EARN MONEY IN SPARE TIME

The National Dress Goods Co., New York, needs a competent responsible woman to represent them in each locality. Pleasant, permanent work. Free outfit, good pay. Write today for full particulars. National Dress Goods Company, Dept. 7, No. 260 West Broadway, New York.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

that would brand them both for all time!

He had never known a real sacrifice, not even for Sidney. How could he make this one? The result—ignominy, shame, loss of reputation, a felon's fate, dishonored old age, his ambition shattered, lifelong ruin! Surely a lie was better for them both than all that hell on earth that stood over against the speaking of two words instead of three. On the other hand, there was the possibility of acquittal. Even if his confession of guilt made the indictment justified, the very fact of his confession threw him on the mercy of the court.

All the intricate workings of the human heart will never be known. All that prompted Brander Cushing to save his son that day from perjury can never be analyzed. But as he sat there waiting for the jury to come in with its verdict, he held his son's hand as he used to when he walked out with him when he was a little boy. Somehow he felt that, no matter what happened, the hand that touched his would be strong enough to pull his soul out of hell.

Did you ever have a little child, as it walked by you, slip its little hand into yours without being asked? And have you, as its soft little palm gave itself with perfect confidence to your bigger one, been able to say, "Thank God, I am pure, and worthy of this little one's confidence in me"?

Such was Brander Cushing's feeling as he sat there that day waiting for that jury to come back.

When they finally did file into the court room, it seemed only a few minutes since they had left. The conversation instantly ceased. The judge came in from his room back of the platform. The court bailiff spoke his word, and the foreman of the jury stood up. He held a slip of paper in his hand.

"Are you ready, gentlemen of the jury, with a verdict?"

"We are, your honor. We have been on our knees asking God to direct us. We find the accused guilty of criminal negligence in the matter of the failure to provide the fire-escapes required by the law, and we commend him to the mercy of the court."

Brander Cushing stiffened in his chair. His face was like marble. The judge beckoned Fleming and Cushing's attorney up to the desk. There was a whispered conference.

"Is there any reason why this case should not be closed right here?"

"None that I know of," said Fleming. He was simply dumbfounded by the course of events. Cushing's counsel simply said, as he shrugged his shoulders,

"My client says he prefers going to State prison to waiting in the filthy county jail for the outcome of a useless appeal."

"There is nothing else, then, gentlemen," said the judge, except to pronounce sentence. Is that your final word?"

"It is, your honor."

The lawyers went back to the table and sat down. Again Cushing's lawyer whispered to him. Again he shook his head.

The judge, after a moment, said slowly,

"Prisoner at the bar, have you anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced on you now?"

Brander Cushing stood up. His strong fingers were clasped around the railing in front of the jury box. He looked straight at the men who had just given their verdict, then turned to the judge and said distinctly:

"No, your honor."

The judge hesitated a moment, then spoke gravely and with unusual feeling.

"There is no discretion with the court. The law fixes the minimum penalty at five years' imprisonment and a thousand dollars' fine. The recommendation for mercy cannot carry with it any change of that sentence. I therefore sentence you, Brander Cushing, on the finding of the jury, to a term of five years' imprisonment in the State penitentiary and the payment of one thousand dollars' fine as fixed by law. And," he added with an emotion as unusual as the whole trial had been, "May the mercy of God, which all of us need, be extended to you and yours."

To be continued

EVERYBODY WANTS TO READ IT

I received The Christian Herald Almanac, and am very much pleased with it. I suppose it will make me unselfish, as every member of the family seems to wish to read it at once, and I am compelled to share it with them.

Rossmoyne, O. CLARA A. THOMPSON.

Get This Bargain Offer

Big 1912 surprise on quality and price. Hatchers backed by my 25 years' experience. Hold your incubator money till you hear from me—SURE.

MILLER'S IDEAL

incubators and brooders are better than ever—biggest money makers. Miller Free Book better than ever, too. Write quick for early start and biggest saving.

Send Your Name Now

J. W. Miller Co., Box 178, Freeport, Ill.

Nulite Gasoline Table Lamp

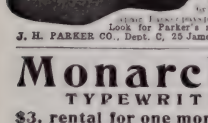
A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c. p. brilliant light 2 cent per hour. Saves 90% of your light bill.

AGENTS—Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory to capable town, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
413 So Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Registered in U. S. Patent Office



Healthful for best chambers, bath and sick-room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold on all cards or dealers or by mail, 25c a pair, postage paid. Catalog free. Look for Parker's name in every pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

Monarch Light Touch
TYPEWRITERS
$3. rental for one month
$15. rental for six months
Sold on EASY PAYMENT plan
Send for Literature and address of nearest office
Executive Offices: 300 Broadway, New York

Agents, $2.40 per Hour

cannot be made without hustle. No article "sells itself" but some men sell Automatic "Clean" Curry Combs at the rate of a dozen per hour. Sell at 40 cents, worth dollars in time and labor saved. 100% profit and samples on approval if you are ready for business.

Address, CLEAN COMB CO., 10TH St., Racine, Wis.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE AT YOUR HOME
Write Today
for our Booklet. It tells how to learn to play Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, etc. Beginners or advanced pupils.
American School of Music, 63 Lakeside Bldg. Chicago, Ill.

WANTED: High class man to sell trees, shrubs, roses, vines, berry bushes, etc. Good wages. Permanent. Exclusive territory.
BROWN BROTHERS COMPANY, Rochester, New York

The Howard Watch

The Telephone Operators in New York City handle 180,000 calls every rush hour. They will connect you with any one of 500,000 subscribers in half a minute.

Ask the Exchange Manager how he can handle all these calls, and he will tell you tersely, "By saving the seconds."

"Schedule time" is the keynote of American industry. That means HOWARD time. There's always somebody higher up holding a HOWARD Watch on the job—demanding the HOWARD type of accuracy and punctuality.

The HOWARD is the one watch in the world wholly adapted to modern progress. It has the precise construction and the scientific adjustment.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Jas. Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel at $150, and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350—is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD. The jeweler who can is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post-card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

E. HOWARD WATCH WORKS, Boston, Mass.

Applying Wall Board to Studding — Applying Wall Board to Ceiling

Save a Month's Time in Building!

Build right through coldest winter weather by using Bishopric Wall Board in place of plaster. Bishopric Wall Board is applied dry, in sheets 4x4 ft., just as it comes from the factory. 12,685,450 square feet sold in twelve months. Any man who can drive nails can put it on. Put it on any time. Saves a month's time and costs less than plastering. For walls and ceilings of homes (finest Mansions, as well as Cottages or Bungalows), Office Buildings, Stores, Factories, Schools, Churches, Halls, Garages or Attics, Cellars, Laundries, Porches and Partitions of every building, new or old. Ready for paint, paper or any decoration.

Bishopric Wall Board is made of asphalt mastic and imbedded lath. Asphalt mastic does not burn. Protects imbedded lath and makes wall or ceiling fire-resisting. Only wall board with imbedded lath. Lath are positively necessary to preserve a rigid, perfect plane. Bishopric Wall Board cannot swell or warp or crack. Positively guaranteed proof against dampness, heat, cold, wind, sound or vermin. Price $2.50 per 100 square feet, or $6.40 per crate of 16 sheets, 256 square feet, F. O. B. factories. Sold on money-back guaranty.

BISHOPRIC WALL BOARD

Write for Free Book and Large Free Sample

Get our Free Book and Samples of Bishopric Wall Board, Sheathing and Roofing. Address

THE MASTIC WALL BOARD AND ROOFING MFG. CO., 144 Este Avenue, CINCINNATI, OHIO

LABLACHE
FACE POWDER
PERFECT BEAUTY
assures the poise which comes from knowing you appear at your best. Thousands of women gain that confidence by using LABLACHE. It beautifies the delicate tissues, smooths the wrinkles and gives the skin that youthful velvety appearance which imparts the desired touch of refinement.
Refuse substitutes.
They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream. 50c. a box of druggists or by mail. Send 10 cts. for a sample box.
BEN. LEVY CO.,
French Perfumers
Dept. 23, 125 Kingston Street, BOSTON, MASS.

Lina Morgan
Copyright 1911

FREE

Try "3 in One" on pianos, tables, any furniture, all veneered and varnished surfaces.
Doesn't form a crusty overcoat of grease and dirt like varnish, but sinks into the grain of the wood, removing scars and stains, bringing back the original finish. Soils nothing; helps everything; no grease; no acid; no offensive odor; all stores; big bottle; little price. Write for free bottle and new booklet. 3 IN 1 OIL CO., 42 C. H. Broadway, New York City.
3 in One Oil

Adirondack Foot-Warmers
Are Indispensable for Motoring, Driving and Sitting Outdoors
They insure coziness, warmth, comfort! Make living in the open in the Winter a keen enjoyment. They're universally in demand. Worn by men and women over regular shoes or over hose. Made of selected sheepskin with heavy, warm wool insides, ten inches high. State shoe size and whether to be worn over shoes or hose. Money back if not satisfactory.
$1.50 PAIR SENT PREPAID
Write for large illustrated Catalog of Outdoor Outfittings
W. C. LEONARD & CO., 114 Main St., Saranac Lake, N. Y.

GREGORY'S SEEDS
Here is a big offer of choicest seeds—10 packages—worth 90 Cents—postpaid. 25c coin or stamps
1 pkg. Aster, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture, . . 10c.
1 pkg. Pansy, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture, . . 15c.
1 pkg. Cosmos, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture, . 5c.
1 pkg. Poppy, Gregory's Fancy Double Mixed Annuals, 10c.
1 pkg. Mignonette, Gregory's Large Flowering, very rich, 10c.
1 pkg. Bachelor Button, Gregory's Finest Mixture . 10c.
1 pkg. Petunia, Gregory's Finest Hybrid Mixture, . 15c.
1 pkg. Candytuft, Gregory's Finest Mixed, . . . 5c.
1 pkg. Nasturtium, Dwarf, Finest Mixed, . . . 5c.
1 pkg. Sweet Peas, Extra Choice Mixed, . . . 5c.
Get our new 1912 catalogue.
J. J. H. GREGORY & SON
109 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.

DON'T PAY TWO PRICES
Save $18.00 to $22.00 on

HOOSIER RANGES AND HEATERS
Why not buy the best when you can buy them at so low an Factory Prices? THIRTY DAYS FREE TRIAL BEFORE YOU BUY. Our new improvements also largely surpass anything ever produced. SEND POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR FREE CATALOG AND PRICES.
Hoosier Steel
HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY 154 State St. Marion, Ind.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

MAKES and burns its own gas. Produces 100 candle power light—brighter than electricity or gasoline—cheaper than kerosene. No dirt. No grease. No odor. Over 200 styles. Every lamp warranted. Agents wanted. Write for catalog. Do not delay.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
349 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Old New Year's Customs

IN OLD Manhattan, when the Bowery and Maiden Lane were what their names indicate, when fashionable homes clustered around the battery and gardens grew where now the tenements throng, the New Year was ushered in with social pomp. The custom of making calls on the first day of January did not fall into abeyance until a very recent period. As the big city stretched itself over immense distances, running up Yonkers way, extending far over Brooklyn and Flatbush and sending lines of communication into Connecticut and New Jersey, New Year's calls became less and less practicable and house parties superseded them.

The New Year is at present a favorite time for house-parties in the country, to which city folk joyfully escape, and for various forms of social diversion, alluring domestic groups and starting the year under gay auspices. The custom of making calls, coming down from old Manhattan until about the middle of the last century, was peculiarly appreciated in New York. Preparations for hospitality were made beforehand, and the matron who prided herself upon good housekeeping spread her table generously for the entertainment of a number of guests who would begin calling about noonday and continue coming until midnight. The streets were notable by reason of the absence of women, who on New Year's Day remained within doors, beautifully dressed and ready to give a cordial and winsome greeting to their friends and kinsmen. Black-coated figures, debonaire and gallant, marched steadily along at a brisk pace. Motor-cars, taxicabs and electric street-cars were then unknown, but private conveyances of every description were in requisition and carriages dashed up to the doors of houses where ladies were receiving, while gentlemen, hat in hand, hurried swiftly within to utter compliments, give good wishes and taste the delicacies offered them.

Cold turkey at one end of the table and a cold ham or round of spiced beef at the other, pickled oysters between, chicken salad and tongue in jelly, furnished the substantials for a New Year's table. Rich cakes black with fruit, and covered with white icing, pyramids of macaroons, delicate sponge cakes, home-made candies, creams and confections and fragrant coffee were the temptations set before the callers and urged upon them. In the evening the young people had their own good times, and many a betrothal dated from New Year's Day. The second of January was devoted by women to calls upon one another, the streets again blossoming out in the gaiety of their winter toilettes.

The greetings everywhere exchanged to-day were heard cheerily in old Manhattan. What better words can we choose for our holiday greeting now than the familiar wish that our dear ones may have a happy New Year? Happiness is not so elusive as some people would have us think. It is within our reach if we are willing to lead simple lives, to deal generously and honorably with every one, and seek happiness in little things.

* * *

To the Half of My Kingdom

THE monarch of antiquity, when he held out the golden scepter to the beautiful Queen Esther, told her to ask what she would of him, saying that he would grant her anything she wanted to the half of his kingdom. That was a liberal and elastic offer. The average man goes a bit further to-day, for he offers to the queen of his heart and home the whole of his kingdom. Everything that he possesses is laid at her feet, and he counts himself fortunate in having her love and in being able to bestow upon her the fruits of his labor. All that he asks is to make her happy. This is the frame of mind of the loving husband. How then does it happen that a letter like the following drifted like a shadow into the middle of a sunny morning where the editor of this page was sitting at her desk?

"I love my husband and he loves me. We married for love, and we are still in love with one another. We have the most beautiful child in all the world. The baby is six months old. We both adore him. Yet, half the time Jack is so cross and fault-finding that I don't know what to do. I do not answer him back. I just break down and cry, and then he is twice as cross. He makes a good living, but he never gives me a cent. My clothes are wearing out, and I do not see any prospect of new ones. Jack never imagines that I can need a new frock or wrap or so much as a pair of shoes."

Another, a man's letter, dwells shrinkingly upon disparity of age. "I am forty and in love for the first time with a girl of twenty-two. May I dare ask her to overlook the years between us?" A girl of twenty-two need not fear to say yes to a suitor of forty, for a man at that age has not reached his meridian, but when the difference is on the opposite side, the woman of forty should beware of mating with a youth of twenty-two.

When a man's single he is, in these days, and in city life, so often made comfortable in bachelor quarters that his thoughts do not turn toward marriage as inevitably as in simpler days they did. He may pay for having his buttons sewed on and his dinners cooked, and he may grow selfish and crabbed and critical and self-conceited in his single life, not realizing that he is disloyal to society and preparing for himself a lonely age. In primitive settlements and in frontier life, where women are at a premium and luxuries are few, men better appreciate women. A young army officer who had been serving a long time in a rough border country rode one day through a village where the Monday's wash was hanging on the line. He dismounted and sprang over a fence and kissed the hem of a woman's apron. That apron was to him the symbol of domestic bliss.

Neither woman nor man was meant to live in solitude if love and loyalty and propinquity can bring the right two together and enable them to exchange the sacramental vow that pledges fealty "until death do us part."

* * *

Let the Children Have Pets

IF THE children are to learn kindness to animals and gentleness and responsibility for the protection of the weak, let them have pets. The boy in the country should have his dog, the dog being a real friend and companion to the master who understands him. In the crowded cities dogs have not liberty enough, and one cannot help pitying them when they are led about at the end of a leash and taken from the house for airings. In the country, where they have room to run hither and yonder, they fit into the environment. One of the most charming books written by the late Lawrence Hutton, a man whom every one loved, was a bit of his own biography and bore the title, A Boy and Four Dogs. The children who have no pets lose something of their birthright.

TIED DOWN
20 Years' Slavery—How She Got Freedom
A dyspepsia veteran who writes from one of England's charming rural homes to tell how she won victory in her 20 years' fight, naturally exults in her triumph over the tea and coffee habit:
"I feel it a duty to tell you," she says. "how much good Postum has done me. I am grateful, but alsodesire to let others, who may be suffering as I did, know of the delightful method by which I was relieved.
"I had suffered for 20 years from dyspepsia and the giddiness that usually accompanies that painful ailment, and which frequently prostrated me. I never drank much coffee, and cocoa and even milk did not agree with my impaired digestion, so I used tea, exclusively, till about a year ago, when I found in a package of Grape-Nuts the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.'
"After a careful reading of the booklet I was curious to try Postum and sent for a package. I enjoyed it from the first, and at once gave up tea in its favor.
"I began to feel better very soon. My giddiness left me after the first few days' use of Postum, and my stomach became stronger so rapidly that it was not long till I was able (as I still am) to take milk and many other articles of food of which I was formerly compelled to deny myself. I have proved the truth of your statement that Postum 'makes good, red blood.'
"I have become very enthusiastic over the merits of my new table beverage, and during the past few months, have conducted a Postum propaganda among my neighbors which has brought benefit to many, and I shall continue to tell my friends of the 'better way' in which I rejoice." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.
Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."
Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

An Unexcelled Use For Idle Money 5%
WITHOUT speculation, and without tying up your idle money inconveniently, this company offers an opportunity for you to earn fair profits, until you need your money for other purposes. We are paying 6% per annum—have done so for 19 years—and since this is compounded semi-annually (or remitted by check, if desired) the earnings are often larger than the 6% simple interest you can get on a mortgage. And you can withdraw your money at any time upon short notice.
Assets Over $2,500,000
Under Supervision of N.Y. Banking Dept.
This company has been established eighteen years and has patrons in every quarter of the globe.
Write us for information. We probably have a patron in your locality to whom we can refer you.
Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., N.Y.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.
Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
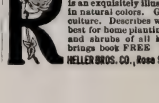
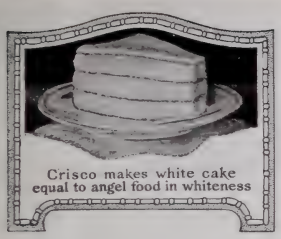
or otherwise

L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the Mfrs.—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair


Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or send 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 5c postage.
Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A345 22 Quincy St., Chicago

ROSES of NEW CASTLE
is an exquisitely illustrated book of 96 pages, printed in natural colors. Gives lifetime experience on rose culture. Describes wonderful Hoosier roses—world's best for home planting. Also full line of hardy plants and shrubs of all kinds. Your name on postcard brings book FREE. Be sure to write today.
HELLER BROS. CO., Rose Specialists, Box 120 New Castle, Ind.



Crisco makes white cake equal to angel food in whiteness

An Absolutely New Product

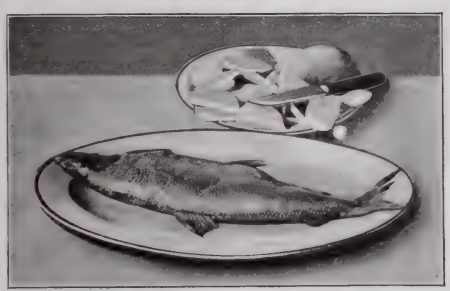
Foods fried in Crisco are light and flaky

A Scientific Discovery Which will Affect Every Kitchen in America

TWO years ago, a new and heretofore unknown food was discovered. This discovery remained a secret while the food was submitted to every possible test. Then, within the last year, it was furnished to a large number of chefs and domestic science teachers to experiment with. The tests were successful and proved that the food was ideal, something that the American housewife had always needed.

The many advantages of this new food may seem unbelievable to women who never have had an opportunity to use it, but they are now known, proven facts in domestic science schools and in hotel kitchens, where cooking is a science or business.

This product is purely vegetable and is to be used in cooking wherever you now use animal fats, such as butter or lard. There is not a meal served in your home in the preparation of which Crisco, the new product for frying, for shortening and for general cooking, is not needed. It is impossible to give here all the advantages of Crisco, but the ones which come closest to home are outlined.



Fry Fish, then Potatoes in the same Crisco. The Potatoes will not Taste of the Fish.

This Seems Impossible Until You Do it Yourself

YOU can fry fish in Crisco, and the Crisco will not absorb the fish odor! You then can use the same Crisco for frying potatoes without imparting to them the slightest fish flavor. Heretofore, you may have hesitated to fry fish because it meant the wasting of so much lard. With Crisco, not a drop need be thrown away; it can be used and re-used which makes it very economical. Will you not make this fish and potato test and learn for yourself that it is possible to fry food after food in the same Crisco without imparting to one food the flavor of another?

Dry Frying—A Radical Change

THERE is another unusual feature of Crisco which makes a radical change in frying. You have noticed that the quicker you fry, the better results you secure. All cook-books say "Heat your fat smoking hot." Lard smokes and burns at 400 degrees, and any temperature above this point is not practical, owing to the discoloration and the quantity of smoke given off. You can heat Crisco very much hotter than lard (455°) and it will not burn nor smoke. To realize fully the advantages of this high frying point of Crisco, cook potatoes in it.

Cut the slices a quarter of an inch in thickness; soak them in cold water; then thoroughly dry them in a cloth.

Heat the Crisco very hot and put in just a few potatoes at a time.

Do not put in too many at once, or they will cool the Crisco and you will lose the benefit of its high frying point.

Crisco fries so quickly that a crust forms instantly and prevents absorption, thus the full flavor is retained and the potatoes are more healthful than when soaked with grease. The outside is a rich, golden brown and the inside is light and mealy, like a baked potato. No black specks spoil your food, and no "frying odor" permeates your dining-room and kitchen. When you use Crisco for frying, the improvement is so marked that you can see the difference at once.

Have You Hesitated to Eat Pastry?

From a standpoint of health, the discovery of Crisco is of great value. Pie has been called the great American dessert, and many have eaten it in spite of the fact that they believed it to be indigestible. Crisco makes foods more digestible. Doctors are the strongest advocates that Crisco has. Many physicians personally are recommending it to their patients, because the vegetable ingredients, of which it is made, are more readily assimilated than are animal fats. They know that Crisco has great nutritive value, and since its discovery you can eat freely foods that heretofore you could not digest.

A New Standard

UNTIL Crisco was discovered, butter was the standard for good cake-making. Crisco gives a richer, finer flavored cake than can be made with butter. Butter is nearly one-fifth water while Crisco contains no moisture, but is all shortening. Cake made with Crisco may be kept longer without loss of its original fine flavor and soft texture. Both table and cooking butter vary in flavor and richness during the different seasons. Crisco never varies. There is but one quality—the best. Every package is as rich as the first one. This unfailing richness, this absolute uniformity enable you to make your cake delicious with regularity. Your results in cake-making do not vary in the exasperating way they have done heretofore, so you never waste foods because they do not "turn out" well. You get actually better results than with butter, at about half the cost. Crisco makes as fine and wholesome a cake as rich cream, with an equally delicate and delicious flavor.

Butter Nearly One-fifth Water

Every Woman is Interested in This

FROM the viewpoint of economy, Crisco, the new product for cooking, excels. Foods fried in Crisco absorb less, consequently there is more Crisco left. In deep frying, it is apparent how little Crisco is used—how much of it is left, as one woman said, so little Crisco was absorbed that it seemed to her as though she had just as much when she finished as when she started to fry. This is another reason why Crisco is so economical.

Crisco also keeps excellently. It does not become strong. It is so clean and pure in origin and manufacture that it stays sweet and fresh. Crisco is never sold in bulk, but is put up in immaculate packages, perfectly protected from dust and store odors. No hands touch it, no unsanitary paddles nor wooden boats. You are sure that every package of Crisco is wholesome.

Lard Two-thirds Gone

Dip out a spoonful and look at it. You will like its very appearance, for it is a pure cream white, with a fresh, pleasant aroma. It is crisp and flaky, just the proper consistency to make it ideal for creaming in cake or for working into pie crust.

Crisco Two-thirds Left

THESE are strong statements, but they are facts which you can prove for yourself. Give your grocer an order for a package today. It requires no experimenting—you use it where you now use butter or lard, and in just the same way. Make the fish and potato test; try it for "dry" frying; try Crisco pastry, Crisco white cake, best of all try Crisco biscuits, and you will become a Crisco enthusiast and realize why its discovery will affect every family in America.

On request, we shall mail a fully illustrated booklet, showing many other advantages of Crisco the new, and heretofore unknown, strictly vegetable product for frying, for shortening and for general cooking. Address Dept. S.

Sold by grocers at 25c the package except in the Far West

Crisco—Better than Butter for Cooking

Crisco is being placed in the grocery stores as rapidly as possible. If your own grocer does not yet keep it, you probably will find it in one of the other stores in your neighborhood; if not, we will send you by mail or express, charges prepaid, a full sized package for 25c. If you order from us, write plainly your name and address, and also let us have the name of your grocer. Not more than one package will be sent direct from us to any one customer.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., Dept. S, Cincinnati, Ohio.

S H E P H E R D S

Continued from page 11

to bother with it. She looked very pale and thin, too, and father sighed, and wished she could have a rest.

For Allie had changed, somehow. She wasn't so merry, and she'd fall into brown-studies and sit with her hands in her lap staring straight in front of her. Cissy wondered if perhaps she might not be missing Mr. Harwood—we were—and feeling a little sad because we never saw him any more. But Allie said Cissy was a stupid little girl to think such things. Which was really very unkind of her, and made Cissy cry. For Cissy isn't stupid at all, as she very well knows.

Father said that Cissy and I might go over to Mr. Rockwell's church with him the Sunday our parish-class was confirmed. Allie put a few more darns in the old white muslin, and told Cissy not to breathe too hard while she had it on her. She tied up Cissy's long hair with blue ribbons, and trimmed over her hat with daisies. You can't imagine how nice Cissy looked, for she is really a pretty little girl, even if I say so myself. And she was very happy, too, for Annie Fennis had come by the house in her new white dress with the white ribbons. And she cried, and kissed Cissy, and said she'd remember it to her dying day, and she wanted us to know that she'd try to grow up as good as good, and show us that she was worthy of the beautiful thing—that's what she called it—that Cissy had done for her.

"I have sometimes thought, Cissy, my dear," father told her, "that I should perhaps have accepted other calls, where my children might have more than they have at present." He bent down and kissed her in a solemn sort of way that made her open her eyes very wide. "Your muslin frock has taught me that I was right in obeying the dictates of my heart, and staying—here. On high days in heaven, the holiest angels wear muslin frocks with darns in them, Cissy."

"Then I don't see what's the use of being an angel," said Cissy, and father laughed.

Mr. Rockwell's church had been decorated with wagon-loads of palms and lilies and azaleas, and the marble altar was full of twinkling lights. People kept pouring in, until every pew was crowded. You could smell flowers and lights and incense; and the sunlight that streamed through the great stained-glass window over the altar showed a Man with nail-prints in his outstretched hands. He looked sort of lonesome up there by himself in that big rich church. I wondered if he wouldn't feel more at home in our shabby old church, where father used his name to comfort the sad, tired men and women who are so poor and often what I suppose you'd call wicked; but who have so little, who lose so much, and only in that Name hope to find anything at all.

The big organ sounded a few trembly, gurgling notes, and then the music spread out, rippling and splashing, like sea water on the beach. The cross-bearer, and the singing choir-boys and the surpliced rector came out of the sanctuary and moved up and down the aisles in procession, with the music rising and falling and following.

Cissy caught me by the sleeve, and nipped me cruelly in the arm, and we leaned forward, staring. The new bishop had come forward in robes that trailed after him. Taller he was, if possible, and he looked older and grayer, but we knew him at once. It was Mr. Harwood; our Mr. Harwood. Cissy fell to pinching herself, then, and I leaned over and touched wood.

Why, he'd slept on a cot in our hall, and he'd nursed Jimmy and Florian with a sheet pinned over his clothes and a towel knotted about his head. He'd played with us and eaten our cookies and drank our syrup-and-water. And the day before he left, he'd mended Allie's chicken-house and set the Anarchist hen on fourteen eggs.

So we sat there stunned, and watched him confirm the children, and listened to him preach—and it might have been father himself, it was so simple and direct. He does not preach like Mr. Rockwell, who always has something perfectly lovely to say about the Higher Thought and the Soul of Man, and Art. And he has, not got what Reg Wright calls a Bazoo.

I dare say his preaching isn't very fine, for Cissy and I understood every word he said. Indeed, we heard some ladies in the vestibule, as we were going out, say they'd hoped for something more cultured; he hadn't touched any problems of the Newer Thought, and he hadn't quoted anything but the New Testament.

Father had asked us not to worry Allie about anything—for as I've said, Allie hadn't been like herself of late—so we didn't say a single solitary word to her, although we were simply bursting to. Bishop Ellison wasn't Bishop Ellison—he was Mr. Harwood; and Mr. Harwood wasn't Mr. Harwood—he was Bishop Ellison. Cissy said it made her head feel like a pinwheel; for me, it made me plain silly.

After our dinner we went down to the study, where we always spend Sunday afternoons. Cissy had The Bible in Spain, which is lots better than it sounds. And I had Treasure Island, which is fine, especially as there are no women in it. I wonder why more writer people don't leave women and girls out of books? No, they stuff them in, and of course it worries you to death while you're reading. Things are always happening to them, which of course you can't help, as you aren't in the book.

We didn't hear father come in, until he called to us from the study door, and when we looked up, Mr. Harwood was smiling over father's shoulders—or rather, Bishop Ellison was.

"Come and be properly introduced to the bishop," said father. But we two just sat and stared like owls.

"John Harwood Ellison," said the bishop. "Why, Cissy girl! And Jack? Not a word for old friends?"

We forgot our manners right then, and rushed him like we do father. For we loved him, and we'd missed him so horribly, we couldn't help it. We were still hugging him when Allie came downstairs to give father his dinner, which had been put by in the oven for him.

Allie had on a plain blue gingham dress, and the white apron she wears about the house. She'd been sleeping while we were reading, and her face was still rosy, and her hair hung in a big shining braid with curling ends. It's a fine thing for Allie that her hair curls of itself, for she'd certainly never find time to do it.

"I'll get father's dinner, Allie," offered Cissy. She turned and asked the bishop if he'd dine with father, too, and he said he was simply dying for another meal at home.

"We've got bread-pudding with the sort of sauce you like. And we've got the hen that quit laying, and she isn't very tough, for I boiled her all yesterday afternoon. And I'm glad you're in time to eat a piece of her," said Cissy.

The bishop laughed and said he'd eat anything but his friend the Anarchist, and to make ready the feast while he went upstairs to call on his kids. You could hear 'em squealing like the pig-that-couldn't-go-to-market when they saw him, although Allie took away the stuff his pockets were means more than a fat baby. It means laying the foundation of a strong, sturdy constitution.

Continued on next page

SUCCESSFUL MOTHERHOOD

Fat alone is not enough; there must be bone, muscle, brain and nerves.

Scott's Emulsion

is the Acme of perfection for Mother and Child.

ALL DRUGGISTS

11-61

Vapo Cresolene

(ESTABLISHED 1879)

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

A simple, safe and effective treatment avoiding drugs. Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Croup at once.

It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

The air rendered strongly antiseptic, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by All Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggists or from us, 10c in stamps.

The Vapo-Cresolene Co., 62 Cortlandt St., New York

or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

AGENTS 100% Profit

Hundreds are coining money selling Novelty Knives. Many styles and sizes. Transparent handles, decorated with secret society emblems, photos, address, etc. Hundreds of designs to choose from. Easy sellers. Big profits. D. Wilson, one of our hustlers reports:

ONE MONTH'S PROFIT $260

C. E. Warner, another live one, made $80.00 in 8 days, working in the noon hour only. We want more like them. Why not you? No experience needed. We teach you how. Exclusive territory. Free samples to successful Agents. Catalog and terms on request. Don't wait—Write quick—Today.

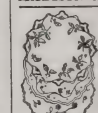
Novelty Cutlery Co., 262 Bar St., Canton, O.

POST CARDS

10 Valentine - - - - 10c | 10 Washington's Birthday 10c
10 St Patrick's Day - 10c | 10 Birthday - - - - - 10c
10 General Subjects - - 10c | 10 Greetings - - - - - 10c

Three 10 cent packages mailed for 25c. One package of each of above (60 high grade cards) mailed for 50 cents; 100 for 80 cents. We mail a special assortment of any of the above subjects for 60 cents per 100.

MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.



ALL FOR 20¢

Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and Daisy designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 600 designs of art embroidery Goods and 70 different EMBROIDERY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.

P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

DINGEE Roses

are the best. On their own roots. Express paid under a special plan. Growing plants delivered FREE, anywhere. Satisfaction and safe arrival guaranteed. 61 years' experience. Write for 1912

"Dingee Guide to Rose Culture"

Most reliable Rose Catalogue—106 pages. Mailed FREE. Describes and prices nearly 1,000 Roses and other plants; tells how to grow them. Best flower and vegetable seeds. Estab. 1850. 70 greenhouses.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Box 146, West Grove, Pa.

Print Your Own

Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $15. Rotary $60. Save money. Big profit printing for others. All easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog. Type cards, paper, &c.

THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut.

SEND $2.50 and your photograph, and I will send you, prepaid, a beautiful, enlarged, portrait reproduction, size 16x20 inches, in crayon, water color or sepia. Absolute satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

A. W. GAGE, PORTRAIT PAINTER, 15 West St., Utica, N. Y.

Clergymen

whose Christian work covers several districts.

Colporteurs

who travel from town to town.

Commercial Travelers

(High Grade)

who would appreciate extra weekly earnings for afternoon or evening work

$5 to $40 per Week will be paid by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for pleasant and easy organization work of exceedingly great importance.

Total earnings will depend upon your territory, upon your ability, and upon the amount of spare time at your disposal.

Men experienced in training the young are especially desired.

The applications of Students—not under 21 years of age—will be welcome—energetic and ambitious only!

Send your letter of application, enclosing testimonials or giving good personal references.

When satisfactory, detailed information and final application form will be sent you. Address at once

The Christian Herald

Bible House - - - New York City

S H E P H E R D S

lined with, and said he should have known better.

We are always allowed to sit at table with father when he's having his meals, only we have to keep quiet. So we were like mice.

The bishop stirred his coffee, and then he asked, quite suddenly:

"How should you like to be transferred to another—and a better—parish? You are not so young as you once were, and the work here is enough to tax the powers of the strongest young man. Besides, there'd be more chance for the children."

Father turned quite pale. He said, hurriedly, that he didn't want to be transferred; and that the old bishop had understood that.

"You have talents—don't you think they deserve greater recognition than this poor place affords?" The bishop looked at him steadily.

"No!" said father. "No! This is my place, these are my people. I'm used to them, and they to me. And if I have any talents—or if I had ten thousand times more than I have—they're none too good for God's poor. And as for my children, they're a poor man's children. Let them, then, see how other children live — and die. As for better chances for them—" Father looked over at Cissy's darned frock, and a smile spread all over his face. And Allie laughed softly, too—"why, what better chance can any human being have than his share in the common lot of suffering, and love, and service?"

"Then," said the bishop, "you'll stay here?"

"When you can get some one that can and will serve my people better than I, I will go, gladly," said father. "But I haven't outgrown my usefulness yet."

"No," said the bishop. "You haven't. And I'm rather relieved that you'll stay here. It gives me a place I like to come to." He looked at Allie, but she had turned her head aside.

And then he went on to say, still looking at Allie, that he'd been charmed with the friendliness and frankness of just us; and he was afraid he'd spoil all our pleasant time together if he'd said he was Bishop Ellison, so he'd just given us his name of Harwood, which his nearest friends call him. He'd intended, of course, to see father the next day; but when he found Florian and Jimmy so ill, and help so urgently needed, he couldn't bear to foist a bishop on us—it was simpler to let just plain Mr. Harwood lend a helping hand; and he mightn't get the chance, as the bishop. As he jolly well wouldn't, of course! Fancy Cissy giving syrup-water and ginger cookies to a bishop, or Allie letting a bishop sleep in the upstairs hall, or mend a chickenhouse and set hens! Why, we couldn't do it.

Then a batch of people came to see father; they always do on Sunday afternoons. Mrs. Delany was among them, in an old wisp of a black bonnet that showed how thin and pale and sad her kind, kind face had grown. She came right up and shook hands with the bishop, quite plain and friendly, as indeed they all were. They're so used to dealing intimately with father that it would take more than a strange bishop to faze them.

After that, he came very often. Sometimes Mrs. Merrivale brought him, and she always stayed with Jimmy and Florian. She'd had one little son, she told us, and she'd lost him. Mothers—even when they're rich ones—don't forget.

"You really can't lose anybody," Jimmy told her, "that God finds. Mrs. Delany says so. God found her little Mary, and that's how she knows."

Mrs. Merrivale turned her head and looked up at the bishop.

"You thought you'd give these children a better chance!" she said, and bent and leaned her face against Jimmy's.

She is very different when you know her—just as kind as kind! She used to take Cissy out with her a great deal; and the way she petted Florian and made up to Jimmy would make you wonder. It did make Jimmy wonder, but you can't spoil Jimmy much. If you give him too much he'll share even, and if you don't give him anything, he won't mind.

I couldn't, however, think what was the matter with Allie. Cissy and I were worried about it—she was that silent and far-away you couldn't get a word out of her; although Allie is never anything but kind.

And then one afternoon, when the bishop had come as usual to see Florian, I got a surprise.

I'd been out in the yard, and I'd found our Brown Leghorn, who is a hen of no sense whatever, insisting upon setting on one real egg, one china egg, and three iron bolts; and I came back to the house to ask Allie if I mightn't put some real eggs under her. The dining-room door was ajar, and Bishop Ellison was standing by the table, looking down at Allie.

"Allie," he said, "Allie, should you think it possible for a young and lovely lady to love an old fellow—like me, for instance?"

I'm sure I don't see why the youngest and the loveliest lady shouldn't. As for Bishop Ellison being an old fellow—shucks! If he'd quit being bishop they'd be glad enough to let him pitch on the Big League, let me tell you; and I know baseball some. I didn't wonder that Allie put up an eyebrow at him.

"And are you an old fellow?" she wondered.

"I'm afraid so, Allie," he said, rather sadly. "Unless," he hurried on, "you could lend me your youth, and sweetness, and goodness, my dear. I think then I'd be young, Allie."

I didn't want to listen; I'd started to call out; but I was too surprised and scared to move or speak.

Allie looked up. "Why, I didn't dream—I couldn't think—" she stammered. And I could see that she was trembling.

"Ever since the first time I saw you," said the bishop, "crying motherly over those little boys—ever since I came into this house of love and service, and learned what a Shepherd is, my love for you has grown, bright and beautiful, day by day."

You can't imagine the look that came into Allie's face then. Her lips were parted; and her eyes so sweet that I wanted to cry when I looked at them.

"You have so much more—you are so much wiser, and better than I—" she began, timidly. But the bishop stopped her.

"Nothing, nothing, without you. Worse than a beggar without you, Allie!" he said.

Allie seemed to gather all her courage together, for she looked up and faced him.

"But you aren't—without me," she said, in her soft voice. "Why, I've always—" And she stopped, and the red caught her from her chin to her forehead.

The bishop just made one forward step; right under my popping eyes he picked her up and kissed her on the mouth.

That brought me to my senses, and I coughed. With my eyes on the ceiling and my ears on fire, I asked for the setting of eggs. I think I should have burst into a great howl, if I'd not been too mortally ashamed.

You can't live without learning, of course; and I dare say I can see a hole in a ladder as well as most. And of course it's a very, very, very serious affair—and means that you can expect big changes in your family—when your bishop says he can't live without your sister—and ends by kissing her on the mouth.

Size 11 x 46 Inches

Shall We Send You This

Beautiful Art CALENDAR

By Return Mail? 'Twill Cost You

Only 10 Cents Postpaid

No advertising on the front

Three new and very attractive pictures of the Hinds Cream Girl, exquisite in coloring, style and finish. An art panel that equals the more expensive calendars. We advise you to send us 10 cents in stamps or coin today as we are not sure our supply will last much longer.

"I wish that you would hang my pretty calendar in your room as a reminder of how Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream will help you to enjoy yourself without complexion worries."—THE HINDS CREAM GIRL.

Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream 25c

In a Convenient Air-Tight Tube

Resolve to try Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream for a few months, and note how quickly your complexion improves and how easily it is kept clear and beautiful.

There is no other cold cream like Hinds. The reason why it accomplishes such unusually pleasing results is because it contains those cleansing, healing and softening ingredients that have been used by us for more than 35 years in making a wonderfully successful liquid toilet cream now selling throughout the world.

CHAPPED SKIN

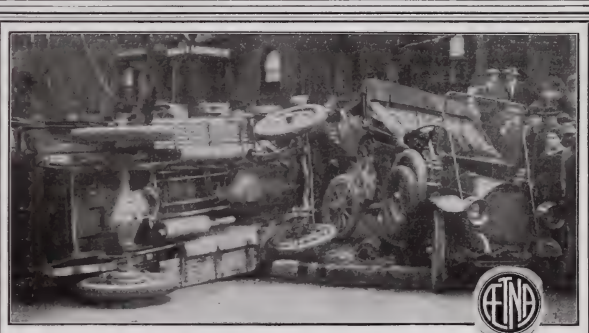
is at once relieved and soon healed. If applied before and after exposure the face and hands will be kept free from chapping and roughness all winter. Guaranteed not to grow hair. Is non-greasy and absolutely harmless.

Traveling men are using it after shaving to relieve tenderness and dryness. It quickly heals cuts.

If your dealer does not have it refuse substitutes. We will send you a large 25c tube, postpaid on receipt of price.

Liberal Sample Tube Free on Request to Those Who Have Not Tried It. No Duplicating or Repeating.

A. S. HINDS, 90 West Street, Portland, Maine



Are YOU ÆTNA-IZED?

Over 100,000 Accident Claims Paid by the Ætna Life Insurance Company

Railroad, Street car and Steamboat	31,634	$2,613,145.98
Falls on pavement, stairs, etc.	20,624	1,475,359.86
Horse and carriage	8,705	751,565.66
Automobile	2,362	519,949.76
Fire Arms	628	392,751.23
Bathing or drowning	737	288,932.39
Burns or scalds	3,257	273,456.69
Bicycle	2,835	192,489.50
Septic wounds (blood poisoning)	2,021	177,811.91
Athletic sports	3,201	154,482.82
Falling of heavy weights	2,957	149,407.97
Cuts with edged tools or glass	5,030	139,035.36
Fingers crushed	4,503	120,144.73
Eye injuries	2,281	108,541.76
Elevator	320	89,420.29
Machinery	1,653	70,903.84
Assaults	434	52,998.86
Toes crushed	1,577	50,418.01
Stepping on nails or glass	1,668	45,647.52
House accidents (contact with furniture)	483	45,285.66
Hands lacerated on hooks, nails, etc.	1,465	41,162.50
Bites by dogs or insects	783	31,973.20
Tripped over mats or rugs	237	19,514.54
Splinters in hands or feet	508	18,284.70
Motor boats	147	10,505.47
Fingers caught in electric fans	147	6,892.06
Miscellaneous accidents	7,803	476,365.40
Total,	108,000	$8,316,447.67

ÆTNA LIFE INSURANCE CO.

ACCIDENT AND LIABILITY DEPARTMENT HARTFORD, CONN.

Send me information about Accident Insurance

Name_____

Address_____

Age_____ Occupation_____

THE PROMISE-KEEPING GOD*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THERE was no impatience or distrust on the part of Zacharias and Elisabeth toward God in regard to the promise he had made to them that they should have a son in their old age and that his name should be John (meaning "whom Jehovah loves"), and that he should have the power and spirit of Elijah, and be the forerunner of Christ the Lord. Let us read this promise over, stopping to weigh each word. Great as it was, Zacharias and Elisabeth were not staggered by it, but in faith they waited for God to redeem his promise. They waited almost a year, and the child was born at the time the sweet spring flowers were blooming. When he was eight days old God's minister came to give him the first rites of the church of the Jewish religion. Neighbors and relatives of Zacharias and Elisabeth came to be present on so great an occasion; no doubt the humble home among the hills was filled to the utmost capacity.

The Benedictus

"Our God and the God of our fathers, raise up this child to his father and mother, and let his name be called in Israel Zacharias, the son of Zacharias." This was the prayer being offered as the closing part of the ceremony. "Not so," said the mother, "but he shall be called John." "There is none of thy kindred called by this name," they said. And then they appealed to Zacharias himself. He could not answer by word of mouth, for God's seal of silence was still upon his lips; but he asked for a writing tablet, and wrote, "His name is John," and so in the minutest particular God's promise was carried out. Then, all being fulfilled, God took away the seal that held the portals of Zacharias' speech, his tongue was loosed, and he spake, blessing God. Then the people were amazed, and they realized that a wonderful child had been born. "What then shall this child be?" they said one to another. Then there burst forth from Zacharias a sublime song of praise to God, which has been recognized as a classic through all the ages and is called "The Benedictus." Let us read it, and sing it, too, in our homes (Luke 1: 68-79).

Edersheim in The Life and Times of the Messiah says: "The first evidence of Zacharias' dumbness had been that his tongue refused to speak the benediction to the people (Luke 1:18-20), and the first evidence of his restored power was that he spoke the benediction of God in a rapturous burst of praise and thanksgiving." Edersheim further says: "This hymn of Zacharias closely follows, and, if the expression be allowable, spiritualizes, a great part of the most ancient Jewish prayer: the so-called 'Eighteen Benedictions'; rather, perhaps, that it transforms the expectancy of that prayer into praise of its realization."

God's Promises Sure

A promise made, and a promise fulfilled. What is the difference? The first gives the joy of hope, the second, the joy of realization. They compare in measure according to the faith we have in the one who promises. Jesus Christ is the surety of God's promises, in him is yea and amen.

The Bible is a book of God's promises. One might as well try to count the stars as to count them, but men have essayed to do both. More stars are yearly coming into vision as greater lenses are produced. It must be so with God's promises; the more enlightened our souls are by the Holy Spirit, the greater vision we shall have of the promises of God.

Some of God's Promises

I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. Heb. 13: 5.

I will guide thee with mine eye. Ps. 32: 8.

I will also save you from all uncleanness. Ezek. 36: 29.

I will put my Spirit within you. Ezek. 36: 27.

I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. Isa. 41: 10.

I will not leave you comfortless. I will come to you. John 14: 18.

I will give you rest. Matt. 11:28.

I will give unto him that is athirst . . . of the water of life freely. Rev. 21: 6.

I will open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing. Mal. 3: 10.

While they are yet speaking, I will hear [in answer to prayer]. Isa. 65; 24.

I will strengthen thee. Isa. 41: 10.

I will write upon him the name of my God. Rev. 3: 12.

I will come again and receive you unto myself. John 14: 3.

And the half has not been told of the riches of God toward us contained in his promises. Some one is said to have counted 6,300.

The Riches of the Promises

The old Scotch preacher, Dr. Guthrie, has said: "The condition of believers very much resembles that of a man of boundless influence whose wealth lies not so much in money as in money's worth—in bills and bonds, that, when due, shall be duly honored. With these promises, the poorest Christian is really a richer man than any other men, with all their possessions; nor would he part with them for the world's wealth. A rude and naked savage—the dupe of avaricious men—barters a coronet of gold or a handful of pearls for some worthless trinkets, and buys the wonders of a mirror, the tinkling of a bell, or a string of colored beads! The child of God knows better than to sell what is of surpassing value for anything intrinsically worthless. With this promise, "Thy bread shall be given thee, and thy water shall be sure," he holds himself richer, more sure of meat to eat, and raiment to put on, than he would be with the wealth of banks."

Sometimes people seem to have as little comprehension of the promises of God as they have of the value of bonds. A man came to Washington from a distant State bringing with him seventeen thousand dollars in United States six per cent. bonds. He came to the treasury and demanded gold for his bonds as he had paid gold for them. When told that a draft on the United States Treasury was as good as gold, he still insisted upon the gold being paid to him, and would not listen to any explanations. He became very much provoked when the treasurer endeavored to persuade him to accept drafts, and have them cashed when he should reach home. There was nothing to be done but give him the gold. It weighed about seventy pounds, and was in $20 gold pieces. He got it all into his valise, he staggered under the load, and then bethought himself that he had better count it before leaving the treasury. A room was assigned to him for that purpose, and a detective was appointed to see that he made no attempt to defraud in the counting. After the entire amount had been carefully counted and found to be correct, the possessor was persuaded to express the coin to his home instead of trying to carry it there in his valise. This

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for January 14, 1912. The Birth of John the Baptist. Luke 1: 57-80. GOLDEN TEXT: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel: for he hath visited and redeemed his people." Luke 1: 68.

KEEP IN TOUCH WITH

ROOSEVELT

Will President Taft be nominated for a Second Term?

Has La Follette a good fighting chance for the Republican nomination?

Can Woodrow Wilson, with his Progressive platform, get the Democratic nomination?

Or—will it be Judson Harmon and the Conservative wing of the party?

Is 1912 to be a Democratic year? What will the platforms be? What are the issues at stake?

The two parties will confront one another in line of battle with a more nearly equal prospect of victory than in any campaign for sixteen years.

Until Election Day, in forming your opinions and making your forecasts, you will find The Outlook authoritative and informing—an indispensable periodical.

The President, the prominent candidates, the National leaders, will speak for themselves—for the things they stand for—through The Outlook.

The President's Own View

President Taft's own judgment of what his administration has accomplished thus far, and the chief measures remaining on his "calendar of unfinished business," appears in the Outlook of December 2.

Mr. Bryan's View

Three times Democratic candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Bryan speaks with the authority that comes from having voiced the opinions of millions of his countrymen. His own ideas on politics and the coming campaign are to be fully set forth in one of the early issues of the Outlook.

Senator La Follette's View

Picturesque and daring, the most striking figure in the Republican Progressive movement, its foremost Presidential candidate, the Senator from Wisconsin is an extraordinary political factor. He is going to tell fully and explicitly where he stands, in an early issue of the Outlook.

Governor Harmon's View

Conservative leader in the Democratic party, candidate for the Presidential nomination, twice re-elected Governor of Ohio, the man who handled the first case under the Sherman Law as Cleveland's Attorney General, Judson Harmon's opinions have great national interest. He will soon state them fully, through the pages of the Outlook.

Mr. Roosevelt's View

Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, is a world authority on problems of National Government.

From his position on the Outlook's editorial staff, Mr. Roosevelt will continue to present — exclusively through the Outlook — his written views on political as well as all other public questions.

* * *

The Editor-in-Chief of the Outlook, Lyman Abbott, will present the vital issues of the campaign as they develop, and discuss them in the spirit of broad statesmanship which has marked his work in many campaigns.

Many of the Outlook's strongest features cannot be announced in advance, for the Outlook is first of all a Weekly Newspaper, handling great topics on the instant. Therein lies its distinction. Its authority is its strength.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 52 Issues
THE OUTLOOK, 52 Issues (Including Twelve Magazine Numbers)
$3

BOTH MAGAZINES FOR THE PRICE OF ONE

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50) + McCALL'S or a choice of Ladies' World or Housewife or People's Home Journal — Our Price $1.75

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50) + GOOD HOUSEKEEPING or a choice of Harper's Bazar or The Delineator for $2.55 — Our Price $2.50

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50) + REVIEW OF REVIEWS ($3.00) including a choice of any two of the following magazines: Ladies' World, Housewife, McCall's, or People's Home Journal — Our Price $3.25

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50) + PICTORIAL REVIEW ($1.50) or a choice of Metropolitan, Little Folks, American Boy, Modern Priscilla — Our Price $2.00

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50) + WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION or a choice of McClure's, American or Everybody's — Our Price $2.65

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50) + CURRENT LITERATURE ($3.) including a choice of any two of the following magazines: Ladies' World, Housewife, McCall's, or People's Home Journal — Our Price $3.00

The Christian Herald's Own Club Rate

This coming year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may be had for the first time at a club rate, as follows: —Your Own RENEWAL and ONE New Subscription for ONE Year for $2.25, or Your Own RENEWAL and TWO New Subscriptions for One Year for $3.00

WE WILL REFUND THE MONEY paid for any Magazine, including The Christian Herald, if you find such Magazine undesirable in your home

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

incident illustrates the unwisdom that some people show in their efforts to take hold of the promises of God, when they do not see that God means ever present, everyday practical help to them and that to trust him adds no burden, but brings relief from care and sorrow.

Taking God at His Word

Zacharias and Elisabeth took God at his word and entered into covenant with him to do their part. That must be our attitude toward him, if we would receive his blessings. If we are not doing what he expects of us, we will not be in a position to receive his blessings. It will be no adequate excuse for us to say, "It is too hard for me." Depend upon it, in every command of God there is wrapped up a promise that strength will be given to obey. All God's biddings are enablings. When the ten lepers came to Jesus saying, "Master, have mercy on us," Jesus did not reach out his hand and touch them, and so heal them. He simply gave the command: "Go show yourselves unto the priests." That was according to the law for the leper who had become clean (Lev. 14: 1-3). The ten lepers were not clean (healed), but as they went, they were cleansed. If they had looked upon themselves and said, "Lord, we cannot do it," the blessing of restoration would not have come to them. In all things, let us believe the promises of God and do our part in co-operating with him.

Teaching the Lesson to Children

Make on the blackboard in large letters the word "Promise." Ask the children to tell what a promise is. Then ask such questions as, Who has made promises to you? To whom have you made promises? Ask what a "broken promise" is. Tell them that a broken promise is very like a lie; it is a lie unless we made the mistake of promising more than we could do.

"God always keeps his promises." Print this in very large letters on the blackboard, and have it read by several children in succession, and then by all in concert. Then show the picture on the roll used in last Sunday's lesson of Zacharias standing beside the altar of incense listening to the angel giving him a promise from God. If the teacher will say, "Tell what you see in the picture," it will be the easiest way to review the preceding lesson about God's promise that he would give a little son to Zacharias and Elisabeth, a little son who should grow up to be a great helper of the Lord Jesus.

Let the teacher then show the second picture in the roll, and ask the children to tell what the picture is saying to them. Get them to point out Zacharias; try to have them tell what they think he is saying and doing, then read to them from the Bible about it, also read about the little boy when he was eight days old, and his name "John" was given to him. To thus question a story out of children is sometimes to be preferred to "telling" them the story, because it leads them to think, and also to remember if they have ever heard the story before.

"Let us try to keep our promises." The teacher should print this on the blackboard in large letters under the sentence, "God always keeps his promises." Get the children to tell some of the promises they have made their parents about not saying and doing bad things. How many of them want to promise their Sunday School teacher that they will try to be more like Jesus every day?

OUR RUSSIAN TREATY ABROGATED

Continued from page 3

pon learning that the Russian authorities had raised a mild objection o the use of the word "violated" in he Sulzer resolution, called an extraordinary session on Sunday evening to onsider the matter. It was then decided that the President should act on is regular authority in such matters nd ask the ratification of the Senate efore the Christmas recess.

As the President and Senate possess he treaty-making power of the nation ntirely independent of Congress, this as made it possible to exclude from he actual diplomatic exchanges the ext of the Congressional resolution, nd so prevent any unpleasantness in he negotiation of a new treaty.

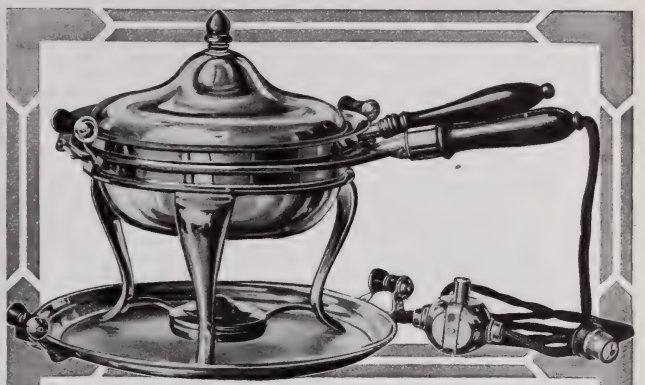
When that matter is taken in hand he government will insist on two conditions. The first will be that American passports must be honored by Russia, and the second, that Russia hall recognize the right of expatriation by her subjects who become naturalized citizens of the United States.

Passports, the bone of the present ontention, might be described as globe rotters' certificates of character. The assport in its present form is accounted a Spanish invention, dating rom the days of the dreaded Inquisition, and the first ever given in France vas signed by Charles V of Spain when he was besieging Marseilles in 537. A special bureau of the State Department at Washington, known as he Bureau of Citizenship, is maintained solely for the issuance of passports, and during the average year it makes out more than 25,000 of these guarantees by Uncle Sam that the travelers are desirable persons to be entertained in another country.

The first passport which was issued by the United States Government—in 796—was not much larger than the ordinary sheet of letter paper and was unadorned; but after several changes n form there came the adoption of he design which has been in use for a score of years or more, and which is in the guise of an engraved certificate twice as large as the page of this magazine, duly adorned with the representation of the American eagle and other insignia of our government, and impressed with the gold seal of the Department of State.

By no means all Americans intending to travel abroad secure passports, because there are many foreign countries where they are unnecessary, though possibly desirable as a convenient means of identification. Certain countries, however, require passports of all foreigners entering their territory, and among these nations are Russia and Turkey. Russia is able by this means to keep an especially close watch on all strangers crossing her borders, and she even secures advance information of intended visits by requiring that all American citizens intending to travel in the Czar's domains shall, before departing from the United States, have their passports (as issued by our State Department) "viséed" or countersigned by some diplomatic or consular representative of Russia stationed in the United States.

The general belief is that no great interval will pass before the new treaty will be in process of negotiation. The demand on the part of this government for the recognition of the right of expatriation will act automatically to settle all difficulty now encountered in the application of the old treaty to intercourse between the two countries. Russia treats the Russian who has become a naturalized American citizen as still owing allegiance to the Czar, and will not regard him as an American citizen when he enters Russia. Under the terms of the new treaty, if the United States is successful in impressing her views on the Russian Government, the American citizen of Russian birth will not meet any discrimination in the use of a passport.



Westinghouse Electric Chafing Dish

EVERY real woman likes to fuss with a chafing dish. It's a fine way to try new dishes and methods of cooking them.

The Westinghouse Electric Chafing Dish is in a class by itself. It is more economical to operate than any other chafing dish no matter how it is heated. It heats much quicker.

No fuel to renew. No special electric fixtures necessary. Just attach to any electric outlet.

It is a handsome ornament to any sideboard or serving table. It has the Westinghouse quality, and looks it.

You must have the booklet for the full line of Westinghouse Electric Ware. It shows the Westinghouse "quality" goods—percolator, toaster-stove, samovar, frying pan, milk warmer, laundry and travelers' irons and other goods.

Send a post-card today for a copy to "Westinghouse, Household Dept. X, East Pittsburgh, Pa." If you wish we will tell you a dealer or lighting company or department store near you that will give you Westinghouse goods and the best of service.

Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.
Pittsburgh
Sales Offices in 45 American Cities. Representatives all over the World

Without Door $1.00 PER SECTION With Door $1.75 IT FITS ANY SPACE

On Approval, Freight Paid
Lundstrom
IT GROWS WITH YOUR LIBRARY
SECTIONAL BOOKCASE
Endorsed "THE BEST" by Over Fifty Thousand Users

MADE under our own patents, in our own factory, and the entire production sold direct to the home and office. That is the reason we can offer them at such reasonable prices. Our Sectional Bookcases are the product of years of undivided attention to this one line of manufacture. Book sections have non-binding, disappearing glass doors, and are highly finished in SOLID GOLDEN OAK. Other styles and finishes at correspondingly low prices. Write for New Catalogue No. 112

THE C. J. LUNDSTROM MFG. CO., Little Falls, N. Y.
Manufacturers of Sectional Bookcases and Filing Cabinets.
New York Office: Flatiron Bldg.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium
For the Scientific and Effective Treatment of CANCER
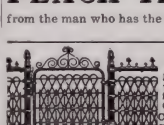
Without Resorting to Surgical Procedure
The only private institution of magnitude in the United States for the exclusive treatment of Cancer and other malignant and benign new growths. Conducted by a physician of standing. Established thirty-two years.
For complete information address:
Berkshire Hills Sanatorium, North Adams, Massachusetts

PEACH TREES 800,000 Peaches 5 to 7 feet 10c; 4 to 5 ft. 8c; 3 to 4 ft. 6c; 2 to 3 ft. 4c. 200,000 Apples, 50,000 Pears, 50,000 Plums, 100,000 Cherry, 300,000 Carolina Poplar, and millions of Grape and Small Fruits. Secure varieties now, pay in Spring. Buy from the man who has the goods and save disappointment. Catalogue Free to everybody.
Sheerin's Wholesale Nurseries, Dansville, N. Y.



LAWN FENCE Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries.
Coiled Spring Fence Co. Box D Winchester, Ind.

OXALBITOL
AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING
that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort. Get it from your druggist, or a bottle will be sent by mail for 35 cents
OXALBITOL CO. Honesdale, Pa

Short Term Investments

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations. In addition, such securities, particularly of the larger issues, usually command a ready market and are less subject to wide fluctuations in price.

We have prepared a booklet giving brief descriptions of the principal issues of such securities, which we will be pleased to furnish on request.

Ask for Booklet S-642

Guaranty Trust Company of New York
28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - 161,000,000

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

For Large and Small Investors

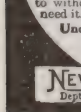
Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1476 Broadway, New York City



GREIDER'S FINE POULTRY
Book-and-calendar for 1912 contains 200 pages, 72 varieties pure bred, 62 colored plates. Many other illustrations, descriptions. Incubators and Brooders. Low prices on all stock eggs. How to raise and make hens lay. Get my plans. They all set it great—this book—only 15 cents.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 79, Rheems, Pa.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS
Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 20, Des Moines, Iowa

50 Best Paying Varieties Pure-Bred Chickens, Ducks, Geese, Turkeys, Hogs, Dogs and Incubators. All at Low Prices. Send 4c for my book which gives reliable information worth many dollars to you
W. A. WEBER, Box 940, Mankato, Minn.

Fine Garden For 94c
Cut down cost of living by growing vegetables in yard. This splendid assortment of vegetable and flower seeds is a big value at $5.00—our special introductory price only 94c. Complete directions for planting, cultivating and harvesting, free. Write for catalog O. S. Jones Seed Co., Box 733-D, Sioux Falls, S. D.

What the Bond-buyer Has a Right to Expect

*By ALLEN G. HOYT

WHEN an investor buys a bond of a corporation, he becomes a creditor of the corporation. The corporation promises to pay him a certain sum of money at the maturity of the bond and interest semi-annually during the intervening period. No matter how successful the corporation may be, or how large its earnings may become, the bondholder gets only his four or five per cent. as promised by his security. The larger earnings benefit the stockholders, who are, in fact, the owners of the corporation. Since the stockholders get all the benefits of the increase of the corporation's earnings, they should take all the risk. The bond-buyer is concerned only in the security on his loan and that security ought to be ample. The bond-buyer should not be expected to take any chances.

It occasionally happens, however, that an issue of bonds is brought out on an entirely wrong basis. They are not properly secured and the bond-buyer sooner or later suffers loss. As the default in the payment of interest on a bond is an unusual occurrence, it has a certain news value, and consequently receives a great amount of publicity. This publicity has a tendency to disturb bond-buyers in general and reacts harmfully on all those who are interested in advancing the cause of conservative investment banking. Many bankers, by advertising, magazine articles, pamphlets, circulars, etc., are constantly engaged in the task of educating the investment public to avoid the poorly secured issues.

Paper Securities

One class of securities usually avoided by careful investors are the bonds of companies which exist only on paper, or which are in a state of construction and which have not demonstrated their earning power.

Not infrequently a promoter will offer to a banking firm—at a very attractive price—an issue of bonds on an interurban road to be constructed between two thriving cities. The promoter will be full of enthusiasm over the tremendous business awaiting the road from the first day it is opened to operation and his prospectus will be a pæan of tributes to the fertility, resources and general prosperity of the territory to be served. The proceeds of the bonds will, according to the promoter, construct and equip the road in the best manner, and the possibility of failure is beyond the bounds of reason. If the banker coldly refuses to be affected by the promoter's enthusiasm, the promoter may offer him a bonus of stock in the road as an additional incentive. Ordinarily the conservative banker is not interested in properties which exist only in imagination, and which have yet to demonstrate their earning capacity; but this hypothetical case illustrates just the kind of a security the bond-buyer ought not to be expected to buy. In this instance, let us suppose the promoter should interest a banker in buying the bonds and that the banker should succeed in distributing them among his clients. Consider the position of the bondholder. If the road succeeds he will receive at maturity the payment of the principal of his loan and his five or six per cent. per annum during the intervening period. The promoter and his friends will receive bountiful dividends on the stock, for which they paid nothing, which will have a larger and increasing market value. On the other hand, if the road fails the bondholders who have put up all the money will bear the entire loss. The promoters, having no money in the project, will have lost nothing except a little of their valuable time.

Undertakings of this kind ought to be handled differently. If it appears that an interurban road between two communities would prove profitable it ought to be constructed by men of capital who can afford to take some risks. Let them bond the road for a part of its cost and let the balance be represented by stock. The bonds should be carried by the capitalists either personally or through their banks and should not be offered for sale to investors until the road has been completed and in operation long enough to show that it can earn a substantial surplus above the amount necessary to pay the interest on its bonds. As the stock represents actual money put into the property by the owners, there will be an equity behind the bonds which will, of course, afford additional protection. In other words, the bonds are secured by a mortgage which represents only a part of the cost of the road, and before the bondholder can suffer the owners will have to lose all they have risked in the venture. In protecting their own money they will have to protect the bondholders.

Investigating the Bond Dealer

The bond-buyer cannot go into all the matters which must be investigated in order to be sure a bond is safe. He must depend very largely upon the bond dealer who offers him any block of securities. He can, however, investigate the banker who stands sponsor for the bonds. If the investor lives in a small town, let him consult his local banker. If the local banker does not know the firm offering the bonds, he can secure from his correspondent in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, or wherever the banking firm is located, pretty full information regarding the standing, the reliability and general reputation of the bond dealer trying to sell the securities.

Many losses suffered by bond-buyers would never have occurred had they taken the precaution, before buying, of first investigating the standing of the firm which was offering the bonds for sale.

*Of N. W. Halsey & Co.

Reindeer in Alaska

IT IS only a few years since the United States Government, as an experiment which it was hoped would help the Eskimos and Indians of northern Alaska, imported a few score reindeer from Norway, with a number of Lapps skilled in their care. Subsequently other reindeer were brought from the opposite coast of Asia, and although it was known that the particular form of moss or lichen on which these animals live, and which flourishes under the snow, was abundant within the American Arctic Circle, the attempt to introduce reindeer was regarded by a majority of our citizens as being quite as wild and visionary as was the purchase of Alaska by Secretary Seward in 1867.

The few score reindeer have grown to 27,325, distributed in forty-two herds. More than one-half, or 14,993, is owned by natives who, before the advent of the reindeer, were in a state of the most wretched poverty. Of the remainder, 3,730 are owned by the United States, 4,194 by missions, and 4,407 by Lapps. The total income of the Eskimos from the reindeer industry, during the year last reported, was $24,636.09. It promises well for the conscience of the nation that we have come at length to recognize kinship with our little brown brother whom, heretofore, we have left to be despoiled by the trader.

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.
¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.
¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.
¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.
¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.
¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

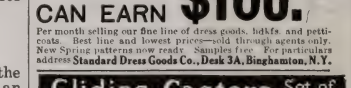
Write today for the Book
Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES

The World's Greatest Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1912

By REV. F. N. PELOUBET, D.D. and PROF. AMOS R. WELLS, A.M.
38th ANNUAL VOLUME
Next to the Bible, the teacher's best friend
Cloth, price, $1.25, postpaid
W. A. WILDE COMPANY
Boston and Chicago

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS



The Only Stropper that Strops any Razor Diagonally
Guaranteed for Life
Brandt's Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.
C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. B'dw'y, N.Y.

WANTED MEN

Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Electric Motormen, Train Porters (colored). Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 a month. No experience necessary. 500 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for Application Blank and Book. State position.
International Railway Corr. Institute, Dept. 16 Indianapolis, Indiana.

LADIES $100.00 CAN EARN

Per month selling our fine line of dress goods, bidks and petticoats. Best line and lowest prices—sold through agents only. New Spring patterns now ready. Samples free. For particulars address Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3A, Binghamton, N.Y.

Gliding Casters Set of 4 MAILED 10¢

WONT SCRATCH FLOORS—SAVE chairs, carpets, rugs, furniture. No noise, no strain. A child can put them on. AGENTS WANTED. Great money maker! GLIDING CASTER CO., 24 Warren St., New York.
AGENTS GET BUSY

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT'S BOOKS
78c PER COPY, POST PAID
Regular $1.50 stock. The Calling of Dan Matthews, The Shepherd of the Hills, The Uncrowned King, That Printer of Udells. Other bargains on bankrupt books. Send stamp for catalogue. $15.00 Merriam Co. Dictionary for $5.00. Cash must accompany order. Earle W. Gage, Ave C. Jamestown, N.Y.

BALSAM-PINE PILLOWS

Write for booklet giving description of pillows, prices, etc. Bemidji Pillow Co., Dept. E. Bemidji, Minn.

11½ CENTS A ROD
For 18-in. Hog Fence, 22 3-4c for 49-in. Farm Fence, 27c for 58-in. Poultry Fence. 100 styles and heights. Catalogue free.
KITSELMAN BROS. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth. Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.
E. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C

Surest, safest, quickest relief from Nervous Prostration and resulting ills. $1 gets advice what cost us dollars and years. No medicines. Silver & Co., Lock Box 653, Springfield, Mass.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

ncident illustrates the unwisdom that ome people show in their efforts to ake hold of the promises of God, when hey do not see that God means ever present. everyday practical help to hem and that to trust him adds no burden, but brings relief from care nd sorrow.

Taking God at His Word

Zacharias and Elisabeth took God at is word and entered into covenant vith him to do their part. That must e our attitude toward him, if we vould receive his blessings. If we are ot doing what he expects of us, we vill not be in a position to receive his lessings. It will be no adequate ex-use for us to say, "It is too hard for me." Depend upon it, in every com-nand of God there is wrapped up a promise that strength will be given to obey. All God's biddings are en-ablings. When the ten lepers came to Jesus saying, "Master, have mercy on us," Jesus did not reach out his hand nd touch them, and so heal them. He imply gave the command: "Go show ourselves unto the priests." That vas according to the law for the leper who had become clean (Lev. 14: 1-3). The ten lepers were not clean (healed), but as they went, they were leansed. If they had looked upon themselves and said, "Lord, we cannot lo it," the blessing of restoration vould not have come to them. In all hings, let us believe the promises of God and do our part in co-operating vith him.

Teaching the Lesson to Children

Make on the blackboard in large let-ers the word "Promise." Ask the children to tell what a promise is. Then ask such questions as, Who has nade promises to you? To whom have you made promises? Ask what a "broken promise" is. Tell them that a broken promise is very like a lie; it is a lie unless we made the mistake of promising more than we could do.

"God always keeps his promises." Print this in very large letters on the blackboard, and have it read by several children in succession, and then by all in concert. Then show the picture on the roll used in last Sunday's lesson of Zacharias standing beside the altar of incense listening to the angel giving him a promise from God. If the teacher will say, "Tell what you see in the picture," it will be the easiest way to review the preceding lesson about God's promise that he would give a little son to Zacharias and Elisabeth. a little son who should grow up to be a great helper of the Lord Jesus.

Let the teacher then show the second picture in the roll, and ask the children to tell what the picture is saying to them. Get them to point out Zacharias; try to have them tell what they think he is saying and doing, then read to them from the Bible about it, also read about the little boy when he was eight days old, and his name "John" was given to him. To thus question a story out of children is sometimes to be preferred to "telling" them the story, because it leads them to think, and also to remember if they have ever heard the story before.

"Let us try to keep our promises." The teacher should print this on the blackboard in large letters under the sentence, "God always keeps his promises." Get the children to tell some of the promises they have made their parents about not saying and doing bad things. How many of them want to promise their Sunday School teacher that they will try to be more like Jesus every day?

OUR RUSSIAN TREATY ABROGATED

Continued from page 3

pon learning that the Russian au-horities had raised a mild objection o the use of the word "violated" in he Sulzer resolution, called an extra-rdinary session on Sunday evening to onsider the matter. It was then de-ided that the President should act on is regular authority in such matters nd ask the ratification of the Senate efore the Christmas recess.

As the President and Senate possess he treaty-making power of the nation ntirely independent of Congress, this as made it possible to exclude from he actual diplomatic exchanges the ext of the Congressional resolution, nd so prevent any unpleasantness in he negotiation of a new treaty.

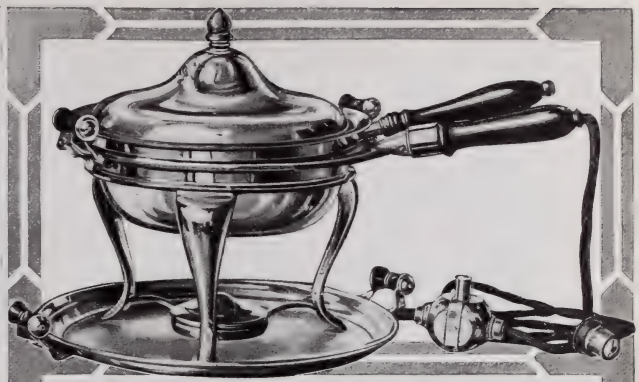
When that matter is taken in hand he government will insist on two con-itions. The first will be that Ameri-an passports must be honored by Russia, and the second, that Russia hall recognize the right of expatria-ion by her subjects who become nat-ralized citizens of the United States.

Passports, the bone of the present ontention, might be described as globe rotters' certificates of character. The assport in its present form is ac-ounted a Spanish invention, dating rom the days of the dreaded Inquisi-ion, and the first ever given in France vas signed by Charles V of Spain when he was besieging Marseilles in 1537. A special bureau of the State Department at Washington, known as he Bureau of Citizenship, is main-ained solely for the issuance of pass-ports, and during the average year it makes out more than 25,000 of these guarantees by Uncle Sam that the travelers are desirable persons to be entertained in another country.

The first passport which was issued by the United States Government—in 1796—was not much larger than the ordinary sheet of letter paper and was unadorned; but after several changes in form there came the adoption of the design which has been in use for a score of years or more, and which is in the guise of an engraved certificate twice as large as the page of this magazine, duly adorned with the representation of the American eagle and other insignia of our government, and impressed with the gold seal of the Department of State.

By no means all Americans intending to travel abroad secure passports, because there are many foreign countries where they are unnecessary, though possibly desirable as a convenient means of identification. Certain countries, however, require passports of all foreigners entering their territory, and among these nations are Russia and Turkey. Russia is able by this means to keep an especially close watch on all strangers crossing her borders, and she even secures advance information of intended visits by requiring that all American citizens intending to travel in the Czar's domains shall, before departing from the United States, have their passports (as issued by our State Department) "viséed" or countersigned by some diplomatic or consular representative of Russia stationed in the United States.

The general belief is that no great interval will pass before the new treaty will be in process of negotiation. The demand on the part of this government for the recognition of the right of expatriation will act automatically to settle all difficulty now encountered in the application of the old treaty to intercourse between the two countries. Russia treats the Russian who has become a naturalized American citizen as still owing allegiance to the Czar, and will not regard him as an American citizen when he enters Russia. Under the terms of the new treaty, if the United States is successful in impressing her views on the Russian Government, the American citizen of Russian birth will not meet any discrimination in the use of a passport.



Westinghouse Electric Chafing Dish

EVERY real woman likes to fuss with a chafing dish. It's a fine way to try new dishes and methods of cooking them.

The Westinghouse Electric Chafing Dish is in a class by itself. It is more economical to operate than any other chafing dish no matter how it is heated. It heats much quicker.

No fuel to renew. No special electric fixtures necessary. Just attach to any electric outlet.

It is a handsome ornament to any sideboard or serving table. It has the Westinghouse quality, and looks it.

You must have the booklet for the full line of Westinghouse Electric Ware. It shows the Westinghouse "quality" goods—percolator, toaster-stove, samovar, frying pan, milk warmer, laundry and travelers' irons and other goods.

Send a post-card today for a copy to "Westinghouse, Household Dept. X, East Pittsburgh, Pa." If you wish we will tell you a dealer or lighting company or department store near you that will give you Westinghouse goods and the best of service.

Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

Pittsburgh

Sales Offices in 45 American Cities. Representatives all over the World

Without Door $1.00 PER SECTION With Door $1.75 IT FITS ANY SPACE

On Approval. Freight Paid

Lundstrom IT GROWS WITH YOUR LIBRARY

SECTIONAL BOOKCASE

Endorsed "THE BEST" by Over Fifty Thousand Users

MADE under our own patents, in our own factory, and the entire production sold direct to the home and office. That is the reason we can offer them at such reasonable prices. Our Sectional Bookcases are the product of years of undivided attention to this one line of manufacture. Book sections have non-binding, disappearing glass doors, and are highly finished in SOLID GOLDEN OAK. Other styles and finishes at correspondingly low prices. Write for New Catalogue No. 112

THE C. J. LUNDSTROM MFG. CO., Little Falls, N. Y.

Manufacturers of Sectional Bookcases and Filing Cabinets.

New York Office: Flatiron Bldg.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium

For the Scientific and Effective Treatment of

CANCER

Without Resorting to Surgical Procedure

The only private institution of magnitude in the United States for the exclusive treatment of Cancer and other malignant and benign new growths. Conducted by a physician of standing. Established thirty-two years.

For complete information address

Berkshire Hills Sanatorium, North Adams, Massachusetts

PEACH TREES 800,000 Peaches 5 to 7 feet 10c; 4 to 5 ft. 8c; 3 to 4 ft. 6c; 2 to 3 ft. 4c. 200,000 Apples, 50,000 Pears, 50,000 Plums, 100,000 Cherry, 300,000 Carolina Poplar, and millions of Grape and Small Fruits. Secure varieties now, pay in Spring. Buy from the man who has the goods and save disappointment. Catalogue Free to everybody.

Sheerin's Wholesale Nurseries, Dansville, N. Y.

LAWN FENCE Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Coiled Spring Fence Co. Box D Winchester, Ind.

OXALBITOL AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort. Get it from your druggist — or, if unable, send to stamps for it, postpaid, by mail from Oxalbitol Co. Honesdale, Pa

Short Term Investments

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations. In addition, such securities, particularly of the larger issues, usually command a ready market and are less subject to wide fluctuations in price.

We have prepared a booklet giving brief descriptions of the principal issues of such securities, which we will be pleased to furnish on request.

Ask for Booklet S-642

Guaranty Trust Company of New York
28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - 161,000,000

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D. 1470 Broadway, New York City

GREIDER'S FINE POULTRY
Book and calendar for 1912 contains 200 pages, 72 varieties true to life, 62 colored plates. Many other illustrations, descriptions. Incubators and brooders. Low prices on all stock, eggs. How to raise and make bens lay. Get my plans. They all say it's great—this book—only 15 cents.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 79, Rheems, Pa.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS
Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box J9, Des Moines, Iowa

50 Best Paying Varieties Pure-Bred Chickens, Ducks, Geese, Turkeys, Eggs, Dogs and Incubators. All at Low Prices. Send 4c. for my Book which gives reliable information worth many dollars to you
W. A. WEBER, Box 940, Mankato, Minn.

Fine Garden For 94c
Cut down cost of living by growing vegetables in yard. This splendid assortment of vegetable and flower seeds is by value at $2.20—our special introductory price only 94c. Complete directions for planning, cultivating and harvesting, free. Write for catalog. O. S. Jones Seed Co., Box 733-D, Sioux Falls, S. D.

What the Bond-buyer Has a Right to Expect

*By ALLEN G. HOYT

WHEN an investor buys a bond of a corporation, he becomes a creditor of the corporation. The corporation promises to pay him a certain sum of money at the maturity of the bond and interest semi-annually during the intervening period. No matter how successful the corporation may be, or how large its earnings may become, the bondholder gets only his four or five per cent. as promised by his security. The larger earnings benefit the stockholders, who are, in fact, the owners of the corporation. Since the stockholders get all the benefits of the increase of the corporation's earnings, they should take all the risk. The bond-buyer is concerned only in the security on his loan and that security ought to be ample. The bond-buyer should not be expected to take any chances.

It occasionally happens, however, that an issue of bonds is brought out on an entirely wrong basis. They are not properly secured and the bond-buyer sooner or later suffers loss. As the default in the payment of interest on a bond is an unusual occurrence, it has a certain news value, and consequently receives a great amount of publicity. This publicity has a tendency to disturb bond-buyers in general and reacts harmfully on all those who are interested in advancing the cause of conservative investment banking. Many bankers, by advertising, magazine articles, pamphlets, circulars, etc., are constantly engaged in the task of educating the investment public to avoid the poorly secured issues.

Paper Securities

One class of securities usually avoided by careful investors are the bonds of companies which exist only on paper, or which are in a state of construction and which have not demonstrated their earning power.

Not infrequently a promoter will offer to a banking firm—at a very attractive price—an issue of bonds on an interurban road to be constructed between two thriving cities. The promoter will be full of enthusiasm over the tremendous business awaiting the road from the first day it is opened to operation and his prospectus will be a pæan of tributes to the fertility, resources and general prosperity of the territory to be served. The proceeds of the bonds will, according to the promoter, construct and equip the road in the best manner, and the possibility of failure is beyond the bounds of reason. If the banker coldly refuses to be affected by the promoter's enthusiasm, the promoter may offer him a bonus of stock in the road as an additional incentive. Ordinarily the conservative banker is not interested in properties which exist only in imagination, and which have yet to demonstrate their earning capacity; but this hypothetical case illustrates just the kind of a security the bond-buyer ought not to be expected to buy. In this instance, let us suppose the promoter should interest a banker in buying the bonds and that the banker should succeed in distributing them among his clients. Consider the position of the bondholder. If the road succeeds he will receive at maturity the payment of the principal of his loan and his five or six per cent. per annum during the intervening period. The promoter and his friends will receive bountiful dividends on the stock, for which they paid nothing, which will have a larger and increasing market value. On the other hand, if the road fails the bondholders who have put up all the money will bear the entire loss. The promoters, having no money in the project, will have lost nothing except a little of their valuable time.

Undertakings of this kind ought to be handled differently. If it appears that an interurban road between two communities would prove profitable it ought to be constructed by men of capital who can afford to take some risks. Let them bond the road for a part of its cost and let the balance be represented by stock. The bonds should be carried by the capitalists either personally or through their banks and should not be offered for sale to investors until the road has been completed and in operation long enough to show that it can earn a substantial surplus above the amount necessary to pay the interest on its bonds. As the stock represents actual money put into the property by the owners, there will be an equity behind the bonds which will, of course, afford additional protection. In other words, the bonds are secured by a mortgage which represents only a part of the cost of the road, and before the bondholder can suffer the owners will have to lose all they have risked in the venture. In protecting their own money they will have to protect the bondholders.

Investigating the Bond Dealer

The bond-buyer cannot go into all the matters which must be investigated in order to be sure a bond is safe. He must depend very largely upon the bond dealer who offers him any block of securities. He can, however, investigate the banker who stands sponsor for the bonds. If the investor lives in a small town, let him consult his local banker. If the local banker does not know the firm offering the bonds, he can secure from his correspondent in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, or wherever the banking firm is located, pretty full information regarding the standing, the reliability and general reputation of the bond dealer trying to sell the securities.

Many losses suffered by bond-buyers would never have occurred had they taken the precaution, before buying, of first investigating the standing of the firm which was offering the bonds for sale.

*Of N. W. Halsey & Co.

Reindeer in Alaska

IT IS only a few years since the United States Government, as an experiment which it was hoped would help the Eskimos and Indians of northern Alaska, imported a few score reindeer from Norway, with a number of Lapps skilled in their care. Subsequently other reindeer were brought from the opposite coast of Asia, and although it was known that the particular form of moss or lichen on which these animals live, and which flourishes under the snow, was abundant within the American Arctic Circle, the attempt to introduce reindeer was regarded by a majority of our citizens as being quite as wild and visionary as was the purchase of Alaska by Secretary Seward in 1867.

The few score reindeer have grown to 27,325, distributed in forty-two herds. More than one-half, or 14,993, is owned by natives who, before the advent of the reindeer, were in a state of the most wretched poverty. Of the remainder, 3,730 are owned by the United States, 4,194 by missions, and 4,407 by Lapps. The total income of the Eskimos from the reindeer industry, during the year last reported, was $24,636.09. It promises well for the conscience of the nation that we have come at length to recognize kinship with our little brown brother whom, heretofore, we have left to be despoiled by the trader.

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.
¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.
¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.
¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.
¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.
¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

Write today for the Book
Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES

The World's Greatest Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1912

By REV. F. N. PELOUBET, D.D. and PROF. AMOS R. WELLS, A.M.

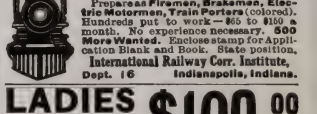
38th ANNUAL VOLUME

Next to the Bible, the teacher's best friend

Cloth, price, $1.25, postpaid

W. A. WILDE COMPANY
Boston and Chicago

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS



The Only Stropper that Strops any Razor Diagonally
Guaranteed for Life

Brandt's Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.
C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. B'dw'y, N.Y.

WANTED MEN

Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Electric Motormen, Train Porters (colored). Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 a month. No experience necessary. 600 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for Application Blank and Book. State position.
International Railway Corr. Institute, Dept. 16 Indianapolis, Indiana.

LADIES CAN EARN $100.00

Per month selling our fine line of dress goods, bdkfs. and petticoats. Best line and lowest prices—sold through agents only. New Spring patterns now ready. Samples free. For particulars address Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3A, Binghamton, N.Y.

Gliding Casters

Set of 4 MAILED 10¢

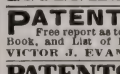
WONT SCRATCH FLOORS—Save chairs, carpets, rugs, furniture. No noise, no strain. A child can put them on. AGENTS WANTED. Great money maker! GLIDING CASTER CO., 24 Warren St., New York.

AGENTS GET BUSY

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT'S BOOKS
78c PER COPY, POST-PAID
Regular $1.50 stock. The Calling of Dan Matthews, The Shepherd of the Hills, The Uncrowned King, That Printer of Udells. Other bargains on bankrupt books. Send stamp for catalogue. $15.00 Merriam Co. Dictionary for $5.00. Cash must accompany order. Earle W. Cage, Ave C. Jamestown, N.Y.

BALSAM-PINE PILLOWS

Write for booklet giving description of pillows, prices, etc. Bemidji Pillow Co., Dept. E. Bemidji, Minn.



11½ CENTS A ROD
For 18-in. Hog Fence, 22 3-4c for 49-in. Farm Fence, 27c for 58-in. Poultry Fence. 100 styles and heights. Catalogue free.
KITSELMAN BROS. Box 287 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth. Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.
E. G. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Surest, safest, quickest relief from Nervous Prostration and resulting ills. $1 gets advice what cost us dollars and years. No medicines. Silver & Co., Lock Box 653, Springfield, Mass.

Winning Young People*

THAT habit rules the world has been said, in one form or another, y many philosophers. After a man's abits become fixed, it is almost impossible to change them. Therefore it is f the utmost importance that in youth, hen they are first formed, they should e formed aright. Every young person who reads these lines well knows hese ancient truths, but when he is rying to bring his friends to Christ, it ay quicken his impulse to remind imself of this vital consideration—hat if they are not saved to the kingom in their youth, the chances grow maller as the years pass.

You will perhaps find, if you can et a chance for a long, intimate talk ith a friend whom you are trying to nfluence, that he has always believed, n a more or less indifferent way, in od and the Bible.

"If you really believe in these hings, why don't you come out openly nd say so?" you can ask him.

He may inquire, and honestly too, How shall I believe any differently rom the way I believe now, in order o call myself a Christian?" Many ave wished to know this. It used to e thought that a great upheaval of he whole nature was necessary before ne could become what is called "conerted." We are wiser now. We know hat the Spirit often works noiselessly n the heart, though as effectively as the floods of tears and the moans nd shrieks which once accompanied a hange of heart were still common. herefore you can truthfully say to our friend, as a wise minister once aid to a young woman who spoke to im in the same way, "Your belief is ll right. Just hold on to it, pray God o strengthen it—and simply act it nt."

"Take the first turn to the right and eep straight on," were the directions given by the great Professor Peabody, when some one asked him the way to the heavenly city.

There are few thoughtful young people who cannot be appealed to on the ground of saving the Church for society. If you cannot touch the heart of your friend by dwelling upon the sublime sacrifice of Christ; if you cannot impress upon him the goodness of God, as revealed in human history; if you cannot show him the personal duty and privilege of obtaining salvation; still you may perhaps reach him through the fear of losing the spiritual note from society. Say to him, "Do you want the churches banished from our communities? What else is there that stands for the ethical and the spiritual among us? Are we to be deprived of the ministers who christen and marry and bury us? What would our society be without them?"

Even an indifferent youth will usually give the right response to these questions. Then press home the inevitable corollary: "And you dare to say that you consider the Church and its ministers essential to the well-being of society, and yet you are mean enough to wish their support to devolve on others! If you believe in God and his work on earth, be a man and live up to your belief."

It is a poor sort of a youth who does not, when shown his duty in such a clear light as this, rise to the mark and admit his fault. Once get him to acknowledge himself a coward and in the wrong, and he can generally be brought over to "the Lord's side," and then his deeper soul-experience will begin.

As we are told in one of the beautiful daily readings for this lesson, we cannot expect to attract our friends all in the same way. We must become "all things to all men," within the limits of reason and godliness. But none of us should rest until all those with whom we are associated are Christians. God will surely help.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, Janua- y 14. TEXTS: Prov. 11 : 30; Rev. 22 : 16, 17.

New York's "First Citizen" Dead

WHEN Andrew Carnegie, on his seventy-sixth birthday, visited John Bigelow, who celerated on the same day the beginning f his ninety-fifth year, the capitalist nd philanthropist wished the author nd diplomat many happy returns of he day. Mr. Bigelow shook his head, eplying that this would be his last irthday anniversary. His words, poken less than a month ago, have roved true, and the nation is mourng the loss of one of its most honored nd best loved citizens. Mr. Bigelow ied at his home in New York on December 19. He was seriously ill for nly a week, though his health had een failing for some months. He beame ill after returning last spring rom a trip to Europe, but was well nough a few weeks later to take part n the opening of the New Public ibrary in New York City, of whose Board of Trustees he was the presilent. A cold which he contracted on his occasion clung to him throughout he summer and hastened his death.

John Bigelow's life extended over nore than two-thirds of our nation's xistence. He lived during the lifeime of every one of its Presidents xcept the first. He witnessed the dministration of twenty-three Presilents, thirty-five governors of New York State, and forty-five mayors of New York. He was in personal touch vith practically all the literary men nd movements of our nation's life. No more striking comment could be nade upon the progress of science and ivilization during his lifetime than to say that he lived from ten years after he launching of the first steam vessel o eight years after the first successful airship flight. Born in the little town of Bristol, later Malden, N. Y., educated at Union College, a lawyer in New York in 1837, associated with William Cullen Bryant, one of the most ardent and forceful of the early abolitionists, in the editing and ownership of the New York Evening Post, consul to Paris in 1861, minister to France in 1864, diplomatically turning the support of France from the Confederacy to the Union, secretary of state in New York in 1875, president of the trustees of the New York Library, a trustee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, author of more than a score of books, preserving his mental strength and his warm interest in human affairs almost to the very hour of his death, a gentleman, a patriot, an optimist, a Christian, John Bigelow's name will be forever one of the finest ornaments of America's history.

A Puritan by birth and training, Mr. Bigelow, early in life, came under the influence of the Swedenborgian Church and remained an ardent believer in its theology and supporter of its work. Interviewed not long ago, for some facts to enter a biographical sketch, he told his caller that not much of his life would be of interest to the public, unless a point were made of his religion. His book, The Bible that Was Dead, and Is Alive Again, states his religious views and gives hints of his own religious experience. A new edition of this work, which was printed privately in 1893, is soon to be brought out for the public under the direction of Dr. Julian K. Smyth, minister of the Swedenborgian Church in New York, and for many years Mr. Bigelow's pastor.

EVERY Bond offered for sale by this house has been purchased outright because, on exacting investigation, it proved a solid, safe, income-producing investment.

The income of the house of E. H. Rollins & Sons, founded 1876, is derived from two sources—the interest on first quality investment bonds, in which they have invested their capital, and the moderate profit acquired from selling these same bonds.

Behind this simple statement is the story of an expert organization trained to the minute in the appraisement of bond issues.

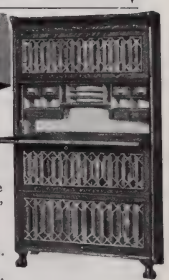
When an inviting bond issue is proposed, the specialists of this house subject it to the most minute examination. If it withstands their exacting analysis, the issue is purchased outright by E. H. Rollins & Sons and by them offered to their clients for investment.

If you have savings, dividends, accumulated interest or trust funds for investment, we suggest that you go to your own banker and inquire as to our responsibility and then write us personally.

The Rollins Magazine, published quarterly, deals interestingly and educationally with the fundamental facts behind our country's growth, railroad expansion, municipal development and public utilities. It teaches the whys of wise investment. The January number will be sent to you free upon receipt of your request for our circular No. 515.

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS
Investment Bonds
Boston New York Chicago Denver San Francisco

GUNN SECTIONAL BOOK CASES



Write for our "Book of Designs"

beautifully illustrated in colors (mailed free), showing our Sanitary Clawfoot Mission and Standard Bookcases, and how you will save money by placing them in your home.

The handsome designs, the rich finish, the removable non-binding doors, the absence of disfiguring iron bands, make them far better than the old-fashioned kind.

Our prices are lower than others

and high quality is guaranteed. Sold by dealers or direct. Address Dept. C. H.

Gunn Furniture Company. 57 Victoria St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Look Over The Housetops To The Country

Big men are always men of broad vision—men who see beyond the confines of their individual activities—men in close touch and quick sympathy with the world at large.

Do you ever look over the city housetops into the wonderful world beyond—the world of the farm—where the things you eat and wear are growing—tended by millions of people from whose lives and pursuits you can learn?

You should!—for the pleasure of it and for the broadening influence it will have upon your mind. Take as your spy glass. It will bring the life of the farm very near to you. Through it, as through no other paper, you will see what the farmer is doing and thinking. You'll learn how he lives—and who knows how soon you may need or desire to apply this knowledge.

FARM JOURNAL
Unlike Any Other Paper

Farm Journal pictures farm life in all its delightful reality—more vividly and sympathetically than any other paper—and yet every word and line is full of farm knowledge and horse sense. It is intensely practical. Contains helpful and entertaining reading for every member of the household. Is a welcome monthly visitor in 750,000 homes and would be in yours.

Send us a dollar for a five years' subscription to this entirely different kind of a farm paper. You'll count it among your wisest investments.

If you order promptly, we will send, absolutely free, "Poor Richard Revived"—our splendid new Almanac for 1912.

FARM JOURNAL, 184 N. Clifton Street, Philadelphia

All the hard work taken out of scrubbing with

Old Dutch Cleanser

Many uses and full directions on large sifter can 10¢

Chases Dirt

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JANUARY 10, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 2. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

THE HOLY FAMILY. From the Painting by Ludwig Knaus

My Farewell Car

By R. E. Olds, Designer

Reo the Fifth—the car I now bring out—is regarded by me as pretty close to finality. Embodied here are the final results of my 25 years of experience. I do not believe that a car materially better will ever be built. In any event, this car marks my limit. So I've called it My Farewell Car.

My 24th Model

This is the twenty-fourth model which I have created in the past 25 years.

They have run from one to six cylinders — from 6 to 60 horsepower.

From the primitive cars of the early days to the most luxurious modern machines.

I have run the whole gamut of automobile experience. I have learned the right and the wrong from tens of thousands of users.

In this Farewell Car, I adopt the size which has come to be standard — the 30 to 35 horsepower, four-cylinder car.

Where It Excels

The chiefest point where this car excels is in excess of care and caution.

The best I have learned in 25 years is the folly of taking chances.

In every steel part the alloy that I use is the best that has been discovered. And all my steel is analyzed to know that it meets my formula.

I test my gears with a crushing machine—not a hammer. I know to exactness what each gear will stand.

I put the magneto to a radical test. The carburetor is doubly heated, for low-grade gasoline.

I use nickel steel axles with Timken roller bearings.

So in every part. The best that any man knows for every part has been adopted here. The margin of safety is always extreme.

I regard it impossible, at any price, to build a car any better.

Center Control, Finish, etc.

Reo the Fifth has a center, cane-handle control. It is our invention, our exclusive feature.

Gear shifting is done by a very slight motion, in one of four directions.

There are no levers, either side or center. Both of the brakes operate by foot pedals. So the driver climbs out on either side as easily as you climb from the tonneau.

The body finish consists of 17 coats. The upholstering is deep, and of hair-filled genuine leather. The lamps are enameled, as per the latest vogue. Even the engine is nickel trimmed.

I have learned by experience that people like stunning appearance.

The wheel base is long — the tonneau is roomy—the wheels are large — the car is over-tired. Every part of the car—of the chassis and the body — is better than you will think necessary. No price could buy anything better.

Price, $1,055

This car—my finest creation—has been priced for the present at $1,055.

This final and radical paring of cost is considered by most men as my greatest achievement.

It has required years of preparation. It has compelled the invention of much automatic machinery. It necessitates making every part in our factory, so no profits go to parts makers.

It requires enormous production, small overhead expense, small selling expense, small profit. It means a standardized car for years to come, with no changes in tools and machinery.

In addition to that, by making only one chassis we are cutting off nearly $200 per car.

Thus Reo the Fifth gives far more for the money than any other car in existence. It gives twice as much as some.

But this price is not fixed. We shall keep it this low just as long as we can. If materials advance even slightly the price must also advance. No price can be fixed for six months ahead without leaving big margin, and we haven't done that. The cost has been pared to the limit.

Catalog Ready

Our new catalog shows the various styles of body. It tells all the materials, gives all specifications. With these facts before you, you can easily compare any other car with this Reo the Fifth.

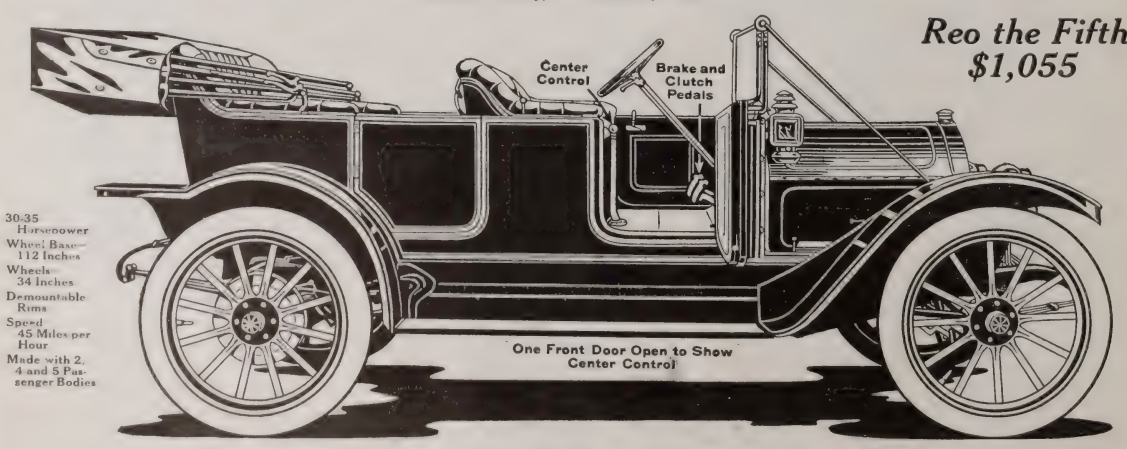
If you want a new car you should do that. Judge the facts for yourself. Don't pay more than our price for less value. After 25 years spent in this business, here is the best car I can build. And the price is $1,055. Don't you think you should know that car?

Write now for this catalog. When we send it we will tell you where to see the car. Address—

R. M. Owen & Co. General Sales Agents for Reo Motor Car Co., Lansing, Mich.

Canadian Factory, St. Catharines, Ontario

Reo the Fifth
$1,055



Center Control
Brake and Clutch Pedals
30-35 Horsepower
Wheel Base—112 Inches
Wheels—34 Inches
Demountable Rims
Speed 45 Miles per Hour
Made with 2, 4 and 5 Passenger Bodies
One Front Door Open to Show Center Control

Top and windshield not included in price. We equip this car with mohair top, side curtains and slip-cover, windshield, gas tank and speedometer—all for $100 extra. Self-starter, if wanted, $25.00 extra.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 10, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Their Mother's Portion

Distributing Basket Dinners on Christmas Morning in the Bowery Mission

A Tenement Mother

THE FEAST-DAY OF GOD'S POOR

How the Blessed Christmastide Was Celebrated at the Bowery Mission

CHRISTMAS bells began to ring on the Bowery long before the dawn of Christmas Day. It was one of the greatest days in the history of the Bowery Mission. At one clock in the morning, fifteen hundred hungry, omeless men and boys were given coffee and food at e Mission. Silently the long "Bread Line" passed to the building and out again into the night. No e may know what memories of other Christmas ays were in the minds of the homeless ones whom e Mission welcomed and cheered.

At 9 o'clock there was a distribution of Christmas nners to a large gathering of poor families. uring the week before Christmas the workers of e Mission had visited and investigated hundreds poverty-stricken homes on the East Side, search- g out especially those "silent sufferers" who, ough sorely pressed by poverty and want, yet tain too much of the old-time self-respect to make eir condition known and become applicants for ublic charity. There are o more worthy people mong God's poor than ese silent ones. Over a ndred baskets, each con- ining a substantial hristmas dinner for ten ersons, were given out to ose whose cases had been refully investigated. Mr. ames T. Hunt, the busi- ess manager of the Bowery ission, had charge of the hristmas arrangements. ven he was astonished to arn that, in many cases, e people who had been sited and put on the list r Christmas dinners were o poor that they had no eans of cooking the meal -no stove, no fire, not a enny to buy fuel of any nd! So the chickens that ent out in those baskets ere cooked before being elivered.

It was a sight for the en of a Hugo or a Dickens o describe, when the lower oor of the Mission was pened on the gray dawn of hristmas morning, to ad- it those who were to receive Christmas dinners. There were old women and young women, some of them mere girls, and as they crowded the long hall, and sat waiting their turn, one could see that they belonged to a class who had been beaten and buffeted by misfortune, poverty and sickness. They were truly the "daughters of sorrow." One tenement mother with seven children sent word by a neighbor that she could not come, because her "husband died last night," and would not the superintendent kindly send her basket by the neighbor? Another mother had five hungry children of her own at home and three of her daughter's, whose husband had lately died. Her own husband had no work. There were in that gathering the lame and the bowed; women with haggard faces, whose weary eyes and pale skin showed that they had not had a holiday these many years. Some had shawls around their heads and shoulders. Probably no less than a dozen nationalities were represented in that single gathering on Christmas morning. There were a few children there, too, bearing cards that had been addressed to their mothers; but the main part of the assemblage was the mothers themselves. Mr. Hunt, with his board of mission workers, saw to it that every bearer of a card received a basket filled with good things to eat.

Through the kindness of several generous-hearted readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, special provision had been made for a particular class of cases. A number of poor homes had been visited for this exclusive benefaction and the result was that fifty poor mothers, whose cases were of a character to deserve special attention, were invited to come to the Mission on Christmas morning at the same hour at which the general distribution of Christmas dinners was going on. Each of these was privately handed a five dollar bill by Mr. Otto Koenig, the President of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and one of the Trustees of the Mission. As the recipients left, their expressions of gratitude, if they could have been heard by the donors of the gifts, would have convinced them that their generosity had reached a most deserving mark.

On Christmas evening, luncheons in boxes were given out to 1,200 unemployed and homeless men and lads. There was an almost unprecedented attendance at the services in the main hall of the Mission, police assistance being necessary to keep back the immense crowd that gathered about the doors and struggled for admittance. Mrs. Sarah J. Bird ("Mother" Bird) presided over the meeting, assisted by Mr. Hunt, the Rev. Dr. John G. Hallimond, the Superintendent, being absent through sickness. Several rousing addresses were given, but the best of all were the testimonies of a great number of converts who told how the Mission had lifted them from the

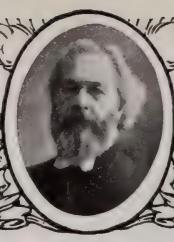
Continued on page 42

The Mothers Crowded the Long Hall and Sat Waiting Their Turn

A SERMON

By

Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D.*



THE HEAVENLY WORLD

TEXT: "And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Luke 23: 43

MEN in general are allured by the prospect of foreign travel. We want to go abroad after we have once been. We wanted also to go abroad even before we had once been. Quite before we had visited London or Paris, Berlin or Vienna, those cities had become to a degree domesticated in our thought. While we were certainly unfamiliar with their detailed features, the peculiarities severally of their structure and arrangements and methods of life and action, enough had been brought to us by the story of foreign travel, as recorded by others, to certify us of the reality of those cities, and to assure us of the existence, between them and American towns, of a certain amount of identity.

Before we went we had learned to believe that they are not so utterly different from urban life as familiarized to us here. If we had supposed that everything there was going to be absolutely different from things as we know them here we never should have been interested to go. There would then have been nothing more in foreign sojourn that would, or that possibly could, have allured us and made appeal to us, than there would be in attempting to read a book that is written in characters with which we have no acquaintance.

We like new things, and the newer the better and the more of them the better, only they must at least be strung upon a thread of familiarity. We cannot think with any thoughts that have not become our thoughts; when we imagine, that is, when we make mental images, we may give to them a fresh and original shape but we shall construct them out of material that was already lying in our minds.

Our Conceptions of God and Heaven

Now therein lies the reason why heaven is likely to be so unreal to us, and is the reason why to very many people it is so absolutely uninteresting. We sing together of the joys of the heavenly world, and such hymns are often rendered with a good deal of vocal enthusiasm, which sometimes means more, and very often means less. And if it means less it is because the music of our souls is played upon a stringless harp; and by this I mean that the music which we render has back of it no substantial thought to which it plays the accompaniment or to which it gives musical expression. So that the enthusiasm just mentioned becomes a bodiless kind of enthusiasm, in that respect like a bubble, which is brilliant but lacking sufficient substance to render the brilliancy permanent; so that we are not always sure that the heavenly-mindedness of the song guarantees the continuous heavenly-mindedness of the songster.

There are people who are so concerned not to do injustice to the infinitude of the Divine Being and character, that they are averse to conceiving of him under any aspect that has the slightest touch of finiteness about it, and at the impulse of an honest spirit of reverence and worship decline to import into their mental picture of God any colors taken from the palette of human character and life. Now, the personal qualities that make up the human soul are the only personal qualities of which we know anything; so that unless we employ human qualities in framing our conception of God we can have no conception of him and no thought about him except that he is unthinkable. The humanization of God in Christ Jesus is exactly shaped to match this necessity. It is equivalent to an assertion that God can be thought under human terms without doing necessary injustice to the Divine Being. Christ as depicted in the Gospel is the warrant we have for talking about God somewhat as we talk about each other, attributing to him intelligence, purpose, affection and grief as we do to personal beings that are only finite. For the purpose of making God actual to our thought and feeling Christ translates God into terms of human quality and experience.

So that now, in a way that is inadequate to be sure, but valid as far as it goes, we can think God, and the point I wanted to make is that that is the only way by which he becomes interesting. I use such words reverently but they are the only words we can use. If we cannot humanize God to our thought and affection we can have no God except the "unknown God" to whom the Athenians erected an altar on Mars Hill, which for practical results is no God at all. So far as relates to actual effects as well rub out everything that exists in the universe and deify the infinite of space which would be the only thing remaining.

The Soul Should Feel Heaven's Reality

The purpose of the illustration just employed is to set forth this fact: that only that can become a source of beneficent influence upon us which has first been made interesting to us. Numberless illustrations of that principle could be adduced were it necessary. No reality feeds the soul to which the soul has not first actively and with a certain intensity of activity committed itself. The soul is appetized by a sense of the appetizing quality of the nutriment that it gives itself to.

So that if the heavenly world—the paradise of our text—is to be a working factor in present experience it will have to be so by becoming something more than a colorless blank in our thought, nay rather by becoming a reality in our thought, and an interesting one—which it ordinarily is not. People rarely think much about heaven except in a blind, hesitant and meaningless kind of way, with very much the instability of gaze with which they glance into those depths of celestial space where there are no stars. So much of the night-sky as is peopled with stellar lights will hold our vision fixed and firm, but it is different when we look with no determinate object given us to look at, and no prescribed path along which our vision can run.

The situation of difficulty which we face here is one, apparently, for which we are ourselves in part responsible. People in order to make heaven as heavenly as possible, have felt it necessary to make it as unlike the present world as possible. We have been, I am sure, too much like the painter who would not paint in color for fear of disgracing the rainbow, or like those of us who, out of the desire not to detract from the dignity of the Divine Being, have been so careful not to humanize him, and so particular not to think of him as being in any respect like ourselves or like anything else that we are acquainted with that we have largely deprived ourselves of the power of thinking of him at all, or finding that in him which can interest us.

The Future World Linked with the Present

We have put such a complexion upon the future world, or rather have so deprived it of all complexion, as to all intents and purposes to rub out its reality and to leave it an uncongenial and dismal uncertainty; not so absolutely nil as to prevent our hymning its praises when on occasion the impulse seizes us, but too far out of relation with terrestrial experience to enable us to think candidly about it or to have any definite and sustaining expectation in regard to it or to have anything but grim foreboding excited by the thought of possible entrance into it. And yet we can give to ourselves no good reason for so disjointing what we call the future world from the world of which we have present experience, as to close up the highway of thought and expectation and not only to render that world foreign, but put it quite outside the frontier of the known universe and fundamentally distinct from it in its construction and government.

One thing which the study of nature has taught us is that there is nothing freakish in God's system of production and administration. The charm of science is that the further and deeper it carries its investigations the more numerous the traces which it discovers of underlying unity. It is like a piece of music wrought out into a series of contrasting variations, but with all those variations kept artistically consonant with the original theme. In whatever direction the scientist looks that which he discovers is a reminder of somewhat that he had elsewhere discovered.

To say that the octave of colors is an exhibition to the eye of what the musical octave brings to the ear, is but a striking, I would say a thrilling, example of the mutual understanding which pervades nature through all her parts. God's discourse pronounced by the material world never seems to wander away from the text upon which it is preached. Wherever we go, we find something which resembles the strangeness of the new home and helps to make what we had found before. What appear at first to be exceptions to established rules reduce, upon further examination, into conformity to those rules, and the rules themselves show, upon study, to be only variations of some one discovered or suspected deeper rule.

And when leaving the coast-line of our little globe we push out into the broad sea of the eternal distances we find the same thing over again. The laws that control the fall of an apple determine the moving of the stars. The material that makes out the structure of the heavenly bodies so far removed that were they to become extinct the last ray of light which they shed would still be on its way toward us for centuries after they had become darkened, is the same material as that upon which you tread in your own garden and obedient to the same chemical ordinances. Wherever we touch God's handiwork we find the occurrence, recurrence and repetition of what we had encountered before and elsewhere. Were he to construct other worlds than those already in existence we have every reason to believe that they would be framed upon the same model as lay in his mind and was followed in the creation of those already existing. Whatever innovations might be introduced in the matter of details we judge from what we know of his working hitherto that in fundamental feature he would adhere to the structural lines upon which his previous productions have been laid down.

There are doubtless heavenly bodies so remote as never yet to have been brought within reach of the human eye by the aid of the most powerful instruments. It is not daring too much to say that if such bodies exist we already know what they are made of, the laws which are in force upon and within them, and the physical relations in which they stand to the other parts of the universe.

Death Is "Stepping Into the Next Room"

The conclusion to which all such illustrations lead seems inevitable, this namely, that, so far as the general outlines of life are concerned, existence in the world into which we have not yet entered will be modeled after the scheme of the life that we have already learned to know: that the rude break by which we may have conceived the life there to be disjointed from the one we are living here is the outcome of uninstructed fancy, and unjustified by any facts that are at command and available for purposes of anticipation. A New Englander as distinguished for his intelligence and culture as for his piety expressed his conception of the situation by saying that to him "death was very much the same thing as stepping into the next room." The room might be different in its furnishings and not altogether the same in the uses to which it was put, but with only a threshold between the two and both of them inside the same house, and structurally harmonized with all the rest of the building.

So conceived—and in view of all known facts I do not know how we can rationally conceive it otherwise—so conceived heaven begins to become interesting, interesting because thinkable, interesting as London is interesting even before we have learned personally to know it.

The "Uninterrupted Continuity" of Heaven

A dear friend who went into the "next room" some years ago—a man intensely involved in the activities of this world, practical to the last degree but as spiritual in his experiences as he was practical in his secular engagements—said not long before his death: "I am very curious to know how it is going to be there." Heaven interested him.

Feeling as he did that there existed a thread of uninterrupted continuity along which the soul moves without jolt or jar into the fresh but not strange experiences of a new chapter of existence, his mind was able to think about it all easily and pleasantly. When one moves out of a home endeared to him by many happy years and transfers himself to another abiding place, he likes to carry over with him some articles of the furniture with which his former apartments have been graced and made comfortable, and which have become precious by a long term of use and acquaintance. The thought of being able to do so diminishes the strain of removal, mitigates the strangeness of the new home and helps to make the life which he is going to live there, to that

Continued on next page

* Pastor Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York.

THE GARDEN OF FORGIVENESS

THERE is a garden, far, oh, far away,
Kept for the souls who sinned and suffered most.
The sword of God forever guards the way,
And round its borders camps a heavenly host.

A gentle wind breathes through the tufted grass,
Rich with the scent of roses in their bloom;
And, with the wind, all sins and sorrows pass,
Leaving a sweet contentment in their room.

Here are no troubles; here are none that weep;
Here come no thoughts of sadness or despair;
But fairest flowers, in fullest beauty, sleep;
And softest sunlight fills the dreaming air.

The murmurings of fountains, low and sweet,
Forever fill the ear and never cease,
Soothing the silence with a gentle beat,
Like kindly voices, speaking words of peace.

And there, forever and forever, rest
The weary souls, unburdened of their sin;
And cursed things are here forgiven and blessed;
And wicked hearts are made all clean within.

BERTRAND SHADWELL.

The Heavenly World

Dr. Parkhurst's Sermon Continued

extent companionable with the one he has been living elsewhere.

Even in the words which we have employed as text, although those words were spoken under the most solemn circumstances possible, when both parties to the conversation were just upon the threshold of the other world, were brought out two significant facts which fold in naturally into the creases of present experience and which set ajar the door and afford a reassuring glimpse into what lies within. One of those facts is that there is no distance between that world and this; that there is no dark, between-rolling stream across which the tremulous mariner will require to be transported to some mysterious and dreadful shore. To-day," said our Lord; before sunset. The other fact is that acquaintanceships are not obliterated nor friendships dissolved by the soul's removal into the heavenly sphere. No life here is perfect without love. No soul is large enough to live a perfect life alone. Heaven would be unheavenly were there no place in it for the comradeship and sympathy of spirits that are kindred. It is not living unless it be a living together. "To-day shalt thou be with me." Before sunset we shall be together there. Or, as it was tenderly phrased by Tennyson,

> Eternal form shall still divide
> The eternal soul from all beside,
> And I shall know him when we meet.

And that which I have given you this morning has not been merely, nor so much, for the purpose of bringing comfort to those with whom the event of death means anxiety and bereavement; nor merely with a view to relieving a little the burden of uncertainty which in so many minds—most minds, I suppose—attaches to the passage of the soul hence; but rather that our souls might have a richer consciousness of life's roominess.

An unthinkable heaven practically renders void the doctrine of immortality. It does not prevent our being immortal, of course, but robs the doctrine of all vitalizing influence over earthly life and experience. A reality—no matter how real it is—a reality wrapped about with so dense an obscurity that we cannot at all think our way into it is not an open door, but a wall of adamant against which the soul can only fling itself helplessly.

Our life, even though it be a century long, is a stuffy prison-house. A mere colorless conception of great times to come is an agony, not a hope. We want something belonging to it that we can think; easy tracks out upon which our thoughts can run, undismayed and unwearied. We want to feel the rush of the winds blowing in upon us fresh and lustily from off the heights of the years eternal.

That helps to make great living, with the eighty-year wall blown down and the century line washed out, and the little day we are living in and the small place we habit in, saturated with a bit of the fulness and vastness that reaches all the way from the eternity that is past to the ages that stretch forth to the interminable hereafter.

The Peaceful Warrior

By EUGENE THWING

THE world loves a good fighter and a good fight. There is joy in a hotly contested battle—a challenge to the best that is in us. Fighting is natural and necessary all through life. We were born fighting, and most of us will fight to the last moment of breath. Yet here we are, to-day, in the midst of the battle, earnestly preaching peace. Hardly has the sound died away of the Christmas chimes and anthems proclaiming "Peace on earth, good will toward men." We cry "Peace! Peace!" and there is no peace. Everywhere the fight is waging. We are in the thick of it. Not one of us can lay down his weapons, and only the valiant warrior, who can "endure hardness like a good soldier," can hope to join with Paul in the triumphant shout of victory at the end.

The world wants no peace and will give none. Touch the world at any point and instantly you have a fight on your hands. Whatever your daily duty, whatever your ambition, whatever your unselfish purpose, the world and the devil are sure to thrust at you with sharp weapons, and place in your path every hindrance to prevent the attainment of your end. Every fighting quality must be called into play to meet the threatenings, the blows, the trickery, the false accusations, the slow, deadly hostility or coldness of the world, the "fightings within and the foes without," when you set out to achieve a good work; and, as Roosevelt says, it is only "through labor and painful effort, by grim energy and resolute courage, that we move on to better things."

Yet in all this turmoil of struggle and conflict, peace is a joyous possibility—nay, it is a needful condition to victory; for, strange to say, only the peaceful warrior can win the perfect victory.

. . .

IN THE terrific battle at Sedan, a Prussian soldier was fighting valiantly. His bravery and steadfastness before the enemy inspired his comrades on every side. A bullet struck him, and he fell. Two of his comrades lifted him to a place of safety. They had not gone far when he said, "Put me down. Do not take the trouble to carry me any farther; I am dying."

They laid him gently down and returned to the field. A few minutes later, an officer saw him weltering in his blood, and asked, "Can I do nothing for you?" "Nothing, thank you," the soldier replied. "Shall I get you a little water?" said the kind-hearted officer. "No, thank you, I am dying." But the officer insisted. He could not leave the man to die unattended and uncomforted. "Is there nothing I can do for you? Shall I write to your friends?" The soldier smiled. "I have no friends that you can write to. But there is one thing for which I would be much obliged. In my knapsack you will find a Testament. Will you open it at the fourteenth chapter of John, and near the end of the chapter you will find a verse that begins with 'Peace.' I should like to hear you read that."

The officer found the place and read, "Peace I leave with you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." The smile on the dying man's face was in strange contrast with the noise and carnage close by. "Thank you, sir," he said. "I have that peace; I am going to that Saviour; God is with me; I want no more." And so the peaceful warrior left the tumult of battle, his part in the fight ended, his spirit of peace triumphant over all.

. . .

PEACE is a beautiful thing to die with; but it is an indispensable thing to live with and to fight with. Every other weapon may be employed in the battle of life; if peace be lacking there is weakness and danger of defeat.

Worry crowds into the heart of the business man whose soul is not at peace. Worry destroys his nerve, interferes with his initiative, scatters his energies, befuddles his brain. He may fight doggedly—desperately. The devil of worry will defeat his efforts and destroy him in the end. With peace filling his soul, he is fit for the most gigantic tasks, because all his powers are at command. His head is cool, his brain active, his heart eager, his faculties alert. He meets opposition and difficulties calmly and applies himself shrewdly to gaining the mastery. Nothing disturbs his balance. Like the stabilisator invented for the flying machine, to enable it to maintain a safe equipoise in treacherous winds, peace keeps him steady while the tempests or the squalls of life beat against him. He knows he is safe in the final outcome.

. . .

A SPLENDID woman of my acquaintance presided over a happy home. Her talented husband and two noble boys were her pride, and joy, and comfort. The husband was taken ill and lay for a long time helpless before he died. All the burden of care and support fell upon the wife, who refused to interrupt the school work of her sons. She combined the labor of nursing in the sick room with that of bread-winning for the family. When she was left alone with her two boys, she still carried her burden courageously alone until the eldest began his business career. Then she thanked God and said in her heart, "God hath given me a man in the place of his father."

The young man plunged eagerly into his work with a glad sense of taking his own share of the burden. He made quick progress toward a successful career. Suddenly, unexpectedly, he also was stricken down with a dreadful disease. He lay at death's door, thousands of miles away from mother and brother. The daily fight against despair and bitter rebellion in that mother's heart was none the less real because so little of it could be seen by others. "I must not let myself go to pieces," she said, quietly, as she kept on with her work and met her routine responsibilities. Then, when the time came to go on a long journey to her son's bedside, perhaps only to say good-by, she sent this message: "I am hoping for the best, but I know whatever comes will be the best."

Oh, the majesty of the warrior who can fight the bitterest of fights with a soul at peace—who can say, with Paul, "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. Persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed. For which cause we faint not, but though the outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

ANTICIPATION

WHEN we shall see the dear, familiar faces
Which cheered our fireside in the long ago,
When we behold, instead of vacant places,
The friends whose tender love once blessed us so;
When their warm handclasp shall the grief have banished,
Which ne'er has left us since they went away,
Joys will return which with their presence vanished,
While happiness our constant guest will stay.

When we shall hear the well-remembered voices
Breathing our name as in the days gone by (Ah, at the thought our full heart now rejoices, While we cannot repress a longing sigh),
Then shall we know that home, whose ties were broken
As one by one left for the heavenly shore,
Is ours again, not missing one dear token,
And from it none shall go forever more!

MARIAN L. WARD.

A Famous Art Cover

THE painting of which our front cover is an excellent two-color reproduction is one of the noted pictures in the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art. The gentle mother in her scarlet robe and blue mantle, with a soft gray veil about her head and shoulders, holding her baby adoringly in her arms, is the ideal mother ideally portrayed. Before her stands a cherub with clasped hands and face upturned in adoration of the Holy Infant. Like the famous Immaculate Conception by Murillo, the most highly prized painting in the Madrid Galleries, the entire atmosphere is full of cherubs. The painting is clearly not a Christmas picture; its special charm lies perhaps entirely in brilliancy of color and distinctly naive treatment of the most familiar art subject.

The artist, Ludwig Knaus, was born in Wiesbaden, Germany, in 1829. By a close study of modern French masters, Knaus perfected himself in the technical part of his art, won many medals, honors and titles of distinction, both in France and in his own country, and died scarcely a year ago, foremost genre painter in Germany.

"Go to Work, Brother!"

MOODY and Sankey, the great evangelists, were on a Gospel tour along the eastern part of New York State. They had reached Newburg and were holding a two weeks' revival service in the large rink which would accommodate four thousand persons. On one particular night, every square foot of space was occupied. Then the doors were barred and locked. After Mr. Moody had preached one of his characteristic sermons with telling effect on the large audience, he glanced around and, perceiving a young man seated near the pulpit, he shouted out in clarion notes three times—"Go to work, brother! Brother, go to work! Go to work, brother!" The young man was completely surprised at the personal appeal, but he became a worker and since that time has felt that though Moody was the messenger, the message itself was really from God. W. H. W.

NAIN

OVER the beaten hillside path
A Stranger came to-day.
Along the rugged mountain height
Where lingered sunset's fading light,
And stayed the dim approaching night,
He came upon his way.

Over the beaten hillside path
A Stranger went to-day;
But a glorious victory there was won,
And he left behind a song begun
In the risen life of the widow's son.
Hail to the Lord alway!

MYRTLE HUMPHREYS.

TWO DELIGHTFUL BOOKS

With pleasure I acknowledge the interesting and useful Almanac with thanks. Also the charming book, Women of the Bible, so skilfully grouped and beautifully written by the estimable and gifted Margaret E. Sangster.

Brockport, N. Y. MRS. R. H. SCOFIELD.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President | GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor | THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y.City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y.City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The People's Will in China

IN THE transforming process which is now going on in China, the world is witnessing what may prove to be one of the greatest miracles of the ages —the change of more than one-third of the entire human race from despotism to a republic. This is the direction in which events are now tending. Yuan Shi Kai, although personally favoring any reforms that would save the dynasty, recognizes the strength of the popular movement against the throne, and is apparently prepared to yield to the demand for a republic. He has told the revolutionary leaders, however, that the question must be settled for the whole country by a representative assembly. Should it decide for the republic, Yuan will then efface himself from political life. It may even be that before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches its readers, the future of China will have been decided. Meanwhile Russia, England and Japan are all intensely interested in what is taking place. Mongolia, Turkestan, Manchuria and Tibet may proclaim their independence, and should this happen, there may be great spoil in the near future for the land-grabbing foreign Powers. It is hardly to be expected that the whole country will stand by the republic, which will be strongest in Central and Southern China. It is a history-making time and the whole world is interested in the outcome.

Who Was to Blame?

THE entire country was inexpressibly shocked last March by the news of the cruel fire at the Triangle factory in New York, which destroyed one hundred and forty-eight lives; there was a second shock on December 27, when the proprietors of the factory were acquitted of the charge of manslaughter on which they had been indicted.

Who killed these girls? Some one did. It was not God, nor themselves, nor blind forces of Nature. They died because some one who ought to have protected their lives did not do so. Other workers will die in the same manner unless the laws and the courts find a way to punish and do actually punish the men who are to blame.

A number of things must be done. The laws must be made so strict and so plain that everybody shall know exactly where the responsibility lies for each item of the factory workers' protection. Inspectors must be appointed with the gravest care and discrimination. Reports of inspection must be watched so closely and the inspectors themselves examined so frequently that the possibility of bribery and falsification will be reduced to a minimum. If there are at present perplexing entanglements between different commissions these must be cleared up; the Fire Department and the Factory Commission must have the clearest possible instructions and their inspectors compelled to do thorough work. Owners and lessees alike must be made to understand the requirements of the law and obey implicitly. Finally, public sentiment must be kept stirred up, individuals and organizations must continue to agitate the question until, so far as is humanly possible, the lives of workers are really safe.

Mr. Taft on World Peace

PRESIDENT TAFT has again come before the country in an appeal in behalf of world peace and more immediately in support of the arbitration treaties awaiting ratification in the Senate. In a notable article in the Century, he urges that the nation's self-respect and high sense of duty should impel it to grasp the greatest opportunity ever set before any people to take our rightful place as leader in the peace movement. He says:

> The nation's greatness, its wealth of resources, and the demonstrated bravery of its men, which preclude even the suggestion that it is actuated by cowardice; its freedom from entangling alliances and its comparatively insular position—all combine to make possible its leadership in this great movement. The people of the world look to us to give this impetus to the peace movement.

China's civil war and Italy's unprovoked assault on a weaker Power are both questions, he declares, which ought to have been brought before a peace tribunal. Answering the objection that a nation cannot properly submit to such a tribunal any question which affects its vital interests or its national honor, he says with emphasis: "I would rather take my chances of securing a just decision from a commission composed of honorable men than from the god of war!" Human experience proves that a nation is not the best judge of questions involving its own rights. Moreover, no just nation can desire any other settlement of its quarrels than a just and equitable one. To assume that a just settlement can be reached by mere force of arms, rather than by law, would be preposterous. An impartial court is the only tribunal before which such questions can be taken, if it is desired to reach a righteous and equitable decision.

It is a fine thing to have the official head of our government put himself on record in this clear and logical manner in favor of substituting law for the arbitrament of war. Yet President Taft simply echoes the oft-repeated declaration of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that war settles no dispute equitably, but only demonstrates the superior strength of one Power over another. He says:

> War may demonstrate which nation has the larger army, the more powerful navy, but does it determine the merits of the case? If might makes right, it does; but if not, what does it settle except where exists the greatest might?

We hope to see in the near future the two arbitration treaties approved by the Senate; and then, as the President pointed out in a recent address in New York, when this is done, we can proceed to make similar treaties with other nations, and those nations with each other.

The Greatest Theme

IN THESE days, when so many moral doctors are inclined to go lightly over the old question of sin and the old ideas as to how to get rid of it, it is refreshing to observe in authoritative quarters signs of adherence to facts long ago established. Whatever may be the outward forms and manifestations of the troubles of mankind, the real trouble, in individuals and in society, is sin. And the cure for sin is the Cross of Christ.

A forceful editorial appeared recently in the British Weekly restating these facts in no uncertain terms. Real cases of conversion were reported with conviction and enthusiasm. Special reference was made to a book just issued which is being heralded on both sides of the Atlantic as a stalwart testimony to the old faith. The Rev. George Steven delivered the Cunningham lectures at Edinburgh for 1911, on the subject of "The Psychology of the Christian Soul." The substance of these lectures has been put into book form under the same title and published by Hodder & Stoughton.

Mr. Steven is a scholar, which is a good thing. But he also "has religion," which is a still better thing. Putting his scholarship and his spiritual insight and experience together he has given the world a great book.

He is not afraid to discuss the subject of sin. He traces the facts of sinning through from bias to sin, attention to sin, temptation to sin, to the hideous slavery of sin, and outlines the process by which the soul is liberated in conversion. Mr. Steven distinguishes sharply between "intellectual conversion," in which a man passes from one mental conviction or state to another; "moral conversion," in which a man reaches through moral struggle the conviction of God's existence, and "Christian conversion," which is what the Church calls the conscious turning of man from sin to God. "It is not merely a moral change, a reform in conduct or in temper, but a change in his personal relation to One who is over all. Conversion is the acceptance of God's love and the surrendering to it of a whole life."

It would be difficult indeed to find anywhere finer devotional reading than the closing chapters of Mr. Steven's book, "The Capture of the Soul by God" and "The Soul in the Presence of God." "The Old, Old Story" is told again in the words of the scholar and the artist. "It is in this act of contemplating Christ that the change comes."

The last chapter progresses to a thrilling climax. The soul is in God's presence. The redeemed soul finds God in nature, in the Word, in the sacraments, in prayer. Through all the spiritual life is a mental life. The man—normal, sane, thinking—enjoys the friendship of God. At last prayer may become only a "desire that the will of God be done."

There are three great, insistent words in the book: the mind, sin, God. Its message may be summed up in this (It is not new, but it is told with new power): God has found a way to heal the hurt of man's mind and bring him into friendship with himself. And the way is Christ.

A Lie Traced to Its Source

ALTHOUGH a lie may travel far and fast, it usually trips itself up at the end. Several months ago, a "loose talker" in Seattle set afloat the story that a large part of the cargo of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD famine relief steamship Buford had been sold in China, as the natives did not know how to use the flour. In our issue of October 4 last, we gave attention to the circulator of this remarkable fabrication, who claimed to base his statements upon an interview with Judge Rufus H. Thayer, of the United States District Court in China. That official, who was then at sea on the voyage back to his post, on his return was questioned by Chairman John C. Ferguson of the Shanghai Famine Relief Committee, who has written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Peking, under date November 28, 1891:

> I wrote Judge Thayer about the matter when he arrived in Shanghai, and he replied as follows: "I fancy that the incident to which you refer grew out of an interview with me in Seattle in which the reporter indulged in some enlargements and inaccuracies. He referred to the matter of alleged sale of the Buford cargo of flour, and quoted statements made by a flour agent in the Orient, who represents some Pacific coast mills. This man was on the steamer with me from Honolulu to San Francisco, and I recalled that he had told me the same story. My statement was confined to the announcement that I did not know anything about it. I saw the reported interview, did not recognize it as covering much that I actually said, but it did not occur to me that it was of much importance or would attract any attention."
>
> This particular flour dealer made himself very active in Shanghai when the news of the Buford's coming with a cargo of flour was received. He protested to Dr. Wilder, fearing that our committee might sell it all as we did sell a small consignment of one hundred bags sent us from Seattle by Mr. Pigott and friends. This consignment was sold because we could not distribute it as easily and with as good effect along with rice and other cereals, but we had no trouble in disposing of all the Buford cargo to the utmost advantage. We made it go about three times as far as it would have done alone by distributing bean cakes with it. These bean cakes were ground in mill-stones by the people and mixed with the flour. I can only wish that the old Buford might come out again this year with another cargo for the poor famine sufferers.

This unqualified denial by Judge Thayer of the statements attributed to him and the equally positive declaration of Chairman Ferguson of the Shanghai Committee that none of the Buford's cargo, representing the gifts of our readers, was sold, but that all was distributed among the sufferers, puts the final clincher on the "loose talker's" story, showing that it was a lie out of the whole cloth. Thus the fabrication, after traveling half way round the globe, has been overtaken and exploded where it originated.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, January 10, 1912

	PAGE
The Holy Family. From Painting by Ludwig Knaus	Cover
The Feast-Day of God's Poor (Illustrated)	27, 42
The Heavenly World. Sermon By Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D.D.	28, 29
The Peaceful Warrior By Eugene Thwing	29
How China's Revolution Began (Illustrated) By "John Chinaman"	30
Tuan Fang, the Great Viceroy By E. R. Johnstone	30, 43
Christmas Banquet for "Little Mothers" (Illustrated)	31
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	32
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	33
Scenes in Delhi, India's New Capital	34
On His Beam Ends (Illustrated) By Wilfred T. Grenfell	35, 43
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	36, 38, 41
Chats by the Winter Fire (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	37
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	39
Our Mail-Bag	40
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	41, 42
Peace Circles and Treaties	42
Scientific Poultry Keeping By C. S. Greene	44
Revolt Against Wrong. Epworth League Topic	45
Worth-While Ambitions. Christian Endeavor Topic	46

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Lighthouse for the Blind

ON DECEMBER 20 President Taft laid the cornerstone for the first settlement house for the blind in the world at No. 111 East Fifty-ninth Street, New York City. In the rge audience were several hundred blind men and omen. The President sat in the big oak chair that enry Bauman, the blind cabinetmaker, had made. n the raised platform also were Joseph H. Choate, overnor Dix, Dr. John Finley, Miss Winifred Holt, d others. A band composed of blind boys played tional airs as the President arrived and departed. r. Choate said: "It will not be a luxurious home r idlers, not a place of refuge for the blind men d women to eat and sleep, but a workshop, a bee- ve of industry, a typical settlement house, where e blind can learn to make themselves useful." iss Grace Keator, president of the Blind Women's ub, of New York, presented the trowel to Presi- nt Taft with which he id the cornerstone of the ew building. The Presi- nt dipped the trowel in tub of mortar and pre ared the base to which e big stone was lowered. r. Taft said: "I sincerely ope, as we all do, that on is cornerstone will be ared a structure which ill be most useful to the ind and typical of the ity which we who have ir sight owe to those who ave a more difficult jour- ey to make in life." Miss olt delivered an address, which she said: "We ave proved that this is ot a work of charity, but justice, and a pretty ood business proposition r the community. As a iend of justice and free- om you have come to us, r. President, and we are rateful beyond words." iss Holt and Dr. Finley oth referred to the $40,- 00 mortgage on the new roperty, and said it was eir hope that it would be fted by friends of the in- titution. William I. candlin, of the Blind en's Self-Improvement lub of New York, told resident Taft how grate- il the blind felt toward im for the interest he had nown by his presence on is and other occasions. he advancement made by ne blind of our land in nowledge and practical ndeavor in a generation simply marvelous. No ne would ever dream that uch strange things could e done by them in the fine arts, the learned profes- ons and the mechanic arts. One of the most beau- ful features of this most beautiful benevolence is rovision for helping the blind to help themselves in ne matter of self-support and of useful service. eople can see without eyes the most important ings, truth, beauty, love, duty, God, the spiritual niverse. These institutions are the educational nd religious lighthouses to give keenness and readth of vision to the blind. The lighthouses of hristianity are illuminated by the life of God.

Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the orld: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall ave the light of life. (John 8:12.)

President Taft Laying the Cornerstone of the First Settlement for the Blind, New York City

avors Came Too Late

Fifteen years ago Patrick Tierney, a clerk in a tore in Somerville, N. J., on his way to work sud- enly disappeared. He was on good terms with his mployers and his parents, with whom he lived at Raritan, a mile away, and there was no moral rea- on for his disappearance. His parents remem- ered that he had said several times he had a mind o go to Alaska and get gold enough to take care of hem in their old age. Five years after the time he eft he wrote his father and mother that he had not ad any luck worth considering. The other day a all, handsome man got off the train at Raritan and urried to the old Tierney homestead, where he found a stranger who told him that Mr. Tierney had been dead five years, and his wife had died a year or so after. The son caught the pillar of the porch, and cried like a child as he said, 'I have in these two suit cases a fortune in gold nuggets, which I have been saving for ten years to keep father and mother in their last years, and now they are gone and the ambition of my life is defeated. He had gone from Alaska to Peru and gotten the gold out of the Andes. The son's intentions were good, but he made a great mistake. When he made his first finds he ought to have sent home letters and checks to encourage and help the old folks who had done everything for him, and he should have continued the help each year, for father and mother had had a hard time in the drudgery of caring for a large family on a small income. There are so many people who are intending to do some great thing in the future for loved ones when death makes such havoc with earth's plans, and they are like the clerk who struck it rich too late with their help to father, mother, sister, brother, husband, wife or child. The thing to do is to make our loved ones just as happy as possible and help them as much as we can now, not fifteen years, nor one year from the present. Of course, it is important to provide for the rainy day at the last, but it must not be forgotten that there are hungry and cold and sick and weary days for those we love which call for our help. In help to relatives, in the blessed charities of earth, as well as in spiritual decisions, the words of the apostle are recalled:

Behold, now is the accepted time. (II Cor. 6:2.)

Dog Saves Three Firemen

At a fire in the furniture warehouse of Adolph Finkenbergs, on Third Avenue, New York City, three firemen were cut off from view and from escape by the dense smoke that was stifling them. Though the ladder reached to within a few feet of them they could not see it, and their cries for help were drowned in the roar of the engines, the rattle of the elevated trains, and the confusion of the crowds below. Fireman Norton's dog Happy, the mascot of Engine Company 36, recognizing the cries of his master in the black cloud of smoke, made a dash for the ladder and began climbing it. Norton, with Heemsath and Bornholtz, his two imperiled companions, made out a small object coming up toward them. It was Happy, and then they realized for the first time that the ladder was there for their escape. They climbed out of the window, from which clouds of smoke were pouring, into the arms of a fireman who, watching the dog's trick, had followed him to the rescue of his master. The dog was wild with delight and affection at the relief of his master. How nearly human was the love and active service of Happy, the mascot, and how they suggest to men and women the lesson of sympathy, fidelity and active endeavor to save the bodies, minds and souls of others in imitation of the One who said:

The Son of man is come to save that which was lost. (Matt. 18:11.)

Turkeys and Ducks Decreasing

The country is astonished at the report of the Census Bureau at Washington, suggesting the possibility of the extinction of the turkey in America within a dozen years. The report says that there were 6,594,695 turkeys on farms in the United States in 1900, and only 3,688,708 in 1910. At that rate of decrease this bird would be found only in the zoological gardens in 1920. The number of ducks decreased with almost similar speed. In 1900 there were 4,785,810, while in 1910 there were only 2,906,525. The geese have gone more slowly. In 1900 there were 5,676,788, and in 1910 4,431,981. During the same ten years the number of chickens has been increased from 233,566,021 to 280,345,133. The wild turkey, a native of North America, has gone like the red men that hunted it. Now the tame turkeys are going. The young are hard to raise. The wet grass chills them, disease easily attacks them, enemies devour them. But the passing of the turkey can be traced to the enormous consumption of this foul. Poor men will buy turkeys certain times in the year. Rich men give car-loads of them to the workmen at Christmas and Thanksgiving time. No leading hotel in any great city would think of leaving roast turkey off the bill of fare for dinner. We are a nation of vandals in the destruction of our forests, and of gluttons in the consumption of our turkeys and ducks. Much attention is being paid to duck farming, and the decrease of this foul may be checked, as scientific chicken farming for eggs as well as flesh has kept the balance on the right side. The use of fowls as an article of food is in harmony with the Mosaic injunction:

All clean fowls ye may eat. (Deut. 14:20.)

Wife Kills the Bear

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Harvey, of Tenafly, N. J., had been staying a month at Yoke Pond, Me., and started for home. The husband went on the trail toward the depot, the wife to follow an hour or two later. On the summit of Boardman Mountain he met an angry she-bear, which went for him. Dropping his pack he climbed a spruce tree, just getting out of reach of the bear's claws. In his haste he dropped his mittens, and as the temperature was near zero his hands were badly frozen, and he had to strap himself to the tree to keep from falling out. Two hours later the wife came on the trail to the scene, and the bear left the tree and started growling for her. She was carrying the gun and fired one shot. That did not stop the brute, but the second one did, and left the bear dead ten feet away. Woman's heroism is proverbial. Wives have saved their husbands many times, their bodies in health, their minds in illumination, their morals by example and love, their souls by their influence, their sweet affection, and their prayers. The prophet illustrates a horrible situation by the experience of a man pursued by a wild beast:

As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him. (Amos 5:19.)

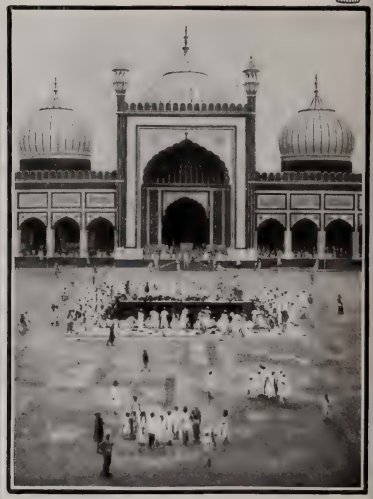
Scenes in Delhi, India's New Capital

The Historic Mosque of the Khan Khaya, Delhi

The Famous Jumma Musjid, the Largest Mosque in the World

The Tomb of Saf-dar Jumma

Mohammedans in Delhi Going to Prayers



A Religious Celebration on a "Holy Day"

The Famous "Kashmir Gate" of Delhi

A Minaret

Chandni Chauk, the Delhi Fruit Market

The Viceregal Seat of Government Was Transferred From Calcutta to Delhi by a Royal Edict Issued During the Durbar

ON HIS BEAM ENDS

By WILFRED T. GRENFELL

NEW YEAR'S DAY had come and gone at our little winter hospital. "The mildest winter this fifty year, Doctor, anyways," the patriarch of the village declared it. "Why, years ago us'd drive round heads many times 'fore Christmas, and now there's open water right to Uncle Adam's stage," he added in a somewhat querulous tone, as if that was a modern innovation not to be accepted without protest, that the open Atlantic beyond the steep cliffs that formed our harbor mouth should still be free of the Frost King's control.

"It's only my second winter on the Coast, Uncle 'Lige," I answered, "but I haven't noticed any heat to complain of. They wouldn't call this sultry where I came from, and so long as the heads keep the seas out of the harbor I can forgive the ocean, if it does love Jack Frost's rule as little as I do. I'm sure there's snow enough on the land to suit any one."

"Well, well. It all helps to fill up the holes, Doctor. But you can't trust to cross the tickles yet, and it's too long to go round till we get a drop o' rain to give the snow a surface. It's this 'twixt and between that's no use. It's never no use anywhere."

"Well, Uncle, I'll admit it keeps the hospital slack of work—people can't get to us any better than we can get to them. So I'm going to try a trip on Monday to the West Coast with the dogs, and see how the folks are getting on, as it's a long while since we heard from them, though I heard the first mail has come to Lock's Cove across the country."

"Yes, I know the trail's cut, and you're young still. Perhaps you may," he reiterated, "but don't take norisks, Doctor. Don't take no risks."

It was two weeks before once again our dogs brought up at the hospital doors. We had only covered some three hundred miles on the trip, having visited a great number of scattered hamlets and villages. But we arrived home with a good conscience. For food for our dogs had everywhere been plentiful and they got back as fresh and as sturdy as they started. We had left very little sickness behind us on the Coast, and expected a rest for quite a while among our own people.

But the unexpected always happens. That very night, we were called out of bed by a loud knocking at the hospital door. The voices of men and the sound of dogs on the crisp snow greeted our half-wakened senses. "Who's there?" from the window brought in stentorian tones the information, "It's me—Jonas—we've come over from Stark's Cove. Jennie Gardner broke her arm yesterday, so them says."

"All right, I'll be down directly. Go and call Ben out to give your dogs a feed."

As the messengers were from the Coast we had not visited, and brought us no news of any further trouble, and since haste seemed the object most to be desired, we decided to take no equipage beyond that needed for this particular case, thus enabling us to load our sledge as little as possible. This was more especially desirable as fresh snow having fallen in the night it became all the more important that the komatik should run lightly. As it turned out we did well, for the downfall continued steadily all the morning, and the drifts were enormous when we had to force through wooded country.

Night overtook us, in the middle of the country, and glad enough we were in a dense spruce thicket, called the "Green Ridge," locally, to dig out a wayside log tilt or hut, and to crawl down into it for the night. With the perversity that sometimes appears to characterize inanimate things, the downfall during the hours of darkness was almost phenomenal, and though we were ready for starting long before daylight we were forced to hasten slowly by being unable in the dark to unearth two recalcitrant dogs who were hidden snugly asleep under the snow.

The overcoming of physical difficulties is one of the chief pleasures in life, so when, as it grew dusk that evening, we emerged on the southern shore of the Straits of Belle Isle, we felt quite pleased with ourselves, even if we had lost twenty-four hours on our usual time. Soon three miles only remained.

"'Ouk! ouk! ouk!' and our little cavalcade was off in the new direction"

The familiar lighthouse out on an island was in sight and we expected in a few minutes to be in the warmth of the comfortable cottage of our patient.

But as chance would have it, just as we came to the parting of the trails, one leading out to a little village on a long promontory, we noticed so many fresh tracks of komatiks that we guessed something unusual must be occurring. "Anything wrong out at Safety Cove?" I sang out to the messengers who had come to fetch us. "Nothing we knows on, 'cept us heard Jim Kempson had a hurt on his knee, but us 'lows there must be more than that doing to take all this lot out there. For they hasn't come back by their tracks, and there's a power of 'em gone."

"There's a couple of men up on the top, Doctor," one of the men shouted as we swung round the next hillside, and a little bunch of houses nestling above the cove loomed up against the snow. "'Low them's watching to see us pass. See, them's got a flag up!" he added excitedly. "All right, Charley, Ouk! ouk! ouk!" (to the right) to the leading dog, and our little cavalcade was in less than a trice swinging off in the new direction.

Evidently we were spotted instantly by the vidette, for they commenced running down the hill to meet us, and we were soon in possession of the facts that were causing trouble. Jim's knee had got worse and worse, and "there was no stopping it." It had swelled up and down till his leg was as large as his body, and all hands said he was dying.

According to the custom of the Coast under these circumstances, all his friends had gathered from far and near to show their sympathy—"just to see him off," as some one once put it. Jim had a wife and four children, and only four rooms all told—a kitchen and living-room below and two tiny bedrooms in the slope of the roof above. The inevitable result was that the house was packed like a beehive and the air could almost be cut in slices with a knife. In one of the small upstairs rooms lay poor Jim on his back, struggling for life, encouraged by as many friends as could get in at once, but hampered sadly by bad air and heat.

Having succeeded in the delicate task of persuading this kindly assembly that their room was really of infinitely more value than their company, and in sending the four children to other houses, we retained three good handy men and started in to work.

With as little noise as possible the board partition between the two bedrooms was taken down, and one hand told off to plane it up, and convert it into a full-length bath. Assistant No. 2 was detailed to make a window in the roof, and No. 3 to carry away everything movable to the store outside. The new room was meanwhile cleansed and all the kettles of the village set boiling, as many as possible on our own downstair stove. Food was also short; there was neither a drop of any stimulant nor a tin of milk obtainable—much less fresh milk. Messengers volunteered to try and cross the ice and get some at the lighthouse; and fortunately in this they were successful.

The condition of the patient resembled that of a rapidly spreading erysipelas. The only hope of saving his life lay in numerous and extensive incisions. As no lancet was obtainable, our hunting-knife had to be impressed to replace one. An anæsthetic anyhow was out of the question. For an antiseptic a bottle of strong carbolic acid, left in the next village by our hospital boat for another case the previous summer, was fortunately brought in just when we were ready, and after some hot milk had been administered, the rough but most admirably sensible full-length bath, made out of the old partition — the seams well caulked with pitch — also made its appearance. Filled with its warm antiseptic solution, it was immediately put to use. The patient, in whom seven long incisions had been made, was placed reclining in it. He described it after as being like crimping a cod.*

Regular port and starboard watches were set, and when morning dawned we ventured to finish our own journey and settle the broken-arm patient before turning in for some sleep.

This cheerful woman whom we had originally set out to help almost persuaded us that it was a pleasure having a broken arm—the chance for his life it was the means of giving to her poor neighbor, to her mind quite offset the inconvenience and the pain which would make so many people selfishly introspective.

The supply of milk from the lighthouse was limited, and it had to be served out as if it were rations for a shipwrecked crew. Fortunately some of the boys came across ptarmigan on the second day, and the fresh broth was as welcome as the first flowers of spring. Numbers of small offerings of this kind were gladly brought in from a distance of many miles, as soon as the news reached along the Coast of the reason they were needed. The unstinted, unselfish kindness of the poor for the poor made even these anxious days a benediction to us workers. Surely the real kingdom of God was deeper in the hearts of this people than any one could possibly have supposed. The showers of kind acts, little though they may have appeared, were no small spur to all the rest of us to do our best, as night succeeded day and there still was no improvement in poor Jim's condition — nothing that suggested to us any chance of ultimate success. The fourth day was drawing to a close. Though a crowd of friends sat with me by the log fire in the fisherman's hut, where I was being temporarily entertained, my mind kept wandering over the miles of snow back to our people on the Western coast. I knew that by now the sick that we had left behind, and possibly others who had gathered since, must be anxiously awaiting my return. I was too restless to notice even much of the conversation. So, not unnaturally, I had failed to realize that the talk had turned to Jim and his chances, and what to do with his little ones if he did not pull through. "There's no money round here on Jim's chances, Doctor," one man remarked, "though they does say he seemed like clawing to windward a bit after them cuts."

"Don't be too sure, Dick," chimed in another, "Jim's lived hard o' late, but there's good stuff in him. There wasn't a soft spot in his timbers when this took him."

"It was always that way with Jim," added a third. "Not much to look at in fine weather, but never no give when t' pinch came."

One of the company, sailor-like, had been out to get "a sight o' the weather," not for any particular reason, except that the men find it hard to sit still for

Continued on page 43

* This process consists of cutting through the skin of the codfish as soon as it is taken from the water so that the muscles may contract and thus enhance the value of the fish.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By CHARLES M. SHELDON

Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER X—Continued

AFTER a moment of awed silence, the crowd slowly left the court room. Hermosa had great difficulty in getting Athanasia out. Silas Fleming stood awkwardly by his table looking at Brander Cushing. Then he suddenly crowded over to where he stood and held out his hand to him. Cushing did not seem to see it. Fleming's great red face went the color of purple. He drew his hand back, stood awkwardly a moment and then backed away without saying anything.

Father and son faced each other. Brander Cushing's arm was over Sidney's shoulder. At once it seemed to the older man as if this big young fellow was his little boy again. He smiled at him and said:

"It's all right, Sid. Don't worry. It will all come out all right."

Sidney choked. What could he say with all those people about? The most tragic event of his life was taking place before all those morbidly curious strangers. A few intimate friends of the two had come up and were trying to say a few stammering words of awkward sympathy. They were shocked unspeakably. The whole affair bewildered the entire community of Dockville. There were rumors of an appeal to the governor for a pardon. The morning papers would contain in detail the account of all the remarkable day's events. And no heartache would be spared. No vivisection of tenderest private feelings would be wanting. The horror of it blinded Sidney as he stood there feeling as weak and helpless as a child with his father's arm around him.

"What made you do it, father? I would have stood by as I promised."

Brander Cushing smiled at him.

"I am not sorry, Sid. I am not sorry."

The officer of the court came up and gently touched Cushing's arm.

"You're in my custody, sir."

"Can I go with him as far as—" Sidney made an appeal.

"You can go as far as the door if you want to."

"Better not come, Sid. The county jail is not very clean." Brander Cushing spoke calmly, with a strange smile.

But Sidney linked his arm in his father's and the officer by the side of them moved out of the court room across the street to the county jail, where Brander Cushing was to await the sheriff's time to take him to the penitentiary.

At the door of the jail, Brander Cushing turned to his son.

"I don't want you to come in, Sid. Go on with the work. Get your friend Gordon Ford to come and stay with you."

"O father! Father,I can't bear it!" Sidney turned and flung his arms around his father's neck, and then, as if he were a child again, he kissed his father, and Brander Cushing for the first time that day yielded to emotion. Down his hard white face tears ran.

"Yes, you can, Sid. Because you are a Cushing. Remember, boy. I may be guilty of neglect but I have never deliberately been guilty of dishonor. We can live it down."

Even there, under the shadow of the penitentiary, Brander Cushing's iron determination found expression. And even then, Sidney wondered at it as he turned and, in despair himself, went away to creep up to the house, fiercely denying interviews with several newspaper men who were about the door. Once inside the home, he locked the door, told Angus to keep every one out, walked into the library, and flung himself down on a couch, crying out in great sobs:

"Oh, father! father! What made you do it? What made you?"

CHAPTER XI

JUSTICE in this country has a proverbial habit of going on lame feet. But there are exceptions. Sometimes there is a swiftness about its actions which is almost as appalling as its delays.

The counsel for Brander Cushing had been ready and able to use every means of delay that the law permits. But from the moment the jury had brought in their verdict even these shrewd agents of the miscarriage of justice saw there was not the glimmer of a hope for their client. He had openly acknowledged his guilt, and there was no possibility of any other court reversing the decision. They could interpose all the postponement that great wealth and influence can buy, but Brander Cushing, after all the facts were before him, fiercely told his counsel to let the law take its way with him. Rather than linger in a filthy county jail he was ready to be sent up to the State prison, which at least was kept on strict sanitary principles.

So, one day, only a brief time after the trial, Brander Cushing, shipyard contractor, man of business and wealth, distinguished for great qualities as an inventor and builder of warships, walked into a little room seven by eight, and realized after some fashion that that little cell was to be his home for five years; also that he was now a convict, fed and clothed and housed at the expense of the State, and that his career as a man and a human being among men was over.

But—was it?

He would not permit Sidney to go with him to the State prison. He said good-by to him the day before the sheriff took him out of the jail. They were allowed to be together alone.

"I've written out some things for you, Sid." Brander Cushing gave Sidney some papers. "I look to you to go on and finish the Columbia. Our contract can be extended over the five years if necessary. There is no reason why the men in the yard should suffer from a shut-down, and I have been allowed to make arrangements with Macdonald and Stuart to run things as usual. Sid, if you want to do anything for me, see that the new ship equals my ambition. It will bring honor to the name of Cushing."

"Oh, father! How can I go on? My heart is broken! I cannot live through it!"

"Yes, you can. I'm living through it." Brander Cushing spoke almost roughly to hide the emotion he did not want Sidney to see.

They parted after kissing each other. And Sidney, bewildered, numbed all through by the stroke, went back to the empty house, feeling as if the world had come to an end and asking God to curse him that he might die.

But it is a remarkable and hopeful fact that people do not die even when they think their hearts are broken. They continue to live, and, strange as it may seem, they have many happy days, and time puts its soothing hand over deep red wounds of grief and heals them.

So Sidney Cushing came out of that seemingly bottomless horror of hopelessness and grew to see the day when he could smile and work again as if the world contained all the things worth having.

A number of important factors made this possible. Among these there was, first of all, the work at the yard. After the first numbness of the horror had passed he found that he was surrounded by an atmosphere of respect and sympathy that helped him wonderfully. The officers in charge, Macdonald and Stuart, paid him the respect and almost reverence such men know so well how to give. The men in the yard seemed to feel the responsibility thrown on them to do their best. After all, they said among themselves, justice had been done. The guilty man was being punished. This fine young fellow who had risked his life to save the girls was not to blame for his father's faults. He was nerve, he was, to go on with the ship while his dad was working out his time. And so every one of the four thousand blackened, rough, but for the most part skilled workmen in Cushing's shipyard went to work every morning with a united feeling to satisfy Sidney with a good job. The Columbia would beat every dreadnought afloat. The young fellow would be proud of it.

All this kept Sidney so busy physically that he was astonished to find himself after a while sleeping soundly, and every morning when he woke he would kneel and say his morning prayer asking for mercy on that figure over in the penitentiary. Then down to the yard to work (for his sake) with desperate energy, in order to forget as well as remember.

There were other things that gave interest to life at this strange time in Sidney Cushing's career.

There was a letter—yes, two letters—that had come from Washington.

The first had come a day or two after the news of his father's indictment.

Pax Marston wrote:

"MY DEAR MR. CUSHING: This is to assure you of my deep sympathy with you in the great trouble that has come upon you and your father. I feel sure all will come out well, for your father will be able to prove that he was not guilty. I was troubled when you went away so soon that day after our talk together on the cruiser, and I felt sure from your manner that some bad news must have come to you. I wish I could do something to prove my friendship for you. Father and mother and Cousin Ed also wish to be remembered, and send you their best wishes.

"Very heartily your friend,
"PAX MARSTON."

The second letter had come the day after his father was sentenced. She wrote:

"MY DEAR FRIEND: I may call you so, may I not? The news that has just reached us is terrible. It seems as if some great mistake had been made. We cannot believe that this has come to you. You will believe, won't you, that my deepest sympathy is with you. What a fearful thing to happen! What will you do? You will be brave, won't you? And—do not forget, I am thinking of you with a great prayer in my heart that you may have strength given you to bear this great trouble.

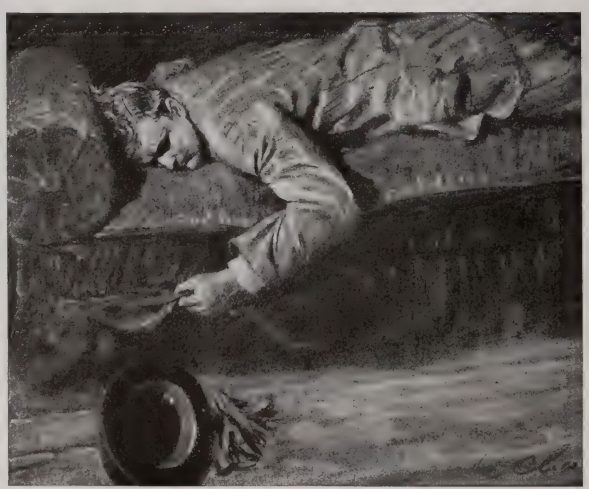
"Always your friend,
"PAX MARSTON."

To these letters, which revealed, in words and phrases, the feeling that Pax Marston had allowed on such brief acquaintance to spring up in her heart, Sidney had replied, repressing his own feeling to a large extent. He had deep in him a sense of horror of his position, a feeling of hopelessness, now that he was the son of a convict. The brand of it seemed almost to be stamped on his face where all men could see. But he sobbed as he kissed the letters and put them away with the bow of ribbons—those bright bits of color that seemed every time he looked at them to reflect the vivacity and loveliness of Pax Marston's face.

Other events were added to these. Hermosa and Athanasia! How strangely those girls seemed to become a part of his life history—more strangely after his father's sentence than before.

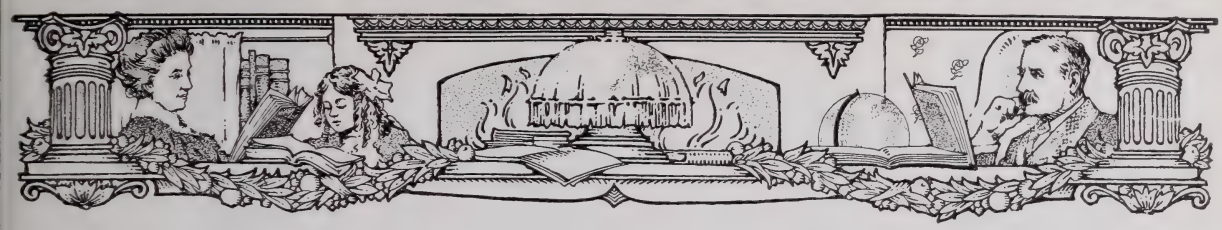
The day of the trial, after Hermosa had succeeded in getting Athanasia out of the court room, she took her to her own room across the hall from her

Continued on page 38



"'Oh, father! father! What made you do it? What made you?'"

CHATS BY THE WINTER FIRE



Day In and Day Out

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A BRILLIANT professor in an Eastern college was asked by a man who was taking notes for a directory how he earned his living. "I earn it by day labor," replied the professor. His friends were diverted a little later when they saw attached to his name in the city directory the words, "Day laborer." Yet the professor told nothing but the precise truth. He merely did not specify the kind of labor that he did.

The old Latins had a maxim to the effect that to labor is to pray. Surely in the whole world there is nothing so much to be honored as faithful and conscientious labor; the skilled hand bent to the task, the brain directing the muscles, the thoughts of the soul translated and interpreted by actual deeds. President Wayland, in his time one of our greatest American educators, said pithily, "Nothing can stand before day's work." By which he meant to say that it is not the clever spurt, but the persevering effort carried on day in and day out, that tells for success in the end. Each of us should be a day laborer. For the matter of that, few of us escape the necessity of patient toil.

The doing of one thing over and over makes the specialist in any line. Every housekeeper is aware that when she goes into the kitchen herself, and with her own hands makes delicious bread, cakes and pies, she can tell to a nicety what her results will be. She cannot be sure that her ingredients will not be ruined, her dinner spoiled and her family peace interrupted by the ill-temper consequent upon indigestion, when she delegates her cooking to a housemaid. The woman who does her own work sometimes craves our sympathy, realizing as she does that "man works from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done"; still, it is she who is independent, whose home is well ordered, whose table is daintily spread, and who never needs to sit down and bewail waste.

One of our readers, the other day, finding that breakfast was late while the men of the family were watching the clock afraid lest they should lose a train, and the daughter of the house was really anxious to set off in time for school, stepped into her kitchen. She found breakfast only half prepared, the coffee not made, the cereal not started and the biscuits not browned, while the light-hearted maid of the hour was merrily practising a dance, right foot and left foot, humming a little tune to keep time, before the kitchen mirror. Here was a chance to exercise self-control. The day laborers who belong to the order of this maid exact wages for their inefficiency quite as high as do those who know their work and perform it well.

Wherever we labor, in whatever field, let us say to ourselves, "Blessed be drudgery!" From the lowest to the highest round of the ladder, whether it be for the painting of a great picture, the directing of a great enterprise or a task of humble nature, the worker who is worthy of his hire does not disdain painstaking labor, giving the best that is in him without stint.

* * *

Women in Council

SOME weeks ago a problem was suggested by the indecision of a wife who had an opportunity to become a bread-winner, but who doubted whether it would be well for her to accept it, as she was uncertain what effect might be produced on her home by enforced absence from it during a number of the daylight hours. The friends who have considered the case have sent in their opinions, some of which are here presented.

A Husband's Opinion

"No woman can be the true companion of man if she is to neglect the personal supervision of the home and its appointments for something else. No amount of hired help can build the home, nor atone for the loss of the woman's touch. When a man comes home tired and worried on account of the strain of business it is not the mere fact that the house is in order and meals prepared that cheers and rests him; it is that he is met by a loving, dutiful wife who has given the personal touch to every arrangement of that home, which is her pride.

"I have not taken into consideration the objection that when a woman goes into business she takes a position a man should have, although it is a fact. Nor have I mentioned that a wife's control of household affairs adds largely to their income and thus enables them to live better on the salary of the husband. Both of these truisms should be taken into consideration. It should be mentioned, however, that the business woman is kept from doing her whole duty to God, to her husband and to society because she is thus prevented the enjoyment of that most sacred, God-given privilege —motherhood.

"The real home is presided over by a womanly wife whose only interest in business is confined to a sympathetic concern for whatever engages her husband's attention. A real mother cannot divide her attention between her children and an artificial life filled with the rush and strain of the marts of trade. A. P. W."

How They Might Manage

"I understand that the Beans have no children. If no children come for some years she can go downtown with her husband and return with him at night, and they can thus associate together much more than they otherwise would. If they have not already furnished a home, my suggestion would be to rent a few rooms, where they can sleep and the wife can prepare their breakfast. They may take their other meals downtown, sitting at the same table if possible. By saving their earnings for a few years, they will soon be able to own a home.

"X. Y. Z."

A Common American Mistake

"Mr. and Mrs. Bean have made an unfortunate beginning, being situated in a suburb where their neighbors are more well-to-do than they themselves. Americans as a class live beyond their means, not necessarily going into debt, but stinting and economizing in hidden ways in order to add to appearances. But however good and devoted a husband may be, it is a mistake for a wife to become self-supporting or even a small wage-earner. It forms the little "rift within the lute," and the harmony of married life is marred. Besides, later on, if she becomes dependent on him again through force of circumstances, it will irk them both. She will find the strain of office work greater than it would be upon her if she were single; her social duties are more and she has more home duties. If her position were at all severe in taxing her responsibility, she will find in five or ten years that she has defrauded herself of much of her good health. She would find, too, that they would have but little home life. C. M. K."

Money vs. Home

"If Mrs. Bean thinks the chief object of life is the making of money, by all means let her take up with her friend's proposition. On the other hand, if she really loves her husband she will make it the object of her life to learn, if she does not already know, how to keep a home comfortable that a tired, hungry man may enjoy those hours of his life that are not engaged in business. The hired help that will take an interest in the home in the absence of the mistress is rare. Married people should anticipate eagerly the coming of offspring. A wife who is engaged in outside business can hardly expect the happiness of motherhood. M. E. R."

Another View

"Mrs. Bean would do well to accept the position offered her. The time is near at hand when marriage will not interfere with a woman's ambition so much as formerly. However, a woman who would be a bread-winner, or who would give her time to the world at large, must forego the joy and blessings of motherhood. But a childless home is better than an unmated one. C. S. P."

* * *

What the editor thinks on this subject will be given in another issue.

An "Old Ladies' Home" in France

THESE dear old ladies have found a quiet haven in which to pass life's eventide. Some of them have survived their nearest and dearest and are bravely facing the loneliness of age. Others, after years of honorable toil, have been obliged by a struggle with poverty to find an asylum in a Home with a capital H. Whether they enjoy its comforts and privileges depends very much on their dispositions and temperaments. The lovely women in the picture are apparently at peace with the world and are quite content in a pleasant and harmonious home.

APPRECIATES THE ALMANAC

I was much delighted when I received your lovely Almanac to-day. Please accept my sincere thanks for same. With best wishes for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I am,

Mauch Chunk, Pa. MRS. T. C.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

father's. The two girls were alone there. Since the factory fire, both girls had secured places in a department store in Dockville. Athanasia had refused to go anywhere without Hermosa, so Hermosa had found a place for her as bundle-wrapper in the toy department. Athanasia was wonderfully quick and deft with her fingers.

She quieted quickly when once in the room. Her mother, who worked in one of the hotels as helper in the laundry, had not yet come in.

After a while, Hermosa said:

"Athanasia, why did you perjure yourself? You knew the door was locked. It was of no use for you to lie, after all the other girls had said."

"You know why."

"How do I know?"

"I did it to save him."

"To save—Mr. Cushing?"

"Yes."

"Which one?"

"Mr. Sidney. I love him."

"Athanasia!"

"I do. So do you."

"Athanasia!" Hermosa ran over to her and almost roughly put her hand over Athanasia's mouth.

As soon as she had taken it away, Athanasia said,

"You know you do, Hermosa. We both love him."

"No."

"Yes, we do. Wouldn't you go to jail for him?"

"That would be easy."

"Wouldn't you die for him?"

"Oh! That would be easier!"

"Easier?"

"Yes, yes! Oh, Athanasia! poor simple heart! what do you know about love?"

"I don't know much. Do you think any one ever could love me, Hermosa?"

Silence, except for Hermosa's soft crying, as she sat near Athanasia and caressed her black hair.

"Do you think it is wrong for me to love him, Hermosa?"

"I don't know."

"Is it wrong for you to love him?"

"Yes, yes! O God, forgive! He is not for either of us. Athanasia, tell your heart to be quiet."

"It is quiet, Hermosa, whenever I think of him. He is so brave and so good. My heart is quiet when I think of him. Is yours, Hermosa?"

"Oh, be still, Athanasia! What do you know about hearts? Think of what has happened to him to-day. Do you think his heart can find room for any one but his father now?"

"But he will need more friends now than ever, won't he, Hermosa? Won't he need us to love him more than ever now?"

"Hush, child. It is wrong for you—for me—to think of him so."

"But I don't see why," Athanasia persisted. "If he has lost his father, how can he live unless some one loves him?"

"Pax Marston can love him."

"Pax Marston? Who is she?"

"Never mind, Athanasia. You must not love Mr. Cushing any more."

"I cannot help it. I shall love him till I die. It will not do him any harm. How can it? Does it harm people to love?"

"It kills some."

"But it will not kill me. I shall pray every night for him and his father. Will you, Hermosa?"

"Yes, yes! That will do no harm."

"I think God will forgive me for lying about the door, don't you?"

"Yes."

"God is good, isn't he?"

"Yes, yes. God is good, Athanasia, and I am a wicked, wicked girl. Pray for me, Athanasia, when you pray for—for them."

"I pray for you every night, Hermosa. You know I do."

"Thank God!" said Hermosa gently. Then as Mrs. Ward came into the room, Hermosa slipped out and went in to her father.

Continued from page 36

Sidney Cushing was only dimly conscious at times of all this as he went about his work. But he seldom saw either of these girls of the common people. Once he called and found Mr. Howard alone. Once he met Hermosa and Athanasia on the street and stopped and spoke a moment to them. But the experience he was having was so deep, his work was so exacting, his memory of Pax Marston was at times so engrossing, that he thought of the girls he had rescued from the fire (whenever he did think of them) as part of an experience which he would like to forget instead of remember.

As days went on, he grew more restless in many ways. Religiously he had been a ritualist. Somehow there crept into his soul a great longing for deep religious experience. He found himself Sundays spending the time at first aimlessly. He would take long walks in the woods. One week Gordon Ford came and stayed with him. It was not satisfactory. The two had no deep things in common. Besides, he fancied Ford felt embarrassed by Brander Cushing's conviction.

Then he took to going about to the different church services in Dockville. There were fifteen different church organizations in the town. He would slip into a back seat, generally stay through a service, and go out before any one could speak to him. Many times his heart was moved and his hope quickened by a sentence in prayer, by the aspiration of a hymn, or by some great thought in a sermon.

One Sunday he found himself in a little church building down near the river. He had declined a seat down the aisle offered by a pleasant young man, and had sat down in a rear pew. A little gallery ran around half way up the side of the building, as if the building committee had run out of funds at that point. As he looked around before the service began he saw, at the extreme end of this little unfinished gallery, Hermosa and Athanasia. Athanasia's mother was with them.

About the middle of the sermon, Hermosa's glance wandered over the church. Finally her eye saw Sidney. The sermon was different from any Sidney had yet heard. It was helping him. He was listening with an intentness that Hermosa could not help noting. Her own look went back to the preacher, and in the closing prayer that followed the sermon, her heart sought for the peace of God. But when she stood up during the last hymn, she knew that Sidney had seen her and Athanasia, and as she came down the little stairs she met him in the vestibule, where he had evidently waited to speak to her.

Chapter XII

HE SPOKE very simply to them.

"I'm glad to see you. I did not know this was your church."

"Yes. Mrs. Ward and Athanasia and I have been members here for a long time. Won't you meet our minister? Mr. Freeman, this is Mr. Cushing."

Mr. Freeman greeted Sidney heartily, spoke a word to Hermosa, Mrs. Ward and Athanasia, and then turned to some others of his people. If he knew who Sidney was he had not betrayed the fact by anything in his words or his manner. There could have been nothing more simple and unaffected than his greeting.

Sidney went out with the three and walked along by Mrs. Ward. Athanasia's mother had met Sidney only twice. She was a plain looking woman but her face bore marks of a peace that made it attractive. After a few words in which she repeated what she had said to Sidney the first time she met him by way of gratitude for the rescue of her daughter, Mrs. Ward said quietly,

"Would you feel able to come and take a meal with us some time?"

Sidney was astonished, but his natural good breeding concealed his astonishment from Mrs. Ward.

"Certainly, Mrs. Ward. I should be glad to come."

"Sometimes, Sunday evenings, Hermosa and her father come over to our rooms and we have a plain meal together. Could you come to-night? Mr. Howard wants to see you. You have no idea how eager he is for company at times."

Hermosa and Athanasia were walking in front. Hermosa turned a little and said,

"Yes, father has often said he would enjoy a good visit with you. But he has never dared ask for any of your time. We all know how busy you must be."

"I shall be glad to come, Mrs. Ward, and" (speaking to Hermosa) "I shall be glad to talk with your father and hope to get better acquainted with all of you."

"At seven o'clock," said Mrs. Ward. And Sidney parted from them at the next corner, taking off his hat with the same manner he would have shown to ladies of title, and going his way to the big empty house somewhat astonished at the invitation, but really excited to a degree in anticipation of what the evening might have in store for him.

Let it be said for the benefit of the incredulous, for those who never get out of the drawing room of life into its kitchen and back yard, that Sidney Cushing was absolutely devoid of class feeling in any form. When he walked into the shipyard and viewed its driving energy, he could truly say that every one of the blackened, grimy, sweating, hoarse-voiced men at work there, stood for a real human being to him. Also it had been his happy education, from the time he was born, to honor labor. Brander Cushing had ground that into him from the start. Any human being who was handling tools, making something that was needed, adding to the world's necessities, was a human being to be reverenced and honored.

"I don't care if he is the son of the Great Mogul!" he once shouted to a well known business man in Dockville, who was trying to find an excuse for the son of a rich man who was an idler; "I don't care how much money his father has. If that boy can't do anything but black shoes, he ought to be doing it. Let him use his hands if he hasn't brains enough to get a job with his head."

So it did not occur to Sidney that he was condescending in any way to take tea with a woman who worked in a hotel laundry, and two girls who worked in a department store, and a blind paralytic who made horsehair ornaments for a living. Were they not simply toilers in the world, like himself? And as he sat in the library of the big silent house that afternoon, for the first time the question occurred to him with almost absurd suddenness: "Are warships, after all, more necessary to the world than the toil that keeps these tenement dwellers so busy all day?"

It must also be said by way of introduction to Sidney's acceptance of this invitation that he experienced a feeling of satisfaction, permeated with real pleasure, when he thought of these plain toilers of the people, and their simple gratitude to him for his service to them during the horror through which they had passed. Among Brander Cushing's acquaintances, there were some who after the name of convict had been put on him were unable to resume the same relations to Sidney.

Sidney felt the deepening shame and horror of his situation as time went on. A few of his choicest friends were

Continued on page 41

The simplest Gown looks well on a Figure of Correct Proportion if Carried Well.

You Can Weigh Exactly what You Should Weigh

My pupils are among the most refined, intelligent women of America. They have regained health and good figures and learned how to keep well. Each has given me a few minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to following scientific, hygienic principles of health, prescribed to suit each individual's needs.

No Drugs—No Medicines

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense.

Be well—nothing short of well.

Radiate Health—so that every one with whom you come in contact is permeated with your strong spirit, your wholesome personality—feels better in body and mind for your very presence.

Be Attractive—well groomed.

Improve Your Figure—in other words be at your best. You wield a stronger influence for good, for education, for wholesome right living, if you are attractive and well, graceful and well poised—upright in body as well as in mind—and you are happier.

I want to help every woman to realize that her health lies, to a degree, in her own hands, and that she can reach her ideal in figure and poise.

Judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I have corrected more

Chronic Ailments and built up and reduced more women during the past nine years than any physician—the best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils.

I have

Reduced about 25,000 women from 10 to 85 lbs. I have rounded out and Increased the Weight of as many more—all this by strengthening nerves, heart, circulation, lungs and vital organs so as to regulate the assimilation of food.

Won't you join us—we will make you and the world better.

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement of health and figure through natural means.

Sit down and write to me NOW.
Don't wait—you may forget it.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT
Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Miss Cocroft's name stands for progress in the scientific care of the health and figure of woman

HAPPY COZY CORNER DAYS

It is good to be merry and wise; it is good to be honest and true.—Burns

When you have found a man, you have not far to go to find a gentleman. You cannot make a gold ring out of brass; you cannot change an Alaska crystal to a South African diamond; you cannot make a gentleman till you have first a man.—George Washington Doane, 1799-1855.

Some Ways to Make Spending-Money

EVERY mail brings requests from boys and girls asking for suggestions and advice about making spending-money. These are a few of the ways I have known to be successful and at some other time I will tell you much more about earning spending-money:

Robert Tarlau, Who Edits a Boys' Magazine

With a pyrography outfit a boy in Augusta, Me., has worked up an excellent trade in leather post cards. He buys the leather in sheets, he cuts out post cards himself and burns original designs and interesting quotations and sentences on them. Original ones are much in demand, and sell for fifteen or twenty cents each. This boy advertised his cards by sending samples of his work to his friends. Orders very soon began to come in, and now he has all he can fill.

Two girls in Raleigh rented a corner in the best grocery store and sold candied orange peel, preserved ginger, home-made jellies and home-made cake and candy. They had a hard time the first six weeks, but gradually their home-made dainties became known, and within the year they had rented the half of a small shop on a main street and are steadily increasing their business.

A lame boy in the Children's Home in my own village in Kentucky whittles better than most people. He has to spend much of his time in bed, but he is never idle. With a sharp penknife and soft pine blocks he whittles wooden toys that have a ready sale among the visitors to the home. Boats, wagons, tops, dolls' furniture, balls, tubes and cylinders, delightful toys that bob and float, turn out like magic, until little John Chambers and his neat little bank account are quite the talk of the Children's Home.

Cozy Corner Little Folk

Dolls' Dressmaking and Millinery

FOR more than three years two ingenious girls in California have earned twenty dollars a month apiece with doll dressmaking and millinery. During the last six months they have turned their establishment into a Dolls' Hospital. Little girls carry their dolls to the older girls to be mended and dressed, many of them bringing materials for underclothes and dresses. The girls keep a supply of patterns and drawings and on Saturday afternoons they have a little sewing class.

Little Celestia Mow
Of Ashland, Ore.

Three of my nephews own a magic lantern; the lenses are best quality and every picture can be clearly thrown by means of the reflectors on to a sheet. Invariably when there is a church fair, a school entertainment, or a charity party of any kind, these boys set up their magic lantern and present a Post Card Travelogue, a Trip to the Holy Land, or Illustrated Songs, which the boys have illustrated themselves with snap shots, and usually each picture is accompanied by the song it illustrates — sometimes by phonograph, sometimes with the piano. The boys always have a successful entertainment and make money.

Cozy Corner Girls range from very little people to eighteen years

Mary C. in Philadelphia is eighteen years old. Twice a week she steams suet pudding in deep cups, wraps them in oil paper when they are done, and sells them for ten cents each. Her recipe is: One cupful of chopped suet, one cup of raisins and currants mixed, one cupful of molasses and a cup of milk. To this mixture add, when sifted together, half teaspoon of salt, one teaspoon of soda, one-fourth teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, and one-half cupful of flour. Steam in cups two hours. With thirty-two regular customers a week Mary C. manages to make a neat little sum of pin-money.

Geography Puzzle

DURING the holidays I visited my uncle's farm in Arkansas. On our way from the depot the wheels of the carriage ran over a (city in Arkansas). I fell out and bumped my head until it was (a sea in the southwest of Asia) as black could be. In the chicken-run I stepped on a (city in Italy) hen and fell down and sprained my knee. By this time my (cape in Washington) knew no bounds and I (a port in Africa) I must return home. But Aunt (a city in Bulgaria), who is always kind and thoughtful, bade me cheer up. By the end of the week, when I had got only (islands in the Pacific) in my visit, they made a large (cape in Africa) fire to celebrate my departure and, all on a (lake north of Minnesota) day I bid (a cape in Greenland) to my Aunt (the city in Bulgaria) and Uncle (whose name is the same as the well known lake in Africa named for the Prince who was consort of Queen Victoria), and returned home.

For the best answer to this puzzle a first prize of a guaranteed gunmetal watch, a second prize of a pair of indestructible stamped steel ice skates, a third prize, a fountain pen, and twenty-five supplementary prizes, will be awarded strictly in order of merit. Work to be in by February 1.

More Prize-Winners and Honor Roll

Dwight Gray, 9; Harold D. Winney, 11; Rachel Poist, 16; John Richards, 12; Frances M. Hollingshead, 11; Opal Blinn, 13; Arthur Burnett, 14; J. Wellington Willard, 16; H. F. Pease, 11; Frank Clemensen, 10; Gladys M. Elliott, 11; Catherine J. Jones, 11; Alice Gorvin, 14; Harold Walp, 11; Earl S. Hartman, 13; Ernsdena Grein, 15; Helena F. Kastein, 13.

Supplementary Prize-Winners

Eugene Evans, 17; Frances Zehr, 15; Margaret Griffith, 12; Florence Moyer, 13; Mary Mitchell, 16; Gladys Hewett, 12; Eleanor Harman, 14; Gertrude Bartz, 14; Rubina Pankraz, 11; Anna B. Nikkel, 14; Louise Nikkel, 14; Helena F. Kastein, 13; Olive Kern, 12; Jessie M. Rose, 12; Florence Jeutschke, 17; Velma Hazelwood, 13; Marion P. Williams, 12; Lois G. Grisby, 13; Marguerite Lotte, 12; Ellen L. Johnson, 16; Theodore Sherwood, 12; Flossie Unwin, 16; Winfred W. Campbell, 11; J. Frank Morton, 10; Ruth E. Anderson, 14.

Honor Roll

Dwight Gray, 8; Katherine Jones, 12; Ruth E. Anderson, 14; Ethel Hollenbeck, 13; Ellen L. Johnson, 14; Arthur Burnett, 14; Hester L. Leaverton, 11; Ruth Irene Hutchins, 14; Frances M. Hollingshead, 11; Belva Tucker, 12; Marie Stewart, 14; Alice Newman, 11; Bernice E. Kopp, 11; Raymond E. Osborne, 13; Mary Sheehan, 11; Harry H. Scheibler, 14; Ada L. Pirae, 12; Lulu W. Titus, 14; Mabel Lemke, 14; Dora Nielsen, 15; Howard T. Stahl, 13; Paul C. Parks, 9; Marion A. Van Buren, 11; Louis Kimrey, 13; Alberta Schneider, 14; Robert Howe, 11; Kenneth Kober, 9; Rachel Metzler, 13; Howard Whisler, 14; Ethan D. Alyea, 15.

Every one is welcome in the Cozy Corner. Eighteen is the age limit of the prize offers, but there is no limit at all to our hospitality and good fellowship. Big boys and little boys, big girls and little girls, as you come crowding into the Cozy Corner, welcome! we are proud of you all.

Our Good-Night-Verse

My little children, let us love one another; for love is of God.
He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love.

Ever lovingly and faithfully,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

LITTLE PEOPLE'S CORNER

Putting the World to Bed

The little snow people are hurrying down
From their home in the clouds overhead;
They are working as hard as ever they can,
Putting the world to bed.

Every tree in a soft fleecy nightgown they clothe;
Each part has its nightcap of white.
And o'er the cold ground a thick cover they spread
Before they say good-night.

And so they come eagerly sliding down,
With a swift little silent tread,
Always as busy as busy can be,
Putting the world to bed.

ESTHER W. BUXTON.

Household Hints

A tablespoonful of melted paraffin added to a bowlful of hot starch will give a smooth, satiny finish to clothes after ironing.

Black cloth can be renovated by sponging it with ammonia water, in the proportion of one ounce bicarbonate of ammonia to a quart of water. Rinse well before drying.

To restore the new appearance to ribbons, press with a hot iron between two sheets of manila paper. Or, they may be dampened with a sponge, then rolled tightly around a medium sized round bottle. The bottle should have a smooth surface.

Left-over mashed potato may be saved from waste if prepared in one of the following palatable ways: To three parts mashed potato, add one part finely crumbed bread or crackers. Fry in butter or meat drippings. Or, to a cupful of mashed potato, add a well-beaten egg, mix thoroughly and fry as above.

Nasturtiums are a pretty addition to the winter window box. Watch the nasturtiums in your garden and when in the early autumn they are at their best, break off the branches with the most buds and blossoms and put them in jars of water. In a few weeks roots will form, and very soon after this there will be flowers which will bloom all winter.

"My, but these Beans are Good!"

Hungry boys and girls are always glad to have

SNIDER PROCESS
PORK & BEANS

Right eating is of first importance in the making of intelligent, fully developed boys and girls—keen of mind, strong of body.

Judged by the chemical analysis alone, we should give beans the very highest place among foods. Beans, remember, are 84% nutriment. They contain protein, the strength-making food element that builds bone and muscle, in greater quantity than the best cuts of meat, also a large percentage of fat, besides a considerable amount of starch.

"Pound for pound, they would thus be more valuable than meat or our best cereals." Thus states "Uncle Sam," of beans, in one of his special bulletins on "The Nutritive Value of Foods."

Growing children should eat Snider's—the right kind of Pork & Beans—at least two or three times a week. They may even take the place of meat at dinner, and they are the universal favorite for the after-school luncheon.

Snider's Tomato Catsup whets the appetite and aids digestion. Use it upon meats, hot or cold, on fish, oysters, and in gravies.

Snider's Chili Sauce is delicious on all meats and fish.

Ask your Grocer to send SNIDER'S — the food of superior quality.

"It's the Process"

THE T. A. SNIDER PRESERVE CO.
CINCINNATI, U. S. A.

All Snider Products comply with all Pure Food Laws of the World.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

Anxious, Chillicothe, O. A friend asserts that all that is necessary for salvation is faith in Christ, and that baptism, good works, etc., are simply accessories. Is this correct, according to the Gospel teaching?

It is a strained statement and capable of misleading. A good tree is known by its fruit, and if a man, claiming to have faith in Christ, failed to render him obedience or to follow him, we should seriously doubt the genuineness of his conversion. "The devils believe and tremble," but they never think of serving. The true believer is one whose faith is not satisfied with inaction, but who must be up and doing to demonstrate his love and gratitude to his Master by serving him. Depend upon it, any faith that is unproductive, when it might be otherwise, is spurious. Real faith is known by its works.

Mrs. R. O. P., Custer, Ky. Why were the Levites so necessary to Ezra's company back to Jerusalem? Why did they not volunteer as did the rest?

It was Ezra's aim to restore the character of the people of Israel as the "chosen race" and to re-establish the old customs as to the holding of property, the administration of government and ecclesiastical forms. He was both a priest and a scribe and he was commissioned not only to maintain the prescribed worship but to restore the entire theocratic administration. He is regarded as, next to Moses, the greatest lawgiver of the race. It was natural that such a man, with such a great commission in hand, should have given prominence to whatever related to the work of the priests and Levites. Yet he had difficulty in persuading even a small number to return at the outset. To them he committed the care of the treasures he carried and which were to be delivered safely in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, and upon them he depended largely for the success of his mission. The Levites were specially set apart for the offices of the sanctuary. They were comfortably situated in Babylon and evidently did not believe much in Ezra's enterprise. Those who went with him, however, resumed their functions as teachers and interpreters. They ultimately took their own places, and were present in full array later, at the great dedication of the wall.

Mrs. M. D., Pittsboro, Ind. 1. Why was the tribe of Manasseh divided and given land on both sides of the Jordan? 2. Why did not his father inherit his own portion, the same as his brothers?

1. There seems to be no reason for the division of the tribe of Manasseh except that half of the people belonging to it preferred to settle on the east rather than west side of Jordan. The tribes of Reuben and Gad requested Moses to be allowed to settle east of Jordan (Num. 32) and half the people of Manasseh apparently joined in this request (Num. 32: 33). 2. Of course all the twelve sons of Jacob had died long before the division of the land of Canaan among the tribes. The tribe of Joseph had been divided into two parts before this—the descendants of Ephraim and the descendants of Manasseh. This division was probably due to the peculiar form in which Jacob blessed the two boys, giving the better blessing to the younger son, Ephraim (Gen. 48).

Mr. S. Robitschek, Lowell, Mass., writes: "It is a matter of regret in this country of vast enterprises—in New York, the city of many millionaires, where so many have millions that are not needed—that the 'Bread Line' 'still keeps marching on.' I would almost say a war would be preferable, or at least more honorable. Could you not inaugurate some enterprise like the following? Get one thousand rich New Yorkers to give $1,000 each, the million to be used to buy 100,000 acres of land in Texas, then to raise cotton, rice, fruit, cattle, fowls, etc. Let the capital bear six per cent. interest, and let them take down every unemployed person, paying $1.25 a day, more to skilled labor; with the privilege of the laborers taking up a small farm for themselves when they have saved a little money; building houses, roads, railroads, cotton mills, etc. Such a plan would give every unemployed person in New York a chance to work. Almost everybody could take a five or ten-dollar share. Incorporating work like that would be preferable to incorporating missions and bread lines."

Our correspondent's desire to help the poor and unfortunate does him credit. If there were only enough men of his mind, the thing could be accomplished. Certainly, the best of all remedies for such poverty and congestion as are found in New York, especially every winter, is to get the able-bodied men and lads back to the land, or to some place where there is not an oversupply of labor. Meanwhile, the Bowery Mission "Bread Line," Free Labor Bureau and Industrial Settlement all three combine to do their share in lessening the misery among the unemployed in the great city. Those who assist these three agencies, actually in operation, are doing the work that lies nearest at hand and which perceptibly helps to relieve the immediate need.

G. D. M., Meriwether, Ga. 1. Please explain I. Kings 20: 6. What more had Ben-hadad demanded of Ahab? 2. What city is called "City of Brotherly Love" and why?

On this subject, Gray in his Biblical Encyclopedia says: "Disappointed by Ahab's consent to an indignity which he had believed no monarch could submit to, and prevented by honor and custom from going back from his word, Ben-hadad proceeds to put a construction on his former demands, which at the first they were certainly not intended to bear." Ahab's tame and submissive answer seems to have stirred Ben-hadad to insolence and his arrogant (see verse 10) and boastful threat was properly punished by the decisive defeat of his army. 2. Philadelphia is called the "City of Brotherly Love" because this is the exact meaning of the word; it is a Greek word written in English letters.

G. W., Honeoye, N. Y. Please explain I. Kings 22: 22.

This verse is part of a vision which the prophet Micaiah is describing to the king. Since it was a vision, there is no reason why it should receive a literal interpretation. A lying spirit had certainly taken possession of the other prophets. Micaiah is giving a graphic description of the evil spirit going out to mislead the prophets; the fact that God permitted his going is evident, and is only another illustration of the truth that when the Holy Spirit is withdrawn from us, the powers of evil are ever ready to seek an entrance. King and prophets alike were bent on evil. The king's doom was already sealed because of his great wickedness. Nothing would have saved him but a real and personal repentance, and he was so set in his evil course and spoiled by his crimes that there was no hope of this.

W. R. W., Dallas, W. Va. Do you think it is right to take up, at the Sunday service, the matter of repairing the church, to take subscriptions for such work, to appoint committees to look after it, etc.?

While all such work is done directly for the church, yet as it relates more particularly to the business side of the church, it may very well be transacted on a week day. There are many pastors who draw the line sharply at anything that will give a business aspect to the services on the Lord's Day. A simple announcement from the pulpit is, of course, unobjectionable; but any discussion of business affairs can be done with equal satisfaction and more propriety at a week day meeting.

J. A. B., Paterson, N. J. I have read with interest your exposition of the "unpardonable sin." Can this sin be committed nowadays?

According to the best authorities, the unpardonable sin was attributing the miracles of Jesus to diabolic agencies. Professor David Smith, one of the ablest of modern expositors, says: "The Pharisees whom Christ was rebuking spoke against conscience. They deliberately called evil good and light darkness. This is blasphemy against the Holy Spirit—silencing the voice which testifies in the soul, trampling upon the instincts of one's spiritual nature. It is a spiritual law that, if we stifle and neglect conscience, it grows dim and finally dies." This condition can be duplicated even to-day, where a man, fast in the bondage of sin, scorns repentance and is so satisfied with his bondage that he remains in it perpetually; consequently, as his condition makes repentance impossible, his sin remains unpardoned. Professor Smith takes the same view which THE MAIL-BAG has repeatedly stated, viz.: that if a person is troubled by the fear that he has committed the unpardonable sin, this very fear is evidence that the person is not beyond the reach of grace, but that it is still working in him and making his soul sensitive to the Spirit's pleadings.

G. B. L., California. Will the Jews return to Palestine before the beginning of the millennium?

The final ingathering of the Jews, no less than of the Gentiles, under the standard of the Gospel, is certainly taught not only in the Old Testament, but also in the New (see Rom. 11: 26, 27). Commentators interpret this passage in two ways: some as the national recovery of Israel, and others as the spiritual recovery only, the former, however, predominating. Tholuck, Meyer, Alford, Hodge and others hold this former view and it is unquestionably very widely held to-day. See Ps. 14: 7; Isa. 59: 20; Ps. 20: 2; 110: 2; Isa. 31: 9, and Jer. 31: 33, 34. Those who hold this view believe that the Jews will yet return in a converted state to their old ancestral realm. Some commentators claim that the language is not to be interpreted as foreshadowing their literal return to Palestine, but that it refers to their expectations of the Messiah.

Miscellaneous

G. R. G., Vancouver, B. C. The English of ne temeri is "fear not."

If L. D. S., Orange, N. J., will send her full address, her question will be answered by letter.

Reader, Dresden, Ont., Can. There can be no such thing as Christianity without Christ. The phrase is employed to describe certain so-called religious cults which, while recognizing the humanity of Jesus and avowing admiration of his teachings, disclaim his divinity and contend that man, unaided and through the power of human will, can work out his own salvation.

W. B. McB., Leitchfield, Ky. "Habergeon" (see Neh. 4: 16) is simply an old English word meaning "breastplate," a part of the mail armor worn by soldiers in ancient times. It might with probably greater accuracy have been translated "coat of mail." It was a garment or covering backed with linen strongly and thickly woven, and banded around the neck and breast with a covering or border of mail, the whole being of sufficient strength to withstand the blow of sword or ax or the impact of an arrow.

The Other Side

AS AN Italian and a regular reader of your most interesting paper, I feel moved to enter a word of protest against the tone of your article in issue of November 22, entitled, "The Horrors of War." It has now become public knowledge that the reports circulated during the early days of the war were gross exaggerations. Considering the fact that the Italian troops were attacked in the rear by the Arabs in a most treacherous manner, their conduct under these most exasperating circumstances can only be described as most exemplary.

To give you the other side of the story I append the following translation of an article which appeared to-day by M. Gaston Leroux, one of the special correspondents of the Matin at Tripoli, and who, being a Frenchman, cannot be accused of being influenced by national impulses:

"The bersaglieri who fell on the 23d of October died not only like heroes, but like martyrs. I cannot find words equal to expressing the horror I felt when to-day, in an abandoned cemetery, we discovered these unfortunate remains. In the village of Henni, and in the Arab cemetery, there had been a veritable slaughter. Of the eighty unfortunates of whom we found the remains there, it is certain that at least half had fallen alive into the hands of the Arabs, and that all had been carried to this place surrounded by walls, where the Arabs were sheltered from the Italian bullets. Then happened the most terrible and ignoble butchery that could possibly be imagined. There are those with feet and hands torn off and the bodies afterwards crucified. One bersagliere had the mouth torn open as far as the ears. Another had the nose sawed all over. A third had the eyelids sewn with string from a sack. When one remembers that, only two hours previous to their death, these heroes had divided their rations amicably with the Arabs who would afterwards torture them, it is impossible not to feel an unspeakable sense of stupor and horror. I saw in this cemetery a quantity of naked remains infested with spiders, toads and flies. But fortunately at three hundred metres from us the Italian guns boomed, and the fusilade of the Italians crackled in an affirmation of victory. I shall never be able to forget to-day and the contrast of war and peace, of infinite outrage, and well merited joy."

I leave this before you, feeling it only right that you should have both sides of the question before accusing us Italians of acting barbarously.

Venice, Italy. L. DA VIAU.

An Oregonian's Appreciation

I enjoy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as a whole for its optimistic tone. It never gives one the blues to read it. I have taken the paper for about nineteen years, and have found much in its pages to help and encourage me, as a mother who is trying to lead her children heavenward. I particularly like the Sermonic Page, Mrs. Sangster's, Bible and Newspaper, and the Sunday School Pages. All these are a help to one living away from church and Sunday School and with only what Christian influence one can draw around the home. I am glad that you are going to add Bible study to your 1912 paper—that is something many of us will enjoy.

Thank you for the 1912 Almanac. It is a relief to look at it, and notice the absence of patent medicines. Your paper is certainly a success and a help to many, and when one thinks of the price, it cannot be equaled anywhere. MRS. R. A. KNIPP.

Perdue, Ore.

Rosy-cheeked children—

Are your boys and girls bubbling over with bodily health? They should be. A daily breakfast of Ralston will supply them with energy for the day, and give them a substantial surplus to grow up on.

Ralston Wheat Food

is just the best whole hard wheat, ground into golden brown granules that cook up into the nuttiest, meatiest dish you ever tasted. Children just love it. And they need the solid nourishment that Ralston provides.

Ralston is not factory cooked—it comes in condensed form, to be cooked fresh for every breakfast—therefore more economical than other foods. A cup makes six breakfasts—a box makes fifty bowls, when cooked.

Don't delay! give your boys and girls Ralston Wheat Food—it will make them strong, rugged and healthy. Begin tomorrow; you'll like it, too.

Purina Whole Wheat Flour
makes delicious nourishing bread, muffins, rolls etc. Try it too.

No boy wants imitation underwear.
See that it has the label shown below.

Summer Underwear

Sold Everywhere
BOYS' Two-piece Suits per garment 25c
Boys' Union Suits, 50c
MEN'S Shirts & Drawers Any Style 50c
Men's Union Suits, $1
Chalmers Knitting Co. Amsterdam, N. Y.

"TRADE MARK"
Porosknit
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
This Label on Every Garment.

POST CARDS

10 Valentine - - - - 10c | 10 Washington's Birthday 10c
10 St. Patrick's Day - 10c | 10 Birthday - - - - - 10c
10 General Subjects - - 10c | 10 Greetings - - - - - 10c
Three 10 cent packages mailed for 25c. One package of each of above 100 high grade cards mailed for 50 cents; 100 for 80 cents. We mail a special assortment of any of the above subjects for 60 cents per 100.
MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

JESUS OUR SAVIOUR*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

NAZARETH would have been the place of Jesus' birth if Mary had not gone to Bethlehem to be enrolled according to the decree of Cæsar Augustus that "all the world should be enrolled." The journey of eighty miles between Nazareth and Bethlehem was undertaken in probably less than a week before the birth of Jesus. We must consider the decree of the Roman king a part of God's great plan which helped in the fulfilment of the prophecy that Christ should be born in Bethlehem. (Micah 5: 2.)

So crowded was the little town of Bethlehem with those who had come for the enrolling, that the only lodging-place Joseph could find for Mary was in a cave among the cattle. Such caves abound in the limestone rocks by which Bethlehem is surrounded. They were sometimes used for the housing of cattle; particularly this would be the case when the khan was not sufficient for the number of animals on which had ridden those who had come for the enrolling. It is not difficult to find that cave to-day. It is indeed the center of attraction in Bethlehem, the most honored shrine in all the town. Over it is built a great church, called the Church of the Nativity. The holy of holies in that building is the cave itself. It is now called the Chapel of the Manger. It is sealed with white marble, and in the marble a silver star is embedded, and around the star are sixteen swinging lamps that are constantly kept burning, and in the midst is the inscription, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est" ("Here Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary"). And to us was born a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord!

Almost countless are the pictures that have been painted of the manger cradle at Bethlehem; but one by Correggio is peculiar to itself, because the manger is filled with a heavenly light which radiates from the Holy Child lying in his mother's arms. It illumines the face of the Mother bending over the Child, and thus glorifies motherhood. It strikes the faces of those who have come to look upon the Child, typifying the Light to lighten the world, which came with the birth of the Saviour. The light falls even upon the beasts, which seems like a foregleam of the kindness to animals which should be a part of the rule of Christianity.

To-day in Bethlehem hear I
Sweet angel voices singing,
All glory be to God on high
Who peace on earth is bringing.
The Virgin Mary holdeth more
Than highest heaven most holy;
Light shines on what was dark before,
And lifteth up the lowly.

—Written in the Eighth Century by St. John of Damascus.

The first to catch the gleam of the Light of the World were the shepherds, watching their flocks in the fields near by Bethlehem. They were first, because angels first came to them with the message that the Christ Child was born who should the the Saviour of the world. They were first, because they lost no time in going to find that Saviour. They were the first among men to proclaim him Saviour, as, returning from the manger, all along the way, they glorified and praised God for all the things they had heard and seen as it was told unto them by the angels.

Jesus, the Children's Saviour

Perhaps we have sometimes wondered why Jesus did not descend from heaven in the full strength of manhood, and so have avoided all of the weakness of infancy and childhood. Ah, he knew too well the foolishness of man, who would have said, "Children have no lot in this matter." But since the Infinite became the infant, we must know that he is the children's Saviour, as well as the Saviour of men. They will understand to love him for his love, to love back again, and to ask his forgiveness when they have done wrong. Do not let us misguide them by telling them to be good and they will get to heaven. Let us not hold back the truth of a Saviour until some "psychological" age prescribed by man. Some one, speaking of the doubt of some parents in the possibility of their children understanding the plan of salvation, has said, "If the little son of one of these should come to him in the night, as Samuel came to Eli, he would say, 'Go to sleep, child. It is not at all likely you will understand what the Lord says to you.'" The parents who have caught the true spirit of Christ will rather tell the child, "God has something to say to you that will help you all your life to do as he wants you to do."

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for January 21, 1912. The Birth of John the Baptist Foretold. Luke 1: 5-23. GOLDEN TEXT: "Without faith it is impossible to please him." Heb. 11: 6.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 38

unchanged toward him. But others—he was doubtful about them. He could not trust them. But these people in the double decker? These people, who were related to him in the special tie of a grim and tragic story of life, these were even more closely drawn to him on account of his father's crime and its punishment. And he knew as he walked along towards the tenement that whatever else he was going to that night, he was going into a circle of perfect trust and sympathy for which his clean affectionate nature hungered.

With all this, it must be clearly understood that Sidney Cushing had not the slightest idea that Hermosa or Athanasia regarded him in any other light than that of a friend. And his own feeling towards Pax Marston prevented and precluded any other sentiment toward either of them.

The scene at his father's trial had not opened his eyes. He had seen simply an act that expressed on the part of this feeble-minded girl a feeling of regard for his father and a desire to shield him, Sidney, from dishonor. But that each of these girls loved him, each in her own way, was a condition so remote from his thought of them, that it never even suggested itself to him.

When he went up to Mrs. Ward's room, he found Hermosa's father there wheeled in across the hall in his reclining chair. He greeted Sidney earnestly and while the girls were helping Mrs. Ward about the meal, he and Sidney talked together.

He had not talked with the blind man two minutes before he began to be amazed at his knowledge of men and events. Where did he get it, this human wreck, passing the leaden years in this double decker tenement, shut in away from the noise and conflict of human passions? Hermosa? Was she the answer? Perhaps it was from that moment that Sidney Cushing began to think that Hermosa Howard was more than a simple toiler in the army of working women, and to observe her more closely and with growing interest.

"How have you been lately?" Sidney asked with the gentle courtesy common to him.

"I am always well, I have no pain. And you?"

"I have never been sick. I have much to be thankful for that way."

"Yes. What a blessing it is to have one's faculties! There is nothing more terrible than loss of one's mental powers. Will you tell me something about the new ship? I am much interested in it."

Sidney began to say something about the size and general dimensions of the Columbia, when to his amazement Mr. Howard interrupted him.

"You will excuse me. But I know all that. What I want to know is your opinion about the value of such a vessel as the Columbia compared with that new dreadnought just planned by the Argentine Republic. You know the figures are given as 760 feet at its waterline and the extreme breadth at the same point 102½ feet, an estimated speed of not less than 24½ knots an hour (that is over 27 miles, isn't it?) and a displacement of 32,000 tons. Suppose a war should break out with Argentina? The range of this new vessel contemplated by Argentina is computed at 21 miles effective target practice, while the Columbia's best guns will not carry over 20. Besides, the new Argentine vessel carries a fighting force of 1,400 men and 126 officers, which is 300 more than the Columbia can handle."

Sidney stared at the blind man in stupefied astonishment.

"But what—what earthly chance is there that the United States will ever go to war with such a country as the Argentine Republic?"

"But if we should, what would hinder even a little country like Argentina from beating our navy into scrap iron? This new vessel, which is the superior of every one of our warships, even this one you are building, could begin firing nearly two miles in advance of any vessel of our fleet. She could disable a dozen of our ships before they could get within range."

"Then," said Sidney with a laugh, "we must build a bigger one than theirs."

"Ah! That is the only answer. I see you have thought it out. And then—when will the building of bigger ones cease?"

"When one country or the other runs out of funds."

"Or the people refuse to pay the bills."

"There is little danger of that," said Sidney carelessly.

"We must not be too sure." The blind man spoke softly. "The people, the people, what do we know about the people? They are the mysterious unknown factor in all history. They are long suffering, they are slow, they are stupid, they are sometimes unreasonable, they will permit all sorts of injustice up to a certain point, against themselves, but always there comes a time when the people act. Sometimes suddenly, sometimes slowly, but they act. And then all carefully laid plans of tyrants and rings of powerfully selfish men come to naught, and the people have their way. That is history. The history of the world, Mr. Cushing, is in the end made, not by rich legislators or cunning kings and despots, but by the common people, the same sort of people who followed Jesus around over Palestine. But I think we ought to remember that these common people know more and think more now than they did in Jesus' time. It is because they are gradually, thanks to him, getting more abundant life."

Sidney sat still in astonishment. And before he spoke again he was invited by Mrs. Ward to come into the next room where the meal was served.

To be continued

Ill fitting shoes worn in babyhood are responsible for the malformed feet of many grown-ups. Mothers should observe the greatest care in selecting shoes for the infant and older children.

For growing children select only shoes made on orthopedic lasts, with plenty of room in the toes for the normal development of the bone structure of the foot.

The infants' footwear must be finished as smoothly inside as outside, with no rough seam to irritate the tender skin, causing pain and discomfort, and often permanent injury.

Every shoe shown in The BABY BOOK is made to our special order and conforms to these important requirements. Mailed free on request.

Soft Sole Shoes for Infants

39c A Pair

No. 29W4341

Postage extra for mailing, 6 cents.

Babies' Three-Strap Sandal. Black patent leather with hand sewed silk bow. Be sure to state size wanted. See scale of sizes below.

Sizes	0	1	2	3
Length in inches	4	4½	5	5⅜

To enable the mother to determine the size of shoe to order for her baby, I have quoted above the scale of sizes and the corresponding length of the shoe in inches. Order shoe a trifle longer than baby's foot.

Address all correspondence to

Eliza Emerson Gaff

The Baby Department

SEARS, ROEBUCK AND CO.

Chicago, Ill.

MONOGRAM STATIONERY

Your Monogram (two initials) embossed in gold on superfine stationery. Strictly High Class.

$1.00 One Dollar a Box (quire) Envelopes to Match. $1.00

MONOGRAM STATIONERY CO.
903 Marbridge Building, New York City

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT'S BOOKS

78c PER COPY, POSTPAID

Regular $1.50 stock. The Calling of Dan Matthews, The Shepherd of the Hills, The Uncrowned King, That Printer of Udelis. Other bargains on bankrupt books. Send stamp for catalogue. $15.00 Merriam Co. Dictionary for $5.00. Cash must accompany order. Earle W. Gage, Ave C. Jamestown, N.Y.

They Last a Generation

"Wear-Ever" Aluminum Utensils

—because they resist fire wear, cannot crack or scale, and are made of solid metal without joints, seams or solder.

They save fuel—because aluminum heats quicker and more evenly and retains heat longer than other metals. The sides of the utensils do as much of the cooking as the bottom.

Even if you save only 5 minutes cooking each meal, that means 90 hours off your fuel bill for the year.

"Wear-Ever" utensils cannot rust or form poisonous compounds with foods or fruits. They are practically everlasting.

If not obtainable at your dealer's, fill in and mail the coupon below, enclosing 15 two-cent stamps (Canadian stamps accepted), and we'll send you, prepaid, the 1-quart saucepan pictured.

Write for booklet, "The Wear-Ever Kitchen"

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL CO.
Dept. 34, New Kensington, Pa.
or NORTHERN ALUMINUM CO., Ltd., Toronto, Ontario
(Distributing Agents for Canada)

Please send me, prepaid, sample 1-quart "Wear-Ever" Saucepan, for which I enclose 15 two-cent stamps (30c.), money to be refunded if I'm not satisfied.

Name_____

Address_____

Dealer's Name_____

Idle Money Can Earn 5% With Safety

INSTEAD of risking their idle money in speculation, or tying it up for long terms, careful investors in every quarter of the globe place their funds with this company. They can withdraw upon short notice at any time, and are protected by mortgages on the best class of New York and suburban real estate, the strongest security. This company has paid 5% on deposits for nineteen years; this is compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, quarterly or semi-annually, as preferred. Deposits received personally or by mail; the possibility of loss of pass-book is prevented by our mail-certificate plan. Write for booklet.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Assets $2,500,000

Under New York Banking Dept. Supervision.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Building,
Broadway and 42d St., New York

This Shoe In Turn Style

$3.25

Postpaid in U.S.

LADIES! Get this neat, dressy shoe that will feel comfortable from the moment your foot rests in it. Comfort is built into the

Unlined, Vici Kid
PILLOW SHOE

Soft, neat, durable—made in Goodyear Welt and Turn Styles. Price includes O'SULLIVAN RUBBER HEELS. You can order by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded. Write for free catalog and self measurement blank.

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3 Boston, Mass.

Peace Circles and Treaties

NOTHING is so important in the Peace Movement to-day as the ratification of the Peace Treaties. There is a general call going forth throughout the United States for the help and co-operation of individual citizens to bring about the ratification of the Peace Treaties between Great Britain, France and the United States.

There has been a great growth in popular sentiment during the past few weeks in favor of the immediate ratification. Many conferences of religious bodies have passed urgent resolutions asking the United States Senate to ratify these treaties. Upwards of one hundred and fifty thousand sermons were recently preached upon an appointed Sunday, advocating the treaties. Public men everywhere, leaders in political life, captains of commerce and industry, men of letters, representatives of boards of trade, commercial organizations, national associations throughout the length and breadth of our country and in England and France as well, are urgently requesting their ratification.

There has been not a little cry in both Great Britain and France, connected with deep regret that the treaties, which were first offered by the United States, and which were so enthusiastically received by these two sister nations and signed at once, should be blocked by our Senate. It would be a very strange condition of affairs indeed if the nations to whom they were offered should sign them enthusiastically and the nation which first offered them should be the one to ultimately block their acceptance.

Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD co-operate with the members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles? Will the members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles and their friends—will all the readers of the magazine and their neighbors and acquaintances join us by writing a personal appeal to their Senators at Washington, D. C.?

Remember, it is your privilege to add your individual effort to the great cause of peace. It is your privilege to organize a Peace Circle in your town, in your church or in your home. The Great Creator works through his people.

The general topic for CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles for the fortnight ending January 26 is "The Benefits of Peace." Leaflets, organization pamphlets and other peace literature covering a wide variety of topics, and many suggestions for special social features will be furnished the secretaries for use in the service of Peace free and also to any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will enclose postage to defray cost of mailing.

Address, CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League, Bible House, New York.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

If the Saviour of the World had not come as a child, he never could have said: "Except ye become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," and so men would have missed one of the most impressive teachings of the Lord Jesus. What Jesus was in his birth, conversion is in our Christian lives.

A large and merry picnic party had gathered one summer day. The early dinner was spread on a grassy slope, and was eaten with much mirth. But on one of the party the merriment grated, a young man who shortly after lunch left the gay party and wandered alone along the river bank. He saw a scrap of paper floating along, and he said to himself, "I am as helpless as that bit of paper. I am being carried downwards by a strong stream from which I cannot escape." As he spoke he stopped the paper with his stick, and lifted it out of the water. He saw that it was a part of a torn-up letter, and as he glanced at it, he saw the word "miserable." He looked at it again and read: "I assure you I used to be very miserable," then a piece was torn off, and he read, " . . . nd trust Jesus only . . . salvation and now . . . joy and peace." That was all, but over and over again he read the message on that wet scrap of paper. He saw at once that it had been written by some one who, like himself, had once been very miserable. But he also saw that the writer had been led to trust in the Lord Jesus as a Saviour, and had found real joy and peace. "How I long to find the same," said the young man. "If only I could know all this, and be quite sure that Jesus Christ was my own Saviour." Then there came into his mind the words: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "Oh, it is true, it is true," he cried aloud. "When he was on earth, he received sinners—will he now receive me? Yes," he continued, "he promises to, so I will try him." Carrying the bit of wet paper in his hand, he stole quietly among the trees, and knelt down on the grass, and told God of his sin and wretchedness, and asked him for pardon and deliverance from his sins. The afternoon passed on, his friends missed him, and searched the woods, and shouted his name, but he never heard them. The next day one of the party sought him in his home, and asked why he had left them. "This will explain," was his answer, as he put into his hand a small bit of torn paper with some writing on it. "But what does it mean?" asked the friend. "It means," was the quiet reply, "that a great change has come over me. Yesterday I was one of the most wretched men on earth. I scarcely like to speak much of my newfound happiness, it all seems so sacred, but to-day I know that Jesus Christ is indeed able to save even the chief of sinners, for, thank God, he has saved me."

Teaching the Lesson to Children

Let the children sing two or three of the songs they learned for Christmas, and then ask them if they want to hear more about Christmas. Undoubtedly they will be in a mood for it. Print on the blackboard in large letters, with colored chalk — red and green — the Golden Text: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Tell them that Jesus is our Saviour because he came from heaven to show his love for us and to forgive our sins, and help us get ready to live in heaven forever with him. Tell the sweet story of how the Saviour was born as a little child that all children might know that he would be a Saviour to the children.

The Feast-Day of God's Poor

Continued from page 27

slough of despond and placed them securely upon the solid rock. The absolute sincerity of these rescued men, and the plain, unvarnished tales they told, deeply impressed the audience and many others present were led to declare their purpose to renounce the old life and begin all over again.

It is hardly possible to estimate the enormous good accomplished at the Bowery Mission on this one day of the year. The wide-spreading influence of the benediction that went forth from the old Gospel Lighthouse this Christmas is limited only by the size of the earth, and the sweetness of the blessing extended to a better world as well.

All through the night before Christmas, the Mission workers were busy in preparation for the festal day. In the small watches of the early morning, a knock was heard at the door and a young man was admitted by Mr. Hunt. He was not recognized by any one, nor could he be persuaded to give his name.

"The Bowery Mission," said he, "is doing a magnificent work, a superb work, for humanity. I merely dropped in to wish you all a Merry Christmas and leave a little change to help feed the Bread Line."

He shook hands with Mr. Hunt and disappeared. When Mr. Hunt opened his hand there were in it five glittering ten-dollar gold pieces. This is one of many similar instances that illustrate how the Mission is maintained by voluntary contributions that come from every part of the civilized world, many of which are given anonymously.

Factory Prices

Cash or Credit

Why pay the retail price when you can buy your Stove or Furnace straight from the old reliable Kalamazoo Stove Company who Guarantee every stove, give you 400 different styles to choose from and save you $5.00 to $40.00 on the dealer's price?

30 Days FREE TEST

and 360 Days Approval—the only sure-satisfaction way to buy. Money back and freight paid both ways if stove fails to please after this long test.

Factory Price Book

Get This FREE Book of FACTORY PRICES. You can buy so close you'll get a bigger, better stove than you planned at far less than you expected to spend. Every stove shipped same day order is received. Send for the Factory Price Book, No. 103.

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.

400 Stoves

A Kalamazoo Direct to You And Gas Stoves Too

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make of Typewriter. Our "Factory Rebuilt" Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branch stores in leading cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

LADIES CAN EARN $100.00

Per month selling our fine line of dress goods, hdkfs. and petticoats. Best line and lowest prices—sold through agents only. New Spring patterns now ready. Samples free. For particulars address Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3A, Binghamton, N.Y.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN FOUL TRY and SQUABS

Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 30, Des Moines, Iowa

AGENTS WANTED, either sex, sell great household necessity. Immense demand! 100% profit. Build big business all or spare time. One agent says: "So remarkable, had to supply seven friends in one town making a fine salary." Write for particulars and free sample; Dunlap Mfg. Co., Dept. 1009, Bloomington, Ill.

6% NET

For 30 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709. $25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors.

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans

EARN MONEY IN SPARE TIME

The National Dress Goods Co., New York, needs a competent responsible woman to represent them in each locality. Pleasant, permanent work. Free outfit, good pay. Write today for full particulars. National Dress Goods Company, Dept. 7, No. 250 West Broadway, New York.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER.

YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning. Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.

STRAUSS MFG. CO., 356 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

For Developing and Printing You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Compo-Board

The Modern Wall Lining

Is Cold-Proof and Damp-Proof

Constructed of air-tight materials under terrific pressure and intense heat, it is non-porous. Cold, heat and moisture can't get through it.

Keeps your rooms warm—saves on coal bills. Won't warp, peel or sag.

Compo-Board is the modern wall lining—durable, sanitary and economical. Better than lath and plaster. Its smooth surface can be papered, kalsomined or decorated—with or without panels. Can be nailed over the old plaster without upsetting your home.

Send for Sample and Booklet

Learn what Compo-Board is like, and learn in how many different ways it can be used about the house, as well as its advantages as a wall lining.

Sold by dealers in nearly every town, in strips 4 feet wide, and 7 to 18 feet long.

Northwestern Compo-Board Co.
4305 Lyndale Ave., N. Minneapolis, Minn.

15.95 AND UP-WARD

AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk, making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates large capacity machines. The bowl is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1184 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

I SELL TREES & SEEDS THAT GROW

I want you to send for my 1912 Catalogue—just issued. Every page—108 of them—filled with special offers in price and quality. Be sure to get my free written with my 26 years experience—for buying Vegetable, Flower, Grass and Farm Seed, Upland grown Alfalfa, Clover and Field Grass Seed, Seed Potatoes, Corn and Grain, Fruit and Forest Trees, Small Fruits and Flowering shrubs. Freight paid on $10 tree orders. All Seeds Nebraska Standard. None better.

Nursery and Seed Book

10c Offer!
1 5c pkt. mixed colors Petunias
1 10c pkt. extra fine mixed pansies
1 10c pkt. giant single pinks.
1 5c pkt. finest mixed poppies.
30 cents worth for 10 cents postpaid

German Nurseries and Seed House
Box 37, Beatrice, Nebr.
CARL SONDEREGGER, President

Sleep Out-Doors in Your Own Room

This FREE Book Tells You How —you may receive the benefits of out-of-door sleeping at all seasons—the face only coming in contact with the crisp, out-door air—the body enjoying all the comforts of a warm room, by using a

Walsh Window Tent

Provided with awning and screen to protect sleeper from drafts, storms, cold or insects. Instantly adjusted to any window without nails, screws to mar woodwork. Every sleeping room should be equipped with one. If not at your dealers, write for free book—What Fresh Air Will Do.

Recommended By Eminent Physicians Satisfaction Guaranteed
CABINET MFG. CO.
11 Main St., Quincy, Ill.

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS

BY ONE MAN. It's KING OF THE WOODS. Saves money and backache. Send for FREE catalog No. 85, showing low price and testimonials from thousands. First order gets agency.
Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 161 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Tuan Fang, the Great Viceroy

Continued from page 30

I learned, afterward, that Tuan Fang was instrumental in removing opposition to the orphan fund, shown by several mandarins of high rank who came within the sphere of his authority.

At the time of the Boxer rebellion Tuan Fang saved the lives of nearly one thousand Christian missionaries and their families by giving them escorts of imperial troops from the danger zones of the interior to the coast. In so doing he was acting in direct contravention of the orders of his mistress, the great Dowager Empress Tzi Hsi, who, as will be remembered, sided at first with the Boxers. Twice she ordered Tuan Fang, commander of the imperial forces in Shensi, to turn the Christians over to the Boxers for slaughter, and twice he ignored the order. I asked his secretary, Taotai Wong, a graduate of a Worcester, Mass., seminary, what Tuan Fang would have done had the empress's order been repeated the third time.

"Killed himself," was Wong's grim rejoinder. "Later, when the dowager saw that the Boxers intended her death, she turned to Tuan Fang for protection and was by him conducted to safety."

Tuan Fang, as high commissioner to inquire into Western educational methods, visited the Occident after the Boxer war and, becoming deeply interested in archæology while visiting Egypt, made many imprints of basrelievos at Luxor, Karnak and Memphis, afterward reproducing them in miniature on Chinese banners and presenting copies to those he deemed worthy of the honor.

He was a great man, was the viceroy, a great administrator and, though Chinese, loyal to the Manchu dynasty, from which he had received high honors. It was while trying to carry out the orders of the lately resigned regent to put down the rebellion by armed force, that Tuan Fang met his death. He told the writer that he hoped before he died to see two great reforms in China and they were, first, a unit of financial value that would not fluctuate, and, second, an equable system of taxation under which official corruption could be discouraged if not eliminated. E. R. JOHNSTONE.

On His Beam Ends

Continued from page 35

long at a time. A breeze of fresh cold air as he opened the door roused us to the fact that he was returning, and in the conventional way, hardly even anticipating an answer, he was greeted with the usual question, "Well, what of it, Sam? Anything doing?"

"Night's fine," he replied. "There's lights moving across t' hill by Jim's house—seems as if something was going on over there."

There was at once a general move in the company, and each man momentarily searched the faces of the others. Soon the whole company were on their feet, and one by one, almost shamefacedly, slunk out into the night.

For myself, I just sat on staring into the fire, wondering if all our efforts and prayers that this humble life might be spared us a little longer, had been in vain.

The hurry of steps and the lifting of the latch brought me quickly back from the land of dreams. A muffled figure, with a large hurricane lantern, was being ushered in by the crowd of friends who had just gone out.

The footsteps told me the news was good before my uncouth looking head nurse with his irrepressible Irish humor broke out: "Bedad, Doctor, Jim's showing ould Nick a clean pair o' legs after all. He's hisself again if ever he was."

"Be sensible, Pat, and tell me what has happened."

"Oh, don't distress yourself, Doctor; 'tis himself that's woken up and asked for something."

The diagnosis of a professional nurse would have given me no more confidence. This was not the first sick bed Pat had watched over by a long way, rough fisherman though he looked, and the instinct of simple love is often as true a guide as even text-book or lecture. It was with a load off my heart that I started to accompany the faithful watcher back over the snow.

"Prayer is out of date," a man of millions said to me only a few days ago. "No one believes now that prayer makes any real difference." But I like to think still that there are "more things in God's heaven than man wots of," and though Pat and I said our prayers differently, we both thanked God together that night for sparing the life of the man we had, each in our own way, been asking God for.

As I harnessed up the dogs next morning and started on a seventy-mile drive home, the very team seemed to be of my mind also, and even the weather chimed in and endorsed the verdict that God is in his heaven, and that so long as he permits us to believe that we can serve him, life is very much worth while.

Kind Words From Many States

Brings Gladness to the Home

I have been carefully reading and heartily enjoying your charming paper for nearly a year. It is, in my judgment, beyond criticism, and is calculated to brighten, instruct, and make happy the large circle of those looking out for just what it contains.
Richmond, Va. MRS. T. S. B.

A Treasury of Knowledge

The Christian Herald Almanac was received to-day, and I thank you for the kind remembrance. I think it a great thing. I have looked it through, but it will take a long time to study all its contents. There are a great many things in it that it will be well to know.
Castile, N. Y. MRS. H. S.

Thinks Her Bible Splendid

Received the Bible and Christian Herald Almanac a few days ago. The print of the Bible is so clear and the binding so beautiful that altogether it is a splendid volume, and I am much pleased with it. MARY QUIGLEY.

"Cannot Get Along Without It"

I cannot get along, it seems, without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We have a minister in our town who was converted in the Bowery Mission—a splendid man. CAROLINE JOHNSON.

Beyond All Others

If you know where I can get another paper half as good as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, please let me know. L. S. T.
Bedford City, Va.

A Splendid Reference Book

I received The Christian Herald Almanac, and wish to express my thanks for the book. It is a splendid reference book on many subjects. I am so pleased to receive it, as I shall need it many times. Yours respectfully,
Neenah, Wis. MRS. P. M. S.

From a Minister's Wife

I have received The Christian Herald Almanac, and of all the calendars you have put out, this is best of all. My husband is a minister, and he finds much in it that aids him in his work. The Almanac is worth the price of a year's subscription. I thank you for it.
New Salem, Ind. MRS. BERTHA IRELAND.

Just the Book That Was Needed

We are very much pleased with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Almanac. It seems to be just what we needed. I have put a string in it to hang it where it will always be handy. We thank you for such a useful present, and wish you all a merry Christmas.
West Middleton, Pa. JENNIE CUNNINGHAM.

A Great "Queen"

Horse Story

"KATE and QUEEN"

By Prof. Jesse Beery
King of Horse Trainers

Equals the famous "Black Beauty" in human interest—surpasses it in practicability. "Kate" a victim of poor handling is vividly contrasted with "Queen" who was more fortunate. You sympathize with one—rejoice with the other—even as you sigh for the slum waif and laugh with the child of fortune.

Prof. Beery has skillfully woven into this intensely interesting and true story, many valuable suggestions for handling horses—a result of a lifetime's experience.

Special Offer to Horsemen

Prof. Beery desires that every horse owner, trainer, breeder—everyone interested in horses—should read this great story. To make it possible, for a short time he offers every interested horseman a copy, worth $1.00, for the remarkably low price of

25c Postpaid

If you have even a passing interest in horses—if you own, train or breed them, you will gather from it a fund of knowledge worth many times the small price. Send for a copy today. Enclose stamps or coin.

FREE With each book we send free a beautiful colored picture of Queen—oil painting effect—suitable for framing. Order today. Address

PROF. JESSE BEERY
Box 505 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

MICHELL'S DISTINCTIVE SEEDS

Every home should have a copy of Michell's 1912 Catalog.

The man with "only a grass plot" wants it to look its best. He needs the distinctive mixtures of grass seeds that have produced the finest lawns in America, from the White House Grounds at Washington, to the fine turf at the Portland (Oregon) Exposition Grounds—

Michell's Grass Seeds

If you want a distinctive lawn, flower garden or successful vegetables, write to-day for this free catalog. Every one of its 196 pages is brimful of vital facts. Tells about our $250 prize offer.

HENRY F. MICHELL CO.
516 Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Buy Furniture from the Factory

—pay cash and save ½—we can save you the jobbers' and retailers' profits—also the time payment losses. See our Catalogue before you buy furniture.

Handsome Guaranteed Rocker $4.95

Rocker exactly as here illustrated—seat is deep and roomy, 20½ inches square and built of best oil tempered steel springs. Back is 27 inches high from seat. Entire rocker inside and out, covered with best Boston Leather. A good $10 value—order one to-day—our price . . . $4.95

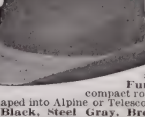
Satisfaction guaranteed—we'll pay your money back and freight both ways if you're not satisfied.

CASH CATALOGUE—FREE

Hundreds of other great furniture bargains listed in our Catalogue—write for it to-day—we'll send it free

PHILLIPS BROS. & WEIL
Dept. E. - - 819 W. 63d St., Chicago

$1 English Knock-about Hat



A stylish serviceable hat. Genuine Fur Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Can be shaped into Alpine or Telescope. Silk trimmings. Colors: Black, Steel Gray, Brown. Actual value $2.00. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1.00. State size and color wanted. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

Scientific Poultry Keeping

By C. S. GREENE

POULTRY keeping is a science. The primitive methods formerly practised in feeding and caring for mongrel birds of all sizes, shapes and colors are gradually being superseded by new and improved methods of managing pure-bred flocks which are both handsome and profitable. This change has been brought about by several causes, all tending toward the production of the same effect—the advancement of the science of poultry raising. Perhaps one of the most potent factors which aids in the rapid progress of this development is the great and increasing demand for strictly fresh eggs and poultry meat of a reliable quality.

To meet this demand has been the aim of practically every utility poultry breeder, while the production of standard bred birds for exhibition and the fancy trade has occupied the time and attention of many of the brightest workers in the poultry field; and that their efforts have been both pleasant and profitable is proven by the numerous poultry plants situated in all parts of the country, where health, wealth and happiness all combine to establish the highest ideal of country life. To men and women, young and old, rich or poor—no matter what station a person occupies in life—modern poultry keeping offers a practical means for support, and in some cases comfortable fortunes are made by the application of strict business principles, combined with close study, hard work and a natural adaptation to the business.

No greater mistake can be made when starting to keep poultry, either as a business or as a side line, than that of thinking very little preparation or knowledge is required to make a success of the venture. While this view has been taken and advocated by many out-of-date writers and poultrymen, the numerous abandoned poultry plants which may be seen in traveling over the country stand as silent but conclusive evidence of the folly of such teachings.

Only about thirty-five years ago the first practical incubators were placed upon the market in this country. Previous to this time chickens were hatched and raised in the natural way. Large poultry farms were considered impractical, as no satisfactory method of hatching, feeding and caring for large flocks of fowls had been found at that time. After the introduction of incubators and brooders, improvements in their mechanism and in the manner of caring for large flocks came thick and fast, until the present time; and while we look over the broad field of poultry work and knowledge in its present stage of advancement we can see instinctively many chances for future improvement.

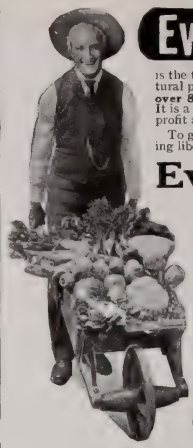
In the early days a chicken was a chicken and a hen was a hen without regard to her individuality, except perhaps the single consideration of size; but recent records of sales of individual birds ranging in price from a few dollars up to several hundred prove that there is just as much difference in the value of poultry as there is in the value of any other class of live stock on the farm. The highest prices have been obtained for birds solely on account of their exhibition or fancy points, leaving the scientific development of superior egg-laying qualities to be developed in the future to its highest state of perfection. Work along this line has been undertaken comparatively recently with satisfactory results, and it is along the line of improving utility poultry breeding that the most valuable work for the advancement of the science may be expected in the future.

The average laying capacity of the hens in the United States and Canada cannot be proven by statistics to have increased to any great extent during the last decade; but special work along this line has been attempted at several agricultural colleges and experiment stations and by a few utility poultrymen which show that marked progress is being made. Some of the most valuable official work along this line has been performed at the Maine State Agricultural Experiment Station at Orono, and at the Cornell University Agricultural Experiment Station at Ithaca, N. Y.

While it is not possible to state the exact average production of eggs per hen in one year, it is conservatively estimated in the United States to be about seventy. By improved methods of breeding, feeding and selection birds have been found at the above mentioned stations, with actual individual records of 200 to 257 eggs per year. Only one hen has been found at Cornell that laid as high as 257 eggs in a year, but this one example of the degree of perfection to which the breeders' art has attained is valuable for the pace it sets for others to follow and surpass. The net profit obtained from the sale of these 257 eggs amounted to $5.06, according to the figures given out by the experiment station. Remember, this product was secured by selling the product of this hen at market prices and does not take into account any extra profits which might be secured from the sale of eggs for hatching and pedigreed breeding stock, which is always in demand. While this record is very good, it must be admitted that it does not as nearly approach the limit of production as does the performance of the world's greatest producing cow, Colantha IV's Johanna, who gave over 27,000 pounds of milk, from which 1,247.8 pounds of butter were made in one year.

The lesson to be learned from this comparison is that chickens have been handled and bred in flocks until recently, while cows have been scientifically bred for greater production by keeping accurate individual records and breeding from only the best. Modern poultrymen realize that the same methods of individual selection must be more generally applied to the poultry business if it is to retain its present rank in the progress of the world's work. The use of modern ideas, inventions and equipment are essential to any great success with poultry either on a large or small scale.

It is very necessary that workers in the field of poultry culture should avail themselves of all the information obtainable from these sources if adequate profits are expected to result from the money invested and labor performed. Book knowledge alone is not a safe guide by which to launch a poultry enterprise. Like other branches of farming, both theory and practice are necessary for assured success, remembering that as "mighty oaks from little acorns grow," so do large and prosperous poultry farms gradually develop from very small beginnings.



EVERYTHING for the GARDEN

is the title of our 1912 catalogue—the most beautiful and complete horticultural publication of the day—really a book of 204 pages, 5 colored plates and over 800 photo engravings, showing actual results without exaggeration. It is a mine of information of everything in Gardening either for pleasure or profit and embodies the results of over sixty-two years of practical experience.

To give this catalogue the largest possible distribution we make the following liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts As Cash

To everyone who will state where this advertisement was seen and who encloses Ten Cents we will mail the catalogue

And also Send Free of Charge

Our Famous 50 Cent "HENDERSON" COLLECTION OF SEEDS

containing one package each of Ponderosa Tomato, Big Boston Lettuce, Scarlet Globe Radish, Henderson's Invincible Asters, Mammoth Butterfly Pansies and Giant Spencer Sweet Peas, in a coupon envelope which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order amounting to $1.00 and upward.

In addition, all ordering from this advertisement will receive a copy of our new Garden Guide and Record. This is a hand book of general garden information, planting tables, cooking receipts, cultural directions, etc., etc., and in all is one of the most necessary and valuable of our many publications.

PETER HENDERSON & Co. 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK CITY

Hatches With One Gallon Oil

—and requires only one filling of lamp. Superior to old style machines. Thermometer always in sight. Eggs turn without removing. Regulated automatically. Guaranteed to please.

X-RAY INCUBATOR

—easiest incubator ever invented. No smoke, smell—easiest to operate. Write for Free Book No. 70.

X-Ray Incubator Co. Wayne, - - - Neb. Freight Prepaid

VIRGINIA APPLE ORCHARDS Pay Big Profits

$50. and Discover Mouth Days a Peace APPLE ORCHARD tract in "The Beautiful Appalachian Valley of Virginia." Other farm and fruit lands $15.00 per acre and up. Best climate, water, neighbors, churches and markets. Send for "Southern Homeseeker" maps, rates, etc.

Address F. H. LaBaume, Agr'l Agt., Norfolk & Western Ry., Box 309C Roanoke, Va.

Monarch Light Touch TYPEWRITERS

$3. rental for one month

$15. rental for six months

Sold on EASY PAYMENT plan

Send for Literature and address of nearest office

Executive Offices: 300 Broadway, New York

72nd Annual Catalogue of Famous Trees, Shrubs, Plants

ELLWANGER & BARRY FREE Describing the Most Complete Nursery Stock in America—world-famous. Fruits and ornamentals unsurpassed. Superb collections for small gardens and vast estates. By all means write for a copy TODAY, and we will mail it to you AT ONCE.

MOUNT HOPE NURSERIES Rochester, N.Y. ADDRESS BOX 49

This is a picture of one of The Christian Herald Ponies

Another Shetland Pony is now offered to our Boys who start in January. The best boy receives it free

MANY NEW BOYS are splendid young salesmen. LISTEN TO THESE LETTERS:

One from Norfolk, Va. "I have sold fifteen Christian Heralds. Am selling them without any trouble. Send the others right away. Signed J. W. .....

One from Wabash, Indiana. "The Christian Herald is the best paper I ever sold. It sells like wildfire. I send in my order for fifteen this week." Signed R. K. .....

One from the West. "Please send me twenty copies this week. Say, but The Christian Herald's do sell good here! I got the papers by the 2 o'clock train; all gone by 8 o'clock. Signed J. N. .....

We have so many good letters like these that we could not begin to print them. It would take more space than the rest of the magazine. Other boys fail largely because they don't study our literature.

We Want Several New Boys in your section. Everything necessary to start sent free, including first 10 copies.

Sign this Coupon and Mail It

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

Watch out for "Gasoline Doping"

t is a favorite trick of the professional gypsy who infest the great horse markets —also the "ginger trick" and the "artificial tail" frame-up. These smooth dodges and all the other rascalities of hese brazen scamps are laid bare in

"Horse Secrets"

-the only complete book of horse-trading swindles ever published as far as we know. arm Journal has distributed seven editions of his book—75,000 copies—in the past two years, nd the warning advice contained in it, together with the valuable information about eding and conditioning stock and the cure f diseases and bad habits have probably saved Our Folks" many thousand dollars.

FARM JOURNAL

s also a great money-saver and money-maker or its subscribers. No other farm paper is so broad in its scope—intensely practical—so interesting in its presentation of facts—so elpful and entertaining in its columns devoted to the home. You need it for yourself nd your family—and you can have it every month for four years, together with "Horse ecrets" at once, postpaid, both for $1.00.

end for them at once, and if, on receipt of he book, you don't believe that in it alone ou have more than your money's worth, say o and we'll stop the paper at once.

arm Journal, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

HOME INSTRUCTION

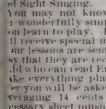
We want to advertise and introduce our home study music lessons into all parts of America, and will give you absolutely free instruction if you will simply recommend the International Institute to your friends after you learn to play. We successfully teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, 'Cello and Sight Singing.

You may not know one note from another; yet, by our wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction.

Our lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and clear that they are recommended to any person of little education can read English. Photographs and drawings explain everything. If you possess a piano or organ you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and necessary sheet music.

We have successfully taught others and we can especially teach you. Write today for our FREE booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC
98 Fifth Avenue, Dept. 341, New York
No connection with U. S. School of Music



Seeds, Plants, Roses,

Bulbs, Vines, Shrubs, etc. Hundreds of car lots of FRUIT and ORNAMENTAL TREES. 1,200 acres, 50 in hardy Roses, none better grown. 47 greenhouses of Palms, Ferns, Ficus, Geraniums and other things too numerous to mention. Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, Roses, Small Trees, etc., by mail, postpaid. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Immense stock of SUPERB CANNAS, the queen bedding plants. 50 choice collections cheap Seeds, Plants, Roses, together.

68-Page CATALOG FREE Send for it today and learn real values. Direct deal will make sure you the best at least cost. 58 years.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Box 810. PAINESVILLE, OHIO (21)

Make $25 to $50 Weekly selling the Automatic Combination Tool in your home county. A Fence Builder's tool, Post Puller, Lifting Jack, Vise, Wrench, etc. Used by Farmers, Teamsters, in Factories, Mines, Mines, etc. Weight 24 lbs. Capacity 3 tons. No experience necessary. Free instruction. Write for special offer to live agents. Send no money. Simply write for full description.

AUTOMATIC JACK COMPANY
Box 54 Bloomfield, Ind.

LOW PRICES for this FENCE

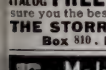
Handsome Catalogue and Sample Free. Other styles, Many cheaper than wood—all better. For Lawns, Gardens, Parks, etc. Write for Pattern Book and special offer.

THE WARD FENCE CO., Box 904 DECATUR, IND.



RIDER AGENTS WANTED

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 Bicycle. Write for special offer.

We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL and prepay freight on every bicycle.

FACTORY PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalog and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer. Coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, half prices.

DEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. M 71, Chicago, Ill

15 VALENTINE CARDS 10c
in Colors. Some Gold Embossed. 3 pkgs 25c.
WENDELL - 21 S. Clinton, - CHICAGO

Revolt Against Wrong*

IN ORDER to stop the ravages of particular sins in certain places at certain times, God has raised up many great heroes. As with Savonarola and Polycarp (it will interest and thrill you to read the history of their wonderful deeds), they often have lost their lives, after enduring unspeakable tortures; but they, like Paul, have counted all things but loss if only they might serve their Master. The names of thousands of these saintly men have been preserved only in obscure records. Hunt them out and see through what terrific struggles of heart and life our heritage of liberty and civilization and pure religion has come to us.

There was one of these heroes in the island of Majorca in the thirteenth century. His name was Raymond Lull and he belonged to a noble family. Appalled by the incursions of the Arabs, he determined to devote his life to the extermination of Islamism. For nine years, in the face of tremendous obstacles, he studied the Arabic language and literature. Then he tried in vain to secure the co-operation of his king, of England, of the Council of Vienna, and of the Pope. He told them that Mohammedanism was the greatest foe that Christianity had to meet, but they declined to assist him. Single-handed he went to Tunis and challenged the great Moslem doctors in debate. He was thrown into prison, but his magnificent courage so captivated his Moslem keepers that they released him. Returning at once to aggressive Christian work, he was again arrested, and this time he was killed. To-day we need more Raymond Lulls, for the power of Islam in the East is rapidly increasing. Who will go and help to stay its progress?

In our own days, there are on every side deadly evils to fight. In a small Connecticut town, a man has recently died who had for many years devoted himself to the purification of politics. Having amassed a competence, he had retired from business, on purpose to give his whole time to pure patriotism. He printed and circulated noble and uplifting literature. Never seeking office for himself (though accepting small positions from time to time), he labored with good men to take it, and with the politicians to nominate them. In his own town he was in the forefront of the workers for clean streets, pure water and milk, cheap gas and cheap transportation, the suppression of the saloon and all vice—for everything that makes a community better. When he died, the whole place went into mourning. He had endeared himself to all by his unselfish devotion to the interests of the poor, and by his modest refusal of honors and rewards. Yet few outside of his immediate vicinity knew the name of this ardent patriot. Such as he are "the handful of corn in the earth," whose fruit shall "shake like Lebanon," and who are ordained by God to save us.

A flavor of fanaticism sometimes marks the strong souls whom heaven sends to strike down our Apollyons. Ridicule and persecution, even to the death, have tried to blight and overcome them; but to them has been due the most of the great blessings of this favored land. Let us try to hold fast to all that they have won for us. If we do not, they, looking down upon us from above, may share the feeling of rugged old John Adams, when he said in his last days: "Posterity! you will never know how much it cost to preserve your freedom. Make good use of it. If you do not, I shall repent it in heaven that I ever took pains to preserve it."

* Epworth League Topic for Sunday, January 21. TEXTS: I. Kings 18: 17, 18; John 2: 13-17.

Breaking Down the Idols

A LETTER from Miss McIllwraith, a missionary at Travancore, South India, says: "The other day we went with Miss Casi to swear in under the flag the remaining five families (heathen) of a village where nearly all were Salvationists. The five families were in the meeting. One man was greatly affected. One of our workers went and put his arms around the man and prayed over him. He got quite quiet and was the first to come forward and the first to say, 'Pull down the devil-temple in the midst of our village.' We all went in procession, broke down the devil-temple and marched round the village, breaking down the stone and mud idols."

Answered Prayers

Mrs. J. B. W., Montpelier, Vt. "The Lord restored my daughter to health."

N. H. J., Poultney, Vt. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer."

Mrs. H. R. C., Harrisonburg, Va. "God has answered my prayer and has blessed me."

C. M., Roy, Wash. "I wish to acknowledge that God has helped me with my studies."

Mrs. K. E., Little Rock, Ark. "God has answered my prayer regarding an accident."

M. V. L., Angola, Ind. "I wish to add my testimony that God does answer prayer if we only have faith."

J. M. C., Woodville, Texas. "Prayer for a loved one, who was in danger of going wrong, was answered."

Mrs. F. S. G., Springwater, N. Y. "The Lord has been very kind to me and heard and answered my prayers."

Mrs. H. C. B., Martinsburg, W. Va. "I was in great financial trouble, and prayed to the Lord. He heard and answered my prayer."

Mrs. C. M. P., Portland, Ore. "I am almost eighty years old and can say that the Lord has answered many prayers for me in a way no earthly friend could have answered."

Mrs. T. S. J., Baconton, Ga. "I prayed for success in an undertaking that I was inexperienced in, and was bountifully blest. My prayer was answered."

A Book of a High Order

Very many thanks for the book, Women of the Bible, by Margaret Sangster. It is both interesting and instructive. I wish that many more books of this class might be written to replace those of a less high order of composition. Again thanking you, I remain, Concord, N. H. (MRS.) L. J. H. FROST.

Called Higher

BLESSED are they that mourn—oh wondrous sermon,
From lips divine upon that sacred mount,
While gentle eyes beamed looks of love and pity
From that pure heart, the sinner's cleansing fount.
They shall be comforted—oh blest assurance
Of one who came to share a sad world's woe,
Knowing full well the Father's tender mercy,
Who, being Love, would of His love bestow.

Mrs. V. C. Hauser, of Winston Salem, N. C., was called to the heavenly home on August 12 last.

Rev. J. F. West, of Spartanburg, S. C., was called to labor in the greater vineyard on July 13 last.

Elijah Bradrick (88), of Athens, O., was called to the reward of a long life of active Christian service on July 9 last.

Mrs. Mary A. Radcliffe (75), of Shelton, Conn., an active temperance worker and earnest Christian, has been called to her reward.

Edward Rolfe, Sr. (92), of Oxford, Fla., was called to the great beyond in June last. He was for many years a faithful follower of Christ and a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Susan Adams (89), of Warrensburg, Mo., has been called home to the reward of a life of service. Through the last few years of her life she was an invalid, but never lost the good cheer of life.

It Appeals to the Heart

I wish to tell you how pleased I am with The Women of the Bible. Like all Mrs. Sangster's writing, it appeals to the heart. I am sure it will do good to all who read it. I thank you, too, for your very useful Almanac. It contains much important and interesting information.
New York City. (MISS) M. J. SWIFT.

See This Vacuum Cleaner

BOOKLET FREE

HERE is a Vacuum Cleaner that runs like a carpet sweeper. As it rolls across the carpet it sucks a strong blast of air up through the carpet, bringing every particle of dust and dirt with it. No more taking up of carpets. Simply run the easy-running Domestic over them every day or two and you keep them as clean as new.

The above illustration shows a pile of dirt which came out of the texture of a rug that looked clean.

Try it in your home at our risk.

Satisfaction guaranteed or money promptly refunded.

Price $16.00 east of the Rocky Mountains. We pay express.

Agents Wanted Everywhere. Write to-day for free folders.

DOMESTIC VACUUM SWEEPER CO.
228 Masonic Temple, Peoria, Ill.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 85 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. How?" Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right."

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

ACHFELDT'S PERFECTION Toe Spring

Patented

TELL ME YOUR FOOT TROUBLES.—My Perfection Toe Spring will remove the cause of your BUNION OR ENLARGED JOINT and straighten your toes. Worn at night, with auxiliary appliance for day use. Sent on approval. Money refunded if not as represented. Send outline of foot. Use my Improved German Silver Arch Support for weak arches and "Flat-Foot." Achfeldt's HAMMERTOE Spring will straighten your small toes and prevent corns.

Full particulars and advice free.

M. ACHFELDT, FOOT SPECIALIST
Room 110, 163 West 23d St., New York

MUSIC TAUGHT BY MAIL

You can learn by mail in spare moments at your home to play the piano or organ

IN TWENTY EASY LESSONS

by our wonderful Simplex System. No previous knowledge of music necessary. Delighted students in every state. Write for Free Book today. State if you have piano or organ.

SIMPLEX SCHOOL OF MUSIC
Conservatory 735 KANSAS CITY, MO.

THIS FREE BOOK TELLS HOW

New Beautiful Fern

"Fluffy Ruffles"

Newest, daintiest and loveliest of the ostrich plumed type. Strong, vigorous, hardy—will grow and thrive in any home. Makes whole house cheerful.

4 Fancy Ferns Postpaid for 35c

One Fluffy Ruffles and 3 others—The Boston, arched and interlaced with long, sword like fronds; Emerald Feather, a drooping, feathery sort; and a Dainty Table Fern, a fitting ornament for any nook or corner.

All Nice Growing Plants. Will quickly grow in size and value. Send 35 cents today for these four fine ferns together with our complete catalog of desirable Seeds, Plants and Bulbs.

Iowa Seed Co., Dept. 9 Des Moines, Ia.

APPLIED ART PAYS

Study Applied Art at home. Personal Correspondence System. More than 12 yrs. successful teaching. Eminent Instructors. PRACTICAL RESULTS GUARANTEED.

R. B. PLAWORTH Founder & Art Director

Our students in demand by leading employers of artists. Applied Art Courses in COMMERCIAL DRAWING, ILLUSTRATING, TEACHERS NORMAL, FASHION, LETTERING & DESIGN, CARTOONING, PHOTO RETOUCHING, ARCHITECTURAL PERSPECTIVE, Etc. Endorsed by highest authorities.

Residence Finishing School for Advanced Students. Artists' outfits furnished enrolled students. Year Book free.

SCHOOL OF APPLIED ART

685 Applied Art Bldg., Battle Creek, Mich.

A GREAT DISCOMFORT

is a sour stomach. It often results in a sour disposition, as well as pain and distress. Sure relief may be obtained by the use of Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), which absorb gas and acid, prevent fermentation, and sweeten both stomach and disposition. Once only, 10 cents in stamps will secure a full size, 25 cent box. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

Balsam Pine Pillows

Breathe the health-giving, nerve restoring pines when you sleep by securing a "Breath O'The Forest" Balsam Pine Pillow made from pure Balsam Pine Needles. Greatly relieves and benefits sufferers of Catarrh, Hay Fever, Asthma, Nervousness, Insomnia, Consumption.

Write for descriptive booklet.

BEMIDJI PILLOW CO., Dept. 11, Bemidji, Minn.

AGENTS Steady Income

Selling our guaranteed hosiery for men, women and children. Every style and grade. Guaranteed to last four months without holes or a new pair given free. Easy Seller. Big profits. Repeat orders. Sell every day in the year. All want guaranteed hosiery. Don't miss this chance. Act quick. Write for terms. Free sample to workers. Send no money. A postal will do.

THOMAS MFG. CO.

3124 Barney St., Dayton, Ohio

AGENTS BIG MONEY SELLING THE EASY SAD IRON

New Invention. Easy to operate. Ironing done in half the time. Heated by gasoline. No stove needed. Do whole ironing for two cents. Saves its cost in six months. Low in price. Fully Guaranteed. Big money maker for agents. Needed in every home. Large sales. Big profits. Territory going fast. Write quick for terms.

Foote Mfg. Co., B. 168, Dayton, O.

$7.55 Buys Best 140-Egg Incubator

Double cases all over; best copper tank; nursery, self-regulating. Best 140-chick hot-water brooder, $4.85. Both ordered together, $11.50. Freight prepaid (E. of Rockies). No machines at any price are better. Satisfaction guaranteed. Write for book today or send price now and save time.

We ship quick from St. Paul, Buffalo, Kansas City or Racine.

Belle City Incubator Company, Box 127 Racine, Wisconsin

AGENTS Make $30 per Wk. This AWL

sews a lock stitch like a machine. Best thing ever made for repairing Harness, Shoes, etc. A dozen exclusive features. Demand is immense. Sales astounding. Roy Sage writes "Rec'd Awl today sold 5 in 15 min." L. Perrine says "Sold 9 on way home with sample." Lowest price, biggest profit, greatest value, quick sales. Drop everything and write for sample and instructions.

ANCHOR MFG. CO. Dept. 834 DAYTON, O.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Farm, Poultry and Lawn. 26-inch Hog Fence 15c. 47-inch Farm Fence 23 1/2c. Catalogue free.

COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47. Winchester, Indiana.

WE PAY $80 A MONTH SALARY and furnish rig and all expenses to introduce our guaranteed stock and poultry powders; money-back guarantee; outfit free; new plan; steady work. Address BIGLER CO., X 562, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS

Worth-While Ambitions*

THAT brave old saint, George Herbert, advised his readers to aim at the stars, for though they would never hit them, they would shoot far higher than if they aimed at a tree-top. It was good counsel, yet common sense must be applied to it, as to all such poetic and extravagant figures. It is wise to keep to one's self one's profoundest ambitions. A great man, when asked what had been his favorite motto in life, replied, "Never tell what you are going to do until you have done it." It is a good one.

Among the most pitiful sights in life is a man who has no especial object; who plods along from day to day vaguely hoping for advancement, yet studying no methods and taking no deep thought concerning ways and means. Such men are likely to believe in "luck." They say that you had "better not expect anything, and then you will not be disappointed"; "if a prize is coming to you, it will come, if not, it won't, and you cannot help it."

You might as well say that your daily food will come to you "without doing much about it." There is very little success in this life that is attained without patient, persistent, deliberate planning for it. Most of the men who reach high positions have begun by aiming at a certain thing; reaching it and then bending all circumstances toward the attainment of the step above it; and so on until there are no more "worlds to conquer."

What I aspired to be
And was not, comforts me.

The high aim ennobles. Men die the better for it; even if they have not gained their hearts' desire, they are glad if it was a worthy and splendid one.

It is said that an artist once brought to a die-cutter a design for the cover of a book.

"You will have to change it," said the artisan. "That cannot be cut in brass."

"I do not think," said the artist kindly, "that art should be subjected to mechanical restraints. Just try it."

The die-cutter did try it, and he related to his fellow-craftsmen with glee that he had done something which the traditions of his craft had accounted impossible.

So the Christian ideal is often felt to be impossible of attainment; "but," as a wise man has said, "we help men most when we do as our Master did, persuading them to reach for the highest."

And remember that ideals are contagious. Many an aspiring youth has started out determined to follow some lofty model; but, mixing in the crowds of men and finding how base and sordid many of them are, he has called himself a fool and a "chaser of rainbows," and has lowered himself to the level of the herd. On the other hand, the steadfast hero spreads heroism around him. By his high thought others are led to think likewise. A good watchword for us all to take is the grand last stanza of "The Chambered Nautilus":

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, January 21. TEXTS: John 17: 20-24; Rom. 8: 18-21.

Cutting Out the Gems

I dare not go on with my day's work without pausing to thank you for this week's CHRISTIAN HERALD. Literally, I have clipped it from cover to cover, until it looks like one of mother's old-fashioned lamp-lighters with which I used to be familiar down on the farm. By actual count, I found a round dozen cuttings, all gems for sermonic illustrations, while my eyes are steadfastly set upon a thirteenth, which I am determined to have, superstition or no superstition. Blessings on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—its editors, its craftsmen, its contributors, and its world-wide family of readers.

Brooklyn, N. Y. S.

Have You Had Your Copy of The Priscilla Style Book?

IT IS a wonderfully attractive little book of Children's and Misses' garments full of suggestions for school and dress wear—and of information about the Priscilla Shop. There is a copy here for you—write for it today.

Priscilla Garments

are altogether the daintiest, smartest, most carefully made garments for little folks that you ever saw. Just the sort of garments to delight the heart of particular mothers. Designed by and made under the personal supervision of a woman who knows a mother's needs.

All sizes—for girls of 2 to 14 years. All colors and styles.

Our expert mail service makes it easy for you to shop here

The Priscilla Shop, 313 Buhl Block, Detroit, Michigan

FERRY'S SEEDS

Good gardeners are those who raise good flowers and vegetables. Good flowers and vegetables come from good seeds. We produce good seeds—the inference is obvious. For sale everywhere.

1912 SEED ANNUAL Free on Request

D. M. FERRY & CO. Detroit, Mich.

"A good pen is a conduit for the flow of thought, but a poor pen is a dam."

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

are good pens—always, in all styles, for all purposes.

Sample card of 12 different styles and 2 good penholders sent for 10c.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO., 349 Broadway, New York

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

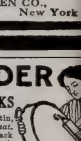
$8,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers Journals.

Patent Obtained or Fee Returned

CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Att'ys Established 16 Years

925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

MARVEL SOLDER



INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

in all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Solders Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. AGENTS WANTE

1937 Broadway Dept. 8 New York QUICK SALES BIG PROF

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in you Church or Sunday School, and or for every person when you can g

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very be songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 114 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind

IN MATCHTOWN

Fortunately no Faith Was Required, For She Had None.

"I had no faith whatever, but on the advice of a hale, hearty old gentleman who spoke from experience, I began to use Grape-Nuts about 2 years ago," writes an Ohio woman, who says she is 40, is known to be fair, and admits that she is growing plump on the new diet.

"I shall not try to tell you how I suffered for years from a deranged stomach that rejected almost all sorts of food, and digested what little was forced upon it only at the cost of great distress and pain.

"I was treated by many different doctors and they gave me many different medicines, and I even spent several years in exile from my home, thinking change of scene might do me good. You may judge of the gravity of my condition when I tell you I was sometimes compelled to use morphine for weeks at a time.

"For two years I have eaten Grape-Nuts food at least twice a day and I can now say that I have perfect health. I have taken no medicine in that time—Grape-Nuts has done it all. I can eat absolutely anything I wish, without stomach distress.

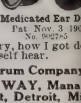
"I am a business woman and can walk my 2 or 3 miles a day and feel better for doing so. I have to use brains in my work, and it is remarkable how quick, alert and tireless my mental powers have become." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

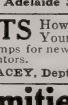
Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

I Was Deaf 25 Years

NOW I HEAR WHISPERS



Medicated Ear Drum Pat. Nov. 3 1903 No. 902785



G. P. WAY

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.

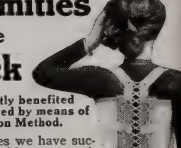
Artificial Ear Drum Company

Address GEO. P. WAY, Manage 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich

PATENTS How to GET Every Doll Your Invention is Wort Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of V Interest to Inventors.

E. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D.

Deformities of the Back



can be greatly benefited or entirely cured by means of the Sheldon Method.

The 17,000 cases we have successfully treated in our experience of over eleven years are absolute proof of this statement. So, no matter how serious your deformity, no matter what treatments you have tried, think of the thousands of sufferers this method has made happy. And, more—we will prove the value of the Sheldon Method in your own case by allowing you to

Use the Sheldon Appliance 30 days at our risk

You take no risk There is no reason why you should not accept our offer at once. The photograph here shows how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Sheldon Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets. The weakened or deformed spines it brings almost immediate relief even in the most serious cases. You owe it to yourself to investigate it thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for our Free Book today and describe the nature and condition of your trouble as fully as possible so we can give you definite information.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO. 207 13th St., Jamestown, N.Y.

PARKER "JACK-KNIFE" SAFETY PEN

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Two NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each. Or sent with One Renewal Subscription for $3.00.

This is a real safety fountain pen that is practical and entirely without any complicated mechanism. It can be carried flat or upside down in the vest or coat pocket, or in a lady's purse or handbag, with no danger of the ink leaking out. It is just the pen for traveling. This pen is fitted with the famous Parker Lucky Curve feed, which insures a perfect flow and prevents any blotting or leaking. The gold pen is solid 14K gold tipped with hard iridium point, and is of the best quality made. The pens are furnished in fine, medium or stub points. Every pen is guaranteed for one year by the Parker Pen Company, manufacturers of the famous Parker Lucky Curve Pens. Postage, 4 cents extra in either case.

"NAME-IN" LOSS-PROOF UMBRELLA

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Two NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $3.00.

This umbrella is the very latest model, permitting it to be folded up so that it can be carried in a 24 inch suit case. The material in this umbrella is called "Infinito" fabric, being a very glossy, highly finished, long-fibre Egyptian cotton, warranted to shed water and hold its color. The important feature of this umbrella is having your name embroidered on the inside, so that you can always identify it. We can give Free this same umbrella, in a more expensive covering of "Infinito" silk, for Four New Subscriptions or with one renewal for $4. This "Infinito" silk is pure silk reinforced with fine Egyptian long-fibre cotton and the manufacturers guarantee that it will outwear any all silk umbrella. Your choice of a curved or straight genuine boxwood handle with both umbrellas. Postage, 30c extra in either case.

INDESTRUCTIBLE STAMPED STEEL SKATES

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

Winter is here—Skates! The skates which the boys and girls of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may have free are the strongest skates ever manufactured, because they are practically indestructible. These skates are made after an entirely new idea, and have never been in the open market before. The foot rest is of stamped steel, folded and securely attached to a special high grade steel runner. The toe has a key clamp and the heels are fastened securely in place by setting into a concave part of the steel stamping to which is attached the regulation straps that go around the ankle and hold the foot securely in place. Skating is easily learned on our INDESTRUCTIBLE STAMPED STEEL SKATES, and every healthy boy and girl should own a pair. In all sizes from eight inches up. Postage, 20 cents extra in either case.

NUT SET

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

This handsome premium furnishes a useful and desirable combination of twelve nut picks. They are made of high-grade steel, nickel plated. They have ornamental handles, and come packed in an attractive wooden case. Postage, 30c extra in either case.

SOLID SILVER THIMBLE

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00. Registered postage, 14 cents extra in either case.

This solid silver Thimble has a pure gold band, highly polished and embossed. It is a full-size thimble with thick walls, guaranteeing it to be thoroughly serviceable for the hardest kind of use.

INDIAN SUITS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.25.

For our boys and girls, from four to fourteen years of age, we have secured a most excellent line of Indian Suits, Cowboy Costumes and Rough-Rider Outfits. These popular new-model suits are made of high-grade Khaki drill, and consist of coat and trousers (or skirt). They are elaborately trimmed with bright colored fringes and strappings, and are well tailored in every respect. With each Indian suit is included a war bonnet with feathers in the crown and a streamer. They have an extra "V" shaped neck piece with tapestry fringes. These suits are so neat and good looking, so delightful to play in because everything about them is made of the strongest and best material, and they will look bright and new for a long time, even with roughest wear. The Indian Tent is made of Khaki in true tepee style; is six feet high and quite roomy. It is decorated in fancy figures around its sides. This is just the thing for boys and girls to play in to make the Indian suits truly realistic. Given free for Four New Subscriptions at $1.50 each, or sent with one renewal for $4.50. Postage on suits, 20 cents extra in either case. Tent to be sent by express.

THE FAMOUS FLEXIBLE FLYER

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Three NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscripton for $3.75.

Winter is with us! You will want a sled, and you will want a winner. For only Three New Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD you will have the very best sled in the market absolutely free. Made of hard wood with steel japanned runners, beautifully decorated and finished with three coats of varnish. THE FLEXIBLE FLYER will hold three or four persons; is steered the way you steer your bicycle; will win all the races on the hill, and last as long as ever you will want a sled. Can anything more be said of a sled than that? Boys who really want the best and swiftest sled will be satisfied with nothing less than a FLEXIBLE FLYER.

The FLEXIBLE FLYER, which we offer for Three Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is 40 inches long by 6½ inches high and 13 inches wide. We can give one 45 inches long for Five New Subscriptions, and one 62 inches long for Seven New Subscriptions. To be sent by express at receiver's expense. Weight, 10 pounds.

A PERFECT TELESCOPE

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Three NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $3.75.

This is a real telescope, not a cheap and worthless toy. This instrument, when used by day, will afford much pleasure to the hunter or traveler. Objects a thousand yards away are brought to an apparent distance of less than 100 yards. Such a telescope is useful in camping parties and in companies of the Boy Scouts, for viewing distant operations and for observing signals. It is also of value in picking out the names of ships at sea, in watching large game, in studying bird life, in following motor-boat races, etc., etc. When used at night under clear skies this instrument, if held steadily, will show two or more of the moons of Jupiter, and the crescent phase of Venus. It will also divide some of the double stars, such as the Epsilon in Lyra and the Nu in the Dragon's Head. It is especially interesting in its view of the mountains, "seas," craters, etc., of our own Moon. The large formations of the Moon's surface are brought out in beautiful detail.

The objective lens is 1⅛ inches in diameter. The brass body is covered with black morocco leather, three brass draw tubes, highly polished; brass cap to protect object lens, and sliding cap to protect eye lens; power of telescope 14 diameters, length when closed 6½ inches, when extended 17½ inches. Postage, 10 cents extra in either case.

CHRISTIAN MARTYRS GIVEN TO THE LIONS

CHRISTIANITY is the greatest fact in history. The early Christians endured martyrdom rather than forsake Principle. The picture shown herewith, from Ridpath's History, depicts 87,000 people assembled in the Coliseum at Rome to witness the Christians given to the lions. In such a scene may be read the inevitable doom of the Empire that ruled the world. The blood of the Martyrs is the seed from which Christian civilization sprang. If you would know the history of mankind—every sacrifice for principle, every struggle for liberty, every conflict and every achievement, from the dawn of civilization down to the present time—then embrace this splendid opportunity to place in your home the world-famed publication,

RIDPATH'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS are offered ONE MORE OPPORTUNITY to place this splendid History in their homes. We will mail our beautiful 48-page free booklet of SAMPLE PAGES to all who are interested in our offer, and without any obligation on your part to buy. A coupon for your convenience is printed in the corner of this advertisement. The sets are Brand New, brought right down to date, beautifully bound in Half Morocco, and must be sold immediately. We offer the few remaining sets

At LESS than even damaged sets were ever sold!

We will name our price only in direct letters to those sending the coupon below. Tear off the coupon, write name and address plainly and mail now before you forget it. Dr. Ridpath's family derive their income from his History, and to print our price broadcast for the sake of more quickly selling these few sets would cause great injury to future sales. Send coupon to-day.

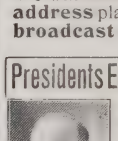
Presidents Endorse Ridpath



President Mckinley said: "I am familiar with the merits of Ridpath's History of the World, and cordially commend it to the scholar as well as to the plain people generally."

President Harrison said: "The author's labors are deserving of the highest praise. The printing and binding is first class and the illustrations are of a high order. I most heartily recommend this great work for study and convenient reference."

President Cleveland said: "Unhesitatingly commend Ridpath's History of the World as a work of great merit, and believe that it should have a prominent place in every library."

HISTORY OF THE WORLD
RIDPATH VOL. I.
EGYPT. CHALDAEA. ASSYRIA. MEDIA. BABYLONIA. PERSIA.
RIDPATH VOL. II.
PARTHIA GREECE MACEDONIA
RIDPATH VOL. III.
ROME. THE KINGDOM. THE REPUBLIC. THE EMPIRE.
RIDPATH VOL. IV.
BARBARIAN ASCENDENCY. THE MOHAMMEDAN ASCENDENCY. FEUDAL ASCENDENCY. THE CRUSADES.
RIDPATH VOL. V.
THE PEOPLE AND THE KINGS. NEW WORLD AND REFORMATION
RIDPATH VOL. VI.
THE ENGLISH REVOLUTION. AGE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT. THE AGE OF REVOLUTION.
RIDPATH VOL. VII.
THE UNITED STATES GREAT BRITAIN
RIDPATH VOL. VIII.
FRANCE GERMANY. ITALY EASTERN EUROPE MINOR AMERICAN STATES
RIDPATH VOL. IX.
THE CLOSE OF THE NINETEENTH AND DAWN OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

NINE MASSIVE VOLUMES
4000 PAGES
2000 ILLUSTRATIONS

DR. Ridpath gives the history of every religion of mankind, and shows the slow but sure progress that has been made from Paganism to Christianity, from darkness to light. The customs and habits of people, the development of their science and literature and art, the growth of religion and education form a very vital part of this history, and that which gives the work its lasting popularity is the wonderfully beautiful and fascinating style in which it is written. To read this work is not only to increase one's fund of knowledge, but to improve the literary style in which we write or speak, and to expand and develop the mental powers.

EVERY American citizen should know the history of his own country and of the world to intelligently perform his full duty as a citizen in the government of this Nation. How else are we to judge of the great national questions that crowd upon us for decision except by some knowledge of the past? For the answer read the history of mighty Babylon, or of imperial Rome as a kingdom, then as a republic, and finally as an empire, and familiarize yourself with her growth, development and decay. Then, when you know the cause of the rise and downfall of empires and nations, will you be able to intelligently discuss and decide the great questions that are pressing everywhere for attention.

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendor; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written.

RIDPATH throws the mantel of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there—patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles, with three hundred and fifty Greek ships, smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth, and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym for savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there—gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another century—the most colossal world-figure of his time!

THE BEAUTIFUL SPECIMEN PAGES ARE FREE!

FOLD HERE. TEAR OUT. SIGN AND MAIL.

1
10-12

FREE COUPON

Western Newspaper Association
Christian Herald Bureau
140 So. Dearborn St., Chicago

Please send me, entirely free, a sample page of Ridpath's History of the World, containing [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] of Napoleon and [illegible] of Caesar and [illegible] of Chivalry and [illegible] and [illegible] of Panama Canal and [illegible] and [illegible] and your special offer to The Christian Herald.

NAME

ADDRESS

No letter necessary. Tear out Coupon, sign and mail.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JANUARY 17, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 3. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"THE LAST TOKEN: A CHRISTIAN MARTYR." From the Painting by Gabriel Max

(See Page 53)

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

L. O. M., Mount Joy, Pa. What influence should a Christian have on his community?

By his upright and exemplary life, his helpfulness, his readiness to give counsel and aid to those who need it, his generosity to the poor, and his practical faith, as shown by his works, he can exert a good influence on all with whom he comes in contact. He should never miss an opportunity to "let his light shine," so that men may know that he is a follower of Christ. He is a living evangel and by his influence and example attracts others to the source from which he himself draws courage and strength for the struggle of this life and assurance for the life to come.

C. A. K., Buffalo, N. Y. What is meant by "agreeing with thy adversary quickly"?

The passage is a part of the Sermon on the Mount in Matt., 5th chapter. Jesus had been speaking about quarrels between brothers, and urging reconciliation of such differences in the spirit of love, before coming to the throne of grace. Then (verse 25) he diverges to the question of lawsuits, which were common then as now, and advises his hearers to keep out of the hands of the law and to escape its penalties by settling their disputes between themselves. But he went further than this, for his language pointed to a higher tribunal, to which all must come for judgment and where condemnation awaits them which can only be escaped by their repentance and acceptance of divine mercy.

S. M. D., Wallingford, Vt. If a Baptist minister is not ordained, can he pronounce the benediction, give the right hand of fellowship, baptize, and conduct the Lord's Supper?

We have submitted this question to Rev. Charles A. Eaton, D.D., of Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York, who replies as follows: "According to Baptist polity, the minister received his authority to baptize direct from the Lord, in the great commission to preach the Gospel and baptize. Singularly enough, he receives his authority to preach, pronounce the benediction, give the hand of fellowship and administer the Lord's Supper from the local church which he is serving. This is true in both theory and practise, if he is not ordained. While it is not usual for unordained men to administer the Lord's Supper, they have a perfect right to do so, if they are so empowered by the church they are serving. Ordination, from the Baptist's point of view, is simply a general recognition of a man's fitness to do the work of a pastor. But any local Baptist church may ignore this general ordination if they wish, and they themselves empower their preacher to administer the ordinances."

S. W., Keene, N. H. 1. Please explain John 1: 1, 2, 3. 2. Is the belief that there is no future life greater now than forty years ago? 3. Is it correct for a minister to say that "one is mistaken in supposing that cessation of labor on the Sabbath is an act of worship or a matter of religion, but is simply a matter of physical, social and domestic necessity"? Would it not be breaking the fourth commandment?

1. These verses are, in epitome, the characterization of God as the eternal and omnipotent Creator. The "Word" is "the manifestation and expression of God to those without him," and is one of the highest and most consecrated titles of Christ, as distinct from God, yet inseparable from God, and associated with him, and the same with him in substance and essence, being possessed of the essentials of divinity. It was this "Word" who was "in the fulness of time made flesh." The three verses emphasize at once the distinctness and unity of God and the "Word." The whole passage constitutes a denial of the eternity and non-creation of matter. 2. No; the belief in a future state, which was held but dimly before Christ, has spread throughout the world since Christ "brought life and immortality to light" and is still spreading, notwithstanding the efforts of materialism, agnosticism and infidelity. 3. Any work on the Lord's day that is not either of necessity or mercy is a desecration. Some place a very liberal interpretation upon this; but the true Christian holds that one day in seven belongs to God. With this clearly in mind, there can be no misunderstanding. It is not a day for pleasuring or money-making.

T. H. W., Uniontown, Md. Were Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego brothers? Dan. 1: 6, says among the captives they were of "the children of Judah." Does that mean Judah's sons or of the tribe of Judah?

It means of the tribe of Judah. There is no evidence that they were brothers in the sense of blood relationship. Shadrach was the Chaldee name of Hananiah, the chief of the "three children," or young men of the tribe of Judah, who were Daniel's companions. He was taken captive with Daniel and a number of others at the first invasion of Judah by Nebuchadnezzar about B.C. 606. All four were young men of kingly bearing of the royal tribe of Judah and

Continued on last column

THE DERELICT

By FREDERICK WILSON

THE Wanderer shivered and snuggled within
The scanty protection that covered his skin,
For the wind was as ice and his clothing was thin.
His face bore the impress of poverty stark,
And hardship had left its indelible mark.
How keen was his shame as he shrank from the light,
Courting the shadows and screen of the night!
How hungry the look, how dejected the air
Of the Wanderer adrift on the Sea of Despair!

But where should he wander? It matters not where,
The results were the same: nobody would care
For the Derelict's woes or the tramp's sullen air!
But hark! Voices singing! The organ's sweet strain!
As the hymn "Rock of Ages" he hears once again,
The vagrant soul halts and its turbulence quells,
While Mem'ry enweaves her magical spells
To conjure the past. Ah, how bitter the tears
As Time turns the days, the months and the years!

The old country homestead, so peaceful and still;
The warbling of birds, with their musical trill,
And the murmuring brook as it flowed by the mill;
The incense of blossoms, the ripening grain,
The sweet-smelling hay and the verdure-clad plain;
The old village church bells! How joyous their lay,
Inviting to worship on each Sabbath day!
How sweet was the toil 'neath the sky and the sun—
But sweeter the rest when the day's work was done!

* * * * * * * *

A sign beckoned "Welcome!" The light's cheerful rays
Bespoke warmth and comfort. The service of praise
Preceded a sermon in quite a new phase.
'Twas a Sermon in Coffee, a Sermon
in Bread,
A Sermon on Love—though nothing was said.
But it went to the heart and it stayed there, too,
Conceiving the impulse for something to do;
Creating new strength as hope dwelt within—
Imparting fresh courage to strive and to win.

"THE OLD COUNTRY HOMESTEAD, SO PEACEFUL AND STILL"

With sad face upturned toward the stars of the night,
He murmured: "O Father, give strength with the light,
And I'll strive once again with the heft of my might,
Though elusive the toil that I've missed for so long."
(Ah, the gratitude, offspring of hope, was strong.)
"I'll shatter the shackles of John Barleycorn
If Thou wilt give strength with the birth of the morn.
Oh, grant that I clasp once again to my breast
The ones that I love. To be Home and at rest!"

Again the old homestead, so peaceful and still;
The warbling of birds, with their musical trill,
And the murmuring brook as it flows by the mill;
The odor of blossoms, the ripening grain,
The scent of the hay and the verdure-clad plain.
And the Wanderer? He toils 'neath the sky and the sun,
And sweet is his rest when the day's task is done.

* * * * * * * *

When Hope's crucified (the moral is plain),
Trust God, and the Spirit exalteth again.

We're one and all creatures of circumstance;
Some would be great if they had but a chance.
And some that are mighty would measure as naught,
Deprived of the fruits Opportunity brought.
Then let's do our share to lighten the load
Of less fortunate brothers, whose toilsome road
On the journey of life is bestrewn with care,
And who need but love's leaven to do and to dare.
Though kind deeds themselves always bring their reward,
Who gives to the poor but lends to the Lord.

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

of superior understanding or education. Meshach was the Chaldee name given by the Babylonian court to Mishael and Abednego was the name similarly bestowed on Azariah.

L. S., Grand River, S. D. 1. Could Christ sin? 2. Please explain I. Pet. 3: 19, 20. He speaks of preaching to "the spirits in prison."

1. We are told in the Scriptures that he was in all points tempted like as we are "yet without sin" (Heb. 4: 15). Whether he could not sin has been much discussed. Doubtless he could have yielded, but the fact remains that he did not yield to temptation and continued to the end an example of perfect purity and sinlessness—the condition of man before his fall. 2. This passage has been interpreted to mean that he announced the Gospel to the antediluvians, whose spirits were "in prison"—that is, in the chains of darkness—and made known to them the completion of the Divine plan for man's redemption.

Mrs. C. A. S., National City, Calif. Please explain Rom. 6: 3, 4, 5.

Being "baptized into death" implies that those who have gone through this experience have formally surrendered the whole state and life of sin, as being dead in Christ. Verse 4 is more accurately interpreted "by the same baptism which makes us sharers in his death we are made partakers of his burial also," thus severing our last link of connection with the sinful condition and life which Christ brought to an end in his death. Possibly immersion was alluded to in this verse as symbolical of burial and resurrection. Verse 5 is self-explanatory.

J. B. M., Denver, Col. What are the actual changes in connection with the transfer of the seat of government in India?

They are (1) the transfer of the central authority from Calcutta to Delhi, the ancient capital; (2) a governorship for the presidency of Bengal, which is to include the five Bengali divisions now apportioned between Bengal, Eastern Bengal and Assam; (3) a new province to take in Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa, and (4) a chief commissionership of Assam.

Miscellaneous

H. E. L., New York. He is a Hebrew Christian and a member of an interdenominational religious organization.

E. McK., Hillsboro, Ky. The chief causes of a nation's indebtedness are: War, army and navy support and pensions.

Ruth W., Nebraska, Neb. Christmas entertainments are usually held on week day evenings, and not on Sunday, for the reason that it is the Lord's day and should not be invaded by amusements.

T. V. S., Yorkton, Saskatchewan. The passage to which you refer is I. Cor. 14: 34. This, however, is not to be applied generally. Social conditions at Corinth in the time of Paul were such that he considered it advisable to counsel modest and unassuming demeanor on the part of Christian women, to distinguish them from the immodesty and forwardness of non-Christian women of that period. Like many other passages in Paul's writings, it was advice suited to the time and the occasion. Elsewhere in the Epistles we find full recognition of the character and abilities of Christian women, although it is unquestioned that they did not in those days take as prominent a part in religious affairs as they did later. To-day, they are doing magnificent service in many branches of religious work and constitute a powerful factor in the advancement of Christianity.

Remembered the Bread Line

Business Manager of Bowery Mission.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 22 was mislaid and not opened until after Christmas, so I was not able to send you the money to give the men a slice or two of roast beef on that occasion; but it will come in just as well for New Year's. Enclosed please find check for fifty dollars, to go as far as it can. Please do not mention my name in regard to it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Kindly say that it was given anonymously in memory of a deceased father, who took an interest in the Bowery Mission. ——.

A Great Blessing to All

Your charming letter to "Our Readers and Ourselves" (page 1213) is great. I reach out my hand to you. Shake for 1912. Your MAIL-BAG is worth the subscription. The paper is a great blessing to all who will take it. All hail for 1912! JOHN D. ROGERS.
Round Lake, N. Y.

. . .

"A Sure Antidote for the Blues"

I received the Almanac and Samantha at Coney Island and am more than pleased with them. The Almanac is a great store of information and Samantha is a sure antidote for the blues. Thanking you for your favors, I remain your faithful reader,
Coyle, Okla. J. A. PFALZGRAF.

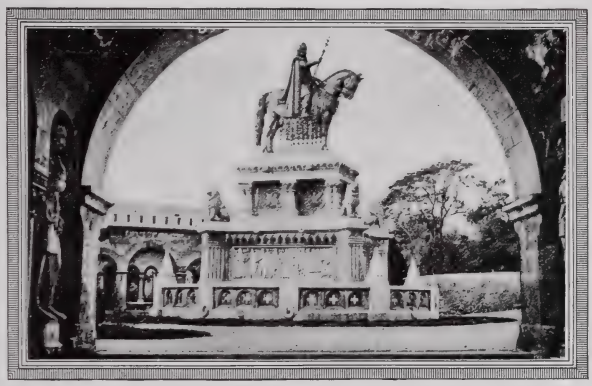
NEW YORK, JANUARY 17, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Rev. Paul Nyary, a Young Hungarian Pastor

The Memorial Monument to King Stephen at Budapest



Hungarian Shepherd in National Costume

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN MAGYARLAND

By Rev. FRANCIS E. CLARK, LL.D.

Founder and President, Christian Endeavor Society

THE Magyars or Hungarians are a people apart, and occupy a unique place in the very heart of Europe. Moreover, they are sending their sons and daughters to Amer-a by the hundred thousand, and will, undoubtedly, ɔert an important influence on the character of the ɔnglomerate American of the future.

Furthermore, contrary to the opinion of most mericans, there is a strong, vigorous and numer-ıs Protestant element in Hungary, for, out of the xteen millions of people of Hungary proper, no ss than four millions profess the Protestant faith. ll these considerations, it seems to me, make the lagyars, and especially their religious life, well orth the consideration of the readers of THE HRISTIAN HERALD.

I have just spent a busy fortnight among the ıurches of Hungary, and have come to admire, as have on former visits, the sturdy independence, ıe whole-hearted hospitality, and the evangelical ɔarmth of these noble Christian men and women.

First, a few words about the race history of this ɛmarkable people may not be out of place. They re distinct from all the other peoples of Europe, ıe Finns alone excepted. Their ancestors, many centuries ago, swept down from the plateaus of the Ural Mountains upon the rich prairies of Hungary, and, by the very force of their inherent character, as well as by their valor at arms, overcame or assimilated the former barbaric inhabitants, and ever since, amid the vicissitudes of almost constant wars and even frequent defeats by many enemies, have maintained their individuality, and, for the most part, their undisputed supremacy, in Southeastern Europe.

In race and language they are allied to the Turks on one side and to the Finns, another branch of the same family tree, on the other. Yet, though related to the Turks, they were the most consistent and successful enemies of Mohammedanism in all Europe. In fact Hungary, for centuries, was the buffer State between Christian Europe and Mohammedan Asia, and many a hard-fought war did her people wage, almost single-handed, to repel the tide of Islamism, which often threatened to submerge all Europe.

Germany and Austria were too much occupied in their own affairs to give Hungary much aid in this valiant fight for the Christian faith; England was too far away to help, though Cromwell did take a hand on one occasion on Hungary's side; and Russia had not then emerged from barbarism sufficiently to count on the side of Christianity. So Hungary was often left to do battle alone. Sometimes she had to fight both her Moslem neighbors on the east and her Christian neighbors on the West. Sometimes she was defeated and sometimes victorious, but, for the most part, she maintained her national integrity and her national faith, and, on the whole, augmented her national boundaries.

When the great Reformation, headed by Luther and Calvin, swept over Europe, Hungary gave herself whole-heartedly to the new faith, and, for a time, was almost wholly a Protestant nation, adopting the Calvinistic doctrines in all their rugged simplicity. Persecution, however, soon set in. The most powerful nobles were still Roman Catholics. Austria, her nearest and greatest neighbor, with whom she was often allied as she is at present, exerted her great weight to crush out the Reformed

Continued on page 58

The Protestant Church in Pecs, Southern Hungary

The "Great Church" of Debreczin, Hungary

A SERMON

By

Rev. A. C. DIXON, D.D.*

FOUNDATION PRINCIPLES

TEXT: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrines of Christ, let us go on to perfection." Heb. 6:1.

THE house in building leaves the foundation without forsaking it. The book in writing leaves the alphabet without forsaking it. The anthem in making leaves the scale without forsaking it. The foundation remains an essential part of the house, the alphabet an essential part of the book and the scale an essential part of the anthem. So the Christian, in going on to perfection, leaves some of the first principles without forsaking them. Though in a sense he has risen above and passed beyond them, he carries them with him as an essential part of his life and character.

Some of these fundamental principles which we are to leave without forsaking are given in the text, and it is our purpose to consider them.

Repentance from Dead Works

A foundational experience is in the words "repentance from dead works." It is not repentance from sin. Sin is not a dead work, but rather a work that kills. It is the assassin which by slow poison or dagger thrust murders the soul. A "dead work" is a work upon the merit of which one depends for salvation apart from Jesus Christ. It is dead, because it is separated from the source of all spiritual life. The man who depends upon his character as the ground of justification before God, while he declares that he has no need of an atoning Saviour, is relying upon a dead work—dead because it is a character without the life of God in it. The man who depends upon salvation through baptism or any other external ordinance, is trusting to a dead work. The fruit of the Spirit grows upon the tree of grace. Dead works are like wax fruits manufactured and hung upon a tree. They are mere imitations of life.

Max Muller declares that the difference between Christianity and all other religions is in the fact that Christianity saves by grace, and all other religions seek to save by works. Salvation by grace humbles the soul, while salvation by works glorifies self. In salvation by works "Christ and Him crucified" is displaced by "man and him glorified." Salvation by grace produces live, luscious fruit; salvation by works produces only dead, tasteless imitations. Even the fruits of the Spirit become dead works, if depended upon for salvation. "Love, joy and peace, as fruits upon the tree of life, are alive and good, but "love, joy and peace," depended upon as our ground of justification before God, are dead works. Church membership as the expression of Christ's life within us is living fruit, but church membership as a basis for salvation is a dead work.

A foundational attitude of soul is in the words "faith toward God." It is the opposite of faith toward works. There can be no growth without this soul attitude toward God. As well try to make a plant grow that never turns its leaves towards the sun. As well seek the development of animal life without the light. It is more than faith towards truth. One may believe that the Bible is the Word of God without trusting God for salvation. One may even believe in the deity of Christ without trusting Christ as Saviour. One may believe in salvation by grace without appropriating grace for his own salvation.

The Spirit of Obedience

A foundational disposition is in the words, "the doctrine of baptism." There may be reference to the ceremonial washings of the Jews or to Christian baptism, perhaps to both, but the underlying meaning is the same in each case. The Jews practised ceremonial washings because they believed that God commanded them. The Christians practised baptism because Christ commanded it. The disposition of the soul was the same in both cases, though the disposition of the Christian marked a higher type of spirituality than the disposition of the Jew. In both cases, however, that disposition could be defined as the spirit of obedience. It was a desire to please one whose authority they acknowledged. This disposition is essential to Christian growth. Indeed it is essential to Christianity itself. No one who lacks it is a Christian. Christ was obedient unto death, and, if we have not the spirit of Christ, we are none of his.

This disposition for the lack of knowledge may show itself in mistaken ways. It may fail to do the exact thing that Christ commanded, and may not be excused for ignorance when knowledge is in reach; but the disposition to obedience in the soul is more important than the outward act. A mother told her children to go into the garden and gather some flowers. The happy laughter which came from the garden was proof that the disposition to obey imposed no burden. Two of the children came into the house with their hands full of roses, but one little half-witted boy, who heard his mother's request, came in with his hand full of weeds and sticks which he had gathered. There were no flowers among them, and yet the mother forgot the bright children with the flowers, while she took the half-witted boy into her lap and kissed him and praised him for what he had done. In act he had disobeyed, but in disposition he was obedient. It was the disposition that counted with the mother as she took the handful of weeds and sticks and arranged them for a place on the table beside the flowers. If, in our ignorance, we bring only weeds and sticks, while others bring their flowers, He will not despise the disposition which prompts the act.

A foundational faith is in the words "resurrection of the dead." Both words in the Greek are without the article and might be translated "resurrection of dead things," whether souls, bodies or institutions. It is fundamental that a Christian believe in resurrection, which means the power of God to give life to the dead. Of course, he believes in the resurrection of Jesus Christ. His Lord, who was "crucified, dead and buried," rose from the dead on the third day according to the Scriptures. The very body that was laid away in weakness came forth in power. Of course the Christian believes in the resurrection of his own body. The plants that spring up from the soil, budding and blooming above the grave of his loved ones in the springtime, are to him symbolic of the fact that the dead who are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth.

"Dead Souls"

There are dead souls all about us, and the soul dead to God can be made to pass from death unto life "through the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead." In other words, the resurrection power of God is ready to co-operate with our faith in raising dead souls to life.

Faith in this resurrection power is essential to success in winning souls to Christ. There are no hard cases. God can raise to life one dead soul as easily as another. There may be degrees of life but there are no degrees of death. Every corpse is equally dead. Lazarus was no more dead the fourth day than he was the moment after the breath left his body. Every bone in Ezekiel's vision was equally dead, and it was, therefore, as impossible to raise one as another. But when, in response to Ezekiel's prayer, the breath of God came upon them they were all equally easy of resurrection. The miracle-working resurrection-power of God is the one thing needed, in order to bring about the salvation of the wickedest man or woman in the world.

A foundational equipment is in the words "laying on of hands." Beyond doubt this refers to the enduement of the Holy Spirit. The apostles laid their hands on people and they received the Holy Spirit. What relation the laying on of hands had to the imparting of the Holy Spirit we are not told. It may have been the method by which the miraculous gift of the Spirit was imparted to others, or it may have been in recognition of the fact that the Holy Spirit was already given. As to whether one person to-day has the power to impart the Holy Spirit to another we do not know. If it be true, then our difficulty is in finding the person or persons who have such power. There are those who claim the power by virtue of their official position, but their credentials are not satisfactory to some of us. However, we need not spend time in seeking to learn whether or not one may impart the Holy Spirit to another after we have learned, on the authority of God's Word, that every Christian may receive the Holy Spirit for himself. The ceremony of imparting may, with reason, give way to the act of receiving. Jesus said, "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit unto them that ask him?" Here the Holy Spirit is offered for the asking. James wrote, "Ye have not because ye ask not." It was while the apostles were at prayer that the Holy Spirit came upon them at Pentecost, not while they were laying hands on each other.

The Expectation of Judgment

A foundational expectation is in the words "eternal judgment." Judgment may mean a decree for us or against us, though its usual meaning is a degree of condemnation. Judgment for the penitent believer is eternal, and judgment against the impenitent unbeliever is eternal. Certainly there is no teaching that either decree will be revoked after death. But what has my faith in eternal salvation for the righteous and eternal condemnation for the wicked to do with the perfection of Christian character? Much every way. The man who believes that the destinies of men are not settled in this life, but that they will have another chance after death, lacks incentive to earnestness in living or working for the salvation of others. If I can repent in the future, why not eat, drink and be merry here, if I feel so inclined? If my friends may be saved after death, why should I be earnestly concerned about them now? The doctrine of future restoration is paralysis to Christian earnestness, while it is an opiate for the conscience of the man who wants to live in sin. It proves a shallow surface view of sin and holiness. It would comfort with a false hope some whose loved ones have lived and died in unbelief at the risk of damning thousands who ought to repent and turn to God to-day.

A foundational necessity is, by fair inference, at the bottom of all this. It is a twofold necessity. First, if we would "go on unto perfection," we must have these elemental and essential things. We must have an experience of salvation by grace; we must live with the attitude of faith toward God; we must have the disposition to obedience; we must be endued with the Holy Spirit; we must exercise faith in the resurrection power of God; and we must be influenced by the expectation of eternal judgment for saints and against sinners. Let us see to it that we have this foundation before we try to build this alphabet before we try to write a literature of Christian life; this musical scale before we seek to compose the songs of life.

Spiritual Progress a Duty

A second necessity is that, having the foundation the alphabet, the scale, we should begin at once and persevere in erecting the building, writing the literature, composing the songs. Some children have learned their alphabet and then refused to study their ignorance and illiteracy a reproach to them and their parents. Some have learned the musical scale and then ceased their efforts, willing to remain ignorant of music. Is our experience like a foundation without a superstructure? like a book all alphabet and no literature? like a musical composition all scale and no harmonies? Hear the command, "Let us go on unto perfection." Run toward the goal. If you cannot run, walk. If you cannot walk, creep or crawl. But "go on." Begin with what you are and have. Do not wait for more before you begin to seek the best. An artist spent years looking for a piece of wood out of which to carve a statue, and after searching the country for it, he found just what he needed, hard, smooth, and rich-grained lying neglected in his own home yard.

A farmer's son went to college and studied mining engineering. He was offered a position at a salary of $25 a week but he refused, saying that he intended gaining a fortune by discovering a rich mine. He went West and worked for years in search of his rich mine, with an income of less than $25 a week, and returned home discouraged, to find that his younger brother, sitting one day on a stone in the shade of a tree, noticed that in the stone there were some little white particles unlike the rest of it. He had the stone tested and found that it was a

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, England.

NEARING SHORE

HOW gleam the far, fair lights on shore
That tell of home and rest.
While landward rolling in the breeze
We plow the wave's white crest.

How faint and sweet the voices sound
That call to us from shore;
They call to peace and love and rest,
Our long, long voyage o'er.

Upon the strand soon we shall stand,
Our faring forth all done;
And we shall bless our Captain then,
Glad for the haven won.

GEORGE LAWRENCE ANDREWS.

Foundation Principles

Continued from preceding page

index to a great silver mine on the old farm, which enriched the family. Let us begin where we are, with the commonplaces of life, and seek to make out of them the best we can. Do not make the mistake of gazing at the stars a million miles away and falling into the ditch at your feet. Do not forget the stars, but look out for the ditch. In its gravelly bottom may be a fortune for you. The stars will keep. We may reach them best by way of the ditch. I would not "hitch my wagon to a star," for stars were not made to guide or hold wagons, but I would try to make my old wagon the star wagon of the neighborhood. Use commonplace things for God. Invest your own common everyday life for his glory, and see if he does not pay interest in your transfigured character.

As Christians should begin at once with what they have, and "go on unto perfection," so every sinner should begin at once with what he has and become a Christian. He can make a beginning with his sins. If he is honest, he will not have to go far to find them. Make an inventory of them before God and ask him to forgive for the sake of Christ. You may not know much about Christ. Perhaps you have been taught to believe that he is not divine. I will not stop to argue with you, though I think the argument strong enough to convince an unbiased mind. Begin on the sure foundation that you are a sinner and need salvation. Then confess your sins to God and accept the Christ you know as the sin-bearer. He will do the rest.

A New York pastor urged an intellectual but dissipated man in his parish to become a Christian. The man replied, "I cannot believe in the inspiration of the Bible, in the deity of Christ, or in prayer." "Do you believe in your own sins?" asked the pastor. "Oh, yes," replied the honest soul, "there is no doubt about my being a sinner, and sometimes I am in hell." "Are you willing to bring your sins to Christ for forgiveness and let him, whatever you think of him, take your guilt?" "But," he said, "I can't believe in the inspiration of the Bible, in the deity of Christ or in prayer." "Just now," persisted the pastor, "I am not asking you to believe these things. You know you are a sinner, and in sin there is a taste of hell. Now, I offer you Jesus Christ as your Saviour from sin. Will you accept him as such, and leave all questions that puzzle you for future solution?"

The man went to his home and that night he accepted the Christ he knew as his Saviour, and came to the meeting the next night to tell the people the joy of forgiveness that was in his soul. After several days of joyful testimony which led others to Christ, the pastor gently said, "What do you think now of the deity of Christ?" "If he were not divine," he replied, with great emotion, "he could not have done what he has done for me." And there was no difficulty then about believing in the inspiration of the Bible and in prayer. Like the blind man, he knew little of Christ, but one thing he did know: that, whereas he was blind, now he could see.

Come with your guilt of sin to the Christ you know, and receive him as your Saviour. It will not be long before he will reveal himself to you in his fulness.

Only a Tramp

By EUGENE THWING

HE WAS walking the railroad track down by the creek in the early morning. Suddenly the train struck him, killing him instantly. What of it? He was only an unknown tramp. A tender-hearted reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sends us the story with a letter of sympathy. Half a dozen lines in the local newspaper had recorded the bare facts. The man wore a striped shirt, faded trousers, heavy boots, blue overalls, brown blouse, and a gray vest. In his hand he carried a red handkerchief in which were a piece of bread and a bunch of grapes. In his pocket was a letter addressed "Dear Father," and signed, "Your Son," but with neither name nor address. His body was buried in a pauper's grave and his memory in a few lines of small type. Who cares? He was only a tramp.

"Dear Father." Ah, somebody did care. Off yonder, in the distance, somewhere, is a home, and a "dear father," waiting,—waiting—

"Your son." So he was more than a tramp; he was a son; nay, "dear father," he was your son. Perhaps he had been eating of the husks, and now his face and his weary steps were turned toward home and "dear father." Across the distance the father's heart went out in yearning; his hand was stretched now and again in eager welcome toward the road by which his boy might come. Across the distance the tired boy's heart was straining to reach his "dear father"; his hand trembled with longing to grasp his father's hand, that he might look through the big, manly tears and whisper, hoarsely, "Dear father, I am your son; I have come home."

Perhaps he was ashamed; perhaps he was too poor; perhaps—ah, if only there had been some maker of joy to find him, and bring him to his "dear father" before it was too late!

* * *

ONLY a drunkard and a crook, "panhandling" for a drink. He had worked the barkeeper to the limit, and could get no more from him without the coin. He tells his own story:

"So it was me for the curbstone an' any holdup I could make.

"I piped my man a couple of minutes later. He was comin' along with his head down, kind of studyin', an' I ups to him with the old whine about bein' starved, countin' on gettin' a strangle hold the second his hand went to his pocket."

The next day, captured by the very man upon whom he was "countin' on gettin' a strangle hold," he was taken straight to his "dear Father" and became an acknowledged son. Now he is one of the most successful of missionaries. His story is one of thousands.

The heavy train of a busy, ruthless world is rushing on, day by day. On the track, in the dim mists of discouragement and weariness, or in the darker shadows of crime, are many hopeless wanderers. The Bowery Mission, for example, is full of just such failures, who through yielding to appetite, or for lack of early training or education, or because of evil associates, have gone down to this desperate condition. Thank God, there are men and women who can see that "only a tramp" is worth saving, and that for every son there is a "dear father."

* * *

NEVER have I read that Christ uttered any high praise for the wealthy, or powerful, or famous members of society. His values and sense of proportion seem to have been quite different from ours. From time to time his followers tried to force upon him what they regarded as high honors and great power and dignity. They would have made him king and fought for him to the death. He might have answered, "Yes, I could belittle myself and become a mere emperor; or I might degrade myself and be a mere millionaire; but I prefer the exalted position of servant, the dignity of poverty, the glory of self-sacrifice."

Only a lame beggar, whose sores the dogs were wont to lick; yet he rested in the bosom of Abraham, while the rich man, who had so often turned from him with indifference or disgust, begged, in torment, for a drop of water to cool his tongue. Only a thief on the cross; yet he received the promise, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Only a few loaves and small fishes; yet they became the bountiful supply for five thousand hungry men.

If the Lord Jesus were to look over the newspapers of to-day, he would pay scant attention to the front page articles telling of the great men of earth and their doings. He would hunt out the obscure columns, and somewhere, near the foot of the column, he would find a little item in small type telling of "only a tramp," or "only a beggar," or "only a poor widow," or "only a tired, discouraged workingman," or "only a cripple," or "only a waif." At such items, a very tender look would fill his gentle face, and he would go at once to search out the neglected "onlys," carrying them the ministrations of his love for their every need. It is "the least of these" whom he honors with the intimate term, "my brethren."

* * *

TAKE this money," wrote a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, sending a generous sum, "and use it where it is most needed. Do not pick out the 'worthy poor,' but, for Jesus' sake, seek also the unworthy. Don't ask if they deserve help; ask only if they need it."

Only a tramp—tired, defeated, driven from every door; yet under the old striped shirt a heart was beating with love for a "dear father," and in the loneliness of night he cried out, "I am your son!"

Only a tramp—there are thousands like the one whose story was sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by a tender-hearted sympathizer. They are dragging their tired feet along the railroads and the dusty highways, begging, perhaps, for food, or shoes, or shelter; but longing less for charity than for a brother's warm handclasp, or the welcome of a "dear father."

Only a tramp; only an obstructed life; only a failure; only a drunkard; yet brothers, with us, of the Lord Christ.

THE PASTOR AND THE PEDLER

A CLERGYMAN, who longed to trace
Amid his flock a work of grace,
And mourned because, he knew not why,
Yon fleece kept wet while his kept dry,
While thinking what he could do more,
Heard some one rapping on the door,
And opening it, there met his view
A dear old brother whom he knew,
Who had got down, by worldly blows,
From wealth to peddling cast-off clothes.

"Come in, my brother," said the pastor,
"Perhaps my trouble you can master.
For since the summer you withdrew,
My converts have been very few."

"I can," the pedler said, "unroll
Something perchance to ease your soul;
And, to cut short all fulsome speeches,
Bring me a pair of your old breeches."

The clothes were brought; the pedler gazed,
And said, "No longer be amazed;
The gloss upon this cloth is such,
I think, perhaps, you sit too much,
Building air castles, bright and gay,
Which Satan loves to blow away.
And here, behold! as I am born,
The nap from neither knee is worn!
He who would great revivals see,
Must wear his pants out on the knee.
For such the lever prayer supplies;
When pastors kneel, their churches rise."

LILA F. DORSON.

Do You Know Your Bible?

THE "Bible Question Series," which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last year, met with so enthusiastic a reception from our readers that, as announced in our prospectus for 1912, it has been decided to make it a regular department hereafter. The lists of Bible questions will appear monthly, and this, it is hoped, will afford ample time for all of our readers who are interested in Biblical research to send in their answers, each list of answers appearing simultaneously with the list of new questions. The series is designed to stimulate Bible reading and to interest young and old alike. There is no more delightful or profitable occupation for leisure hours than "searching the Scriptures." Very many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are already wonderfully familiar with the Book of books, and know the preciousness and helpfulness of keeping in close touch with God's Word.

We cordially invite all to join this informal class for Bible study, and to be as prompt as possible in sending in their replies.

Bible Question List No. 1

1. What one thing does the Scripture say God cannot do?
2. What was the longest drought ever recorded in the Bible?
3. Where is the first mention made of beggars?
4. Who said: "To obey is better than sacrifice"?
5. Who was first to be known as a Doctor of Laws (prototype of the modern LL.D.)?
6. What verse contains in five words the journey every Christian has accomplished?
7. What was the first anti-migration movement and how was it frustrated?
8. What good man was divinely warned to curb his ambition and "not seek great things" for himself?
9. Who delivered the first Gospel sermon, taking a passage as a text and expounding it?
10. What are the requirements, as Jesus named them (in a single verse) for the bringing forth of good fruit?
11. What aged man had his son killed by a boy to whom he had shown kindness?
12. In connection with what operation are physicians first mentioned in the Bible?

Address all answers: "BIBLE QUESTION CLASS, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York."

"The Christian Martyr"

(See illustration on first page)

AN UNUSUALLY striking and appealing picture is that by Gabriel Max, entitled "The Christian Martyr." Clad in soft white drapery, with a black mantle wrapped about her head and shoulders, the young girl in the arena seems completely oblivious to the wild beasts about her, and with one hand raised touching the high wall which is her prison, she turns up a beautiful, wistful face to see who it is that has thrown the rose which lies at her feet. The picture was painted in Prague in 1880, and purchased by Mrs. Katherine Lorillard Wolfe, who presented it to the Metropolitan Museum, New York City.

China's First President a Christian

ALTHOUGH Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the young and talented reformer who has just been chosen as provisional president of the new republic of China, was for some time a resident of the United States, little was known of his career and personality by Americans. A writer in the Westminster Gazette of London, who is a personal acquaintance of Dr. Sun, tells us something concerning the life, the principles and the patriotic aims of this youth—for he is still a very young man—who has suddenly emerged from obscurity to assume the leadership of more than one-fourth of the world's population, in their great struggle for liberty and popular government.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, President of China

First of all, we note that this intimate friend of Dr. Sun declares that the first president of China is a Christian! "Jesus of Nazareth is to Sun Yat Sen a living source of joy and comfort. All through the pages of history, the heroes, saints and martyrs have, he declared, been speaking to us of the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the need to help the weak, to champion the cause of the poor and lowly."

When addressing his countrymen on the subject of religion, Dr. Sun does not attack Buddha or Confucius, or make a mock of any of the old faiths. He knows that these beliefs, wrong though they be, have been held for many generations in China and that they are very dear to most of his people. He wins them to Christianity by the simplest and most direct form of appeal. Addressing a meeting of students, he said, "My brothers, applied, practical Christianity is our true need. Away with commentaries and doubts. God asks your obedience, not your patronage. He demands your service, not your criticism."

Dr. Sun Yat Sen was born forty-four years ago in Heungshan, and is a farmer's son. His father was a Christian convert. Sun was educated in a Christian mission school, and finished his studies at an American college in the Sandwich Islands. He returned to China and studied medicine under Dr. Kerr at the Hongkong Medical College, where he was the first student to receive a diploma. It was there, too, under American influence, that he first imbibed his ideas of political freedom for his native land. When he began to work among his countrymen, he was deeply impressed with the miserable conditions by which they were surrounded. Soon he identified himself with the reform movement and in a few years he became one of the leaders of the organization in Hongkong and Southern China. The leading spirits were educated young Chinese who pledged themselves to plan for reform and emancipation. Young Sun Yat Sen was at the head of this movement from the first as the real leader. He is described as being a man of brilliant qualities, yet with reserve stamped on every step he takes; unselfish, patriotic, courageous and able; "no idle dreamer of dreams, no adventurer seeking, under the cloak of philanthropy, to float some scheme for his personal profit and aggrandizement"; no disgruntled politician, and with nothing in common with the familiar type of the loud-mouthed blatant reformer, but a sincere, thoughtful, conscientious man whom Western education and years of travel have broadened and strengthened and lifted up to the standard of a true patriot whose Christianity and love of country have impelled him to risk not only his career, but his life, for China. For many months he traveled in England and the United States in disguise, as a salesman, while there was a standing reward of many thousands of dollars offered for his delivery to China, dead or alive. At every opportunity he made propaganda and won adherents to the cause of his country's emancipation from despotism.

While the young reformer was traveling abroad he was really doing the most important kind of missionary work for his country in upbuilding the great movement for its emancipation. His education and general training and all of his ideals were the result of his contact with Americans. This can also be said with equal truth of many of the young men associated with him, a number of whom had been educated in the United States. As we have already said, Dr. Sun is an earnest speaker, though he makes no pretensions to being an orator; he talks clearly and with an earnestness that carries conviction and he is thoroughly familiar with his topic. The Chinese mind is logical rather than emotional and loves straightforward, logical statements. And Dr. Sun's influence over his fellow countrymen arises wholly from the fact that they have been convinced of his absolute truthfulness, his wise conservatism, his thorough knowledge of home conditions, his invincible determination, and his genuine patriotism. Money has poured into the revolutionary treasury as the result of his appeals, so that the movement has never been hampered by lack of funds. Three times the revolution seemed about to reach a climax, only to be checked by the caution of its leaders, who decided that the time was not yet ripe for the great attempt. The fourth attempt has succeeded, and the whole world has been surprised at what has been accomplished.

Immediately after his election to the provisional presidency Dr. Sun proceeded to Nanking by train. There he held a reception and formally took the oath of office. His first act was to change the Chinese calendar from the old to the European system. The Chinese year will now start on January 1 and dates will be written from the first year of the republic. Though the final official list of the new cabinet is not yet available it has been announced that the following selections have been made: Vice president, Li Yuen Hung; finance minister, Chin Chin Tao; premier and war minister, Huang Sing; attorney-general, Wu Ting Fang; foreign minister, Wang Chung Wei; marine minister, Captain Wang; chief of staff, General Hsu. It is uncertain who will receive the other minor portfolios and some changes in the list are possible. The combination as it at present stands is regarded as a strong one.

Though the revolutionists have progressed so far in their formation of a government in the South the struggle is yet far from finished. Yuan Shi Kai, the imperial premier, has brought to nought the negotiations at Shanghai by the repudiation of his peace commissioner, Tang Shao Yi. His insistence, backed by the united action of the commanders of the remaining loyal imperial troops, has finally succeeded in opening the coffers of the Dowager Empress and the imperial princes, $2,500,000 being forthcoming. Upon receiving this sum Yuan Shi Kai cut off the negotiations which had been in progress with Dr. Wu Ting Fang and notified the legations at Peking that he was ready to fight to the finish. There is a great deal of dissension in the ranks of both parties. Some are satisfied that the republican government cannot stand, while still others express full confidence in it.

The Celebration of the First Day of the Chinese Republic in New York's Chinatown

Upon the announcement of the declaration of the Republic all Chinatown joined in a grand celebration. The new flag was officially raised and Dr. Sun's picture was unveiled. Thousands of firecrackers gave vent to the enthusiasm of Young China

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

THE STARTLING STATEMENT is made that there are in New York City more than forty thousand children in the tenements doing work for employers. The figures were given by Mr. George A. Hall, representing the Child Labor Committee, before the Factory Investigating Committee. The wages run from $2 to $3 a week. To say nothing of the wickedness of it, it is extremely short-sighted for a community to wreck its child life in this desperate and wholesale fashion.

—IT IS ESTIMATED THAT something like $500,000 was spent on the New Year's Eve festivities in New York by the gala parties which assembled in the large hotels to "see the New Year in." A pretty high price to pay for a frolic! One incident is worth noting: A certain rich young man, wishing to create a novel sensation, had a pail of champagne placed before him on the table. On the stroke of midnight, he laved his hands in the sparkling liquid, and, amid the plaudits of his party of merry-makers, exclaimed, "Thus I wash away the sins of 1911." Probably more were shocked than amused at the blasphemous remark. A new year begun under such profane auspices can hold for those who indulge in such wickedness nothing but sorrow and regret.

—IF IT BE TRUE, as related in a New York Times dispatch from Washington, that the War Department has come into possession of the facts that certain labor leaders on the Pacific coast actually defied the government and trampled on the flag, the condemnation of such offenders will be swift and emphatic. Major-General Wood and Major-General Ainsworth, the former the chief of staff and the latter adjutant-general of the army, are both declared to be in possession of photographs which show President Gompers of the Federation of Labor, standing on the flag while addressing a labor meeting, and President J. A. Kelly of the San Francisco Building Trades Union, also standing on the flag. This took place at a meeting at Oakland, the official report alleges. The Army and Navy Register of Washington, a semi-official publication of the military service, states that "these photographs have been sent officially and are duly authenticated."

—A DECLINE IN THE DEATH RATE in seven of the eight cities of the United States having a population above 500,000 and a generally low death rate throughout the United States are shown in the preliminary mortality figures for 1911, given out at the beginning of the new year by the Census Bureau. The area from which complete mortality returns are received now covers twenty-two States and forty-five cities outside these States, embracing a total population of 57,327,697. The 1911 death rate was 14.4 per 1,000 of population, compared with 15 per 1,000 in 1910. In Boston the rate increased from 17.2 to 18.5. Of the cities in the half-million class Cleveland's rate of 13.5 is the lowest. Pittsburg shows the greatest decrease in the death rate, its proportion of deaths per 1,000 of population being 14.7 in 1911, as compared with 17.9 in 1910. Figures for the other cities for 1911 were: New York, 15.5; Chicago, 14.3; Philadelphia, 16.3; St. Louis, 15.5; Baltimore, 18.4.

Peace Banqueters Support the Treaties

Copyright by Drucker & Co.

THE DINERS AT THE CITIZENS' PEACE BANQUET IN THE WALDORF-ASTORIA, NEW YORK, ON DECEMBER 30

THE Citizen's Peace Banquet, held in the big auditorium of the Waldorf Astoria, New York, on the 30th day of December, 1911, was in point of attendance, enthusiasm and earnestness of purpose, one of the most brilliant gatherings ever held in the interest of peace. Upwards of two thousand distinguished guests met in good faith to record their approval of the peace treaties now awaiting ratification by the United States Senate.

Hundreds of flags of all nations, bordered with the broad white band which to-day makes of any flag the symbol of peace, were the decorations. The word "PAX," in large illuminated letters, blazed above the speaker's table, and the inspiriting motto, "Let Thy kingdom come on the earth," in parti-colored lights, shone out like a luminous benediction over the brilliant scene.

When, at the stroke of seven-thirty, every guest was seated awaiting the arrival of the principal guests of honor, President Taft, followed by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. John Temple Graves, Hon. Oscar S. Straus, Henry Clews, Senator John Dundurand of the Dominion of Canada, Congressman William Sulzer, Bishop David H. Greer, Congressman Richard Bartholdt, John Barrett, director of the Pan-American Union, Rabbi Silverman, and others, filed in and took the places reserved for them. The guests seated at the smaller tables rose in a body and applauded with enthusiasm. Mr. Carnegie, seated at the President's right, took up the toastmaster's gavel and called for "Quiet, please," after which the Rev. David James Burrell invoked a blessing upon the assembly.

During the dinner the diners visited from table to table, and an air of good fellowship prevailed, while strains of familiar folk-songs, medleys and national anthems from a string band in the balcony called forth from time to time storms of impartial applause.

It was after ten o'clock when Toastmaster John Temple Graves (in view of the many rumors of disturbance that had been circulated early in the evening among the guests, with warnings that persons hostile to the peace movement had planned a demonstration in much the same way that the recent mass meeting at Carnegie Hall had been broken up) rose briskly to his feet and announced that "there never was a banquet so swaddled in stormy gossip, so cradled in ruction and dispute, that had passed into a serener consummation than this one. If there had been war within its ranks and dissension in its council," he said, "every vestige of such a condition has vanished in the sanction and enthusiasm of the brilliant and representative assembly gathered here to-night." He introduced President Taft with these words:

"The stateliest steps that have been taken for peace in human history have been taken by the twenty-seventh President of the United States. While patriots have preached and poets have sung and journalists have written, the President, without noise or protestation, has presented the evangel of peace at the door of every chancellery in Europe and the East. His two great treaties await the laggard Senate's vote. I present to you William Howard Taft, the great Peace President of the Republic's life."

Thereupon the band immediately struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner," in which with lusty voices the whole assembly joined. The cheering was continuous until the President began his speech. It was a brilliant and masterly defense of the cause of Peace and set forth logically and concisely his reasons for believing in the early ratification of the peace treaties now in the hands of the Senate. Point by point, he answered the principal attacks that have been made on the arbitration treaties, and scarcely a moment passed that he was not interrupted by applause. He said in part:

"Why am I in favor of these treaties?" I regard them as the first step toward the establishment of such an arbitral court as will establish world-wide peace. There is not the slightest likelihood that we will get into war with France or England, but it is the example that the United States can set before the nations of the world that will prove so valuable in the procuring of peace the world over. If we make these treaties, other countries will make like treaties. Soon we shall have the desired structure for the great end toward which we are working. The nations of the world look to us. I ask your influence for the consummation of the ratification of these treaties.

"Perhaps, in my enthusiasm on behalf of Peace, I go pretty far; but it seems to me we are in a position to lead the world in this matter of Peace. We have begun it and the world looks to us to continue to lead it, and we have done it with these treaties. There is a higher law than the letter; it is the spirit. Shall our country fail to glorify our national honor by leading us away from the ways of war, to the ideal arbitral court and to the higher recognition of the majesty of the law? Are we going to disappoint the world?"

Here the President was interrupted for two minutes with cheers and applause. Men rose to their feet and cries of "No! No!" resounded from every quarter of the hall.

Other speakers of the evening were Andrew Carnegie, president of the New York Peace Society, Oscar Straus, former Ambassador to Turkey and Peace Envoy to the Congress of International Peace; Henry Clews, treasurer of the International Peace Forum, and Mr. Towne, former United States Senator from Minnesota.

Rabbi Silverman, in a few words prior to the benediction, reminded the guests that the angel song, "On Earth Peace, Good Will to Men," was not only the sublime benediction of the world, but it was the sublimest prophecy of the ages, foretelling this very moment the dawn of world-wide peace.

A large number of letters from Americans prominent in public life were read from the platform. All the writers warmly advocated the peace cause, and urged the ratification of the treaties. A letter had been written by Ex-President Roosevelt, opposing ratification on the ground that the treaties should first be amended and that in their present condition they made the attitude of our government "nonsensical as well as hypocritical"; that the treaties do not make for real peace and would put us in a position of insincerity before the world; that we stultify ourselves by advocating the submission of all differences to The Hague—including those involving national honor—and in the same instant settling our own difference with Russia in a high-handed way by abrogating a treaty of long standing instead of carrying the matter to The Hague, in accordance with our own avowed principles. Mr. Roosevelt's letter was not read or even mentioned at the Peace banquet.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President | GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor | THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Good Time Coming

NEVER let any one tell you that times are hard, that the wolf is at the door and the end of prosperity is at hand. There has never been an hour in the history of the world, from the days of Nineveh and Babylon until those of New York and Chicago, of London and Berlin, and of Calcutta and Bombay, when people were not saying precisely this thing. There have always been times of too much expansion succeeded by depression in the money market; there have always been those who have looked enviously on the indulgences of the rich which they never hoped to share, and there have always been the pessimists who have gone about with shaking heads and doleful speech. Yet the skies have always been blue, the sun and moon have kept their appointed way, brave hearts have surmounted difficulties, and life has had its sunshine oftener than its storm. Here we are in the early beginning of a New Year. It is to be a good year, a year of happiness in our homes, of mutual love and confidence, of advancement in the Lord's kingdom, a year of valor, hope and fruition. Away with discouragement! Each morning as we waken let us welcome the day with thanksgiving for the night's rest, and at each day's end let us be glad that the dear ones are with us, that the young folks are care-free and merry, and that no burden is too heavy to be borne if the great Burden-Bearer helps us to carry it. Those who continually prate of hard times are responsible to some extent for their continuance. The right attitude of mind is to thank God and take courage!

An Industrial Commission Asked

WHEN President Taft was in New York recently, he was waited upon by a delegation representing a body of prominent citizens, and urged to appoint a Federal Commission to consider industrial conditions. This is an outcome of the McNamara case, the trial of which disclosed the fact that the antagonism existing between labor and capital was of a nature so aggressive and full of menace that it affected the whole country and could only be satisfactorily investigated by the Federal authorities. The delegation urged that the Commission should be modeled after the Anthracite Coal Commission, and have powers equal to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The suggestion is timely and will, no doubt, receive attention. There should be some authoritative tribunal before which the whole matter at issue could be thoroughly threshed out. It would be a far-reaching inquiry, but there are immense possibilities of good resulting from it. Nothing can condone or extenuate the resort to criminal violence, to which certain labor leaders have been consenting parties, if not participants; but if both sides were fairly presented, and if the Commission were to sit as a High Court of Labor, clothed with sufficient power to enforce its findings, the disturbed atmosphere would be cleared and a better feeling would take the place of the present bitter antagonism. We believe such a Commission would be welcomed by all parties. By all means let both sides be heard, and let the responsibility for existing conditions be put where it properly belongs.

The Playfulness of Theodore

OUR versatile fellow-citizen, Colonel Roosevelt, continues to emerge from his statesmanlike retirement with encouraging frequency and to "do things" that make lively reading for the newspapers. Without his strenuous personality and the kindly interest he takes in public affairs—in the intervals of serious editorial work on the Outlook and spells of hermit-like seclusion at Oyster Bay—such matters as a Peace movement or a Presidential campaign would be tame, vapid, monotonous. Fearing that the recent Peace banquet in New York might prove a rather dull function, and being naturally a newsmaker, he benevolently decided to interject into the proceedings something that would prevent the diners from being bored by platitudinous speeches. His letter to Mr. Bloomer, criticizing the President, opposing the ratification of the Peace treaties as illogical and hypocritical and all the rest of it, was cleverly designed as a true Rooseveltian bombshell—such a missile as the fun-loving Colonel delights in launching at friend or foe with equal impartiality. That it exploded prematurely and nobody cared, and that the dinner was saved by a rather narrow margin, was simply a misadventure. Such things happen occasionally in the life of every strenuous statesman. It made big news anyway, and put the Colonel right in the spotlight for a whole brief day, besides keeping several hundred rather timid people, including all the foreign ambassadors, away from a good course dinner. As for the poor little Peace Dove, she disappeared from her perch right over the President's chair and hasn't been seen since!

But the campaign is young yet. There will be lots of opportunities for the Colonel to make lively news between now and Convention time. What he may or may not do in his playful moods—now that he is likely to be a Presidential candidate—we can only conjecture. It should not be forgotten that there is a great host of Americans who admire Roosevelt's courage, his patriotism, and his unimpeachable integrity in public affairs, who will hail his entrance into the lists. There are tremendous possibilities open to one so resourceful. Even now, in calm, reflective moments, we seem to hear the Colonel—with characteristic open smile and cautionary finger on lip—saying in sibilant, delighted tones: "Ssh! Not a word! Not one word!"

Russia an Anachronism

RUSSIA'S premature march on Persia's capital seems to have been suddenly halted if not abandoned. She has exacted a "bloody toll" at Tabriz, in accordance with her threat of teaching the practically helpless Persians "a lesson long to be remembered." It has been a spectacle for the whole world to observe the deliberate manner in which the Czar's government, which claims to be Christian, has vindicated its reputation for cruelty by shooting down defenseless women and children in the streets of Tabriz, hanging the native clergy, and sending prisoners in batches to be executed after a summary court-martial. Truly, Russia has taught Persia a lesson; but in doing so she has added one more dark and hideous chapter to her long record of crimes against human liberty which can never be forgotten. She is a ghastly anachronism—a power still medieval in her tyrannous and barbarous methods of dealing with her enemies. "Scratch a Russian and you will find a Tartar" is as true to-day as when it was first uttered in the Napoleonic campaigns.

Let Us Be Sensible

ONE of the New York weeklies made a feature in its elaborate Christmas number of a poem from the pen of a woman writer who has won some degree of literary fame. It may appear somewhat ungallant to attack this bit of verse, but it contains so flagrant an example of the kind of loose thinking which is prevalent nowadays that a rebuke and a warning are certainly deserved. It is a pity, too, because many of the lines are strong and wholesome, though one can hardly help fearing that in her disdain of creeds the writer would go too far and let slip some things that neither the church nor the world can spare from its thinking. Her clarion call to sympathy and sacrifice and service is good and true. But how can any sane man or woman write such nonsense as this:

> And sobs will sound forever through his laughter,
> Until he knows that He himself is Christ.

Now here is sheer idiocy. No man will ever be Christ. Many people are being pushed off from this foundation stone of clear thinking: there can never be any loss or blurring of personal identity in human or divine relationships. The Buddhists have the weird idea of Nirvana—the state in which the soul loses its identity and becomes absorbed in the personality of God. Christian Scientists have revived the old fallacy of Monism—that there is only one essence, and that essence is God, of which all persons are little pieces. Mark Twain aptly pointed out that the Christian Science formulæ sound as well repeated backward as forward.

But sane thinking proceeds on the basis that I am I and you are you and God is God. There can never be any merging of personalities which changes one person into another. Love is a relationship between two persons, not a blending of two persons into one. The phrase is used sometimes, but can only be figurative. Two people may love each other so that they may be said to be one; but they do not become one person. They become a union, a pair, an amalgam, but each personality remains forever distinct.

Christ is a real person; he is in the world to-day. Lyman Abbott declares that the prime fact of Christianity is "the perpetual presence of a great personality." Christ is at hand; he is mingling with humanity; he is a Saviour, a friend; he comes to dwell with, we may even say in, the human soul, as two people may live together in the same house. But Christ is always Christ and each individual human soul is always an individual human soul.

Paul used many strong phrases to express his union with Christ, but none of them could be made, even by the most reckless interpretation, to infer that he thought he was Christ. His old, self-willed life had perished, had been crucified with Christ, but there was never in his mind the slightest confusion of his own personality with that of Christ, never any feeling that his personality had become the personality of Christ. "Christ liveth in me," was his highest thought. Martin Luther said if one should knock at his breast asking who dwelt within he would say: "Not Martin Luther, but Jesus Christ." But he would have been horrified if any one had thought that he meant to imply that he was Christ.

Paul declared that Christians have received the spirit of "power, and of love, and of a sound mind." Let us, at all costs, keep sane.

General Notes

—THE SUDDEN DEATH OF Mr. Alfred Tennyson Dickens, eldest son of the great novelist, is a peculiarly sad event. His life seems to have been one of keen disappointment, though his character and gifts appear to have been fine and noteworthy. At twenty years of age he went to Australia, where he engaged in the business of stock-raising. In this enterprise he first made and then lost a fortune of something like $100,000. Here also his wife was killed in a runaway accident. Two years ago he came to England to lecture on his father's life and work, and last autumn visited this country to continue his platform work. He lectured in various cities, and returned to New York only a few days before his death, which occurred at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday, January 2. The disappointment of his personal friends and the friends and admirers of his father is especially acute, because plans were being made for a celebration of Charles Dickens's birthday in Carnegie Hall on February 7, at which Mr. Alfred Tennyson Dickens was to have delivered an address.

—LATE IN DECEMBER the War Department at Washington, D. C., received a dispatch from Major General Bell, commanding the Philippines division of the army, stating that the outbreak of Moros at Dajo had been completely suppressed and that 300 hostiles with their wives and families had surrendered. The most seriously injured man among our forces was Captain John W. Barker of the Third Infantry. Captain Barker is a native of New York. He graduated from West Point in 1894, and has served mainly in the Ninth and Third Infantry. An interesting feature of the capture of the Moros was the collection of rifles that was taken from them. They embraced modern guns, old-fashioned United States carbines, several tower muskets probably 150 years old, and several muskets branded with the letters C. S. A.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, January 17, 1912

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	50
Religious Life in Magyarland (Illustrated) By Rev. Francis E. Clark, LL.D.	51, 58
Foundation Principles. Sermon By Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D.	52
Only a Tramp By Eugene Thwing	53
China's First President a Christian (Illustrated)	54
Peace Banqueters Support the Treaties (Illustrated)	55
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	56
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	57
The Beef Trust on Trial (Illustrated)	58
The Reckoning (Illustrated) By Alice Garland Steele	59, 66
When the Year Is Young (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	60
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D D.	61, 64, 65
Prominent People Talked About (Portraits)	62
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	63
Monsoon Rains Fail In India By Justin E. Abbott	67
As to Mortgages on Real Estate By S. W. Wells	68
Young People's Societies	69
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	70

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

For Advancement of Science

THE executive council of the American Association for the Advancement of Science held its sessions in nineteen halls and assembly rooms all over Washington. It is estimated that nearly four thousand of the most eminent scientists of the country were present and took part in the meetings. They remained at the capital until December 31. Among those present and taking part in the exercises were Dr. L. O. Howard of the Department of Agriculture, Frank W. Clark, president of the Washington Academy of Science, Robert S. Woodward, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, Professor H. F. Nachtrieb of the University of Minnesota, Professor Henry B. Ward of the University of Illinois, Professor J. McK. Cattell of Columbia University, Professor F. L. Stevens of the University of Porto Rico, Professor H. S. Fairchild of the University of Rochester, Professor C. H. Herty of the University of North Carolina, Professor Simon H. Gage of Cornell, M. A. Bigelow of Columbia, Professor Henry E. Summers of Iowa State College, A. L. Roach of Hyde Park, Mass., Dr. George M. Kober, of the Georgetown Medical School, Dr. Herbert Osborn, Professor J. Pease Norton of Yale, and Professor Duncan Johnson of Johns Hopkins University. Among the multitude of subjects discussed at the meetings were sanitation in the home and country at large; observance of the laws of health for the individual and society; the Great White Plague that breathes its withering breath in the faces of so many of our inhabitants; infant mortality; pure milk for babes; playgrounds for children, and the protection of our ports against the depopulating pestilence of other countries. What a glorious age of scientific advancement is this in which we live, and how much it contributes to the health, happiness and usefulness of men, and how strangely is a divine providence making it tributary to the progress of Christ's kingdom! The advancement of knowledge is pictured in a figure by the wise man:

By knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches. (Prov. 24:4.)

Well-Known Scientists Who Were in Attendance at the Washington Sessions of the American Association for the Advancement of Science

Brother's Plea Moves Judge

Three Train children, named Ernest, Tessie, and Anthony, aged ten, eight and seven respectively, were marched up to Recorder McGovern of Hoboken, N. J., on the charge of stealing 52 electric lights from Public School No. 3, and selling to a man for $1.80. Ernest confessed that he alone was responsible for the theft, and the judge said to him: "I guess we shall have to send him to the Hill for a time. I am sorry." Then the shrill voice of seven-year-old Anthony piped up as he put his arm across the shoulder of his erring brother: "Say, judge, you ain't goin' to send me brudder to Snake Hill? You know what dat would mean. He'd go wrong fer good if he went to de Hill. He's sorry he took dem lights, but Ernest never had no money and our old lady has to work." There was a craning of necks as the boy's voice rose higher and higher, until it broke into a whimper. Then Anthony left the side of Ernest and ran to the side of the stern recorder. He dropped to his knees and wound his arms around the judicial legs. Before the judge and the court could recover from their astonishment, Anthony began another plea for his brother. "Please, judge, don't send him up. He's bigger'n me. I'll go fer 'im. Lemme go to de Hill fer Ernest." The recorder leaned forward and regarded the kneeling lad for some moments before he unwound Anthony's arms from his legs. Then he recovered his proper judicial sternness: "Anthony Train, go back there and stand by your brother. Now, Ernest, I will not send you to jail for stealing those electric lights, and it is because of that plea of your little brother. He is seven years old, but he is a man. He is so much more of a man than you can ever hope to be that I will parole you in the custody of your younger brother and we shall see if you can behave. Anthony, you are a mere boy, but I feel I can trust the prisoner in your care. Report to me every Thursday morning until further notice. Now go home." The heroism of this little street urchin in offering to go to jail instead of his guilty brother, and his pathetic plea for him, recall the fact that our Elder Brother did suffer the penalty in our behalf, and that he makes continual intercession for us.

Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. (Heb. 7:25.)

Party Planned, Funeral Held

Miss Fannie Platt Van Cott, only daughter of a former fire chief of Brooklyn, sent out invitations for a Christmas party at her home on December 23. Two hours after she had mailed the invitations she suddenly expired in one of the rooms of the Girls' High School, and her funeral was held on the very day she had set for the Christmas reception. Miss Van Cott was a member of the senior class and would have been graduated from the Girls' High School on her sixteenth birthday, January 26 next, and would have been the youngest girl to have finished her four years' course at the high school. Her friends say that overstudy taxed her body and left it an easy prey to the stroke that took her away. She had such fondness for her studies, and such an ambition to excel in them, that she hardly took time to eat or sleep. There are some children who are naturally stupid and do not like to study, there are others who are bright but are easily diverted to play or amusement, and not a few are overambitious about their school work and sink down as physical wrecks as the penalty. Though Miss Van Cott was a good Christian girl and in her translation was graduated into a higher university, it was a pitiful thing for so beautiful, competent and promising a person to die at Christmas time, to which she had looked with so much joy, and to die as the penalty to her determination to excel in the best things. The Preacher has described the depressing effect of overstudy on the body.

Much study is a weariness of the flesh. (Eccles. 12:12.)

Painter in Old Age

Rear-Admiral Charles Henry Davis, who retired from active service in the United States Navy four years ago, has thirty-two paintings on exhibition in the Corcoran Art Gallery at Washington, D. C., which is one of the finest public galleries in America and one in which the knights of the palette and brush consider it quite a triumph to have their pictures exhibited. To a singular genius he has added painstaking industry, and has pushed himself up into an enviable place among the best landscape painters in water colors in this country. At a time in life when he was supposed to have finished his mission, and to be allowed to go back and sit down in a corner and be very still, the old hero of the Civil War and Spanish-American War appears as virile in his intellect as he was at thirty, and has become a master of art, reveling in a realm of beauty, and transferring the beauty from his own soul to canvas, to delight and bless his fellows. What a beautiful example this grizzled veteran and this delicate artist sets to old men who think there is nothing left for them to do. This strong, beautiful old man is thus described:

And thine age shall be clearer than the noon day; thou shalt shine fourth, thou shalt be as the morning. (Job 11:17.)

Fewer Immigrants Coming

The tide of immigrants to the United States is lower now than it has been since 1908, when only 550,758 came to and 654,238 went from our shores. The nearly half a million foreigners who went from us this year is 100,000 more than last year, but is about the average of emigration for the past five years. The officials say that Canada and the Argentine Republic are taking thousands of the families that would otherwise have come to the United States, and that the removal of English-speaking, better-class farmer families from the Eastern and Middle Western States to the newly opened rich lands on the northern side of the Canadian border represents a large portion of our loss for the present year. Most of the aliens seeking employment in this country now come from Mediterranean ports, but more of them have returned than have arrived during the year. The following comparative figures for arrivals and departures of third-class passengers may be of interest:

Year.	Arrivals.	Departures
1911.....	781,058	486,794
1910.....	1,102,839	359,574
1909.....	1,068,422	280,628
1908.....	550,758	654,238
1907.....	1,170,295	537,511
1906.....	1,329,585	333,505

The figures for 1911 are incomplete, as they are only computed to December 1. It is just as well that we halt a little in our immigration that we may have an opportunity to better assimilate the elements we take into our body politic. It is the best blood from the best nations that has made our country what it is, but the conglomerate elements have had to be Americanized to make the great commonwealth we have. We have been hardly able to Americanize the million a year that have been coming to our shores. It is a matter of congratulation also that some very undesirable and very dangerous characters are going and being sent back to the lands from which they came. Migration from the instinct of self-support, of avarice, ambition or religion is tributary to a better civilization. The prophet makes reference to this fact:

Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. (Dan. 12:4.)

Reindeer as Food Product

Mr. William F. Lopp, of the government service, has just returned from a 14,000 mile tour of inspection through Alaska on behalf of the bureau which has especial care of the reindeer problem in the northern peninsula. He is quite enthusiastic on the subject. He says that reindeer meat from Alaska may be a food common to the American table in the near future to supplement a reduced beef supply. He said: "A commercial shipment of reindeer meat, the first made into this country, has just been received at Seattle. In twenty-five years from now at the present rate of increase there should be 3,000,000 prime beef reindeer in Alaska on which the people of this country can depend for much of their flesh diet. Reindeer can be raised more cheaply than cattle because they will thrive on wastes so barren that even goats would starve there. There are 400,000 square miles of frozen tundra in Alaska fit for nothing else, but which as reindeer ranches would provide abundant pasturage for 10,000,000 of the animals." If Mr. Lopp is true in his prophecies, it will aid greatly in settling the question of a natural meat supply, and of meat prices. In the Mosaic dispensation the members of the deer family were permitted as food, among them being

The hart, and the roebuck, and the fallow deer. (Deut. 14:5.)

THE BEEF TRUST ON TRIAL

GREAT interest is aroused over the trial of the indicted "beef packers" in Chicago. The effort of the defendants to take the case directly to the Supreme Court without going through the ordeal of trial before the United States District Court in Illinois failed, and the trial is going forward according to schedule.

The public is wondering if it is about to find out some of the causes for the "high cost of living"; capitalists and monopolists are waiting to learn how seriously the Sherman law, with its latest interpretation by the Supreme Court, is going to interfere with business; officers and employees of the packing companies, both inside and outside the "trust" are wondering what is going to happen to the meat business; stock raisers are wondering what will be the price of beef "on the hoof" after the agitation has subsided; and ten anxious men are wondering whether or not they will have to go to jail.

Along near the beginning of the trial startling testimony was given by Mr. Henry Veeder, son of Albert H. Veeder, attorney for Swift & Company. The elder Mr. Veeder told something of the operations of a mysterious association of which his son was the secretary and which met weekly to discuss the meat market. The younger Mr. Veeder followed his father to the witness stand and gave specific information about the work of this association. As secretary he rented a suite of nine or ten rooms in the Counselman Building at Chicago, but the association itself had no name, and no signs appeared on the doors. Representatives from eight large beef concerns met every Tuesday afternoon in these rooms and determined the questions of shipment and prices. Each firm was represented by a letter, inferentially to keep the operations secret, and the selling territory was separated into districts also designated by letters. Advices were sent out to the various firms from this office directing the size of the shipments to be made to the various districts during the coming week. In case any firm represented "overshipped" it was fined for the offense. Apparently the most serious items of the evidence so far presented are those which show that the interested firms were directed to keep prices up to a certain margin in the various territories. If this evidence and testimony can be sustained it will substantiate the government's contention that the combination was unlawful.

A Scene in the Courtroom During the Trial of the Accused Meat Packers

The particular association of whose existence and work Henry Veeder testified continued its activities from 1893 to 1896. Testimony was given that there was a break of two years in the operations of the company, but this was subsequently discredited by letters showing that its activities were continued without serious interruption until 1903. In that year the National Packing Company was formed by the merging of thirteen companies into one organization with a capitalization of $15,000,000.

Special interest is shown in the matter of arrangements for the sale of by-products. The defense fought vigorously to exclude testimony relating to the operations of the Kenwood Company and the Ætna Trading Company which are alleged to have been organizations under the control of the packers for the disposal of oleo and casings. Judge Carpenter, before whom the hearing is being conducted, ruled that the testimony regarding these concerns was relevant and should be admitted. The government claimed that the profits of the Kenwood Company in one year amounted to 285.7 per cent. of its capital stock, and that those of the Ætna Company were proportionately large.

Mr. Buckingham, in his opening statement for the defense, claimed that the actual profit on each head of cattle is not more than $1.50, one-fourth of a cent per pound on the dressed beef, and one-eighth of a cent per pound on the gross weight. An animal weighing one thousand pounds will, he stated, dress out in beef about five hundred and fifty pounds, the rest going to waste products. He contended that the defendants have earned less than 10 per cent. yearly on their investment and that the buying and selling are actually on a competitive basis, at least fifteen hundred other concerns being in the field.

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN MAGYARLAND

Continued from page 51

religion. Religious wars succeeded, in which the Catholics were often successful, and Hungary slipped from her proud position as one of the first Protestant Powers of Europe, and is now predominantly, though not overwhelmingly, Roman Catholic and Greek Catholic.

Such in brief is the history of the people of Magyarland, and here, as I have said, are millions of our brothers and sisters, our co-religionists of the Protestant faith, and here are millions, too, of our future fellow-Americans of all faiths, Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants.

The census shows that there are some ten or twelve millions of Greek and Roman Catholics, two million and a half of the Reformed Calvinistic faith, a million and a half of Lutherans and a scant hundred thousand Unitarians.

The Reformed Church is the great evangelical force of Hungary, its adherents being pure Magyars, while the Lutherans are largely Germans, who have adopted Hungary as their fatherland.

These Calvinists, whose doctrines and church government are much like the Presbyterians, are not only a great religious, but a great political and patriotic force as well. True to the tenets of their noble religious leader, they have stood for liberty and freedom, and for the rights of individual conscience, as sturdily as would old John Calvin himself.

It was in the great Reformed Church of Debreczin in Eastern Hungary, an enormous building that holds some four thousand people, that Kossuth, in 1849, proclaimed the independence of Hungary, and her freedom from the rule of the Hapsburgs. In the Protestant college near by, Kossuth and his co-laborers for liberty drew up their declaration of independence. Their old college hall is as sacred to Hungarians as Independence Hall is to us.

I felt honored a few weeks ago to speak to a great audience from Kossuth's pulpit in this same hall on Christian Endeavor, and what it might do to promote among Hungarian youth the freedom wherewith Christ makes us free.

Some few of my readers are old enough to remember perhaps Kossuth's years of exile in America. What a furor of enthusiasm he aroused by his eloquent English as he told of the wrongs of Hungary and her brave fight for freedom!

I wonder if our American people to-day are as much in love with the ideals of Kossuth, which indeed were the ideals of Washington and Lincoln, as were our fathers in the middle of the last century. Would we spring to the side of liberty as they rallied around Kossuth, and as Samuel G. Howe and other patriotic Americans threw themselves into the struggle of the Greeks for freedom?

Probably no foreigner ever visited America who stirred so deeply the hearts of our people, or who was received with such wild acclaim as was Hungary's hero, Louis Kossuth.

It was my privilege at another Christian Endeavor meeting in one of the Reformed churches of Budapest, to meet a niece of Kossuth who, because of her relationship, shared her uncle's exile and lived no less than ten years in America, a country for whose political and religious life she has the greatest esteem and affection to-day.

Let us visit together, before we finish this article, one of the great Reformed churches of Hungary, and join our brothers in their common worship. We will choose the Calvin Church, which stands at the head of Calvin Square in the very heart of Budapest, Hungary's capital, and one of the most beautiful and enterprising cities of the world. The pastor of this church is Dr. A. Szabo, known as a scholar, preacher and author throughout Hungary. He has just published the first volume on foreign missions in the Hungarian language. As president of the Hungarian Christian Endeavor Union and editor of the Hungarian Endeavor paper, he has a wide influence and is greatly beloved in many parts of Hungary.

As we enter the great church we find a large audience already assembled, so large indeed that all cannot find seats, and scores, if not hundreds, will stand throughout the service.

The church is very long and very high, with two lofty galleries in the rear coming half way toward the pulpit, which is ascended by a flight of spiral stairs, until almost a dizzy height, on the level of the galleries, is reached. The service begins. All rise and with clasped hands and closed eyes the people join in the pastor's invocation. A short passage of Scripture is read, and during this, too, the people reverently stand. A hymn is given out and Professor Kovats, a gifted choir leader, marshals a large chorus of Christian young people, and leads the congregation in splendid, hearty singing. For the more familiar social meetings many of our own Gospel hymns, translated into Hungarian, are sung, and Hallelujah, the new Christian Endeavor hymn book, is very popular, having passed through several editions. For this service, however, the more stately hymns of the church are used, and right lustily and harmoniously are they sung.

Pastor Szabo, whether he preaches his own thoughts or interprets what another says, as he translated for me on many occasions, is always earnest, forceful and eloquent, and possesses that greatest gift of a good interpreter, the power of throwing himself into another's thought, making it his own, and speaking it out with a vigor and eloquence which possibly the original lacked. Thus the service goes on for perhaps an hour and a half, the patient audience largely standing before the service is over, and crowding up around the pulpit on all sides, the better to hear in the long Gothic aisles.

There are two thousand such Reformed churches in Hungary. Not all, nor indeed many of them, so large as the one in the Calvin Square of Budapest; not all of them with such earnest, evangelical and evangelistic pastors as Dr. Szabo, for there is a large "liberal" element in the Reformed Hungarian Church; but all stand for the Bible as the Word of God, and for our Lord and Saviour as God's only begotten Son. They stand for freedom of worship and for liberty of conscience, and are a great element in the saving salt of Hungary.

I might take you into many another similar church and show you Pastor Kovats (this is the Hungarian for our familiar "Smith") of Szatmar, and Pastor Uray of Debreczin, and Pastor Nyary of Pecs, and, in all, we should find the same earnestness of purpose and devotion of spirit as in the older pastor of Calvin Square. These are our co-religionists, our allies, our brethren of this historic land of the Danube. Let us join our prayers with theirs that His kingdom may come in Hungary as well as America, and that His will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Finer Than Anticipated

The Bible premium came all right and in best condition. I can scarcely tell you how I am pleased with it. It is finer and more complete than I had anticipated; therefore I shall find much comfort in its use. Also I have received the beautiful Almanac. It is exceptionally good—so very full and complete. The whole family praise it for its general information on so many subjects. Please accept my fullest thanks for them both, as I highly prize them. I like the paper, and recommend it to every one and everywhere. MRS. SARA J. COOPER.

Cincinnati, O.

THE RECKONING

By ALICE GARLAND STEELE

FROM the darkness of the alley Blinker's white face looked to the glare of the distant avenue. His breath was coming in gasps; the hoarse cries of his pursuers were still tingling in his ears—they had been like bloodhounds on the track—they would scent him yet! The thought struck the quivering keynote of fear—they would scent him yet!

He shrank back into the scanty recess of a decaying doorway. He must foot it again, there was no other way. His hand crept up the rough paneling; it was dingy, splintered in places from aimless missiles; only a crumbling partition, a thing of wood, yet it might as well have been a stone wall! When they entered the alley, it would keep him a target, without hope of release, and the missiles would not be aimless.

Blinker, as he thought of the fiery faces that had met his backward glance, shuddered and for a moment grew still, with taut, stiffened muscles—through the medium of distance they loomed none the less terrible. If they got him this time it would be all up, all up—when the world was budding green, and the blood ran in his veins like the sap in young trees! Blinker was still young enough to throb at the quickening touch of spring.

He leaned forward, jerking at his breath. No one had ever told him that the way of the transgressor was hard. He would have described it himself in a better manner—it was ticklish. As fresh sounds came to him from the black spaces beyond he felt that this was the climax—the biggest fight, so far, in the game—and no one could tell yet which side would win!

A relentless "halloo" pursued him from the avenue beyond; it struck him like the thrust of an angry hand. Red lights, that wavered in circles, danced for a moment before his eyes. He measured his arms, drew a savage breath—and bolted.

It was like a journey on wings; he never felt the earth, save when he tripped on some cobble or uneven scrap of pavement and fell on his knees, to be up again as soon, fighting for breath, with the stars swirling madly above him in the night sky! They were reeling, those stars—they were drunk with the winds of heaven, the spring winds, as he was drunk with a mad desire to escape—to escape! He forgot what—he only remembered that he must, that he was tracked, that he must fly on faster, farther, till somewhere the world showed him a dark place to hide in!

He drew up with a sudden start. The lights of the Bowery twinkled wickedly before his eyes; he had circled the earth to turn up at the starting-point! He was back, almost on the brink—not five blocks from where it had happened!

He stood for a moment stunned. He saw it all over again—the faltering figure of the old man, the sudden blow that had keeled him over, the gathering crowd, black and angry, with its cries of shame from as hardened throats as his. The old man! And to find no money after all, only a gold ticker hung on a black ribbon! With absent fingers he felt for it in his blouse; it was there safe enough, a hard circle of yellow metal; perhaps in the end it would pay! His eyes wandered uncertainly up and down the narrow avenue. It was filled with sauntering figures, the denizens of the quarter; some of them walking with the stealthy steps of habitual crime, some of them staggering under a burden of cheap beer, others, girls and women, leading little children—for childhood's day there did not end with night.

He pulled his hat over his eyes, and squared his jaw—he was braced to dare it out! He mingled with a group hurrying southward, carelessly pushing into the heart of it. Nobody noticed; curiosity was dead there—there was no vital interest in anything unless it was the brass buttons of some officer of the law.

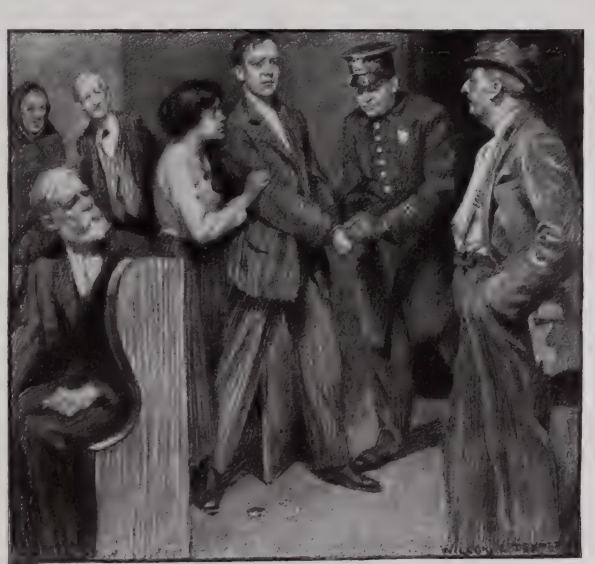
He began to breathe more naturally; he even got back to his old swagger—the Game was as easy as this! But his eyes were startled into terror again. On the corner, a remnant of the crowd that had drawn to look at him was still standing, and in their center, talking and gesticulating, he saw the figure of his old-time friend, Tapsy Magin! For months he had been his deadliest enemy; there would be no quarter now!

Blinker, in the very jaws of defeat, staggered forward; then, with a low growl, he pulled up and darted back the way he had come. The earth was cruel—there was no place for him to hide in!

He kept to the inner side, passing lighted shop-windows with furtive eyes. Then, suddenly, he saw a way of escape—there was the Mission across the street, its rude door wide open, its meek-faced exhorter on the rickety steps, inviting to the feast within. Blinker laughed into the night—he had won! He would be safe at last. With easy gait he swung across to the other side, and went boldly in.

Come while yet there is room!
Come while yet there is room!

the plaintive cry echoed through the dingy hall. He took off his hat, rumpling his hair with a nervous hand, then he found himself on the very last row of a line of creaking benches, listening to a girl singing a Gospel hymn. Two gas jets, shivering under a draft from the open door, framed her face in a circle of wavering light: a delicate face, with something weary about the mouth. Her brown eyes lighted on him for a moment, then she went gravely on. Some one said "Glory!" It was a man across the aisle, with white hair—an old man. The sight brought a sickening inward vision of that other old man! A woman next to him handed him a hymn book.



"'Don't you care, my girl. I beat 'em out. It was n't as if they took me. I give myself up—I'll pay the reckonin'!'"

He took it awkwardly, the little black notes dancing before his eyes, and still he was listening to the girl's sweetly compelling tones—"Come while yet there is room—"

Presently she finished. She stepped down from the little platform and came modestly along the aisle. Before Blinker realized it she was sitting quietly at his side on the last row. He held his breath—to be so near such a white, young thing!

They were beginning another hymn. He grew ill at ease, shuffling his feet on the bare board floor, then, with a red flush on his forehead, he held out the book in his hand:

"Sing," he stammered, "I dunno how!"

She took it smilingly, holding it that he might look on too. "Ain't it a good meetin'?" she whispered. "There's been two sinners reclaimed already, there—down at the front—next to the woman that's cryin'."

A faint smile crept over his hard lips.

"That feller? He's loaded—he ain't no idea what he's doin'—I know him—he's Binky Short—he's been saved a couple of times, but he don't stay so!"

Her face fell into pained lines. "You mustn't—" she said, "the Lord's reclaimed him—he'll say so in a while, when the testifyin' begins."

The meeting went on; the girl listened attentively, her face lighting up with the fervor of her emotions. Blinker sat back watching her. A sense of peace, of security, crept over him—he could almost have gone to sleep. He smiled; hiding in a Mission—a strange place—they would never look for him there! He had fought shy of them all his life, till he had needed one to save his skin. At the thought he laughed under his breath—but the girl heard him.

"Don't," she whispered, "it ain't right!"

He stopped, strangely rebuked. In a new mood, with a desire to please her, he kept his eyes on the platform. The speaker had an insistent voice, with something sharp about it; it cut through the outer covering of Blinker's hardened mind—it made him think.

"Lord, Lord, turn some sinner to the way to-night—some one to-night! Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand! Ye say safety when there is no safety—the fires of hell are scorching your souls!"

He sat down and there was a sigh of relief; it had been short and vital. Some one began a prayer—it was a woman, and her voice rang tremulous with the message of repentance. Blinker began to fidget—it got on his nerves! He sat upright, staring ahead of him into space. He felt a touch on his arm.

"Why don't you pray?"

The girl was looking at him strangely. Suddenly a light swept over her face. "You're a sinner! Lord help you! You're a sinner!"

The woman had stopped. The girl rose courageously. "There's a sinner back here. I ask your prayers for his soul!"

"A sinner!" It was whispered over the little assemblage.

"Lord bless you, brother, stand up!" The white-haired man was looking his way.

Blinker grew red, hot, indignant. He sat doggedly in his seat. The girl watched him, tears in her eyes. She struck up a hymn: "'Whiter than snow."

Blinker frowned heavily; there was no such thing! Snow was dirty, sodden; it lay all winter in a coating of frozen mire over the streets of the city! Yet still the girl's voice trembled above him: "Whiter than snow; yes, whiter than snow."

While the rest took up the chorus she leaned closer.

"Ain't you sorry? Haven't you done anything to be sorry about?"

He laughed in her face. His hands were working convulsively. It was terrible—terrible. He could have struck her sweet eyes to dim the searchlight she was flashing over his soul!

She put out her hand. "Don't!" she cried, "don't! oh, aren't you sorry? God, make him sorry!"

Suddenly she bent forward, sobbing, her head on the bench in front. It was more than Blinker could stand. He touched her roughly.

"Shet up—will you? I—I—hang it—I am sorry—since I seen you!"

She shook the tears from her eyes. "Oh," she cried, "oh, thank the Lord for that!" She leaped to her feet. "There's a sinner here who's sorry. Oh, pray for him!"

The platform speaker stepped over to the edge. "Brother, stand up!"

Blinker felt the muscles of his face twitching. The girl stretched out her hand; he put his cold fingers in hers and she drew him slowly to his feet. He paused for one terrible instant—the lights were dancing, his head was swimming; there were strange wet circles about his eyes; he felt as if a hand were reaching down and clutching his heart! Something dropped from his blouse with a metallic thud—the sound opened the floodgates.

"Yes," he cried wildly, "I'm up—I'm on my feet—I'm a sinner—a black sinner! I stole from an old man. I knocked him down. I saw his white head—I—God forgive me!" He stopped short, breathing heavily—he could hear the sound in the tense stillness—then, before his staring eyes, he saw a figure, a man's figure, standing in the doorway—it was Tapsy Magin!

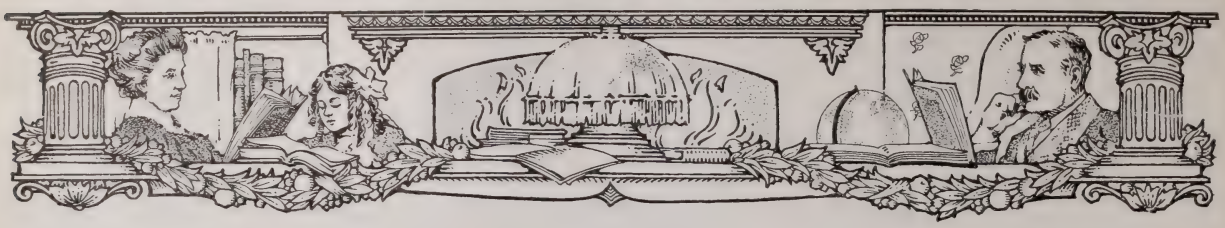
The girl was still holding his fingers. The touch put fire in his veins.

"Courage," she whispered, "courage! Tell it all!"

Blinker swayed uncertainly. He was like a weak tree under the sweep of a storm. Then, his eyes on the face in the door, he went on, huskily, loudly, triumphantly: "It was an hour ago—the crowd came after me—I'd laid him low! I doubled on 'em—I beat 'em out—yes, I beat 'em out! I won square—I hid in here—it was safe enough, I could

Continued on page 66

WHEN THE YEAR IS YOUNG



A New Bugle Note

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE public schools of Los Angeles, Calif., are sounding a bugle note in a practical advance in the education of girls. They are giving the girls instruction all along the line of future womanly duty and opportunity, beginning with the deportment of young girls during courtship, and going forward into the details of home management, mothercraft and household industries in general. It would seem that boys as well as girls should share in training of this kind. Our young people are taught many things in the schools which do them little good either in the way of intellectual training or of utility after leaving school.

The fundamental necessity in education is the bringing out of mental powers, the building up of character and the imparting of adequate preparation for the demands sure to be made upon the individual when childhood is past. The interesting feature in this course is the fact that pedagogy is concerning itself about the home and taking for granted as desirable the early marriage of young men and women. The tendency has latterly been to defer marriage until the first bloom of youth and enthusiasm was over.

One portion of the Los Angeles curriculum has to do with keeping accounts, domestic economy, marketing and the payment of hired help. How much of what the girls learn in school about these important details they remember and assimilate, it is difficult to foretell. Some of the best housekeepers among our readers are aware that they entered upon the married state with little actual knowledge of housework, cooking, catering and all the rest that pertains to the ordinary home. Yet a bright, intelligent American girl who is conscientious, devoted to the husband of her choice and anxious to make a success of her homemaking, has often acquired all the needful information to take her steps steadily to success in the course of a very few weeks. There are those who can testify to a few mortifying blunders which were taken as occasions for improvement later on, but who are quite sure that they never made the same mistake a second time.

We recognize with pleasure and deep appreciation the consecration of the great body of school teachers to school children. Children between the ages of seven and fifteen spend more daylight hours with their teachers than with their parents, and the stamp that they receive for life is often set upon them before they have arrived at the opening of the teens. No body of people in our country work harder and more faithfully than our teachers, and to no others does the Republic owe so large a debt. If matrimony is to be taught as a profession by young women who are not yet married, many of whom are just out of college, we shall watch with interest the effect it may have on our future citizens. Fortunately for our boys and girls, they are in no danger in schools, either public or private, of falling into the hands of so hypocritical and despotic an ignoramus as the renowned Mr. Squeers, the principal of Dotheboys Hall in Nicholas Nickleby. Here is a famous passage: Nicholas is about to begin work as an usher or assistant teacher under Mr. Squeers.

"'This is the first class in English spelling and philosophy, Nickleby,' said Squeers, beckoning Nicholas to stand beside him. 'We'll get up a Latin one, and hand that over to you. Now, then, where's the first boy?'

"'Please, sir, he's cleaning the back parlor window,' said the temporary head of the philosophical class.

"'So he is, to be sure,' rejoined Squeers. 'We go upon the practical mode of teaching, Nickleby; the regular education system. C-l-e-a-n, clean, verb active, to make bright, to scour. W-i-n, win, d-e-r, winder. a casement. When the boy knows this out of book, he goes and does it. It's just the same principle in the use of the globes. Where's the second boy?'

"'Please, sir, he's weeding the garden,' replied a small voice.

"'To be sure,' said Squeers, by no means disconcerted. 'So he is. B-o-t, bot, t-i-n, tin, bottin, n-e-y, ney, bottinney, noun substantive, a knowledge of plants. When he has learned that bottinney means a knowledge of plants, he goes and knows 'em. That's our system, Nickleby. What do you think of it?'"

. . .

A Progressive Centenarian

MRS. PRISCILLA INSLEE, who celebrated her one hundredth birthday at her home in New Brunswick, N. J., on the twentieth of December, had a telephone installed in her dwelling a few days earlier than her gala anniversary. An active old lady, retaining sight and hearing and all her faculties unimpaired, Mrs. Inslee has given three rules for the defiance and conquest of Time: "Never worry, forget nerves, trust in God."

Knowing that many of her friends might not be able to call upon her on her birthday, she had the telephone brought in so that they might transmit their messages of congratulation by means of the wire. She has had little to do with illness in her long life, which has been spent almost wholly in Middlesex County, New Jersey, and she still has a hearty appetite, enjoys her food and eats what the rest of us do. Very likely Mrs. Inslee could add to her three rules another which erects a barrier against the encroachments of age. "Keep an open mind to the reception of new ideas, and count your friends among younger as well as older people."

THE SWEET STORY OF OLD

Reading the old, sweet story
With the love-light in her eyes,
There comes to her thought the glory
That flooded the midnight skies

When the drowsy sheep were fast asleep
In the fold of the upland plain,
When the angels sang together
And the shepherds heard the strain.

. . .

Precaution Against Colds

DURING the inclement season of winter, the period when storms are frequent and a thaw is as dangerous to health as a blizzard, it is well for every one to take precautions against what we call a cold. Never pass without attention the danger signal of a chill. Three-fourths of the people who are really ill from an established cold, a malady that usually runs its depressing course and takes its own time to depart, might rout the enemy by sending for their physician at the first intimation of chill. If no doctor is at hand and the sufferer has the courage to try an old-fashioned remedy familiar to our grandparents and bitter in the extreme, they may try the effect of a large cupful of hot boneset tea. This vigorous herb remedy is seldom ineffectual.

We take cold when our feet are unprotected, when we are weary and when we are mentally excited by trivialities which should be treated lightly instead of allowed to become burdensome. A fit of anger may be the precursor of a cold. The woman who takes daily exercise out of doors, dressed as one should be to face stormy weather, will usually be able to throw off the malefic germ which seizes on depleted vitality. Children should not be suffered to take cold at all. In these days the baby whose nap is taken out-of-doors in the coldest weather is a sturdy little being, who is seldom ill. The young girl on her way to a party, who carries her slippers in a bag and goes her way well shod, will not come home with a sore throat and a cough.

A sneeze should be interpreted very much as if it were a warning to look out for the locomotive. The gist of the matter is that the habit of life should be health. Interruptions in health are much oftener due to negligence or folly than to a providential dispensation. If we are comfortably housed and lead simple lives, illness should pass us by. The gospel of good health is in our cities carried to-day into the crowded schoolrooms, into the tenement quarters and into the homes of the very poor, by the friendly counsel and kind presence of the visiting nurse, who is as an angel of mercy quietly going on her daily rounds.

. . .

The Best Doll

The mother who prohibits the little girl from playing with her best doll, or who obliges the child to put her doll away on Saturday and not touch it again until Monday, is a much mistaken mother. She would not herself like to be deprived of caressing her dearest baby on any day in the week, and what would become of her were she forbidden to see the child, play with it, or care for it on the best day of the whole week?

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By CHARLES M. SHELDON

Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER XII—Continued

HERMOSA had come into the room and started to wheel her father up to the table. Sidney offered to do it.

"I'm used to this," Hermosa said. "I know just how."

"Then you can teach me."

"You pull this lever off the hind wheel to begin with. Then you push down, not too hard, on this back piece."

"I see. Let me do it, Miss Howard."

Hermosa stepped back and Sidney gently pushed the chair into the other room and up to the place Mrs. Ward indicated.

When they were all seated, there was a moment of quiet. It flashed over Sidney in that moment that these people were all Christians, members of the Church and believers in the religion into which he himself had been born. Under the impulse of the new restlessness and religious hunger that had lately beset him, he began to wonder vaguely whether in any way he might learn or receive what he yearned for here.

It was so vague and undefined that he did not know what it meant at the time. Afterwards, he remembered vividly every detail of that table scene.

They were saying softly together an old German grace. The blind man seemed to set the time for the rest, as they repeated with a gentle gladness:

For these and all thy gifts of love,
We give thee thanks and praise;
Look down, our Father, from above,
And bless us all our days. Amen.

"We feel proud to have you with us to-night," said Mrs. Ward, as she passed Sidney a plate of bread and butter sandwiches and asked him if he used sugar in his tea. If Sidney had been at Admiral Marston's, Mrs. Marston could not have said anything much different.

"I'm very glad to be here," said Sidney with growing interest in his surroundings. "Yes, please, one small lump."

"You will be popular here, Mr. Cushing, if you take small lumps of sugar, at the present price of it."

Hermosa spoke with a bluntness that seemed predetermined. What was she trying to do? Impress as deeply as she could on Sidney the poverty of the people he was with, and so widen the gulf between him and—

Athanasia's mother seemed a little embarrassed by Hermosa's remark. But she laughed and simply said, "Of course, sugar is unusually high at present. But it's like everything else. I have no doubt if we had to order a warship from the grocer it would come high."

"I am sure it would," said Sidney, laughing. "Warships are expensive luxuries. Very few folks can afford to have them on the table."

"Did you ever think," said Mr. Howard, "how it happens that sugar suddenly advances a cent or a cent and a half a pound, without any apparent reason?"

"I am afraid I don't give it much thought," said Sidney.

"The government fined a sugar trust over two years ago for cheating on its scales. The sum was over a million and a half and the trust has turned the amount over to the government. Now, after the lapse of a year and a half the trust begins to advance the price. Our anti-trust laws are curious things. We think perhaps we have curbed a trust by finding it guilty and ordering it to pay a fine. How easily we fool ourselves! The trust pays the fine and then advances the price. Who pays the fine in the end? We do. The people. The trust is a commercial organization. It deals in a necessity. Warships are not necessities, but sugar is. Oh, how patient the people are! How they seem to love to be fleeced and robbed and fooled! But I don't think they will forever."

Sidney sat still in astonishment. The company around the table seemed to take Mr. Howard's remarks as if they were daily used to them, as indeed they were. Hermosa smiled. Athanasia spoke up.

"Forever is a long time, isn't it, Mr. Howard?"

"Yes, but there's lots of it. There is plenty to go around."

"Isn't it nice to think of a time coming when we won't need either warships or sugar?" said Athanasia with perfect simplicity.

"We don't need warships now," said Mr. Howard in his quiet voice. How is it that blind people always have quiet voices? Even in the midst of his most earnest talk, Theodore Howard never raised the pitch of his voice. Sidney was fascinated as he listened to him.

"Has father been arguing with you, Mr. Cushing, over the subject of war?" Hermosa spoke not apologetically but with a trace of wistfulness as she looked from Sidney to her father. She was sitting beside him and Sidney noted the look of the girl's eyes as they turned to the figure in the wheel chair, and placed a hand for a moment on his arm.

"Father is deeply interested in the whole subject of war and its causes and its equipment and its cost. I don't believe there is a navy in the world that is not familiar to him. He has a wonderful memory for figures and it has been cultivated by his habit of thought. I wonder if you would like to hear father recite that poem of Robert Whitaker's called 'My Country'? Father, do you remember that? It came up in our study last week of social verses, and you thought it was so fine. I don't agree with it all, but—can you say it, father?"

Hermosa seemed to have something of the pride a parent might show in asking a precocious child to play or sing something. But the minute she spoke of Whitaker's poem, her father's face glowed with real enthusiasm.

"I can remember every word of it. It begins, 'My country is the world—' Wait, just a moment, Hermosa, until I get the rhythm."

They all sat silent in the dusk as the blind man with his lips moving slightly seemed to be going over with himself the different lines. And then he recited, clearly, the whole poem.

My Country

My country is the world; I count
No son of man my foe,
Whether the warm life currents mount
And mantle brows like snow,
Or red, or yellow, brown or black,
The face that into mine looks back.

My native land is Mother Earth,
And all men are my kin,
Whether of rude or gentle birth,
However steeped in sin;
Or rich, or poor, or great, or small,
I count them brothers, one and all.

My birthplace is no spot apart,
I claim no town nor State,
Love hath a shrine in every heart,
And whereso'er men mate
To do the right and say the truth,
Love evermore renews her youth.

My flag is the star-spangled sky,
Woven without a seam,
Where dawn and sunset colors lie,
Fair as an angel's dream;
The flag that still, unstained, untorn,
Floats over all of mortal born.

My party is all human-kind,
My platform, brotherhood;
I count all men of honest mind
Who work for human good,
And for the hope that gleams afar,
My comrades in this holy war.

My heroes are the great and good
Of every age and clime,
Too often mocked, misunderstood,
And murdered in their time,
But spite of ignorance and hate,
Known and exalted soon or late.

My country is the world; I scorn
No lesser love than mine,
But calmly wait that happy morn
When all shall own this sign,
And love of country, as of clan,
Shall yield to world-wide love of man.

Tommy: "What's this, Aunty? Soap?"
Aunt Mary: "Yes, dear; Ivory Soap."
Tommy: "What's it for?"
Aunt Mary: "To wash children with."
Tommy: "Won't it wash grown people, too?"
Aunt Mary: "Of course it will. Don't you see I've just used it myself?"
Tommy: "Is it Ivory Soap that makes you so pretty, Aunty?"
Aunt Mary: "Partly. I keep myself clean with Ivory Soap. Nature and pleasant thoughts do the rest."

Aunt Mary is right. Ivory Soap will keep you clean.
Nature and pleasant thoughts will do the rest.

It floats; it is pure; it contains no "free" alkali; these are the reasons—the three very substantial reasons—for the superiority of Ivory Soap.

Ivory Soap . . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

CHAPTER XIII

There was a moment's pause after the blind man ceased. Hermosa was speaking.

"But of course much of it is purely ideal. Men must belong to some particular thing. They have to belong to a town and a State and a party to do things. They must learn to love their own country and be true to it before they can learn to love the world."

"I believe all that, too," said her father calmly. "Just as I believe every one ought to belong to some particular church in order to learn how to belong to the Church Universal. At the same time, I think the different sects will have to lose their sectarianism before the churches can do the greatest work for the master. I love my own church, but I don't want that feeling to hinder me in any way from loving the Master's Kingdom more than I love my own church."

"Would you be willing to tell me something more about your church?" Sidney seemed to be asking a question of all of them. And he could not help noting the look of pleased interest that leaped into their faces on hearing his question.

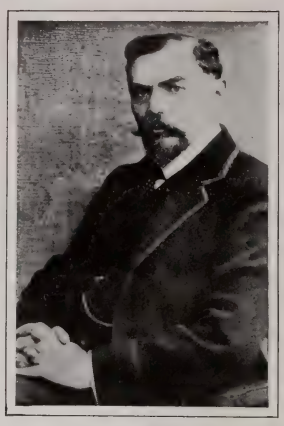
"Mr. Freeman has been our minister, how long is it, Athanasia? You always know."

Continued on page 64

Famous People in the World's News

The Late Rear-Admiral Evans

Lady Henry



Alfred M. Frind

A National Hero Dead

BY THE death of Rear-Admiral Robley Dunglison Evans, who passed away at his home in Washington, D. C., on January 3, the United States navy lost one of its most popular and picturesque figures. As "Fighting Bob," a sobriquet attached to his name much against his wishes, he was known to every schoolboy in the land. The nation never lost sight of him, and with the possible exception of Admiral Dewey no one in the navy stood higher as a popular hero.

The rear-admiral's death came very suddenly. He had lunched with Mrs. Evans, his daughter, Mrs. Harold F. Sewall, and his daughter-in-law, Mrs. F. Taylor Evans, and was in his library about two o'clock when seized with acute indigestion. Though the best medical aid was summoned immediately the admiral died at about four o'clock. All who have ever come in close contact with Rear-Admiral Evans have expressed their deepest regret upon learning of his death. He was known and loved in every port where the American navy is known, and there does not live to-day an American naval officer who does not prize among his yarns of the sea some tale of which Admiral "Bob" was the hero. But his death will not be a shock to the American navy alone, for he was also the best known in the foreign service of all the American flag officers.

Rudyard Kipling was one of Admiral Evans's warm friends, and it was he who wrote the poem that follows in one of a set of his works sent to the admiral:

Zogbaum draws things with a pencil,
And I do things with a pen,
And you sit aloft in a conning tower
Bossing eight hundred men.

Zogbaum takes care of his business
And I take care of mine,
And you take care of ten thousand tons,
Sky-hooting through the brine.

Zogbaum can handle his shadows
And I can handle my style,
And you can handle a ten-inch gun
To carry seven mile.

"To him that hath shall be given,"
And that's why these books are sent
To the man who has lived more stories
Than Zogbaum or I could invent.

Admiral Evans was born in Floyd County, Va., August 18, 1846, the son of Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Andrew Jackson Evans. When he was ten years old he was sent to Washington to live with an uncle so that he could get the advantage of the Washington schools. In 1859 he decided that a naval career would suit him, and he was appointed to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, from Utah, on September 20, 1860. He became an ensign in 1863, and was attached to the steam sloop Powhatan, in the West Indian squadron, the following year. He participated in both the naval attacks and the land attack on Fort Fisher in 1865.

Fifteen years after the war ended Evans had a chance to prove his worth in Bering Sea, where he was sent to keep track of the British seal poachers, a job handled so well that he stopped poaching and at the same time kept from offending Great Britain.

The public dubbed him "Fighting Bob" in 1891, when he took the Yorktown, a gunboat, to Valparaiso during the Chilean troubles. After taking aboard all the Americans who were in danger he was angered by some act of the Chileans and cabled to Washington, "I demand permission to bombard at once." He didn't get it, but the country realized there was a real fighter on the job.

Captain Evans commanded the Iowa through the war with Spain, taking a prominent part at the battle of Santiago, in July, 1898, where his vessel was the largest in the action and led in the destruction of Admiral Cervera's Cristobal Colon, Vizcaya, Reina Mercedes and Almirante Oquendo.

Following the war with Spain, Captain Evans became a member of the Board of Inspection and Survey, and in 1901 he was commissioned a rear-admiral. He was placed in charge of the newly formed Atlantic battleship fleet soon before it started on its famous cruise around the world, on December 16, 1907. In taking the fifteen battleships with their auxiliaries around the "Horn" and into Magdalena Bay, reaching the latter point two days ahead of time, he performed a feat which nearly the whole world pronounced impossible. Illness compelled Rear-Admiral Evans to leave the fleet at Magdalena Bay and rest up at Paso Robles. A month later, he rejoined his ships at San Francisco, and on May 7, 1908, was relieved of command officially.

To the day of his sudden death Rear-Admiral Evans took an active interest in navy matters. Since his retirement in 1910 Rear-Admiral Evans had lived quietly at his home in Washington, spending the larger part of his time in writing or discussing naval matters.

* * *

Lady Henry Visits the East Side

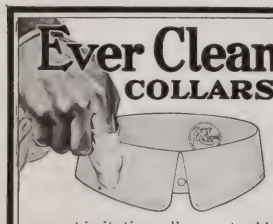
AFTER inspecting the Henry Street Settlement House in New York City and witnessing a production of "The Sleeping Beauty" in the gymnasium, Lady Henry, a visiting English philanthropist who is known widely for her work in behalf of London's poor, expressed amazement at the progress in settlement work in this country. Lady Henry was the guest of Miss Lillian Wald, and in her party were Mr. Frederick Townsend Martin and Bishop Darlington. Lady Henry has during her visit gone to several other settlement houses in the lower part of New York and looked into the work that is being done for the homeless at the Bowery Mission. Her praise of the work was given after careful study.

"It is all very wonderful," she said after leaving a dinner at the Henry Street house. "We have been organized in England so much longer, but I will have nothing but the most glowing reports to make when I return. So much is done here that people know nothing about, and if they did they would be quite amazed, I am sure. It is so well organized and growing so rapidly."

* * *

Founder of Germany's Peace League

MR. ALFRED M. FRIND, one of the most famous of Germany's leaders in the great propaganda for world peace, has recently received the further distinction of being awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for 1911. Mr. Frind was born in Frankfort in 1864 and since his graduation from one of Germany's most famous universities has been active in the promotion of the peace idea. He is the author of many books that have proved great successes and to him is accredited the founding of the German Peace League. It was for this last work that the Nobel Prize was awarded him.



Ever Clean COLLARS

are not imitation collars, not rubber or celluloid, but regular collars from a Troy factory, which have been treated by a new invisible waterproof method.

They look the same after treatment as before. But after treatment you can clean them with a wet cloth as clean as snow. No more trips to the washboard and wringer and flatiron, to be frayed and torn.

Write us size, style and brand of collar you wear. We will send postpaid an Ever Clean Collar of same style. You take no chance whatever. If not found satisfactory after wearing it one week, we will refund money. Send now—before you forget.

Price 25 cents a collar.

EVER CLEAN COLLAR & CUFF CO.
253-36th Street, Brooklyn

For the Comfort of the Whole Family

Your Comfort

is what we had in mind when we started to make Balsamized Toilet Paper.

Sani-Tissue
"Soft and Clothlike"

That is why we use clean selected long vegetable fibre in the manufacture instead of old rags and other dirty and chippy materials.

That is why each roll is parchment wrapped, protecting it from all dust and irritating grit until it reaches you.

Therefore demand SANI-TISSUE at your Dealers'

Three Rolls for 25 Cents
(White Porcelain Holder $1.00)

SCOTT PAPER COMPANY, 662 Glenwood Ave., Philadelphia
Makers of Scot-tissue Towels and other hygienic paper specialties.

5% Your Money Safe But NOT Tied Up

Some enterprises pay 6, 8 or 10 per cent. on money, but rarely without risk. It is possible to get 6 per cent. on mortgages, but then your money is tied up. It is safer, more convenient, and equally as profitable to deposit idle money with this Company. We have paid 5 per cent. per annum for nineteen years, and this is compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, quarterly or semi-annually, as preferred.

Assets, $2,500,000

Your money can be withdrawn upon short notice at any time. Our business is conducted in accordance with the stringent New York banking laws, and our patronsare careful investorsallover the world. Write for particulars.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, Blankets
FROM THE MILL — 33⅓ % SAVED

Buy from the manufacturers and save dealers' profits. 25,000 satisfied customers. Well-known Regal Rugs, 6x9, reversible, all-wool finish, $3.75. Brussels Rugs, 9x12, greatest value known, $3.60. Splendid grade Brussels Rug, 9x12, $8.75. Famous Invincible Velvets, 9x12, $16. Standard Axminsters, 9x12, $16.80. Best quality Lace Curtains, 45c per pair and up. Tapestry Curtains, Wilton Rugs, Linoleum and Furniture at mill and factory prices. Write to-day for our New Illustrated Catalog, No. 15, showing designs in actual colors. SENT FREE.

UNITED MILLS MFG. Co.
243B-62 JASPER ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA

WE PAY FREIGHT

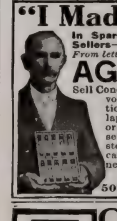
HOW TO GET BETTER LIGHT From KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Recent test by Prof. Rogers, Lewis Institute, Chicago, and Prof. McGregor, McGill University Montreal, on leading oil-burning lamps show the Aladdin Mantle Lamp is the most economical and gives over twice as much light as the Rayo and other lamps tested. It is odorless, safe, clean, noiseless. Better light than gas or electric. Every Aladdin Lamp fully guaranteed and protected by patents in nearly every country on earth. Our burners fit your old lamps. To introduce the Aladdin, we will give

ONE LAMP or BURNER FREE

in each neighborhood. Send postal with name and address, ask for cat- AGENTS Ballsold over 1000 on money back alogue M. guarantee: not one returned. Bruner sold $800 in 15 days. Ask for liberal agency proposition. Sample lamp furnished.
MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 104 Aladdin Building, Chicago, Ill.

"I Made $20 Profit
In Spare Time. Your Goods Are Fine Sellers—a Splendid Agent's Proposition."
From letter of C. E. Kalzes, one of our Agents



AGENTS MEN & WOMEN 100% PROFIT
Sell Concentrated Non-Alcoholic Food Flavors, Perfumes and Toilet Preparations. Over 60 kinds, put up in collapsible tubes. Every home in city or country a possible customer. Quick sellers. Good repeaters. Not sold in stores. No competition. Fine sample case for workers. Start while it's new. Don't delay. WRITE TODAY.
American Products Co.,
5027 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, Ohio

OXALBITOL
AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING
that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort.
Get it from your druggist, or a bottle will be sent by mail for 35 cents
OXALBITOL CO. Honesdale, Pa.

Our Boys and Girls

All fair devices that were ever fancied are not worth a lie.—Moody.

It is by presence of mind in untried emergencies that the native metal of a man is tested. —Lowell.

A Hero at Ten

THE other day, in one of the crowded public schools in New York City, a small boy running down the corridor toward his recitation room smelled fire. He stopped to open the nearest door of what proved to be an empty schoolroom ablaze with flame that had already eaten its way through many desks and benches. Quick as wink he closed the door and fled to his teacher. Instead of shouting "Fire!" as nearly all boys or girls and most "olders" would have done at such a moment, Will MacCallum stepped up to his teacher's desk and in a voice that none of the pupils could hear whispered: "Teacher, the school is on fire." In less time than it takes to tell it he ran down to the principal's desk with a piece of paper upon which his teacher had hurriedly written the word "Fire." In ten seconds the signal for the fire-drill rang out sharply.

Doors were thrown open and in double file, keeping step at double-quick march, and with no confusion at all, every pupil in the sixteen rooms of the schoolhouse filed out. Inside of three minutes, the building was empty, and William MacCallum, just turned ten, had won his first honors as a hero.

To be cool-headed and quick in action, to be cautious but daring, and ready on an instant to perform unquestioning the duty at hand, these are some of the little traits of which greatest human characters are made.

Honor and Fair Play

A man who is honorable is always to be trusted. He will never tell an untruth, deceive his superiors or employer, and will never do a dishonorable action. His honor guides him in everything that he does. If you see a big rough bully going for a small wee boy, try to stop him, because it is not fair play. If ever you feel inclined to cheat in order to win a game or feel very unhappy when the game is going against you, just say to yourself, "It won't kill me if I do lose; one can't win always, though I will stick to the game in case of a chance coming." If you keep your head in some such way as this, you will very often find that you will win after all; but don't forget when you do lose a game to cheer the winners or shake hands with and congratulate the fellow that beat you.

AN ARAB SCOUT

Are You a Club Member?

THE Aunt in the Cozy Corner wants especially to hear this week from boys' and girls' clubs. Are you a member of a club? Are you planning to get up a club among your schoolmates, your chums and companions? Do you want to plan for a series of good times together during the coming winter and early spring? Are you interested in making pin-money, in parties, social evenings, getting up a fair, nature study, a penny bazaar and ever so many other nice things? Write to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner, who has interesting plans of all kinds for boys' and girls' clubs. Be sure to ask for only one plan at a time and enclose stamp to cover postage.

A Guess-Me-Please

Two brothers are we, with five children apiece,
A number which rarely is known to increase;
We are large, hard, and black, we are soft, white, and small,
But without us mankind could do nothing at all.
We labored with Adam in tilling the ground,
Yet in the Queen's court we may also be found.
Without us no vessel the ocean could roam,
Yet though we go forth, you will find us at home.

Send all answers to puzzles and prize contests and letters in the Boys' and Girls' Department to

Very lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Our Good-Night Verse

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path . . . Be satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

Our Little People's Corner

HANNAH JANE

I

THEY say my dolly no more counts,
Because her head's not on—
Because her chest is battered in
And one poor leg is gone.
Aunt's given me another doll—
From Paris, too, I think—
She says 'Mama" and sits and walks;
Her dress is pretty pink.

II

But I—I like my old doll best;
My Hannah Jane's my pet.
What if she does look all smashed up?
The sawdust's in her yet!
I'm sure that if my head was gone,
Besides a leg or two,
My mother'd love me just the same
As when I was brand new.

III

Oh, Hannah Jane, they say you're plain,
But I don't think it's fair;
You once had china eyes that closed
And lots of yellow hair.

IV

Oh, Hannah Jane, they say you're plain,
But you're not plain to me;
For lovely is as lovely does;
And so—how can you be?

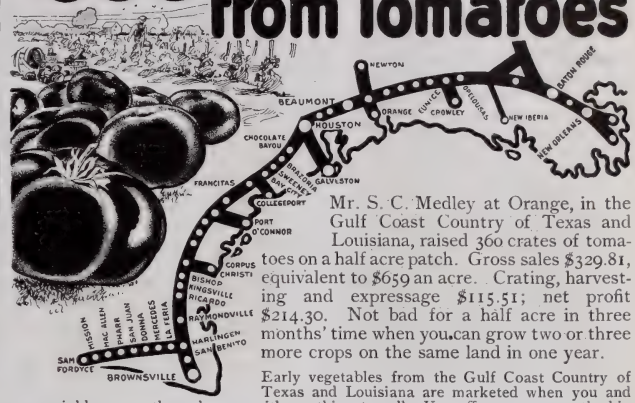
I've stacks and stacks of other things,
But none I like so well;
A woolly lamb that bleats and baas;
A worn-out dinner-bell;
A shadow horse on which I ride
When goblins chase at night;
A patchwork bag, and silver chain;
A Teddy bear that's white.

VI

And then I have a row of stones
All turning into gold;
You keep them in the sun, you know,
Until they're one week old.
I have a little rocking chair;
A track and 'lectric train;
And when I'm tired of all the rest,
I still have—Hannah Jane!

RENA CARY SHEFFIELD.

$659 an Acre from Tomatoes



Mr. S. C. Medley at Orange, in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana, raised 360 crates of tomatoes on a half acre patch. Gross sales $329.81, equivalent to $659 an acre. Crating, harvesting and expressage $115.51; net profit $214.30. Not bad for a half acre in three months' time when you can grow two or three more crops on the same land in one year.

Early vegetables from the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana are marketed when you and your neighbors are the only ones with anything to sell. You offer your crops, the big metropolitan centers jump at the chance to get them and pay well for the privilege. The handsomest, the biggest and most luscious fruits on the market come from the

Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana

Every month has its crops, its profits and gratifying surplus for the bank account. Every month is a joy—warm in winter, refreshing gulf breezes in summer. Every month is a money maker and a health builder.

Do not let the steady grind of office, factory or shop deprive you of your right to freedom from the fear of being superseded or superannuated in the employ of others. You can lead a life of freedom and happiness and be your own boss in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana.

Investigate: The trip down there, via the Frisco, is worth the little cost of going. On the first and third Tuesdays of each month, round trip fares, via the Frisco Lines, to the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana are very low, Chicago $37.50 or less, St. Louis and Kansas City $32.50 or less, Birmingham $37.50 or less, New Orleans and Baton Rouge $20 or less.

The Frisco Lines operate splendid, electric lighted, all steel trains daily, from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and New Orleans. Every day of the year these trains carry through cars to the Gulf Coast Country, and on excursion days have through tourist sleepers.

FRISCO LINES

Three Splendid Books FREE

One on the mid-coast country of Texas, one on the lower irrigated sections of the Rio Grande Valley, and one on Louisiana. They show scenes in actual colors, and describe the country and crops, giving personal statements by men who have gone there and made good. Write for your free copies today while you think of it.

A. HILTON, General Passenger Agent, Frisco Lines, 1426 Frisco Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

let's get acquainted!

Right out of the glorious West country this open-hearted message of sunshine and gladness and real living comes to you.

We men and women who know California and the Pacific Coast States—100,000 enthusiastic members of the Sunset League—want to know you, too, because You're coming west some fine day; coming into this land of ever-blooming gardens; of wonderful days and nights; into the land of snow-capped mountains and sunny fields aglow with bountiful crops—a land blessed with joyous living—your land, of which you know so little.

Start knowing now—and knowing right about this big, wonderful West of yours. Whether you come this year or next or in 1915 to the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco and the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego.

Close by you there's a family who know California and the great Pacific Coast States; who can tell you facts that are so astonishing that you will marvel; facts that will prove you really do not know this beautiful and prosperous West half so well as you must.

We want to send you the name and address of that family. They'll be glad to know you and help you know the West country. You'll be glad to know them, too.

A 2c stamp will bring a valuable fund of pictures and literature that carries the very atmosphere, the very spirit, of the gorgeous West. For instance, a sample copy of "Sunset-The Pacific Monthly" Magazine, with its magnificent four-color photographs of Western scenes; a booklet about the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to be held in San Francisco in 1915; an entertaining and informing volume of "California's Famous Resorts," and a special booklet on any one of these states: California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico.

No obligations of any kind for you to become a member of the Sunset League—other than your agreement to pass on to your own neighbors what you learn about California and the real West. We'll tell you all about that, too. For that same 2c stamp the full services of the Sunset Information Bureau are free to you.

We'll help you more than you can realize. It's up to you to sign the following coupon—NOW—while you think of it.

"GET ACQUAINTED" COUPON

SUNSET-THE PACIFIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE
INFORMATION BUREAU, San Francisco, Cal.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed find 2c stamp. Please send, fully prepaid, California literature, Panama-Pacific Exposition booklet, marked copy of Sunset-The Pacific Monthly Magazine, and booklet about _____, without any further obligation on my part.

Name _____

Street _____

City or town _____ State _____ F-1

Vapo Cresolene
ESTABLISHED 1879

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

A simple, safe and effective treatment avoiding drugs. Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Croup at once.

It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

The air rendered strongly antiseptic, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by All Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggists or from us, 10c in stamps.

The Vapo-Cresolene Co., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

LADY WANTED AS REPRESENTATIVE

in unoccupied territory to introduce a beautiful line of imported and American fabrics, consisting of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, lidkfs., petticoats, etc.

The line is very strong on beautiful hand embroidered St. Gall Swiss, Belfast Linens, white and colored Mercerized Cottons, fine Egyptian Tissues, Voiles and other beautiful novelties.

Many exclusive patterns not shown by other houses of this character.

Energetic ladies who will thoroughly cover their local territory preferred. To such, a good income is assured as we pay liberal commissions and protect territory. Business continues the year around. Liberal credit extended to responsible ladies upon satisfactory reference.

Several hundred choice samples, with full instructions, express prepaid in an attractive sample case.

Business can be started at once without expense to yourself. We guarantee our materials to give satisfaction. An assured income for you.

Your immediate inquiry will receive our prompt attention.

Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3-A. A., Binghamton, N. Y.

25 Valentine Post Cards 10c

THE BEST YOU EVER SAW — 25 NO TWO ALIKE

25 of the most beautiful post cards ever sold, 10 cents. All different, consisting of dainty Cupids, Hearts, Doves, Lovers, Text and Floral designs. Far better than our Christmas cards, and they were beauties. Some are embossed and in gold, lithographed in many colors on a fine grade of cardboard.

V. HERMAN & CO. 2430 North Halsted St., Dept. 474, CHICAGO

BEACON LAMP BURNER FREE

Incandescent. 100 Candle Power. Burns common coal oil. Gives better light than gas, electricity or six ordinary lamps at one-sixth to one-tenth the cost. Fits your old lamp. Unequaled for fine sewing or reading.

100,000 satisfied users

COSTS ONLY ONE CENT FOR SIX HOURS

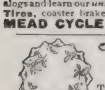
We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer new customers. Take advantage of our Special Offer to secure a Beacon Burner FREE. Write today. Agents Wanted. HOME SUPPLY COMPANY, 324 Home Building, Kansas City, Mo.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 Bicycle. Write for special offer. We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL and prepay freight on every bicycle.

FACTORY PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalogs and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer. Tires, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, half prices.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. M 71, Chicago, Ill



ALL FOR 20¢

Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and Daisy designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 500 designs of art embroidery goods and 70 different EMBROIDERY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.

P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

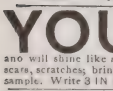
YOUR PIano will shine like new; "3-in-One" removes stains, soil, scars, scratches; brings back original lustre; generous free sample. Write 3 IN 1 OIL CO. 42CH Broadway, New York.



STRAWBERRY PLANTS

Any quantity; 120 acres, 105 varieties. Also full line other small fruit plants and shrubbery. Lowest prices for quality stock, true to name. Write today for FREE catalogue. W. F. ALLEN, 23 Market Street, Salisbury, Md.

Fine Garden For 94c

Cut down cost of living by growing vegetables in yard. This splendid assortment of vegetable and flower seeds is a value at $1.25—our special introductory price only 94c. Complete directions for planting, cultivating and harvesting, free. Write for catalog. O. S. Jones Seed Co., Box 733-D, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 61

"He baptized me," said Athanasia eagerly. "That was twenty years ago. Hermosa was four years old at the time."

"Now you know how old we are, Mr. Cushing," said Hermosa, "if Athanasia will tell you how old she was at the christening."

"I was six months," Athanasia said gravely. "Father held me. Of course, I don't remember much about it, but I've always been glad Mr. Freeman baptized me."

"Yes, Mr. Freeman is a fine man. We all love him," said Mr. Howard. "Over twenty years. I remember him when he first came to us. He has been a great blessing to us all. He has been with us in all sorts of trouble and I don't know what we would have done if the church had not given us right visions of life."

"His sermon was helpful this morning," Sidney said thoughtfully.

"They are always helpful," Hermosa said. "He says the things we need to hear."

"You don't understand, you can't," Sidney spoke in a low tone, speaking to all of them, but looking at Hermosa, "how much I would like to—"

Hermosa was startled. A glow slowly crept over her face. There was a wistfulness about Sidney's manner that appealed deeply to her strong religious nature. The little circle about the table was silent with sympathetic interest. Sidney went on, with much inward hesitation but a pleasant feeling that he was with those who understood, after all.

"I would like to belong to a church where it really meant as much as it seems to mean to you."

"It means more than we can tell, Mr. Cushing," Mrs. Ward said. "It covers long years of real helpfulness."

And then the talk for some reason drifted off into other matters as talk is apt to do, and Sidney did not recur to it again until the meal was over and he had wheeled Mr. Howard into his own room to find materials with which to occupy his hands. Then when Sidney and Hermosa were alone together she said,

"I let father do all he can for himself even at a good deal of trouble to himself. It is good for him."

"Yes. You must tell me how you find time out of your working hours to teach him so much."

"In the first place I am unusually well and strong."

Sidney looked carefully at this girl of the people. And what he saw impressed him then and afterwards powerfully. Yes, Hermosa Howard was strong. Her face was the face of one who had never known physical pain or weariness.

"Father seems to need very little sleep. Sometimes I read to him for two hours at a time. He has a wonderful capacity for remembering and retaining the main facts."

"My father has the same ability. I have known him to carry in his memory the dimensions of all the great warships of Great Britain and Germany."

Hermosa was startled at Sidney's mention of his father. Then she said, in a low voice, a little hesitatingly,

"May I—do you—may I ask how your father is— Is he well? Is it right for me to talk to you about him?"

"You are almost the only person—you and Athanasia and the rest here, who can—talk with me. It is a relief. Yes, he is quite well."

"Do you—can you—see him often?"

"No, I do not think it is best for either of us."

"Does he—retain any interest in the new ship?"

"He seemed as deeply interested in it as ever."

"When will it be finished?"

"The work has excelled anything ever known. We shall be able to finish, I think, a year in advance of the contract. I have never known the men to work so intelligently and swiftly. I am going to Washington to-morrow to see the naval committee. It will be a pleasant surprise to them to hear the news. They have been urging haste."

"To Washington?"

"Yes."

"Will Miss Marston christen the new vessel?"

"I don't know." Sidney was astonished.

"Are any but daughters of admirals allowed to christen warships?"

"The daughter of our yard superintendent christened the cruiser Vengeance."

"But it is not common?"

"No."

Silence.

"Would you care to christen a warship, Miss Howard?"

"No, I do not believe in them, any more than father does."

"Hermosa!" her father called her and she went across the hall and soon came back wheeling him into the room.

The rest of the evening Sidney spent with the friends in a general visit.

When he went away, it was with a mingled feeling of pleasure and disappointment. There had been times during the evening when it seemed as if Hermosa was on the point of saying something that would enlighten him as to her real religious experience. And then suddenly the door seemed to shut in his face. He asked if he might bring over some books to Mr. Howard and his offer was eagerly accepted by the blind man. He parted from the company with a few cheerful words of thanks on his part for the evening's pleasure and of gratitude for his coming on the part of Mrs. Ward and Athanasia. And all the way home it was Athanasia's bright face that recurred to him as she had stood in the doorway and waved her hand at him.

"Poor girl! How thankful I ought to be that I am straight and strong."

He went into the lonesome house and sat down in the library. The horror of his situation at home had grown upon him as the months went by. One of the means he had chosen to drive this away was to turn on all the lights in the lower part of the house, go into the library and read. He had also of late begun to write out some of his experiences. It was not a diary but rather a running sketch of the day's doings put in the form of imaginary conversations between himself and an imaginary friend. For this friend he had once or twice substituted Pax Marston.

He had been at work on these conversations for half an hour and was growing interested in them, when the bell rang.

Angus and the servants had gone up stairs. Sidney went to the door.

He opened, and in the light of the porch, there stood Ed Marston, the Admiral's nephew.

"What, Marston! I'm glad to see you. Come in!"

Marston came in without a word, looking sadly and wistfully at Sidney.

CHAPTER XIV

AS SOON as Sidney had caught a full look of Ed Marston's face he exclaimed,

"What's the matter? Are you ill?"

"No."

"You don't look right. Come in here. Sit down in that chair. There is no bad news?"

"It depends. I should call it so if I were in your place."

"Talk out, man. Is it Pax!"

"Yes. Do you know—I believe Pax is dying."

"Dying!"

"On your account."

"On my account?"

Continued on next page

MEDICINE Versus NATURE

Why turn yourself into a medicine-chest, filling it with every new concoction that comes along?

Nature does the curing, not medicine.

Ask your Doctor if

SUNSHINE AND Scott's Emulsion

is not The treatment for Coughs and Colds, Grippe, and many other ills.

ALL DRUGGISTS 11-62

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK on POULTRY

and Almanac for 1912 has 224 pages with many colored plates of fowls true to life. It tells all about chickens, their prices, their care, diseases and remedies. All about Incubators, their prices and their operation. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It's an encyclopedia of chickendom. You need it. Only 15c. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 905, Freeport, Ill.

A PRIZE WINNER

Boys—

Some of the brightest and happiest home boys in your State are now serving CHRISTIAN HERALD customers and thus earning prizes and pocket money. The best boy this month also wins a Shetland Pony.

We start you in business and tell you where and how to get customers. Now try.

Simply sign this coupon and mail it today

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York Date.....
Please send me a FREE start in business and the two beautiful booklets for boys.

Name.....
Address.....
Town.....
Age..... State.....

Brander Cushing's Ambition

"Maybe I haven't any business to come in on this. But somehow I couldn't keep out. It's no secret, I guess, that Pax thinks a lot of you."

Silence.

"But since your father, your father—"

"Went to the penitentiary for telling the truth," said Sidney bluntly. "You can't hurt my feelings, Marston, I've been through too much."

Under his breath Marston said, "I should say." Then he continued aloud, "Well, Pax has not been the same girl since that. Old Unc' Marston and Aunt Lydia—well, perhaps you know how they feel."

"What do you mean?"

"Do you want a fellow to put the probe in and twist it around?"

"I haven't time to take an anaesthetic," said Sidney with a wan smile.

"Well," muttered Ed, "what did I come up here for anyhow?"

"I don't know. Tell me."

"I think the world of Pax. I can't bear to see her suffer. She—well—I believe that girl is awfully in love with you or some one, and Unc' Marston swears that she shall not be the wife of the son of a—a—"

"Go on."

"A convict."

Silence.

"It's none of my business, I know, Cushing, but I can't bear to see so much unrequited feeling being wasted and I thought maybe you would know what to do and so I came up to see you. If you want any help to carry her off I'm your man. Only I won't go any foolishness about walking, you know. If it's done, I'll engage a two-seated rig and we'll go comfortably."

Even at that moment of confusion and turmoil of mind, Sidney could not help smiling at the careless young lieutenant.

"What can I do?"

"Storm the fortifications. Shell 'em out. Drop some lyddite into Unc' Marston's coffee."

"I was planning to go to Washington to-morrow. But—"

"Good. Pax will be awfully glad to see you."

"If I call, I shall ask to see the admiral and Mrs. Marston before I see Pax." Sidney spoke very gravely and his face was very pale.

"Well, Unc' Marston thinks a lot of you, I know, and Aunt Lyddy took to you first time she saw you. Still, I don't know. They're bang up society, you know. And the fact of your father being in—in—State prison isn't the best testimonial for you. If I were in your place I believe I would make all the necessary arrangements with Pax first and see Unc' Marston last. She's of age. She passed the sixteenth anchor buoy five years ago."

Sidney was silent. It is doubtful if he heard all Marston was rattling off. The whole thing raised questions in his mind that confused and troubled him. Even Marston, careless-minded as he was, saw it, and had the sense to say little more. Only he came over nearer Sidney and said with boyish frankness and good will,

"Cushing, whatever you do I know will be just right. And if Pax is yours with her father's and mother's consent, why, no one will be gladder than I. Why, we'll be cousins then, won't we? And I'll have to call you Sid."

"You may now."

"No. You're too old for me. But you don't blame me for coming up, do you?"

"No, I appreciate it."

"Will you go to Washington anyway?"

"Yes. The business on the Columbia requires it."

"You can tell what to do when you get there?"

"Yes. The admiral is in Washington?"

"Yes. He sails for the Isthmus next week to make some inspection. Lucky you can find him this week. He's always at home evenings unless there's some function and it's a quiet time in Washington just now."

Sidney insisted on Marston's staying with him over night and the next morning they took the first express to Washington together.

On the way down Sidney let Marston rattle on at random. He was silent himself. Many questions kept rising up before him. What were his real feelings towards Pax Marston? Did he really and truly love her, or was his emotion, whenever he thought of her, one of passing interest in an unknown personality? He had met her three times. He had talked with her on a small range of topics. He did not know her real character, her aims, her real ambitions, her tastes, her habits, her religious ideas or her friendships. And even if he met all this with the assertion that he did love her enough to risk all to ask her to be his wife, what happiness or peace could he offer her if it was all to be won at the risk of a breach with her own family? And added to it all the tragic fact that she would marry a man whose father had been found guilty of breaking a law and was now serving time in a penitentiary. As he neared Washington, however, the memory of Pax Marston's vivacious face quickened. Once he interrupted Marston, venturing to ask,

"Did you say she was much changed?"

"Who? Pax? Well, you know a girl can't cry every day without washing the color off her complexion some. But her eyes look brighter for so much moisture. She is so handsome you couldn't spoil her looks in a hurry. She'll look good to you all right."

When they parted at Sidney's hotel, Marston wrung Sidney's hand fervently.

"If you need a taxi or a preacher or anything in a hurry call me up. I'm at the club on H Street. I'll stay in all day and night ready to slip my cable when I get your sealed orders."

Sidney smiled, promised to avail himself of Marston's services if he needed them and spent the rest of the day at the business that the Columbia demanded.

To be continued

Called Higher

B. B. Scott (80) died in Creswell, Ore., November 30, 1911.

Mrs. Hannah E. Stevens (79) has gone home to her loved Master. She died at Omro, Wis., at the home of her daughter.

Miss Clara D. Oliver (73) passed away on May 13, 1911, after a long and painful illness. She was for many years a reader of this paper.

Emil W. Sallach, of Albion, Mich., was called to his reward a short time ago. He was an earnest Christian and for many years a reader of this paper.

James Dudgeon (83) died February 26, 1911. He had taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for over twenty-five years, and had preserved every issue during that period.

Benjamin W. Edgar (95), of Metuchen, N. J., died April 20, 1911. He was an exemplary Christian, and for many years a reader of this magazine.

William Hitchens (72), of Port Huron, Mich., died very suddenly on August 21, 1911. He was an ardent worker for the Kingdom for over fifty-three years, and a subscriber to this magazine for thirty years.

Mrs. Mary Baker (60), of Rushville, Ill., was called home on August 10 last. Through many years of suffering she proved the quality of her Christian convictions by her unwavering patience and good cheer.

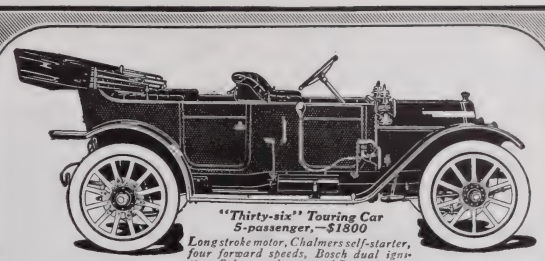
Mrs. Otis R. Corbett (84), of Watkins, N. Y., sank peacefully to sleep on March 10, 1911, in the home where she had lived for over sixty years. She was for many years a subscriber and constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Good Wishes From Colorado

May your good work continue, and the goal you are striving to reach be attained. While the little I can do is limited, I am always ready and willing to do all I can for you and the cause for which you are laboring.

May the blessings of heaven be with you in your endeavors. T. E. ADAMS.

Del Norte Lumber Co., Del Norte, Col.



"Thirty-six" Touring Car 5-passenger,—$1800

Long stroke motor, Chalmers self-starter, four forward speeds, Bosch dual ignition, Solar gas lamps and Prest-O-Lite tank, ventilated fore-doors, 36 x 4-inch tires, Continental demountable rims.

"Leans Right Up In the Collar and Pulls"

THIS expression describes very well the mule-like pulling qualities and the bull-dog endurance of the Chalmers "Thirty-six" motor.

Chalmers cars are built for durability; for day-in-and-day-out service; they have a reputation which has made them standard.

The new Chalmers "Thirty-six," the leader of the 1912 line, gives to the farmer, at $1800, a car which he can compare favorably with the high priced cars. When the "36" was planned we instructed our engineers to build a four-cylinder, five-passenger car that would leave absolutely nothing to be desired. We said we would fix the price when the car was ready.

We think in the Chalmers "36" we are offering a car that actually does leave nothing to be desired. The "36" has a splendid motor, with large cylinders, long stroke (4¼" x 5¼"). This motor is a great puller on high speed; a wonderful hill-climber, and will give you all the speed you want. Although rated at 36 h. p., it will actually develop 40 h. p. It is a motor that will "lean right into the collar and pull."

This monogram on the radiator stands for all you can ask in a motor car

The Chalmers Company was the first to offer a real automobile at a low price. We believe that the "36" is the first medium priced car which will compare with any five-passenger motor car, no matter how costly. It is a car, so reliable, so sturdy, so durable, so good looking, that it will appeal to the farmer as no car heretofore offered can.

The well-tried Chalmers "30," the car that won the last year's Glidden Tour, the car which last year, fully equipped, sold for $1750—now, through improved methods of manufacture—is this year offered to you at $1500.

We invite you to inspect Chalmers cars. Comparison has sold more cars for us than all our advertising. Your local dealer will be pleased to give you a demonstration of Chalmers cars. A postal card will bring you our latest catalog and an introduction to your nearest dealer. Let us get acquainted. Let us hear from you today.

Chalmers Motor Company, Detroit, Mich.

Get This Bargain Offer

Big 1912 surprise on quality and price. Hatchers backed by my 25 years' experience. Hold your incubator money till you hear from me—SURE.

MILLER'S IDEAL

incubators and brooders are better than ever—biggest money makers. Miller's Free Book better than ever, too. Write quick for early start and biggest saving.

J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

Send Your Name Now

Don't Keep Chickens—Let Chickens Keep You

Don't you ever doubt it—there's profit, BIG profit, in hens. It all depends on knowing how to get it out of them. Joel M. Foster, the "Egg King," owner of the famous Rancocas Farm, tells HOW in his book,

"The Million Egg Farm"

He traces his career in the poultry business from the beginning down to the last year, when he marketed eleven hundred thou-and eggs at a profit of close to $20,000.00. Foster tells his experiences in terse, straight-forward language that anybody can understand—makes his methods so plain that anybody who conscientiously tries can successfully apply them. This book is unquestionably the best and most practical guide to success in the poultry business ever published—as helpful to the beginner as to the man who numbers his birds by the thousands.

Farm Journal

has distributed thousands of copies of this book among its subscribers, and has numbers of letters reporting the success of those who have followed its teachings. We offer you this book together with Farm Journal for four years

Both for $1.00

Farm Journal treats of all branches of farming in the most practical and understandable way. Its Poultry Department is widely famous for its authority and value, and its columns devoted to the womenfolks and children are chock-full of helpfulness, cheerfulness and clean entertainment. Send for the book and paper today.

Farm Journal, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

JUST OIL

your sewing machine with "3-in-One;" then just watch it run! This wonderful, labor-saving oil makes machine sewing delightfully easy. It prevents rust, cleans out dirt and grease, keeps all parts in perfect order. Trial bottle sent FREE by 3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY, 42 C S. Broadway, New York City. 3-in-One is sold at all stores—trial size 10c; Household size 50c.

$125 for This 7⅓ Octave, Full-Sized Guaranteed Piano

Sold on Terms You Can't Resist--No interest to Pay. Free trial in your own home.

I can save you ONE-HALF on a piano. My prices for strictly high grade standard made pianos, NEW, are only including Bench—with music compartment—and Scarf. 88 Note Player Pianos, $350—with Bench and 12 Rolls of Music.

$125, $145, $165, & $185

SHIPPED ON FREE TRIAL

to any place in the United States. NO MONEY DOWN.

Write today for free catalog or mail coupon.

F. J. CUNNINGHAM

2411 W. Madison St. Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: Please send me your free catalog.

Name .....

Address .....

15 95 AND UP-WARD AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. The bowl is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1184 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

GREGORY'S SEEDS

Here is a big offer of choicest seeds—10 packages—worth 90 Cents—postpaid. 25c coin or stamps

1 pkg. Aster, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture,	10c.
1 pkg. Pansy, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture,	15c.
1 pkg. Coreopsis, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture,	5c.
1 pkg. Poppy, Gregory's Fancy Double Mixed Annuals,	10c.
1 pkg. Mignonette, Gregory's Large Flowering, very rich,	10c.
1 pkg. Bachelor Button, Gregory's Finest Mixture	10c.
1 pkg. Petunia, Gregory's Finest Hybrid Mixture,	15c.
1 pkg. Candytuft, Gregory's Finest Mixed,	5c.
1 pkg. Nasturtium, Dwarf, Finest Mixed,	5c.
1 pkg. Sweet Peas, Extra Choice Mixed,	5c.

Get our new 1912 catalogue.

GREGORY'S HONEST SEEDS

J. J. H. GREGORY & SON 109 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.

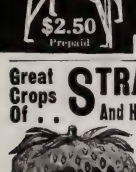
WASH BY AIR The New Way

No wear, no tear, no beating. Daintiest articles washed without injury. Tub of clothes washed in 5 to 10 minutes. A child can operate. Well made, will not rust. Lighter than a washboard. Instantaneously attachable to any metal tub or wash boiler. No screws to tighten. Order from this ad. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send for circular. Agents wanted.

$2.50 Prepaid

Rapid Vacuum Washer Co. 75 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

Great Crops Of . . STRAWBERRIES And HOW to GROW THEM



Is a complete treatise on strawberry culture written by America's greatest strawberry expert. Indorsed by agricultural colleges and fruit growers of highest authority. Government reports show that strawberries yield more dollars per acre and give quicker returns than any other crop. Get our book and learn how. IT'S FREE!

FREE BOOK

R. M. KELLOGG Co. Box 670 Three Rivers, Mich.

STOKES' SEEDS

The time to find out about seeds is before you plant — not after. Get as many seed catalogs as you like — but be sure to write for mine. I'll take a chance on being of some help to you.

Write to-day and mention The Christian Herald

Walter P. Stokes, Seedsman Dept. 40. Philadelphia

25¢ PRIZE GARDEN COLLECTION 10¢

3 New Leaders for your Garden.

WHITE DELICIOUS RADISH, Per pkt. 10c
MAY KING LETTUCE, Per packet 5c.
EARLY JUNE TOMATO, Per packet 10c.

SPECIAL—The above Collection sent postpaid for only 10c. together with our new Seed and Nursery book, giving most valuable information on gardening, farming and fruit growing. Our hardy Northern grown Seeds are unexcelled in purity, vitality and productiveness.

FARMER SEED & NURSERY CO. 420 6th Ave FARIBAULT, MINN.

11½ CENTS A ROD

For 18-in. Hog Fence, 22 3-4c for 49-in. Farm Fence, 27c for 48-in. Poultry Fence; 100 styles and heights. Catalogue free.

KITSELMAN BROS. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

WE PAY $80 A MONTH SALARY

and furnish rig and all expenses to introduce our guaranteed stock and poultry powders; money-back guarantee; outfit free; new plan; steady work. Address BIGLER CO., X 562, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

THE RECKONING

Continued from page 59

'a' stayed till late and got away—I could 'a' beat 'em out! I wanted to—till the girl made me tell—now, I'm sorry for what I done—before God I'm sorry! They ain't takin' me—I'm givin' myself up!"

Under the spell of his burning eyes the straining faces were held; there was no sound save the sound of the girl's sobbing. Tapsy Magin, with a queer smile, silently disappeared in the shadows.

Blinker staggered, then he fell back into his seat; his eyes were bloodshot. The girl was still clinging to his hand. She began to sing again—

> I was a wandering sheep,
> I did not love the fold—

Blinker heard it as in a dream—there was a strange look on his face. He held up his head. For the first time in his life nothing mattered—and everything mattered! He was at odds with the world, and at peace with his own soul. The sensation was new and vivifying; he did not try to understand it, he only felt it, and sat under it restfully, as under a cool wind at the end of a scorching day.

They gathered about him; they pressed his hand; he began to feel that it was good to live—to think strange things, to have lurid desires for a home—that unknown harbor for restless souls—to possess a wife and little children, a wife with sweet eyes to keep him in the straight road! He looked over at the girl timidly, respectfully, he touched her as he might have touched a lily in the hands of a child, and she did not turn away—when she met his eyes she smiled. And then, Tapsy Magin in the doorway again—and an officer! He saw the brass buttons picked out like points of fire on the blue coat; why did they remind him of stars in a dark sky? Perhaps it was because his eyes were moist, almost dim!

"Where is the man?"

In the sympathetic silence Blinker stood up. He stepped forward, meeting Tapsy Magin's shifting eyes boldly—he was not afraid! He saw himself taken as a desperate criminal, he eyed the handcuffs with contempt.

Tapsy Magin thrust his loose jaw forward. "Ye will sing psalms—then sing 'em to the bars in the pen!"

The girl was leaning weakly against the wall. "Oh," she cried, "don't take him, officer; let him go and sin no more; let him go!" Her voice trailed off miserably.

Blinker eyed her a moment silently, then he straightened up. "Don't you care—" he said brokenly, "don't you care, my girl. I beat 'em out. It wasn't as if they took me. I give myself up—I'll pay the reckonin'—I will, sure—and I'm sorry I knocked out the—old man!" His voice choked, but he went out with the look on his face of a man who has won the fight.

That night Blinker came to two conclusions, the force of which swept his face clear of lines; one was that a cell is not always a prison—he still saw the girl's eyes—and the other, that he would have done it all over again!

The game was up. It had been a long game, and a ticklish one—and it hadn't paid! He saw that now. He felt sorry for the other poor dupes who were still playing it!

He sat on the edge of the bare cot, his rough hands hanging helpless. He was like a Samson shorn of his strength. His mouth drooped painfully, and yet somewhere in his soul there was a note that he had never struck before, and it was vibrating in a strange new way.

The morning came. There was no sunlight to announce it, only a gray shade on the whitewashed walls. When the lock turned later on, Blinker knew it was the summons—the reckoning had come!

His entrance into the court room was early, yet there was a crowd. Blinker hung his head; he felt ashamed, like a man about to be tied to a whipping-post in full view of a thousand eyes. A woman near the front laughed shrilly.

"Ain't he the villain, though—you could tell it by the look of him!"

The words struck a new, sore place. After that something followed. Blinker had never been caught before, but there were a dozen officers to swear that they knew him well—he was an old bird at the game. The magistrate considered him sharply.

"Who is here to press the charge?"

Blinker raised his head, his dull eyes wandering over the unfamiliar faces. Suddenly he saw them looking confidently at the door. He turned uneasily, and saw—the old man! The old man he had knocked out and laid low! Behind him was a girl with sweet eyes.

Then, somehow, he lost himself in a fog. He heard some one speaking, in calm, even tones, that smoothed his lacerated feelings like the touch of a kind hand. It was the old man.

"Your honor, I spend my life in the slums. I help the unfortunate whenever I can—you will know me by reputation. This man, the prisoner, knocked me down last night—it was on the lower Bowery—but he didn't strike so hard—I was only stunned and a bit shaken. I believe he is sorry—this girl hunted me up and told me so—he confessed it at a mission last night. I desire to waive the charge, your Honor."

The court room leaned forward, breathless. The magistrate, frowning heavily, looked over at the girl.

"Are you the prisoner's sweetheart?" he asked.

She trembled, paling before the scrutiny of his eyes, then she looked up bravely.

"No, sir, not that—but I know, oh, I know—after this—he will be good!"

Her voice died away. Blinker, steadying himself at the rail, felt that she had discovered the hidden things of his soul!

The magistrate centered his gaze on a minute speck in the shifting sunshine; there was a pause—the courtroom, as it so often did, was waiting. Something disturbed the silence: an audible sob. It came from the woman in front who had called the prisoner a villain! The old man, standing by the girl's side, waited silently, his face calm and beneficent—he was like a picture of Time standing still.

Blinker felt his throat thicken with something like tears — his fingers, clutching the guard-rail, trembled and then grew still—all the riotous years of his life seemed to have been leading him up to this moment!

The magistrate turned suddenly; his relentless eyes swept over Blinker's face in a deliberate search for falsehood.

"Is that true?" he said slowly. "Are you sorry?"

In the revolving cycle of his emotions Blinker was conscious of nothing—and everything. His gaze wandered out to the girl, pitifully beseeching—from somewhere in his throat came a muffled sob. Then he flung his head back and faced the magistrate.

"Yes," he whispered brokenly, "I am sorry—and it ain't no lie!"

The magistrate and the court-room looked at each other.

"Case dismissed—call the next prisoner to the bar!"

Blinker, as in the daze of a dream, stumbled forward. The crowd cleared a place for him to pass by. Into his face had crept the look of a child who knows not which way to go, but an officer curtly showed him. The old man, retreating into the corridor, looked back; the girl was waiting in the doorway—her lips were parted, her sweet eyes met Blinker's in a long, steadying gaze. Suddenly she turned and went out, too; and Blinker, shading his eyes with his hand, followed her!

It's Moth-Proof

This Red Cedar Chest on 15 Days' Free Trial! Freight Prepaid!

A Piedmont Southern Red Cedar Chest delights the eye and soul of every womanly woman. Beautiful, decorative, unique, useful. An ornament to her home and protection for her wardrobe. Perfect Storage for laces, woolens, furs, etc. Moth, Mouse, Dust and Damp Proof. The wedding or birthday gift! Send for handsome catalog showing all styles in cedar chests, chiffoniers and wardrobe couches, and booklet, "The Story of Red Cedar." ALL GOODS SOLD DIRECT FROM FACTORY AT FACTORY PRICES. 15 DAYS' FREE TRIAL. PIEDMONT RED CEDAR CHEST CO., Dept. T, Statesville, N.C.

$1.20 Worth of Flower SEEDS Postpaid For Only 10¢

1 Pkt. Asters, Floral Park Mixture
1 Pkt. Pansy, Extra Giant Mixed
1 Pkt. Carnations, Finest Mixed
1 Pkt. Star Flower, a Novelty
1 Pkt. Mignonette, Sweet Scented
1 Pkt. Alyssum, Carpet of Snow
1 Pkt. Poppy, Double Carnation Fld.
1 Pkt. Candytuft, Sweet Scented
1 Pkt. Petunia, Finest Mixed
1 Pkt. Portulacca, Choicest Mixed
1 Pkt. Summer Cypress (Burn'g Bush)
1 Pkt. Sweet Pea, Large Fld. Mixed

We will send the above 12 packets of First Class flower seeds, our new illustrated Garden Annual, and a due bill giving you your money back, all for 10c postpaid.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Box 430 FLORAL PARK, N.Y.

STUDY LAW AT HOME

YOUNG MAN! Crystallize Ambition! Stop wishing—Act! Law is powerful, honorable and well-paid. Our College Law Course is complete, easily mastered and highly endorsed. Write for the catalogue and "evidence." Read the testimonies of hundreds of graduates. Oldest and best. 21 years of success. Write now!

Sprague Correspondence School of Law 236 American Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Agents, $2.40 per Hour

cannot be made without hustle. No article "sells itself" but some men sell Automatic "Clean" Curry Combs at the rate of a dozen per hour. Sells at 40 cents, worth dollars in time and labor saved. 100% profit and samples on approval if you are ready for business.

Address, CLEAN COMB CO., 10TH St., Racine, Wis.

WE TEACH MILLINERY BY MAIL

The Lord helps those who help themselves. Don't be a drone—save money making your own hats or make money making hats for others. Send to-day for our free book telling how we can aid you to lead a useful life.

National College of Millinery, 1094 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

GREIDER'S FINE POULTRY

Book and calendar for 1912 contains 200 pages, 72 varieties pure bred, 62 colored plates. Many other illustrations, descriptions. Incubators and Brooders. Low prices on all stock eggs. How to raise and make hens lay. Get my plans. They all say it's great—this book — only 15 cents.

B. H. GREIDER, Box 79, Rheems, Pa.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries.

Coiled Spring Fence Co. Box D Winchester, Ind.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS

Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 5c. F. FOY, Box 30, Des Moines, Iowa

50 Best Paying Varieties Pure-Bred Chickens, Ducks, Geese, Turkeys, Eggs, Dogs and Incubators. All at Low Prices. Send 4c. for my Book which gives reliable information worth many dollars to you.

W. A. WEBER, Box 940, Mankato, Minn.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O

EARN MONEY IN SPARE TIME

The National Dress Goods Co., New York, needs a competent responsible woman to represent them in each locality. Pleasant, permanent work. Free outfit, good pay. Write today for full particulars. National Dress Goods Company, Dept. 7, No. 260 West Broadway, New York.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth. Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.

R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

YOU CAN WRITE A SHORT STORY

Beginners learn thoroughly under our perfect method many sell their stories before completing the course. We help those who want to sell their stories. Write for particulars. School of Short-Story Writing, Dept. 44, Page Bldg. Chicago

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services. WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.

Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free. VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

Monsoon Rains Fail in India

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have so often responded to the cries of distress in different parts of the world, will learn with regret that the western part of India is again threatened with famine. Since the great famine of 1900, there has been sufficient rain each year in all parts of India to meet the wants of her 315,000,000 people. Twelve years have passed without a famine. In the meantime, many great irrigation works have been completed by the government, and many hundreds of thousands of acres, in districts where famines easily occur, have put their owners beyond the power of any ordinary drought. Other irrigation works under construction have promise of great usefulness when completed. These years have been prosperous years, with generally abundant harvests. Labor has been at a premium, and the financial ability of India has never been better.

The monsoon rains, June to October of this year, have, however, been fitful and insufficient. Deep anxiety was felt for all northern India. Withering crops over her vast plains spread gloom among her people. India turned to her gods in earnest supplication for rain. The government took such preparatory steps as prudence suggested. Happily the September rain came in time to save the growing crop, and from poor to abundant harvests characterize the greater part of India. The exception is the northern part of the Bombay presidency, including Kathiawad, Gujarat, Khandesh, Ahmednagar and Sholapur districts, and some neighboring regions and native states. The September rain that would have ripened the growing first crops of the year failed almost entirely. Here and there, only crops have been saved. There being no rain in this zone during September and October of any value, it has been impossible to sow the second crop. No rain can now in the nature of things be expected until June of this year. Failure of crops, no fodder for cattle, and scarcity of water for even drinking purposes, are the conditions now prevailing over large portions of the northern part of the Bombay presidency. Only the most strenuous efforts on the part of government can now avert starvation, disease and death.

The lessons learned by the government in the great famine of 1900 will enable it to deal more effectually during this expected famine. The people also will avail themselves more readily of the means employed by the government for their assistance, for the efforts of the government will be better understood and appreciated. But ignorance of what to do, unintelligently directed efforts, negligence of opportunities open to them, delay where they should act promptly, physical weakness preventing needed action, love of home proving stronger than the instinct of self-preservation, dislike of hard work, trusting to something turning up, dependence on fate rather than on effort, the graft of petty Indian officials who will use opportunities for filling their purse—all these and many other causes will tend to frustrate the best intentions and the best endeavors of the government.

Meantime it is helpful to recognize the importance of the steps the government is now taking at this early stage. The first stress is felt by the cattle. The Indian farmer depends on his cattle. They must have the first aid. Large quantities of fodder are being brought by rail from distant places and sold at a very cheap rate. Contractors have been engaged to continue this supply as may be needed. Government reserved forests have been opened to free grazing. Temporarily unnecessary cattle are being sent off to distant grazing grounds. Money is being lent to farmers to dig wells, to produce fodder where irrigation is possible, and to purchase fodder and seed. Thus the government hopes to save all the cattle worth saving. Land taxes automatically cease as ability to pay them ceases. For those not farmers, for the hill tribes, for the poor artisans whose trade has ceased to yield them anything, for the laborer for whom there is no work, government has provided for the extension of public works now under construction, such as railway embankments, irrigation works, canals and other profitable constructions. Plans for prospective railways and irrigation works already surveyed have been taken from their shelves and are being held ready for execution. Where famine conditions seem already severe, test works have been opened that give employment and gauge the stress of the distress. Thus the government is keeping pace with the steps of the coming famine, and will be found prepared and able to cope with it when it comes. At the same time some things will be beyond the government's power, and distress will be keen. Starvation, though unnecessary, will exist, and deaths from famine will not be altogether avoided. To help, or not, will not be a matter of choice for missionaries. In the villages where there are mission schools, the mission agents will meet the distressed and the necessity of helping will be imperative. When the hour for help comes, India will again experience the fulness of Christian love and sympathy.

JUSTIN E. ABBOTT.

Summit, N. J.

Answered Prayers

B. J., Louisville, Tenn. "God has heard and answered my prayers."

A. C. W., Daytona, Fla. "I wish to acknowledge an answered prayer."

S. H. P., Springfield, N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer."

A CHRISTIAN HERALD reader, Missouri, would acknowledge an answer to prayer."

E. A. B., Conn. "Through my prayers and those of my friends, God saved my life."

A Constant Reader, Gallatin, Tenn. "God has answered my prayer, for which I thank him."

Mrs. W. L. M., Hamburg, Miss "God has answered many prayers for me in the past year."

L. D. F., Girard, Pa. "The Lord has answered my prayer by delivering me from great distress."

Mrs. L. L., Princeton, Ind. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answer to my prayer."

L. J. T., Muskogee, Okla. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering prayer."

An Old Subscriber, Kansas. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering prayer."

Mrs. J. P. L. "The Lord has delivered me from a heavy burden. He has answered our prayers."

Mrs. M. N. O. "Never fear, God does answer prayer, as I have found in my own experience."

Mrs. M. G. C., Rapp, Kan. "I wish to acknowledge to the world that God has answered my prayer."

Mrs. E. B. A., Woodstock, Vt. "God answered my prayer when it seemed as if there was no help."

Mrs. E. M. B., Watsontown, Pa. "The Lord has restored my mother to health and strength through prayer."

C. G. W., Clintondale, N. Y. "God hears and answers in our time of need, as I know from practical experience."

Mrs. John W. Crighton, Geneva, N. Y. "I was very ill, and God in answer to prayers, restored me to health."

Mrs. I. L., Wyomissing, Pa. "God answered my prayer and has been answering my prayers for several weeks.."

M. M., Monticello, Wis. "I wish to acknowledge that after a number of doctors had said there was no hope for me, God answered prayers in my behalf. My health is better and improving every day."

When Too Much is Too Much.

After turkey, mamma isn't going to give Nan and Bobbie pie or plum pudding or any other pudding. That is too much with any big meat dinner. Instead, she will give them something they will like just as well that will not hurt them. That is

JELL-O

Nothing else is quite so comfortable after a big dinner.

Every package of Jell-O contains a recipe book, full of recipes for making the lightest, daintiest and most delicious desserts, which every member of the family will enjoy without fear of consequences.

Most of them can be made in a minute.

Jell-O is put up in seven fine flavors: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate.

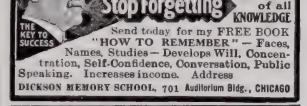
Ten cents a package, at all grocers'. Think of it! Only a dime for "America's most famous dessert."

The beautiful recipe book, "DESSERTS OF THE WORLD," in ten colors and gold, will be sent free to all who write and ask us for it.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO.,
Le Roy, N.Y., and Bridgeburg, Can.

The name JELL-O is on every package in big red letters. If it isn't there, it isn't JELL-O.

PEACH TREES 803,000 Peaches 5 to 7 feet 10c; 4 to 5 ft. 8c; 3 to 4 ft. 6c; 2 to 3 ft. 4c. 200,000 Apples, 50,000 Pears, 50,000 Plums, 100,000 Cherry, 300,000 Carolina Poplar, and millions of Grape and Small Fruits. Secure varieties now, pay in Spring. Buy from the man who has the goods and save disappointment. Catalogue Free to everybody.
Sheerin's Wholesale Nurseries, Dansville, N. Y.



Send today for my FREE BOOK "HOW TO REMEMBER" — Faces, Names, Studies — Develops Will, Concentration, Self-Confidence, Conversation, Public Speaking. Increases income. Address
DICKSON MEMORY SCHOOL, 701 Auditorium Bldg., CHICAGO

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
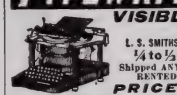
or otherwise



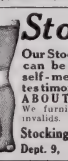
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the Mfrs.—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS

The Only Stropper that Strops any Razor Diagonally
Guaranteed for Life

Brandt's Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.
© Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. B'dw'y, N.Y.

Elastic Stockings



From pure gum rubber, woven absolutely to your measure, at the same price you pay for poor-wearing, ready-made goods.
Worcester Elastic Stocking & Truss Co., 58 Front Street, Dept. 9, Worcester, Mass.

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair. Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short, stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain, remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 6c postage.
Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A345 22 Quincy St., Chicago

AGENTS---"$80 IN 8 DAYS Working in the Noon-Hour Only."

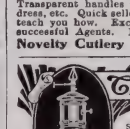
That's the report of Mr. C. E. Warren, one of our hustling representatives. There is big money in selling Novelty Knives, Razors, etc. Transparent handles with society emblems, photos, address, etc. Quick sellers. Experience unnecessary. We teach you how. Exclusive territory. Free samples to successful Agents. Don't delay—Write quick—Today.
Novelty Cutlery Co., 262 Bar St., Canton, Ohio

The IDEAL FENCE

Republic Ornamental Fence combines beauty and utility. Never sags or bulges, many beautiful patterns. Easily put up. Also full line High Carbon, tubular steel Farm Gates. Secure Free Catalog.
Republic Fence & Gate Co., 225 E. St. North Chicago, Ill.

The BEST Light



Cheapest and best light for homes, stores, factories, churches and public halls. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene. Cheaper than kerosene. Over 200 styles. Agents wanted. Write for catalogue.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.

¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.

¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.

¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.

¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.

¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

Write today for the Book

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.

Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

for Large and Small Investors

You can now invest small sums in first-class mortgage bonds. You can have the same advantages which for hundreds of years capitalists alone have enjoyed. Whether you have $10 or $10,000 to invest, you can have the same security and the same returns. Send for our booklet on yielding 5% to 6½%, with the guarantee of this Company and the big 6st class New York and Suburban Real Estate back of them. The safest, surest, most profitable investment for earnings consistent with absolute security.

FIRST MORTGAGE TRUST BONDS

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department

Write for Booklet.

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

POST CARDS

10 Valentine - - - - 10c
10 St. Patrick's Day - 10c
10 General Subjects - 10c
10 Washington's Birthday 10c
10 Birthday - - - - - 10c
10 Greetings - - - - - 10c

Three 10-cent packages mailed for 25c. One package of each of above (60 high grade cards mailed for 50 cents; 100 for 80 cents. We send a special assortment of any of the above subjects for 60 cents per 100.

MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

A Good Municipal Bond To Yield 5½%

THE full faith obligation of a city in an agricultural State in the Northwest, population 1,200, junction of two railroads, contains two banks, two hotels, three elevators, extensive waterworks system, sewers, etc. We are personally familiar with the adjacent farming country, where we have made numerous farm loans. Bonds mature in 20 years, but optionally payable in part at periods of 5, 10 and 15 years. Interest and principal payable at the American Exchange National Bank, New York.

Legal opinion of Hon. C. B. Wood. Write for full particulars.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY

Established 1878. Security Bank Building
Capital and Surplus $700,000 Minneapolis, Minn.

As to Mortgages on Real Estate

By S. W. WELLS*

I VENTURE to make some comments on your excellent article in the issue of October 25, entitled, "Mortgages on Real Estate," which I trust will at least serve the purpose of turning the thoughts of your investing readers toward some important aspects of real estate investments. The five requirements of any investment, as you name them, seem to warrant almost equal consideration, while certain of them in my judgment are of almost negligible importance compared to others. These are:

1. Safety of principal and interest.
2. Rate.
3. Convertibility.
4. Prospect of increase in market value.
5. Stability of market price.

First of all, let me urge every investor to print the first requirement, "safety of principal and interest," in bold letters and place it prominently before him as a constant reminder of the one real requirement. My personal experience in the investment business has indicated that far too often the ordinary investor attaches disproportionate importance to the other characteristics of a proposed investment.

Second. Permit the suggestion that these words be added always to rate: "No higher than consistent with absolute safety of principal and interest."

Principles of Convertibility

Third. The requirement of convertibility, or cash availability, for an ordinary investor appears frequently to be a mistaken need in his mind and proves a most expensive luxury. There often exists an actual requirement for quick convertibility in the assets of companies upon which a sudden demand may unexpectedly be made, and sometimes the affairs of a private investor may be in such condition as to render this requirement a necessity. For the most part, however, the investor of limited means, who sacrifices from one to two per cent. of interest rate in owning high grade listed bonds, suffers a useless loss caused by a misconception of his own requirements. A thorough appreciation of the meaning of true availability should be had. Any good sound security, bond or mortgage, is fairly convertible into cash within a reasonable time under ordinary financial conditions, just as any good property is reasonably convertible or available as security for raising funds by borrowing.

Now, real convertibility, which is usually construed as instant convertibility under all financial conditions, is found in only a few of the highest-grade securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange, which yield a rate of income not welcome at all to the average investor. A great many persons, to the writer's knowledge, enjoy the feeling carried with these listed securities, "that they can get their money out any time they want it," who have no real requirement whatever of the kind which they are paying so heavily to enjoy.

In Times of Financial Stress

Let it be said in passing, that a great many securities possess a fair-weather convertibility which fades away in times of financial stress. It is at such times generally that the real need arises to convert, and it has been shown that at such times there are two convertible classes of securities—the high-grade listed bond and the thoroughly sound desirable investment which is constantly required by the large institutions. The really well secured real estate mortgage then comes into its own and shows itself superior to a host of intermediate investments which sell on a more or less fictitious quality of convertibility.

Fourth. The prospect of increase in market value of the investment is a hazardous consideration to have weight in an investor's mind. Let the consideration rather be the probable and logical increase in value of the property securing the loan, which reverts again to the first requirement, "safety." Such considerations as the possible increase in market value border on the speculative possibilities of an investment, and this is admittedly dangerous ground for the untrained investor. If the probable increase in value of the mortgaged security takes place there may then arise a slight enhancement in value of the mortgage, be it railroad, city real estate or farm land. The elemental consideration still remains the ultimate return of principal intact. This for the bona fide investors who, it is presumed, form the reading class of your magazine.

Stability of Market Price

Fifth. Stability of market price is best assured by increased earnings of property or property value increase. Let this be merged again in the first consideration.

I wish to offer my commendation most heartily to the point made in your article, that because mortgages do not enhance in value, they do not therefore shrink, and for that reason, they are removed from the field of speculation. Is this not the prime consideration to occupy the mind of an investor who wishes to be assured of a regular income on capital? Our experience in a general investment business has demonstrated that anything even remotely bordering on speculative value is most dangerous seed implanted in the minds of investors. To make them appreciate that what goes up may come down and keep on coming, has seemed to us our best educational note.

One Further Consideration

There is one further consideration in making investments which might well be given a place among the requirements you name. Let the investor thoroughly acquaint himself with the company through whom he proposes to obtain his investment. The advertisers in discriminating magazines may perhaps first merit his attention. A further investigation is always possible through some disinterested financial agency at home in whom he has confidence. The analysis of a security as suggested in your article is good, but inadequate to insure safety in dealing with an irresponsible company whose reputation is not more valuable to them than any possible present profits.

*Of Wells & Dickey Co.

Bricks and Tiles

EVERY State and Territory in the Union, excepting Alaska and Hawaii, is a producer of burned clay in some form. Undoubtedly the rapid introduction of concrete into the building trades has in the last few years greatly reduced the amount of bricks used in masonry, yet the aggregate production and value of the industry is still enormous. Including the coarser forms of pottery, the total value of these products in 1910 was $170,115,974; of this sum $18,111,000 should be credited to fire bricks, and to drain tiles $10,389,000. But it is the familiar common brick that heads the list with an output valued at $55,219,551. Vitrified bricks, used for paving, total $11,269,586. This sum was slightly exceeded by the output of clay sewer-pipes, which amounted to $11,428,696. Despite the competition of concrete and the use of up-to-date machinery, the price of structural bricks is steadily increasing.

COFFEE vs. COLLEGE

Student Had to Give Up Coffee

Some people are apparently immune to coffee poisoning—if you are not, Nature will tell you so in the ailments she sends as warnings. And when you get a warning, heed it or you get hurt, sure.

A young college student writes from New York:

"I had been told frequently that coffee was injurious to me, and if I had not been told, the almost constant headaches with which I began to suffer after using it for several years, the state lethargic mentality which gradually came upon me to hinder me in my studies, the general lassitude and indisposition to any sort of effort which possessed me, ought to have been sufficient warning.

But I disregarded then till my physician told me a few months ago that I must give up coffee or quit college. I could hesitate no longer, and at once abandoned coffee.

"On the advice of a friend I began to drank Postum, and rejoice to tell you that with the drug of coffee removed and the healthful properties of Postum in its place I was soon relieved of all my ailments.

The headaches and nervousness disappeared entirely, strength came back to me, and my complexion which had been very, very bad, cleared up beautifully.

Better than all, my mental faculties were toned up, and become more vigorous than ever, and I now feel that no course of study would be too difficult for me."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Linene COLLARS
CUFFS AND BOSOMS

SAVE LAUNDERING BY WEARING LINENE

Linene Reversible Collars cost only 2½ cents apiece and can be worn both sides. They are finished to look just like linen, but are more flexible and less liable to soil. Prove them by wearing

10 Collars for 25 cents at the stores, or by mail 30 cents in U. S. stamps. SAMPLE BY MAIL 6 CENTS

State Size and Style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR COMPANY
Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

RAPHAEL TASSO RUBENS ANGELO

This Jacket Keeps You Warm In All Weather

Closely woven, wear resisting. Just the garment for automobilists and for men who work out-of-doors in cold weather. Comfortable, durable

PARKER'S Arctic Jackets

Registered in U.S. Patent Office

Made of a closely woven, knitted fabric lined with thick gray wool fleece. Sun fasteners. Riveted pockets. Ask your dealer or send postal for free booklet or send postpaid on receipt of $2.5.

JOHN H. PARKER CO., Dept. 25 James Street, Malden, Mass.

WANTED MEN

Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Electric Motormen, Train Porters (colored). Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 a month. No experience necessary. 50,000 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for Application Blank and Book. State position.

International Railway Corr. Institute
Dept. 16 Indianapolis, Indiana

Print Your Own

Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press Larger $18, Rotary $60. Save money. Big profits printing for others. All easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog. Type cards, paper, etc.

THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut

Young People's Societies

Our Native Land*

NEVER was wiser proverb than that "charity begins at home." The man who allows his own family to go ragged, ignorant and unchurched, and puts his property and his efforts into foreign evangelization is an almost unthinkable creature. None but an imbecile could, we would say, pursue such a course; and yet the country which lets its own dark corners go unlighted while sending torches to illumine the darkness of other countries, is in a similar case. We should strenuously do the one, while not leaving the other undone.

It is related of the saintly Frances Havergal that when, in the year 1873, she felt that she had come into the full illumination of the Spirit, her first prayer was for the conversion of those in the home where she was then visiting. The family was composed of ten persons, several of them unconverted, and none of the rest active Christians. "Lord, give me all this house!" she prayed with an agony of desire, and her petition was granted. She felt that her first duty was to those immediately surrounding her. That done, she could go on into wider fields. It is a good lesson for us all.

Not very long ago, we were told that 74 per cent. of the discharged convicts of a certain section of Europe came to this country. Many of the immigrants are tainted with a prison record, yet they are able at one port or another to lie or smuggle themselves in. Some of these men and women settle in the far interior. More remain in the coast cities. Wherever they are, they are a menace to our government and should be surrounded by uplifting influences. This is only a single one of the scores of what may well be called "indigestible classes," which form our polyglot population.

It is estimated that a large per cent. of our immigrants, good, bad and indifferent, push westward; and that the proportion of foreigners in the States west of the Mississippi is two or three times as great as in those east of it. Henry Ward Beecher once hopefully declared that we were unnecessarily worried over the extent of immigration, that "a lion can easily swallow and digest an ox"; to which Dr. Josiah Strong replied logically that if the lion should chance to overeat on ox-meat, or should chance to devour a diseased ox, we should have on our hands a very sick lion. The moral is plain. We must realize that our country is in danger of being permanently weakened and injured by the tremendous influx of foreigners, many of them oppressed and ignorant peasants from the least progressive countries.

An enormous number of the inhabitants of the Middle Western States have, during the last ten years, removed to the great new commonwealths, taking up land in remote sections and founding new communities. Some of these people are stanch Christians and carry their faith with them as they go; but many more were either infidels or lukewarm Christians to begin with, and they are likely to grow worse in their new environment, unless helping hands are stretched out to them.

Let us see to it that these helping hands are supplied. Few of us understand the awful extent to which in some frontier communities, and in the purlieus of our cities, not only vice and irreligion, but disloyalty to our government and positive anarchism, have developed. Not only for the sake of God and our religion, but for the sake of sanity, good government and patriotism, do we need zealous and intelligent home missionary labor. Let us promote it by every means in our power.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, January 28. TEXTS: Jer. 40: 1-6; Ex. 3: 1-10; Mark 5: 18-20.

Foreign Missions*

IN John R. Mott's Decisive Hour of Missions, he quotes thus the terrible accusation of an Asiatic against the merchants and laymen who represent Christian countries abroad: "You come to us with your religion. You degrade our people with drink. You scorn our religion, in many points like your own, and then you wonder why Christianity makes such slow progress among us. I will tell you. It is because you are not like your Christ."

All the efforts of our missionaries are often not enough to counterbalance the deplorable influence of these wicked representatives of the so-called Christian countries, who scatter with truly fiendish industry, not only strong drink but streams of agnostic and other destructive literature wherever they go. Pundita Ramabai has said: "The majority of the higher classes in our schools are getting Western secular education, which is undermining their faith in their ancestral religion. They are not getting anything better to take the place of the old religion in their hearts, and are therefore without God, without hope, without Christ, going down socially and morally."

Mohammedanism is making terrible inroads in the East Indies and Africa, a new foe for our devoted missionaries there to fight. Their cry is now for the means of giving Christian education to the people. The Oriental mind is aroused. Education it will have. Its curiosity regarding Western science and art is poignantly awakened, and unless Christian institutions are established there, the rationalistic and atheistic schools will prevail.

Have you ever chanced to notice the fervent avowals of joy in their work which most missionaries have made? There have been few of them who have not testified as they laid down their labors, that they were glad of their choice. As old Archdeacon Moule said, after fifty years as a missionary in China, "Could I live my fifty years over again, I should wish to change much early and late and in the middle distance, as to personal action and zeal; but I would not change my occupation or desire anything happier or nobler in ideal."

One of the direct results of Christian missions in Bombay is mentioned by Dr. Hume, and is one of the most encouraging signs of the times in India. It is the establishment by high-caste Hindus of a mission for the elevation of the depressed classes. It seeks to "promote education, provide work, remove social disabilities and preach good citizenship."

By those who have known India in the past, this innovation is regarded as nothing short of miraculous.

Last July there died in Chefoo Miss Downing, a missionary from St. Johnsbury, Vt. She had worked, with only a year's rest, continuously since 1866 in Chefoo. For years, says Woman's Work for Women, she conducted a girl's boarding school, and she helped also in the establishment and conduct of other schools. She assisted substantially in the building of a vacation home in Chefoo for tired missionaries. A self-supporting worker, she gave untiringly of her means and of her strength. When she died, the flag at the United States consulate hung at half-mast, the church bell tolled her age (82), and a company surrounded her grave, singing her favorite song, "Heaven Is My Home."

Could there be a more beautiful, a more useful life than this? It should be an example to thousands of others among our well-to-do women.

But it is generally the poor who wish to minister to those who sit in darkness; and they must be paid and their work sustained. Let us give to them freely.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, January 28. TEXTS: II. Cor. 5: 14-20.

Josef Hofmann Is Now Acknowledged the Greatest Pianist in the World

In that opinion practically all the leading musical critics now agree. It was this belief in Mr. Hofmann's powers and musical knowledge that led the Editor of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, five years ago, to ask the great pianist to join the magazine's editorial staff and conduct a monthly department in which he would answer the questions of piano students.

For five years Mr. Hofmann has done this, and is doing it now. He has answered hundreds of questions during that time, placing his unquestioned knowledge of the piano at the free disposal of every piano student.

So that no matter in how small a community a girl who loves her piano may live or how far removed from a musical center she may be, the free advice of the greatest of living pianists is at her disposal. Read his department, for example, in the February LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

For 15 Cents You Have a Copy

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA

Is College Worth While for Girls?

A college woman asked 4 questions of hundreds of college women who represent all ages, all sections of the country, all classes, most occupations, 62 institutions where women study, and 60 years of college education in America.

These questions were:

How did college affect your health?
How has your college education helped you?
How did your college education fail to help you?
In what way could the girls' college be bettered?

Perhaps this is the most careful and searching inquiry as to the absolute value of a college education by the only women qualified to speak — the women who tried it.

The results of these months of work are now being given in THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. One of the articles is in the February number.

For 15 Cents You Have It

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
INDEPENDENCE, SQUARE PHILADELPHIA

THE INFANT CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

YOUTH and old age, side by side, is a favorite subject with artists. The old fisherman rowing his boat over the tossing waves with his little granddaughter at his side; the grandfather with his grandson upon his knee; the grandmother and her granddaughter side by side, "sweet sixty and sweet sixteen," are truly lovely pictures.

In to-day's lesson we have such a picture. We see in the temple of God the aged Simeon, probably one hundred and three years old, holding in his arms the infant Saviour; a look of soul-gratification illumines his face, as he realizes that this is indeed the "Lord's Christ" whom the Holy Spirit had promised that he should see before his death. We can almost hear the old man saying to the company gathered there (priests and others to witness the presentation of Jesus in the temple according to the law), "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." (Luke 2: 25-32.)

Youth and Old Age

Then there was another beautiful picture of Youth and Old Age, as Anna, the prophetess, eighty-four years old, came into the temple and stood beside the holy Infant, with the love-light in her eyes falling first upon the Child, and then upon the company of people, as she told them that he was indeed the promised Messiah whom they had so long desired. We do not wonder that this occasion has been painted by several different artists, and that it is a favorite subject in Christian art. But what of the dear Virgin Mother, almost a child herself, who had come to the temple with her Child? She, too, looked on the beautiful picture of the Babe and the aged people, and it was almost beyond her comprehension, for it is said that she and Joseph "marveled at those things which were spoken of him." (Luke 2: 33.) Mary had come not only to bring her Child according to the law, but also to offer a sacrifice for herself—a pair of turtle-doves or two young pigeons. But how did Simeon and Anna chance to be there at the auspicious time? Ah! there is a great thought in that connection: Simeon, though aged, and possibly somewhat infirm, instead of abiding quietly in his home, lingered much about the house of God with holy expectation in his heart. And as for Anna, it is said of her that "she served God with fastings and prayers night and day in the temple." She had not permitted old age to condemn her to a place in the chimney corner at home.

"I only ask to live just as long as God has any work for me to do—and not one moment longer." This is what Theodore L. Cuyler said after he had been fifty-six years in the ministry, and he said this when he was still pastor of one of the largest Presbyterian churches in the United States. It is a common saying: "It is better to wear out than to rust out." And truly, is not rusting out the more deadly? For when rusting begins, it eats deeper and deeper until it paralyzes all human energy, while what is called the wear and tear of life is rapidly made up.

"You might as well lie down and die as to stop your work," said one friend to another who had become somewhat discouraged by what seemed to be a weakening of powers. Mrs. William Schauffler, who for nearly sixty years had been a missionary, had been ill for some weeks, and although somewhat recovered, seemed too weak ever to rise again from her bed. She sent for her son, Rev. A. F. Schauffler, and she said to him: "Frederic, I think the time has come that I am to leave the world." "Why do you think so, mother?" he asked. "Because the Lord does not seem to have anything more for me to do; nobody seems to need me." You are mistaken, mother," the son replied; "there was a Jew here a few days ago, in much distress, wishing that he might see you, and get some advice from you." "Is that so? Could you send for him now? I would like to see him;" and she showed evident signs of reviving strength, just as a fire that is stirred burns up brightly. The Jew was brought to her bedside and got from her the wise counsel he so much needed. Nothing more was said about dying, and indeed Mrs. Schauffler lived eight years longer—eight years of usefulness. Her son has said that undoubtedly his mother's life would have ended when she thought there was nothing more for her to do, if it had not been for the coming of the Jew.

The Lessons of Old Age

There are many lessons which old age can teach, but the preserving of the power of helpfulness to others is one of the most practical lessons of all. There is a right way and a wrong way to be helpful. A writer signing himself "Spectator" gives some good advice in this matter when he says: "The Spectator himself, though not so young as he once was, is not so old as to make it impossible for him to be older if he should live long enough. This being the case, he hopes that these few lines will not be taken as an impertinence by his elders and betters. After all, this advice is not really meant for old people, for then it is too late to change any habit of the mind; but he wants to urge those who are growing old to consider their peculiarities while it is in their power to do so, and above all to give themselves larger and wider interests than those of the small practical details of life." As a warning, the Spectator cites the case of an old lady who had lived a most efficient and useful life in many ways. She had always taken the entire management of her household, never allowing any of her children to assist or interfere with her arrangements. But now, when no longer strong enough for such activities, she wearies herself and every one with incessant questions as to what has been done, and what is going to be done, and her unwillingness to trust the judgment of any one else is a sore trial to those who must now do the work. The Spectator remarks: "If this woman had thought and read more widely at an earlier period of her life, and thus given herself the power of discriminating between what is really of importance and what is not, her old age would have been far more beautiful and useful." One old woman who had lived beyond one hundred years, and was even then making public addresses to very cultured people, was asked: "What is the secret of your long life?" She replied: "I rather think it is because I haven't worried out my life thinking on small subjects."

Here we turn again to look at the aged Simeon, and Anna the prophetess. How full of instruction their old age seems to us, and we thank God for putting that scene in the temple into the Bible. A gentleman who has just entered "the sunset watch of life" has made a change in the familiar lines in which age is compared to a lovely Lapland night, to read as follows:

An old age serene and bright
And lovely as the sunset light
Shall guide thee to thy grave.

The Duty of Youth to Old Age

A traveler in the Tyrol tells how she was awakened one morning very early by the music of a violin and flutes under her windows. She could not guess the occasion of it, but when she went down stairs she found the house all decorated with flowers, and there was a table covered with gifts such as a worsted shawl, warm gloves, baskets of flowers, cake, etc., and every gift had pinned to it some message of love. A chair was placed by the table for some one to occupy it. The traveler asked what it all meant, and the reply was: "It is grandmother's birthday." The grandmother in her spectacles, high velvet cap and white apron, was a heroine all day, sitting in state to receive visitors, and dealing out cake to all who came.

But it is not alone on grandmother's birthday that she should receive loving consideration. To be hands, feet, eyes, or ears for grandma and grandpa every day in the year should be the great delight of a child or young person, while advice given by them should receive close attention and be followed by swift action.

Who would ever think that grandma might even be a rival to Santa Claus? A grandmother living in a distant city made two pretty little gingham dresses for her three-year-old granddaughter, and sent them to her. The little one was so pleased that she was unwilling to wear any of her other dresses. A few weeks later, the mother proposed sending the rather large family of dolls to Santa Claus to have him redress them. But little Betsy stoutly objected, saying, "I don't want Santa Claus to do it, but my lovy grandma."

Oh, yes, these lovely grandmas,

They have gathered for me the roses of life
And stripped their thorns away.
They have given caress, and kept off strife
Through many a sorrowful day;
They have raised the cup to my fevered lip
With a touch that never jarred,
They have held me up when I feared to slip
O'er ways both dark and hard.

Young people show the goodness of their hearts and the nobility of their lives when they rejoice in their grandparents and look up to them. Many are quite willing to do this if they can thereby lay claim to some great name, but that does not count in heaven, and that is not what we mean here, but rather what the apostle Paul wrote about in a letter to Timothy: "The unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice, and I am persuaded that in thee also."

The boys and girls of to-day are sure to be the grandparents of two or three generations hence, and that is another reason why they should love and reverence their grandparents now. If they do not, they will be sowing the seeds of irreverent treatment for themselves by and by.

* The International Sunday School Lesson for January 28, 1912. The Presentation in the Temple. Luke 2: 22-39. GOLDEN TEXT: "For mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples." Luke 2: 30, 31.

BECOME A NURSE

"I have found The Chautauqua School of Nursing prompt and reliable. The school has done all it could to make my studies a success. With pluck and perseverance there is no reason why one cannot became an efficient and successful nurse by taking this course. This statement has been endorsed by physicians for whom I have worked. I have been employed by eight different physicians since taking the C. S. N. Course." Clara Heffner, (photo) Bonnellton, Iowa.

Send for a copy of
"How I Became a Nurse" and our Year Book explaining method; 248 pages with intensely interesting experiences by our graduates, who mastered the art of professional nursing by the C. S. N. home-study course.

Thousands of our graduates, with and without previous experience, are to-day earning $10 to $25 a week

TENTH YEAR

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Phelps Book Ready

BE SURE to write a postal to Phelps for his big show room book of 1912 buggies — all made-to-order and over 125 to choose from. The biggest selection in America.

SPLIT HICKORY VEHICLES
ON 30 DAYS' FREE ROAD TEST

Phelps sells only direct from factory. All latest styles, brand new stock. His book tells you more about styles and values than 25 dealers' stores could show you in 10 big town. It's Free. If you decide after trial to buy Phelps Saves You an Average of $25 or up. Write today.

H. C. Phelps, Pres.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO.,
Sta. 236 Columbus, O.
Largest Factory in the Wood Selling Vehicles Direct

2 Years' Guarantee

LIEBIG'S OXO BOUILLON CUBES

A cube to a cupful
A cupful in a minute

Oxo Bouillon—appetizing, nourishing, easily digested. Quickly builds up lagging strength. Always ready—Simply place a cube in a cup and add hot water.

In tins of four sizes

4 for 10c	50 for $1.20
10 for 25c	100 for $2.35

At your dealer's or sent postpaid by us.

FREE—Send us your dealer's name and address and we will send you a box of Oxo Bouillon Cubes free.

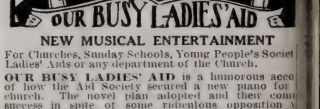
CORNEILLE DAVID & CO., Sole Agents
Dept. 68, 9 No. Moore St. New York City

For the Invalid



NEW MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT

For Churches, Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, Ladies' Aids or any department of the Church.

OUR BUSY LADIES' AID is a humorous account of how the Aid Society secured a new piano for the church. The novel plan adopted and then carried to success in spite of some ridiculous opposition will entertain any audience. Highly recommended by Ministers as extremely well adapted for church performance.

Easy Choruses—Comical Dialog—Easy To Get Up
Single copy 35c. $3.50 per dozen.

Examination copy loaned if three cents postage is sent with your request. To be returned promptly if not purchased.

BINGHAM-RADCLIFFE CO., Originators of Church Entertainments
*Mark hurry orders for Desk A Millville, New Jersey

Nulite Gasoline Table Lamp

A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c. p. brilliant light 3/4 cent per hour. Saves 90% of your light bill.

AGENTS—Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory for capable town, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
413 So. Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.

SQUEAKS

stopped; "3-in-One" oils everything right, locks, clocks, hinges, sewing machines, typewriters; generous sample sent by 3 IN 1 OIL CO. 42 CH Broadway, New York.

MONOGRAM STATIONERY

Your Monogram (two initials) embossed in gold on superfine stationery Strictly High Class.

$1.00 One Dollar a Box (quire) $1.00
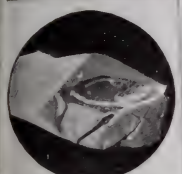
Envelopes to Match

Monogram Stationery Co., 903 Marbridge Bldg., New York



Food prepared for cooking placed in a bag

COOKING IN PAPER BAGS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00. Postage 15 Cents Eqtra.

The method of cooking well-nigh everything but soups in paper bags, on a broiler, in any and every kind of oven, is clearly and fully explained in the new book, Paper Bag Cooking, by M. Soyer, the famous chef of Brooks' Club, London, the originator and perfector of this system, which bids fair to revolutionize cooking the world over. The American edition has been revised by Marion Harland's daughter, Mrs. Virginia Terhune Van de Water, the American equivalents taking the place of English culinary terms.

The advantages of the method—there are no disadvantages—make it a boon alike to rich and poor, to those who cook themselves and those who enjoy the cooking of others, and for these reasons:

1. It makes every dish more savory and nutritious.
2. It is economical: the food weighing practically the same when drawn from, as when put into, the oven.
3. It is labor-saving—no cleaning of pots or pans.
4. It is hygienic—no germ-haunted cooking utensils.
5. No smell of cooking—the bag is sealed with a clip.

It is clear that, where paper-bag cookery is adopted, the kitchen—especially the humble kitchen—will become a new room, for, greasy pots and pans virtually dispensed with, the atmosphere will be changed. The activity of the microbe will also be hindered. Labor will be saved, and quicker cooking will lower the coal and gas bill. For dwellers in small flats and single rooms—for bachelors and bachelor maids, clerks, typists, and school-teachers—the advantages are obvious, and not the least of these is freedom from the odor of cooking.

With each copy of Soyer's "PAPER BAG COOKERY" will be sent Two Dozen Special Paper Bags.

WEATHER HOUSE

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

The artistic little weather house shown here is made in Germany and especially imported for us. It perfectly fills all the requirements of a thermometer and barometer. If the weather is going to be fine the children will appear at the door; if the weather is going to be bad the children will go indoors, and the old lady will come out dressed for a storm. While the construction is very simple, the barometer is thoroughly reliable and accurate. The changing positions of the children and the old lady will be a source of constant interest to all members of the family. Postage 15 cents extra in either case.

A Choice of Either of the Premiums Described Below Given Free to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

AVIATION CAPS

These extremely popular caps are made of very heavy soft all wool fleece yarn. They are very stylish and suitable for wear with any costume, and are extremely comfortable for cold weather wear in outdoor sports, such as skating or driving. The body of the cap is pure white, finished with a turned-up colored band. Choice of any color desired. Postage, 10 cents extra.

KNITTED COAT SWEATERS

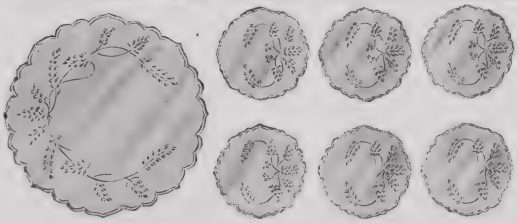
This sweater is one of the most serviceable and satisfactory garments a child can possess. It is made of fine quality yarn, cut the latest coat style, having two side pockets, and heavy knitted band down the front, fastened with white pearl buttons. Can be furnished in white, red or gray, and sizes 22, 24 and 26, so that children of all ages can be fitted. We will Give Free for Two New Subscriptions at $1.50 each, postage 20 cents extra, the same garment in misses' size, running from 26 to 34.

For Three New Subscriptions at $1.50 each, postage 20 cents extra, we will send a lady's coat sweater in any of the following colors: White, oxford, or navy. This is a beautifully finished garment, and will be found extremely comfortable for cold weather wear. Can be had in sizes from 36 to 44. Postage, 15 cents extra in either case.

BISQUE DOLL

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Two NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.75.

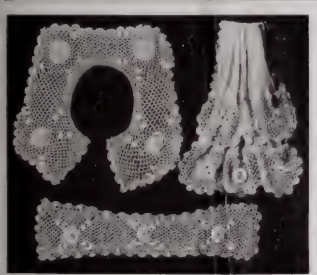
This is one of the most charming and lifelike dolls a little girl could own. She is twenty inches high, has genuine bisque head, beautiful eyes that open and shut, and beautiful curly hair. The body is made of best white kid, thoroughly sewed, and has especially constructed jointed hips, which make it possible for dolly to sit or lie down in perfect ease. Packed in a strong box and sent by express at receiver's expense.



LUNCH SET

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

This artistic lunch set will appeal to every one interested in dainty needlework. It consists of one centerpiece, 18 x 18 inches, and six doilies each 8½ x 8½ inches, stamped on pure white imported linen. With the set is included one bone stiletto and twenty-five skeins of D. M. C. Embroidery Cotton, which is a sufficient quantity for working the eyelet design and scalloping the edges.



REAL IRISH POINT LACE

A Choice Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

You may have either one of the collars or the jabot shown in the illustration for one new subscription. They are all three made of real Irish point lace, not imitation, and they are the most stylish and latest designs worn in New York at the present time. The standing and Dutch collars are made after a rose design, and the jabot has a conventional clover design. The jabot is made up with a very fine quality of batiste. Postage, 4 cents extra.

UP-TO-DATE FANCYWORK COMBINATION

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

This combination outfit will surely please every woman, as it contains up-to-date designs for all kinds of fancy work. Some of these are stamped on the goods ready to be embroidered, others are perforated on bond paper, enabling one to use the pattern over and over again. This beautiful outfit consists of one 18 inch pure imported linen centerpiece, one corset cover stamped on fine quality nainsook, one pillow top hand-painted on Aberdeen crash, five skeins of Queen Louise embroidery floss for outlining the pillow top, one bone stiletto. Also the following embroidery designs, which are full size, perforated on three sheets of 22 x 28 inch bond paper, strong enough to be used several times: One scarf, four Dutch collars, three turnover collars, one pillow case, one doily 5½ x 5½ inches, one bow, seven sprays, one handkerchief case, one belt, one shirtwaist, collar and cuffs to match; one complete set of alphabet letters, three-fourths of an inch high; one complete set, 1½ inches high; one table cover, two borders, one anchor, also a cake of "Ideal" Stamping Preparation, Poncette, and directions for stamping.

Tire Cost—Where It Goes

23% is Due to Rim-Cutting—
25% is Due to Overloading

We sent out men to look at thousands of ruined clincher tires.

And 23 per cent. of all those tires were rim-cut.

Sometimes this ruin is the driver's fault. He runs the tire partly deflated.

It is usually due to a puncture.

A clincher tire which goes flat may be wrecked in a moment—ruined beyond repair.

On the other side, note this:

No-Rim-Cut tires are more widely used than any other make of tire.

Men know they can't rim-cut, so they get more abuse — more under-inflation — than any other tire that's made.

But, despite all this neglect, we have never had an instance of rim-cutting in all the hundreds of thousands used.

Most tires are overloaded.

Not through any fault of the motor car maker. He equips for expected load.

But you add heavy extras.

And some of your passengers sometimes overweigh the expected 150 pounds.

The result is a blow-out.

That's why we make No-Rim-Cut tires 10 per cent. over the rated size. The manner of fitting permits that.

That means 10 per cent. more air—

Ten per cent. more carrying capacity.

And that, with the average car, adds 25 per cent. to the tire mileage.

Yet these tires which can't rim-cut — these oversize tires — now cost no more than other standard tires. That's why they outsell others.

Average Saving, $20 Per Tire

These two features together—No-Rim-Cut and oversize—under average conditions double the life of a tire. This judgment is based on 13 years of experience, with 800,000 Goodyear tires.

If that is so, this single invention is saving an average of $20 per tire, figuring various sizes. On our output this year that will mean $10,000,000.

Those figures, of course, are only approximate. One can't be exact on the cost of tire upkeep.

Proper care and inflation, roads, speed, loads, etc., all affect tire mileage.

But the figures are fair.

Certain it is that No-Rim-Cut tires save all the ruin of rim-cutting.

Certain it is that their 10 per cent. oversize adds an average of 25 per cent. to the tire mileage.

No Extra Cost

These patented tires, when first brought out, cost one-fifth more than other standard tires.

Now they cost an equal price. Our multiplied output has cut the cost of production.

Note what that means.

No-Rim-Cut tires, 10 per cent. oversize, cost just the same as old-type clincher tires. The saving is entirely clear.

You get all their advantages by simply insisting on Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires.

By Far the Leading Tire

Now note the judgment of users.

The demand for these tires has doubled over and over. It now exceeds the demand for any other type of tire.

Last year's sales on No-Rim-Cut tires exceeded the previous 12 years put together.

This year, 108 leading motor car makers have contracted for Goodyear tires.

That's the result of experience.

These tires have been tested by not less than 100,000 users. And that is the result of the testing.

Isn't that evidence enough?

THE NEW GOODYEAR NON-SKID TREAD

Tough
Deep-Cut
Double-Thick

GOODYEAR

No-Rim-Cut Tires

With or Without Non-Skid Treads

Non-Skid Treads, if Wanted

Now these tires, if you want it, come equipped with an ideal Non-Skid tread.

Not any short-lived protection. Not a mere corrugation in a regular tread.

This is an extra tread, vulcanized onto the regular, so it gives you a double-thick tread.

This extra tread is of very tough rubber. And its thickness permits these deep-cut, enduring blocks.

The road surface is grasped by countless edges and angles—grasped with a bulldog grip.

Each block widens out at the base, so the strain is distributed the same as on smooth-tread tires.

One moment's comparison reveals a dozen advantages over any other non-skid invention. We have worked for three years to perfect it.

The Final Tire

The tire of the future, beyond any question, will be this No-Rim-Cut type.

The old-type clincher—the hooked-base tire—is being displaced on thousands of cars each month.

After 13 years of tire making we consider this tire the best that we ever can make.

It is so close to perfection that our liberal warrant now costs us but a trifle per tire.

Rubber never can be made more impervious to wear. Fabric can never be made more enduring.

This type and this tire, in our estimation, represents finality in tires.

Our new Tire Book is ready. It is filled with facts, based on 13 years of tire making, which every tire user should know. Ask us to mail it to you.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, CALUMET STREET, AKRON, OHIO

Branches and Agencies in 103 Principal Cities We Make All Kinds of Rubber Tires, Tire Accessories and Repair Outfits

Main Canadian Office, Toronto, Ont. Canadian Factory, Bowmanville, Ont.

(465) (465)

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JANUARY 24, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 4. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

MME. MOLÉ-RAYMOND. From the Painting by Vigée-Lebrun

See page 77

Study this picture—
There's a story in each face

HERE is an opportunity for you to write an advertisement that will be read by millions and millions of people. For the best advertisements written by amateurs on Dr. Lyon's Perfect Tooth Powder for the illustration above

$400 will be awarded

First Award, $100 Second, $50 Third, $25 10 Awards $10 Each 25 Awards $5 Each

Write your advertisement in your own way in simple terms and short sentences. You can get facts and arguments about in the advertisements now appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal, Woman's Home Companion, Delineator, Designer, New Idea, McCall's, Everybody's, Munsey's and other publications, one of which you probably read. While it is not compulsory to buy Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder to enter this contest, the literature in the package, as sold everywhere, will give additional helpful information.

Dr. Lyon's PERFECT Tooth Powder

Do not tear out this page. Use it only as an inspiration and guide. Write your advertisement on one side of plain sheet or sheets of paper just as you would any composition. Avoid big words. Awards will be made on neatness, simple language, sound reasoning and brevity.

We suggest that you write a short introduction based on the ideas you get from the picture, such as the consequences of neglected teeth and the benefits of well-cared-for teeth, this to lead up to the highly efficient, beneficial and safe-guarding qualities of Dr. Lyon's Perfect Tooth Powder—in all 200 to 300 words. No person engaged in the advertising business or member of his or her family is invited to enter this contest.

Contest closes midnight, April 1st. Mail your advertisement, signed with address, to Contest Dept. C, Dr. I. W. Lyon, New York City. Awards will be made by jury appointed from their advertising departments by the following publications: Everybody's, McClure's, Cosmopolitan, Munsey's, Delineator, McCall's, Woman's Home Companion, Collier's, Literary Digest. Winning advertisements will be published after May 1st with names of winners.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 24, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Huddling in a Sheltered Doorway for Warmth

An Apple-Woman Braving the Cold

Teamsters on the River Front Trying to Keep Warm

JANUARY'S GREAT COLD WAVE

THE first weeks of the new year brought to the greater part of the North American continent the lowest temperatures which have been recorded in some sections for many years. A great cold wave swept across the country from the Rocky Mountains, causing intense suffering and a great loss of life and destruction of property all through the Middle West. A dispatch from Denver, Colo., on January 6, stated that 30,000 cattle were starving or freezing to death in western Kansas and eastern Colorado. The value of this live stock is estimated at over $1,500,000, and it is believed that there is little hope of saving a large number of younger cattle, which had been left in the open to winter.

Appeals for aid from the poorer section of all the cities and towns throughout the country have kept the churches and charitable organizations working at their fullest capacity to provide food and clothing. During the first days of the cold snap, thirteen deaths were recorded in the West and Middle West, and the temperatures ranged all the way from 34 degrees below zero in Winnipeg and some of the other western Canadian cities through the entire range of the thermometer up to one degree below zero in Pittsburg and about zero in New York City. When the coldest weather struck Chicago the charitable organizations were forced to their wits' end to devise means for relieving the distress, which they found more extensive than they had ever before known it in the city.

The coming of the cold wave to the Atlantic seaboard was accompanied by a terrible storm, which raged up and down the coast, causing a number of shipwrecks and a great deal of distress on the coast. Atlantic steamers came into the eastern ports clothed from waterline to truck with ice and snow. Only a few hours before the storm signals were hoisted the entire American fleet had been dispatched to a point south of the Bermuda Islands to carry on squadron drill and war manœuvers. The storm overtook the fleet and sent it limping back to the nearest ports in what was practically a disabled condition. Shrouded with ice and snow, the smaller vessels made Hamilton, Bermuda, while the larger ones ran for Chesapeake Bay. The officers reported that they encountered seas which threw great volumes of spray down the funnels of the Delaware, one of the largest of battleships. Considerable anxiety was felt for three of the torpedo-boat destroyers, which are not in any way constructed to withstand such heavy weather. A number of the larger and more powerful vessels of the fleet spent two days in searching for their smaller and disabled fellows. After these little boats had been safely assisted into Hampton Roads one of the officers from the Terry said jokingly that he had some difficulty in making up his mind during the height of the storm whether he was navigating a torpedo boat or a submarine, the heavy seas broke over the little ship so continuously.

Though the temperature in New York City did not reach those lower registers that had been reported from the Middle West the suffering was no less intense, for when the northwest wind brings a cold wave to New York it is usually accompanied by such humidity that the discomforts are as keen and the effects as apparent as though the thermometer really registered very much lower than it actually does. The first night of the intense cold brought to light an almost undreamed of amount of destitution and suffering in the city. January 5 recorded the lowest temperature of any similar date in the last forty-one years, and though this may have had a great deal to do with the amount of suffering that became known to the public it was a matter of great astonishment to the charity workers to find such large numbers of men unemployed and reduced to such dire poverty that the coming of this cold weather forced them to seek clothing and shelter at the expense of the city and the various charitable organizations. That night the missions of the city, the Municipal Lodging House and every other place of refuge were so crowded that the Charities Organization appealed to the city for more space, and succeeded in having the chapel of the morgue opened and warmed for the use of the homeless. Among the crowd of men waiting for the doors of the Municipal Lodging House to open at night it was said that the inability to get work during the last few months was the cause of their being driven to accept public charity for the first time in their lives. "We are willing to work," many of them said, "but every one seems to be

Continued on page 78

An Ice-Coated Steamer Just In From the North Atlantic

A SERMON

By

Bishop Henry W. Warren, LL.D.*

The Primary Law For Greatness

TEXT—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Lev. 19:18

THIS is usually supposed to be a New Testament doctrine, inculcated by Christ. So it is. It is mentioned seven times in the New Testament. But it is also an Old Testament primary doctrine.

Revelation and science both concur in the statement that this solid earth was once measureless gas, without form and void, and darkness rested upon the face of the deep. By what process could the beautiful world with its infinite potencies and possibilities be made to evolve and appear? One single force or law was put into it, and only one effective force, that of gravitation. It was the means by which God's command "Let light be" was made effective. Also his other command: "Let the dry land appear and let the waters be gathered together in one place." Other forces and laws were added subsequently for chemical purpose, for vegetable, animal, intellectual and spiritual life. But gravitation was the primary law for world-making.

So when God would make a spiritual universe out of the chaos and divisive hates that sin had brought, he declared the primary law of gravitation or attraction, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might, and thy neighbor as thyself." Other unfoldings and developments wanted follow in due time.

The Development of Mind

It is to be noticed that this is not mere exhortation or advice, but it is law. Law is the condition of best existence, nay more, the condition of any existence sooner or later. God's laws for men are not arbitrary enactments, nor edicts issued in the exercise of his sovereign will, but they are announcements of infinite wisdom, vitalized by infinite love, of what is necessary for man in his development as a child of God. The Father is omnipotent and omniscient. These are his attributes, not his essence. It is never said God is strength, nor God is wisdom, but it has been said God is love. This is the essence of his being, and if man is to be like him he must have love as the highest quality of his being, the essence of his nature. Knowledge and strength are good, but love is necessary. It is the assertion of the highest philosophy that the alter is necessary to the ego; the social to the self. There would be no eyes if there were nothing to see. Eyes already organized and efficient die in the darkness of Mammoth Cave. There would be no ears if there were no sounds. There would be no conscious being unless there was something to be conscious of. Self thoughts outwardly projected are the essence of what is social. Something to project itself upon is necessary to the development of each faculty of man.

This world is adapted to develop every quality and attribute of man's varied and composite nature. It is a gymnasium for developing strength. Every movement of the infant, of the toiler for bread, of the exultant joy of the mountain climber, is for bodily strength. Even more is the world a gymnasium for the development of mind. If one were to assert that matter is superior to mind it would provoke immediate and deserved denial. Matter has no power of initiative nor will. But if one were to assert that matter has intricacies, potencies, possibilities, chemical affinities and repulsions, radio-activities beyond the power of the discernment of the human mind in its present state of development, it would or should meet with universal assent. The infinite God never laid his hand on aught, or ever spoke to aught without leaving in it potencies and possibilities beyond the understanding of finite minds.

The heart is ever singing to itself
  In soft and soul-like sounds we cannot hear:
The stars of morning sing, and soundless words
  Make God's commands run swift from sphere to sphere.
Each flower is always sending incense up
  As if in act of holy worshiping.
Till fragrant earth is one great altar like
  To heaven where saints their prayer-filled censers swing.

The stars send out a thousand rays, writ full
  Of mysteries we cannot read nor see,
Of histories so long and goings forth
  So vast the volumes fill infinity.

These are all for the development of mind. Even the uncountable myriads of the stars exist for that purpose, if not for that purpose alone. It is certain that none of the planets of our solar system could sustain such life as ours with the single exception of Mars, and that is more than doubtful. It may therefore be asserted with great probability of truth that this earth is the only humanly inhabited orb, and the rest exist for a mental gymnasium for man. He that would gladly die for the spiritual development of man would as gladly create a million starry systems for his intellectual development. They declare the glory of God. And he says to his child, "Lift up your eyes on high and behold who hath created all these stars, who bringeth out their host by numbers. He calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one is lacking."

God's Love Our Highest Model

There is equal effort to develop the will. Man is called upon to decide and act almost every moment of his life. And besides this personal drill God offers to reinforce man's will with the strength of his own. After Paul had set before his dear Philippian converts one of those high ideals of life utterly beyond the deductions of the philosophers, the hopes of the optimists and the dreams of the poet, he says to them, "Work out your salvation, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do up to the limits of this ideal which is his good pleasure." Thus a man whose will has been weakened till the least temptation is stronger than his ability to resist, can be victorious by the added will of the infinite God, who speaks and it is done, who commands and it stands fast.

There is still greater incentive for the development of man's affectional nature. The boughs of trees and the stems of flowers are living arms presenting fruit, blossoms and odors to call out love. The solemn majesty of the sea and the glory of the morning and evening sky appeal most tenderly to man's affectional nature for its development. Does one feel solitary, alone and sad? God setteth the solitary in families, fills all hearts with mutual love and sends little children to waken and cherish tender affection. And besides all this from the earthly standpoint, God seeks to develop love from the divine standpoint. His infinite care is over all of his children. He comforts their sorrows, bears their burdens, heals their infirmities, and to save them from their sins his Son suffers and dies. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Love begets love or should. He says, "Thou must love me who have died for thee." Then he sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. It is such a love that nothing can separate us from the love of God. Neither tribulation, nor distress, nor persecution, nor famine, nor nakedness, nor peril, nor sword, nor death, nor life shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The Perfection of Jesus

But did any one ever come to such height of character as to keep this law of loving God supremely and his neighbor as himself? Certainly. There was the ideal and model man Jesus Christ. He was in ineffable glory with the Father before the foundation of the world. All things were made by him, and by him all things consisted. He lived in the perfect state. The river of life flowed full. Banked on either side was the tree of life, the mere leaves of which were sufficient for healing the woes of the groaning nations. What must its fruit avail! But because he loved his neighbors as himself he left all that glory, all that abundant life, came into our circumstances, took our smitings, spittings and ignominious death because he loved the church and gave himself for it.

But you say that was the Son of God, and he of course could keep the perfect law perfectly. But this law was given for man in the beginning and was reenacted by Christ himself for men. There came a certain lawyer anxious to catch him in his words and asked, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" He made the lawyer repeat the law and when the lawyer asked "Who is my neighbor?" he gave the parable of the good Samaritan and the Jew, between whom there was the most bitter enmity, and yet the Samaritan showed mercy to his enemy beyond what men of the same blood and faith had done. The Lord applied the example by saying, "Go thou and do likewise." It was a re-enacted law, giving an example of living up to the other divine precept, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

But one may still ask: Did any one besides the Model Man ever live up to the perfect law? Certainly. God asks no impossibilities. There must be achievements equal to requirements. Take the case of the apostle Paul, a man of culture, refinement, high ideals, noble birth, but he took persecution and martyrdom like his Lord. Think of the long years in which it could be said, "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day have I been in the deep"—in every kind of perils the long years through till he could say, "I am crucified with Christ." O Paul, why don't you quit? Go back to your beloved city of Tarsus and walk its academic groves again. Hear his answer: "Because the love of Christ constraineth me." The same love that constrained the Lord to suffer and die for his brethren, constrained Paul to suffer and to be ready to be offered for his brethren. How rich, constant and ever ready that love of Christ for Paul was! The Lord had a habit of appearing to Paul in any time of special need. Was he tossed by Euroclydon fourteen days and nights till the seamen knew not where they were! In the night the Lord stood by him, saying, "Fear not, Paul, thou shalt be saved and all that sail with thee." And when he was stoned to death at Lystra and dragged out of the city and flung on the refuse heap, then I think it was that the Lord took him into paradise and let him hear unspeakable words not possible for a man to utter. Having received strength of God, and seen the powers of the world to come, he came back and reanimated that bruised body; rose up of himself, walked into the city and the next day walked twenty-one miles to Derbe. It was because of such love of God that he was able to love his neighbors so sublimely. Because of such love he was able to say to the Galatians, "My little children for whom I travail in birth again till Christ be formed in you." Because of such love he was able to say to the Romans, "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh. Because of such love he would be willing to take the place for his brethren which Christ took for the world.

No Real Greatness Without Love

But does any one say that this great love felt by the apostle Paul, who had seen the Lord on the way to Damascus, and to whom Christ appeared in the great crises of his ministry, is too great for the ordinary Christian of to-day? No, no! All possibilities of greatness of yesterday are possibilities of today. Greatness is not a characteristic of the dawn of Christianity and mediocrity a characteristic of its noonday. We are ever to go on to perfection not only in the next world but in this. Even Christ in the midst of his great works of healing said, "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto my Father." We do. Over seven million cases of physical disability are treated each year by Christian physicians in India and China. Revelation consists of onward and upward steps. What was appropriate for Israel just out of Egypt is no large enough for a perfect world and a perfect heaven. And we are dependent on revelation and assistant grace for the knowledge and the keeping of the perfect law of greatness.

Let it not be supposed that greatness is confined to a few eminent men. No, indeed. Every one that practises the law shares in its results. Many a humble mother, loving her child even more than herself towers into that sublime greatness of the infinite God. Many a soldier loves his country and dares and often endures martyrdom for its sake. Indeed there can be no real eminence without love. Paul sums up the blessed trinity of highest graces and says, "Now abideth faith, hope and love, but the greatest of these is love." Love is necessary to greatness in any department of life. A lawye

Continued on next page

* Bishop Warren, of University Park, Colo., is one of the great leaders of Methodism in America.

TEACH ME THE WAY

TEACH me the way, O Christ, teach me the way.
I am so weary of this worldly life—
So weary of contention, pain and strife.
I'm groping in the darkness, day by day,
And earnestly I seek to know the way.
I'm diligently reaching for thy hand,
To guide my footsteps to a fairer land.
Teach me the way, O Christ, teach me the way.

Teach me the way, O Christ, teach me the way.
Though others may misjudge me, thou art just.
Thou knowest all—in thee I put my trust.
Help me to say, "Forgive them," and to be
Each day, dear Saviour, more and more like thee.
O gentle Shepherd, hear me as I plead.
I give to thee my all—I do, indeed!
Teach me the way, O Christ, teach me the way.

Teach me the way, O Christ, teach me the way.
May I not seek for honor, riches, fame,
But ever seek to glorify thy name.
My highest aim in life, oh, let it be
To live for Christ, uplift humanity.
Upon thy tender, gentle, loving breast,
There, blessed Jesus, let my soul find rest.
Teach me the way, O Christ, teach me the way.

Bucyrus, O. MADGE MORRISON COOK.

Primary Law for Greatness

Continued from preceding page

may be keen, sharp, full of expedients, ready to object, appeal, ask for new trials, but suppose he has no love of justice, right, welfare of the community, supreme vindication of law. He may become a criminal lawyer in both senses of the word. He may use his sharpness on his client if his personal interests call for it.

An officer of the government may be skilled in all the arts of diplomacy, may be familiar with history, may know all the tricks of graft, and all the ways of bartering influence, of being true to party and more true to himself. But if he has no patriotism, no love of fellow men, he may be like Lord Bacon, "the greatest, meanest of mankind."

There is one word that is used but three times in the New Testament. It is applied to Christ on the mount of transfiguration. His body was transfigured and shone with the glory that he had with the Father before the world was. No wonder that the disciples were sore afraid. The next time it is used is of the soul's conversion. Rom. 12:2—"Be ye transformed [transfigured] by the renewing of your mind." The same word is applied to man's great change that was applied to Christ, and often with like effect. It is used the third time in II. Corinthians 3: 18—"We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed [transfigured] into the same image from glory to glory." It is no wonder that faces shine when the love of God is shed abroad by such an agency.

Love, being begun by human effort, turned into rapture by divine response, can be cultured into great growths like any other faculty. Other faculties grow by exercise; this also. There are love gymnastics as well as those for body and mind. They consist in service of the one beloved. The least service rendered to the object of one's affection enhances that love. The ideal love is that of a mother for her child. Like the love of God it passeth knowledge. It cannot be accounted for on any ground of reason.

Love for God grows in the same way. What but a curriculum of service could have raised Paul into such a height of love? The relation of this love to one's neighbor, resulting in godlike character, is recognized in the final awards of the judgment. All giving of food to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, all service to the sick and imprisoned, is recognized as fitting one for the companionship of him who loved the church and gave himself for it.

Oh, then, wish more for God; burn more with desire;
Court more the dear sight of his glorious face;
Pray longer, pray louder for the sweet gift of fire
To come down on the soul with its whirlwinds of grace.
God longs to be longed for; He loves to be sought.
For he sought us with such longing and love.
He died for desire of us—wonderful thought!
And longs for us now to be with him above.

How Is Your Atmosphere?

By EUGENE THWING

MY! BUT the wind certainly can blow around the skyscraper corners of the big city! It was biting and cutting and tearing at a great rate the other day, and a mere man had to fight against odds to go anywhere in the streets. Dust and snow and torn newspapers whirled about the poor, struggling pedestrians in a blinding cloud. "Watch your step!" that habitual cry of the subway train guards, became an imperative necessity in the mixture of men and automobiles and trucks and trolley cars, while eyes were blinded, hats and coats were tugging to get away, hands were freezing, and a general state of tempest, turmoil, and temper was everywhere.

Two men collided at the entrance to the subway. A curse and a growl from one of them, as he tried to crowd past, seemed in keeping with the vicious snarl and bite of the icy wind. The other man laughed good-naturedly. "Beg pardon, brother," he exclaimed. "Some breezes, eh?"

So they separated, swept along with the wind, yet each man carrying his own particular atmosphere with him. Weather, temperature, winds or seasons make little difference. A biting chill surrounded one man. Come close enough and you begin to feel uneasy—storm signals are always out. Look out for a nasty bit of weather as soon as you come within the radius of his atmosphere.

The other man carries sunshine and warmth wherever he goes. Even the winter's gale does not blow it away. The frost cannot prevail against it. In a cold, stormy world he is a bright spot of glowing, radiating warmth and brightness, as the oasis is a refreshing island of green in the desert of sand. He melts other people's coldness. He cheers their gloom. He quiets their storm.

. . .

EVERYBODY is carrying an atmosphere all his own, or her own. You have been in a gay circle of friends, when the door opens and a newcomer enters. All at once the temperature in the room seems to drop. Conversation begins to lag. The spirit of all seems to be stricken with a blight. Some one has brought a chilling atmosphere into the room, and all have felt its unpleasant influence. You can recall experiences of just the opposite kind. There are persons whose coming is always a signal for increased animation and goodfellowship. No gathering is dull after they arrive. They are looked for to "break the ice." They diffuse warmth and gladness. They are the makers of joy who are blessing the world every step of their way.

A freezing atmosphere is to be shunned. It destroys the life of friendship and strikes inward, destroying the one who carries it. Cold formality, aloofness, lack of wholesome enthusiasm, constitutes an atmosphere of misery. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly." His friendliness must have initiative and a good hearty assertiveness. There must be about it a generous warmth that spreads its pleasant glow around those who come within its influence.

It is necessary, with deliberate intention, to give out friendliness rather than to wait, expecting to receive it. Too many are willing to respond to friendly advances but are slow to make them. "If thy heart yearn for love, be loving; if thou wouldst free mankind, be free; if thou wouldst have a brother frank to thee, be frank to him."

. . .

TOO much heat is as bad as too much cold. Scalding or roasting is even more destructive to life than freezing. Love cannot survive long in "hot water." The atmosphere of some persons is like steam, uncomfortable to feel or to breathe. In the household quarrel the conflict of atmospheres has created a storm. Look out that the family barometer points always to "Fair." Don't put the duty on some other member of the family. The husband, the wife, the brother, the sister, each has a personal responsibility for the home atmosphere. Let no familiarity breed contempt for so helpful a guide as this: "A soft answer turneth away wrath," and improves the atmosphere.

Bad smells are decidedly injurious to good atmosphere. The odor of a mean suspicion may poison all the air of a home, or a church, or a society; and suspicions are seldom well grounded. "Love thinketh no evil, is not easily provoked." Believe in your friend to the very last ditch, and show him that you believe in him. That will make him the more eager to prove himself worthy of your trust.

Be noble, and the nobleness that lies
In other men sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

Criticism makes almost as bad an odor as suspicion. Put away the hammer. You will surely destroy your own pleasant atmosphere, and perhaps a brother's or a sister's, if you carry that mischievous weapon during 1912. Burying the hammer is more important than burying the hatchet. Conversations filled with criticisms and harsh judgments of persons who are absent may be tolerated for a time, but however earnest such criticisms may be, or however well founded, they grow distasteful, and friends begin after a while to avoid you. You will wonder why, and very likely no one will have the courage to tell you that you have gathered to yourself an unpleasant atmosphere.

. . .

HAIL to the dispenser of good fellowship and cheer—not humor merely, but downright, wholesouled friendliness and kindness for those absent as well as those present. As Henry Drummond puts it, "Without distinction, without calculation, without procrastination, love. Lavish it upon the poor, where it is very easy; especially upon the rich, who often need it most; most of all upon our equals, where it is very difficult, and for whom, perhaps, we do least of all."

A happy motto and resolve for the year is just love—love at home, love abroad; not a benign and passive love, waiting to receive and to respond, but an aggressive, assertive love, impelled by the force of its own eager initiative to bestow itself unselfishly upon those who need it. Let us gather the sweet fragrance of kindly affection and sympathy, the gentle aromas of service, the warm radiance of helpfulness and brotherly love, that our atmosphere may carry blessing to all through the busy days to come.

THE CHAPLAIN'S DREAM

THE first faint light of morning was stealing o'er the sky,
As a warder led a guilty man from his lonely cell to die.

A sullen, remorseless man was he, and the chaplain day by day
Had prayed him to make his peace with God, ere he entered Death's dark way.

But never by a word or sign would the man
repentance show,
And unrepentant to his death the chaplain saw him go.

Many a day did the good man grieve for a soul
he thought lost to heaven,
And many a prayer did he offer up, that the man might be forgiven.

One night he dreamed, as he lay asleep, that the angel of mercy came
With the scales of justice in his hand, the criminal's fate to name.

He saw him take the loads of sin, and with a sigh and frown
All in one balance place them, where they heavily weighed it down.

In the other balance a burden small with loving care was laid,
And with a thankful heart he saw the load of sin outweighed.

For the little thing that outweighed the sins and stilled the chaplain's fears
Was the convict's old red handkerchief, wet with a few salt tears.

G. C. BOUGHTON.

The Girl with the Muff

(See Illustration on Cover Page)

THE portrait of Madame Molé-Raymond is easily the favorite among the many admirable portraits painted by Madame Vigée-Lebrun. A beautiful woman dressed in soft violet silk with a close bodice of blue and a picture hat with a white rosette and a flying feather and a huge muff walking forward with a briskness that sends her curling hair and soft white scarf flying out in streamers behind her and laughing as she goes is a distinctly charming portrait subject. One famous critic said of the original painting, which for many years has hung in the Salon Carré of the Louvre: "There is almost enough action and witchery in that girl to carry her right out of the canvas."

Madame Vigée-Lebrun was all her life fêted, petted, admired. She was beautiful, clever and charming. At fifteen she painted admirable portraits; at twenty-eight was received in the Academy—the youngest member that had ever been admitted. In her delightful autobiography we read of a certain prophecy which she maintains had much to do with her success in art. "At the age of seven," she says, "I made a picture by lamplight of a man with a beard. When my father saw it he went into transports of joy and exclaimed, 'You will be a painter, my child, if ever there was one,' and all of my life I worked to fulfil that prophecy." Before she was twenty years of age her talents were highly esteemed throughout Europe, and until the end of her life—Madame Lebrun died in 1842 at the age of eighty-seven—flattering honors and attentions were showered upon her.

In her color there is something of the soft and delicate tones of Greuze. The somewhat teasing charm of the transparent freshness of her canvases was the constant wonder and admiration of the older and more experienced artists of her time.

ANVIL STROKES

..NO MAN ever lifted himself by doubting the story of the Fall.

..SOME folks whine so much that they actually think it is musical.

..IT IS hard for temperance folks to temper their joy when the saloon is whipped.

..SOME brothers search out the weak members of the flock, not to share with them, but to shear them.

..NO MATTER how wise you are, there is bound to be somebody who thinks your ideas are foolish.

..IF MEN could buy only what they ought to have, with money, there wouldn't be nearly so much scrambling for it.

A "UNITY" MISSIONARY BANQUET

THE DINERS AT THE GREAT MISSIONARY UNITY BANQUET AT DELMONICO'S, NEW YORK CITY, ON JANUARY 9

ONE of the most significant events in a period notable for the inauguration of impressive religious movements was the gathering at Delmonico's, New York, on the evening of January 9, arranged by a committee created by the Missionary Education Movement. The invitation brought together three hundred and seventy-five men and women representing the ablest leadership of all that comes under the word Missions to-day in America. As those present sat side by side about the richly spread tables, and listened to the sheaf of splendid addresses, the line between the near and far in Christ's work melted away. The Rev. Dr. Fred P. Haggard of Boston, of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, whose guiding hand has been seen in the development of the Missionary Education Movement, presided with a humor and graciousness which put everybody at ease, and called on the Rev. Dr. William I. Haven of the American Bible Society to offer the invocation. Dr. Haggard referred to the personnel of the company, the wide interests represented, the character and standing of the speakers, and said that all were present to assert the essential unity of the missionary task.

Mr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, in speaking on the power of the Missionary Idea, said that things happen because ideas are at work, and that of all ideas the most deserving and compelling is the missionary idea. But it is not merely a speculation; it is an obligation.

As Dr. Arthur J. Brown of the Foreign Board of the Presbyterian Church, North, presented the subject of unity in foreign missionary work, he opened by showing, with many a surprising and laughable turn, that the enduring and valuable features cherished by the leading denominations in their past history are now held by the churches in common, forming a basis of union that once did not exist; and that still more profoundly are the churches one in maintaining the great essential teachings of the New Testament which compose their message to unevangelized humanity. He closed by pointing out sections of the foreign field in which already there is comity in assignment of territory among different boards and in the maintenance of union schools, colleges and hospitals.

Dr. Hubert C. Herring of New York, General Secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, eloquently portrayed the rapidly growing unity of action, comity, and co-operation among the home mission boards shown first in the organization of the Home Missions Council, which includes fourteen leading denominations of the United States. Already the Council has inaugurated practical lines of co-operation in the care of the Indian tribes, and is just now engaged in making a survey of fifteen Western States, called the "Neglected Fields Survey," following which effort will be made to allot among the co-operating organizations the more than one thousand communities in those States now utterly devoid of the helpful services of the Church.

How the challenge to the local church made by the present missionary opportunity can be met was next defined by Mr. Harry Wade Hicks, General Secretary of the Missionary Education Movement. He held the closest attention and interest of the company as he showed that the situation summons the local church to unify its missionary program and its methods of giving. More thorough loyalty by the local church to its denominational institutions and agencies is needed in view of the counter attraction of non-denominational and even interdenominational agencies, and will strengthen the spirit of unity, for unity does not mean uniformity.

Most happy was the choice of Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd of the Episcopal Board of Missions to show the essential value of Christian Unity to the accomplishment of the missionary task. With instant stress he uplifted the truth that the will of Christ must have more weight than our private opinions, and declared that in the missionary enterprise we are not out on a holiday, but that peoples whose subtle thought and philosophy we are seeking to meet were far advanced before our race had begun to be civilized. It is by studying our task and doing it together that we are becoming one.

Seldom does so large a Christian company meet in which practically every person has some vital part in the Church's world task; while at the close each seemed to possess the conviction that the occasion and addresses registered the completest exposition and pledge of Church and missionary unity thus far seen.

CHARLES H. MORGAN, Ph.D.

JANUARY'S GREAT COLD WAVE

Continued from page 75

cutting down working forces more than ever this winter; we have been on short time or out of work for weeks, and we have no money to help us through this spell."

One of the busiest centers of the relief work was at the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society's quarters, at No. 225 East Broadway. Whereas usually a maximum of four hundred persons are fed there on a Saturday, on the 7th more than 800 were taken care of, 150 of them being women.

The following morning the Bowery Mission sent out an appeal to a number of the churches of the city, urging them to open the basements or vestries of their church buildings for the shelter of the homeless. A number of the churches complied with the request immediately and that night sheltered hundreds of men and boys, to whom the Bowery Mission sent coffee and rolls similar to those served out to the Bread Line.

The following morning the New York Sun said, "The cold drove many homeless men to seek shelter at the Bowery Mission, 227 Bowery, and the Municipal Lodging House, at Twenty-fifth Street and East River. About 500 were sheltered at the mission and 738 were provided for at the lodging house. In addition to these 250 were cared for at the settlement house of Grace Church, at 415 East Thirteenth Street, and 150 at Lyceum Hall, 209 East Forty-second Street, part of the parish house of St. Bartholomew's Church. Coffee and rolls were given to the men in these places.

"At the service of the Bowery Mission last night the Right Rev. James Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, spoke to a large audience, and Miss Alice Preston sang. After the service the men got a lunch of bread and coffee before they were sent to the various shelters outside of the mission that had been provided for them.

"'The men we are getting are a better class by 100 per cent. than our usual lot,' said Manager Hunt of the Bowery Mission. 'Most of them are working men, and there have been eight or ten college men among them. We ourselves are furnishing beds for two hundred, outside of the numbers that are being taken care of here,' he said. 'Altogether both directly and indirectly about a thousand men will be provided with a shelter through this mission.'"

The disclosures which the first night of intense cold made of the condition of the men of the Bread Line were appalling. A number were found who were clothed only in coat and trousers and whose stockingless feet were covered with the most wretched sort of broken shoes. Manager James T. Hunt, of the Bowery Mission, immediately appealed through the daily newspapers for clothing to be supplied to the men. The United Charities Organization found similar conditions among those it sought to relieve, and it too appealed for all the old clothing which the more fortunate might have to send for the use of the poor.

A BILLION HIDDEN IN FIRE RUINS

Photo, Brown Bros., N. Y.

Looking Down the Canyon of Broadway at the Fire, Trinity Church at the Left

An Ice-Encrusted Engine at Work on the Great Fire

Photos, Underwood & Underwood

A Corner of the Ruined Building Where Several Persons Perished

THE morning of January 9 was one of suspense and horror to lower New York. The Equitable Life Assurance Society Building, covering the entire block from Broadway to Nassau Street and from Pine to Cedar Streets, was destroyed by fire, taking with it the lives of seven men and throwing the business of the city into confusion. Securities approximating a billion dollars were imperiled in the burning building, and after the flames had subsided, lay hidden under masses of icebound wreckage, from which it was the work of days to extricate them. Fire lines blocked all vehicles and pedestrians from Wall Street to Liberty, and from Broadway to a line between Nassau and William Streets. The Stock Exchange did not close, but agreed to suspend the rules regarding prompt delivery of stocks. When the Exchange opened the following day, the rule was re-enacted to apply to all purchases in which securities stored at the Equitable Building figured. A number of important banks were forced to suspend operations or make sudden moves to temporary headquarters. Many of the important records of the Equitable Society were stored in another building, but officials declared that even if policies and records were destroyed, they could be duplicated from other records elsewhere available. It was thought at first that the total property damage would reach an enormously high figure, but when all accounts were balanced the actual losses were found to be comparatively slight.

This startling statement is true because the Equitable Building, though beautiful and imposing, was, as a matter of fact, simply an incumbrance on a bit of land worth from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000. It had been estimated that the cost of removing the old building to make room for the enormous skyscraper which the Society had for some time been planning to erect on the same site would be $300,000. A valuable library in the rooms of the Lawyers' Club, on the eighth floor, was destroyed, and the loss of many papers of value, as well as other property, was suffered by tenants of the building, some of whom transacted business of far-reaching importance. Among the most important firms whose headquarters were at 120 Broadway were the Central Pacific, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific Railroad Companies, and the Harriman Estate.

It is probably not too much to say that this small section of New York which was shut off by the fire is the busiest locality in the world. In an authoritative quarter the statement was made that "there was no other private business building in the world that could be compared with the Equitable Building in respect to the magnitude of interests assembled under its roof, no other, the burning of which would have imperiled so many hundreds of millions of securities, or have been the cause of so serious a derangement of financial affairs."

There are no braver men than firemen. And there are no braver firemen in the world than the fire fighters of New York. They are soldiers—soldiers at war every day. And they never had a tougher fight on their hands than the fight to get this stubborn and gigantic fire under control. They labored against fire and wind, cruelly cold weather and ice—ice which stiffened their coats, covered their faces, hardened their hose, buried and almost stopped their engines. Under the shadow of crumbling walls, amid falling stones and shattered timbers, they fought grimly to save property and life. While the battle was at its height, some one stated that eight men were still in the building, and Battalion Chief Walsh called for volunteers to go with him to their rescue. Fourteen men offered themselves and with their chief started up the ladder. They entered the windows of the fourth floor and began a search for the missing men. Not finding them, the chief ordered his men to make their way down stairs, searching as they went. His last words were:

"Go ahead, boys, I can take care of myself."

But he could not, for with a crash, followed by other crashes, the floors and roof came tumbling down, and the brave chief was never seen again.

The most spectacular rescue of the day, following an experience of indescribable terror, was that of Mr. William Giblin, president of the Mercantile Safe Deposit Company, whose offices were in the basement on the corner of Broadway and Cedar Street. He was notified very early in the morning that the building was on fire, and hurried down town, going into the vaults to rescue important papers, accompanied by a special officer, a watchman and two porters. After they had entered, the great steel door swung shut, making them prisoners. Wreckage from the upper stories was raining down on the floor above them, and segments of wall and roof were falling to the ground at the windows where they clambered for rescue. The firemen, when they finally heard the cries for help, braved the falling masses of stone, sawed through an iron bar, and pulled all but one of the men to safety.

The name of Fire Chaplain Father McGean must be added to the list of men who proved themselves heroes that day. He faced the fiercest dangers with the foremost firemen to bring spiritual consolation to men believed to be doomed.

As is always the case, the great catastrophe gave the real kindness in the hearts of men a chance to assert itself. The only real enthusiasm during the dull day at the Stock Exchange was aroused when the motion was made and passed to take up a subscription for the families of the men killed at the fire. The Exchange also opened its exclusive and luxurious luncheon room to the fatigued, half-frozen firemen and policemen. Many others joined in this work of bringing refreshments to the men on duty.

No one knows how the fire started. It was discovered in the basement soon after five o'clock. Some criticism is expressed because the employees of the building did not turn in the alarm of fire more promptly. They believed they could extinguish it with the apparatus and help at hand in the building, but the flames got beyond their control and swept through the elevator shafts, setting the wooden floors ablaze. The Equitable Building was erected in 1869 and was believed for many years to be really fireproof. The late President Hyde declared it to be indestructible. Another mark is scored for the superiority of steel structure for great buildings. New York loses another of her imposing landmarks. The officers of the Equitable Society have been planning a colossal building, sixty-two stories high, to be reared on the old site, but are considering now the advisability of abandoning this project and building a less pretentious structure perhaps in another part of the city.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—THE LLOYD-GEORGE INSURANCE BILL has passed the British Parliament. Germany, France and several other continental countries have already enacted similar measures, although on a smaller scale. It is an effort to solve the great problem of poverty in England, and while it will result in a large increase in taxation, the benefits to be derived will be immeasurable.

—MRS. FISK, widow of General Clinton B. Fisk, died in her home at New York City on January 1. Throughout their life together Mrs. Fisk aided her illustrious husband in his work of education and reform. They established the Fisk University at Nashville, which has been one of the leading forces in the education and betterment of the negroes. Besides the more practical work accomplished by this university it has ministered greatly to the world's inspiration and pleasure by the sweet singing of its Jubilee Clubs. Mrs. Fisk was for many years president of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Church.

—GENERAL PORFIRIO DIAZ, former President of the Mexican Republic, now an exile in Europe, has been decorated by the Swiss Government with a medal of honor and placed himself in line for a Carnegie hero medal for his brave rescue of a child from drowning in a Swiss lake last month. These facts have just reached Washington in a letter received from a member of the entourage of the former President. The letter states that while General Diaz was in Berne, one day during November, looking into the beautiful lake, accompanied by members of his family, he was amused by the antics of several children playing on the shore. A little girl toppled over into the lake and just as the spectators were expecting a tragic drowning, a grizzled veteran of eighty-one jumped into the water and rescued the child after a long swim. For his bravery General Diaz has been decorated with a medal of honor.

—IT IS NOT YET POSSIBLE to say how deeply the government probe of the widespread dynamite conspiracy may go, but evidence of its penetrative activity is found in the indictment of nine men by the Federal Grand Jury of Los Angeles, Calif., on the charge of conspiracy to transport dynamite in violation of the Federal statute. Among the indicted are two prominent California labor leaders, Olaf A. Tveitmoe and Anton Johannsen, and a labor leader of Salt Lake City, J. E. Munsey. McManigal, the McNamaras, David Kaplan, and a man named Schmidt are all included in the new batch of indictments. It is understood that McManigal will be held as a government witness in the coming trials. The specific act charged against the indicted men is the transportation of the explosives which were used to wreck the Llewellyn Works in December, 1910, which were brought from Riverside, Calif., as a part of an interstate trip from Chicago. Conviction of any of the accused will mean a two years' penitentiary sentence, or a $10,000 fine, or both. Many witnesses have testified before the Grand Jury, which has been hard at work on the cases ever since the McNamaras were sentenced. Tveitmoe and Johannsen are prominent in the building trades unions, and E. A. Clancy, who was also indicted though not arrested, was business agent of the Structural Iron Workers' Union.

—MR. ERNEST A. EGGERS, letter carrier and reformer, reports that ninety per cent. of the post offices in the United States are now closed to callers for mail on Sunday. Mr. Eggers is the pioneer of this reform. The first office to be closed was that at Colorado Springs, Colo., where the ministers' association, acting in co-operation with the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States, conducted the successful campaign. The second city to follow the example set at Colorado Springs was Detroit, where 25,000 persons signed cards requesting the closing of the post office on Sunday. Evanston, Ill., and Toledo, O., followed, and the movement grew to such an extent that the First Assistant Postmaster General referred favorably to the vigorous movement for Sunday closing in his annual report. Christian Endeavorers in Chicago entered the campaign, and Congressman Mann, of that city, has introduced a bill into Congress, known technically as House Bill No. 9433, which provides for discontinuance of Sunday deliveries at all post offices in the United States.

BEST OF ITS KIND

When renewing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I meant to thank you for the Almanac. I, with others, have much enjoyed looking it over. It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw.

Troy, Pa. MRS. THEO. WALDRON.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

It is always a pleasure for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to ask the co-operation of its readers in anything that relates to the improvement of the paper. Some weeks ago, a very large number of them, at our request, kindly sent to us indications of their preferences with regard to various Departments. We take this opportunity of further inviting them to express their preferences regarding the minor Departments listed below, which are now running in the paper. If they find them helpful, we would ask them to say so; and if the contrary, let them reply with equal frankness. Our sole object is improvement, on the lines best suited to the needs of our readers and the requirements of a first-class Family Weekly. We may add that these views are solicited not for publication, but for our personal information:

Christian Endeavor	"Answered Prayers
Epworth League	Called Higher
Among Christian Workers	Poetry
Financial Page	Music

Write your preferences on a postal and address, "Publisher, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City."

Secularizing the Church

THERE are evidences that the movement for church secularization, on the plea that it is necessary to "draw the people," has run its course. We have seen many experiments tried within the last few years, and many new-fangled notions of "warming up the church" and "making religion attractive" introduced for the purpose of swelling the audiences. For a time, these expedients seemed to be crowned with a measure of success. Athletics, concerts, political and sociological lectures, debating clubs, moving pictures, games, and even modified vaudeville were among the attractions. Some of the churches were almost wholly metamorphosed into social clubs. After the novelty of the thing had worn off, it ceased to draw, the crowds fell away, and the last state of that church was worse than the first. These meretricious aids failed to keep up the interest. The one thing was lacking which the human soul needs—the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Two years ago, a church of this up-to-date, secularized character was founded in New York. It was hailed as the pioneer of the new social revolution which was to be the attribute of the church of the people. It was a social center, a place of entertainment rather than a church, with a maximum of amusement and a minimum of preaching. Prayer was sometimes dispensed with. Now, the experiment having run its course, the spiritual harvest has proved so unsatisfactory that the enterprise has been abandoned, as far as the secularization of the meetings is concerned. Hereafter it will be a church in fact as well as in name.

Every faithful pastor must realize the tremendous truth conveyed in the Saviour's words: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." The Gospel does not stand in need of cheap, adventitious aids. It can stand independent of crutches, and when faithfully presented by a preacher who has a message and a call to deliver it, it will never lack an audience. There are many activities of a social and attractive character that may properly be conducted by the church as an organization, but these should not interfere with the preaching of the Gospel. God's message of love and mercy to a dying world does not need the cheap embellishments of the showman to commend it to earnest men and women. By all means let our churches have their settlements, their sociables, their varied organizations for expressing a friendly and helpful interest in the world about them; but they should let the old Gospel have free course over all, unhindered and unburdened with impediments which have dragged down many a good church that has yielded to the delusive lure of secularization "on popular lines." When a church runs up the flag of the world alongside of that of the Cross, it is not difficult to foresee the end of its spiritual usefulness.

Gains in Mission Gifts

THE last five years have witnessed a remarkable increase of spiritual activity on the part of the men of the churches. The severest test of the reality of this increased interest is the test of self-sacrifice, and a simple measurement of self-sacrifice is the dollar. Statistics show that in the five years of the work of the Laymen's Missionary Movement the total offerings in the United States and Canada for foreign missions have increased from $8,980,000 to $13,350,000. The greatest gains were made in 1909. In that year the increase of gifts over 1908 was $1,255,954. This increase took place during the first part of the sweeping campaign conducted by the Laymen's Missionary Movement throughout the United States and parts of Canada. It is not surprising that the gains last year were less than those of 1910, partly because no vigorous public campaigns were conducted, and partly because under the stimulus of the earlier campaign the contributors probably reached to so much nearer the maximum of their ability to give that they could hardly be expected to show a marked increase the following year. It is true, however, that in 1911 the total gifts from all Christian nations to the cause of missions were slightly less than in 1910. This is said to be chiefly due to the disturbed industrial conditions in Great Britain, where the decrease is found. But, to go back eleven years, the missionary offerings of Protestant Christendom in 1911 were nearly ten million dollars more than in 1900.

In Strange Places

IS THERE any land under the sun where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not go?" asks a much-traveled reader. "Wherever I journey," he writes, "I am constantly being surprised to find that it is known and read by some one there who is interested in the onward progress of the Kingdom. Even in out-of-the-way places, where one would least suspect it, it is the same." Our friend's letter only goes to prove what many already know: that our Family Circle takes in a very wide range. Sometimes we have unique evidence of this fact, as when a traveler who was crossing Africa (from Benguella to Zambesia) found in a native settlement in the remote interior a much worn copy of the paper—the reminder, doubtless, of some missionary's visit there. Only a few days ago, a reader in China, Mr. H. N. Kinnear, wrote us, enclosing a CHRISTIAN HERALD which was found among the débris in the Tartar general's yamen, which had been looted after the recent battle at Foochow. Perhaps the oddest of all, however, was a letter received from a far Western State, in which the writer enclosed a faded and fragmentary page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD which he had found in the nest of a bird in a tree, where it had been used for many months to give warmth to the young brood. This, from the silences of nature in remote places, is strongly remindful of the words of the Preacher: "A bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter."

The Bible Again the Best

TWENTY-SEVEN thousand five hundred dollars for a Bible! That was the sum paid by Mr. Bernard Quaritch for a Gutenberg Bible at the Hoe Library sale in New York on January 9. The volume to bring the next highest price at the sale was a copy of the Sixth Book of the Decrees of Boniface VIII., which brought $3,250.

Again a copy of the Bible takes its place in the list of the world's most precious books. The volume for which more money was paid than for any other single book in existence is the vellum copy of the Gutenberg Bible, bought last May for $50,000 by Mr. Henry E. Huntington, of Philadelphia. A copy just like this is in the possession of the New York Public Library. Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan recently purchased the Huth copy of the Gutenberg Bible for $29,000. The volume purchased by Mr. Quaritch will doubtless be taken to London, but this still leaves the United States as the home of the three most valuable Bibles in the world.

Even people who do not find it possible to enthuse greatly over the mere fact of big prices for rare books will like to think that the volumes which are recognized as having the greatest historical and artistic value are copies of the Word of God. Its spiritual and eternal treasures are priceless; but even its physical and perishable forms are recognized as of imperial worth. Very few are able to secure costly copies of the book; we may all have within our hearts the richest blessings promised to humble souls in these golden words of God.

The Eloquence of Silence

THAT Colonel Theodore Roosevelt is still a live wire, politically speaking, and the biggest kind of a newsmaker, has once more been demonstrated. At the Aldine Club dinner in New York recently, he set some six hundred guests and members guessing when he took them into his confidence, having pledged them to secrecy, and told them just where he stood regarding the Presidential campaign. As we ourselves heard the Colonel's remarkable speech, we can say nothing more than that it was, as he himself might felicitously express it, "a corker," to have heard which, with its mirthful allusions to his critics, its compliments to those who persist in attributing speeches to him, which of course he never made and with its sturdy sense and broad-gauge Americanism, would have "de-lighted" any one not either prejudiced or hidebound. But the CHRISTIAN HERALD is not a political paper and never prints political speeches, so, as far as we are concerned, the Colonel's brilliant effort must pass into oblivion, among the things lost yet not forgotten. No inducement could persuade us to reduce that wonderful speech to cold type. Wild horses cannot draw it from us, nor could the combined pleadings of our esteemed friends Taft, LaFollette and Bryan wring from us the essence or language of that sphinx-like utterance. Our lips are hermetically sealed.

Churches as Storm Shelters

HOW many times in the story of the Master's life we read that "he had compassion on the multitude." Moved by the Christ-like spirit, a number of the leading New York churches, during the recent cold wave, opened their doors to give shelter and refreshment to the homeless and destitute. They did this in response to an appeal from the Bowery Mission, which found its own facilities altogether insufficient to house the thousands of freezing wanderers who sought a refuge from the deadly cold. It is surely a splendid illustration of the humanizing power of Christianity when the rich and influential churches seek to help in a work of this character. All honor to the pastors who set the example! May the day soon come when the doors of God's house will stand wide open to welcome all who may come for help or consolation, and when every preacher and every member will call the humblest stranger "Brother" and thus realize the blessedness of His commendation who said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

The Passing of the Manchus

—ALL THE HOPES of the Manchus seem to be crumbling in China. Yuan's diplomacy has failed. England and Japan, to which powers he looked for financial and moral support in his scheme for saving the dynasty, have both refused to make a loan and have preserved rigid neutrality. All he may be able to do in the last extremity, is to arrange such safeguards for the Emperor and royal family as may assure their unhindered retirement.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, January 24, 1912

	PAGE
Portrait of Mme. Mole-Raymond. By Vigee-Lebrun	Cover
January's Great Cold Wave (Illustrated)	75, 78
The Primary Law for Greatness. Sermon. By Bishop Henry W. Warren, LL.D.	76, 77
How is Your Atmosphere? By Eugene Thwing	77
A "Unity" Missionary Banquet (Illustrated). By Charles H. Morgan, Ph.D.	78
Old Equitable Building Burns (Illustrated)	79
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	80
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	81
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated). By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	82, 87, 88
Liquors Poured into the Sewers (Illustrated)	82
The Noiselessness of Rebecca Leigh (Illustrated). By Elizabeth Nagel	83, 91
Our Mail-Bag (Illustrated)	84
Over the Four o'Clock Teacups (Illustrated). By Margaret E. Sangster	85
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	86
A Family Flock of Fowls. By A. F. Hunter	89, 90
Our Peace Circles Busy	91
Young People's Societies	92
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	94, 95

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Rear Admiral Evans's Funeral

THE funeral of Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans in Washington on the afternoon of January 5 was said to be the most impressive one held in this country since that of President McKinley. The services at All Saints' Church, which were conducted by the pastor, Rev. Dr. U. G. B. Pierce, consisted of the ritual for the dead and the reading of an ode by Tennyson. The deep solemnity of the service was emphasized by the tolling in the belfry of the old Concord or "Paul Revere" bell, which had rung warning to the Minute Men at Lexington to make ready for the first battle of the Revolution, and which now hangs in Washington. President Taft and his cabinet, members of the diplomatic corps, army and navy officers, members of the two houses of Congress, and prominent citizens crowded the church. The coffin borne to the altar was covered with the flag that floated from the Iowa at the battle of Santiago, on which rested the sword the men of the Iowa had given their commander after the battle. The only other thing on the coffin was the wreath bearing the card of Emperor William of Germany, who had deputed Commander Petzman, naval attaché at the German embassy, as his personal representative at the funeral of his friend. Many and beautiful floral tributes were piled up in the vestibule of the church. The family reached the church at 2.30 o'clock. Mrs. Evans was escorted by her son, Lieutenant Commander Frank T. Evans. In the adjoining pews sat the President, Secretary of the Navy Meyer, General Nelson A. Miles, Admiral George Dewey and the pallbearers, Rear Admiral Schroeder, Rear Admiral William Swift, Rear Admiral R. F. Nicholson, Rear Admiral C. H. Stockton, Rear Admiral J. E. Pilsbury, Rear Admiral W. H. Bronson, Major General J. P. Sanger and Major General Anson G. McCook. Eight sailors from the Dolphin bore the coffin from the church on their shoulders, to the accompaniment of muffled drumbeats from the band of the Naval Academy. As the march began the Academy brigade of midshipmen led the way, followed by the Marine Band at the head of a battalion of marines from the Washington Barracks, a battalion of bluejackets from the navy yard and a field battery from Fort Myer. The body, borne on a gun-carriage, was taken to Arlington Cemetery, accompanied by the Loyal Legion, Grand Army of the Republic, Spanish War Veterans and other delegations. The committal service was read by Rev. Dr. Willbourne. "Taps" was blown at the grave as the body was lowered, followed by the artillery salute. And thus the great naval commander who gave himself to the service of his country when a mere boy by a baptism of blood, and continued in it with all-daring courage and undying patriotism to the age limit, was accorded by his government a burial somewhat in harmony with the ability, character, and life of the loyal hero of the seas. The funeral, yes, the funeral, the end of the earthly record, the close of the earthly tragedy of admiral and sailor, of general and private soldiers! To the city of the dead all navies sail and all armies march. Truth, justice, love, sacrifice, are things that do not go down into the grave, but have an immortality on both sides of it. Admiral Evans's career recalls the Bible story of another great one of whom it was written:

I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers. (Ps. 89:25.)

The Gun-Carriage Bearing Rear Admiral Evans's Body About to Leave the Church

Horse Saves Man's Life

Frank Tracy, of Wallingford, Conn., claims that his life was saved by his horse Starlight. He went to Oakdale Tavern, three miles away, with a load of baggage and was so badly chilled on the return that he fell in an unconscious condition into his wagon. His horse, turning corners with unerring accuracy, brought Tracy to his place of business, where aid was promptly afforded. After working over him for two hours the doctors pronounced him out of danger. Tracy says the horse will never have to haul another load. The horse had the home instinct so many animals have and this led to the relief of his master. It was proper for Tracy to be grateful to Starlight, but he made a mistake in the kind of a reward he promised his horse—a life of idleness. Nothing could have contributed to the ill health or ill temper of the horse more than to stand idle in the stable all the time. A reasonable amount of exercise is good for a horse as it is for a man. This beneficent law is on both:

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread. (Gen. 3:19.)

Reads Bible in Storm

The Mary Adelaide Randall, a four-masted schooner carrying 1,700 tons of coal from Norfolk to New London, encountered one of the fiercest storms of the season and was wrecked on the rocks near Point Judith. Believing that their end had come Captain Groucher gathered his men in the flooded cabin and opened his Bible. In a calm, steady voice the old sailor read the Scriptures to the men who believed they were about to die. Not a man whispered. Outside was pitch darkness. The winds roared so loudly and the waves pounded the vessel so furiously that the captain had to raise his voice to a shout in reading. As the ship seemed about to be wrenched to pieces the captain closed the Bible and all hands knelt on the floor. First they repeated in unison the Lord's Prayer and then the captain prayed an earnest prayer for their rescue. He was in the midst of his prayer when one of the men saw the flash of a signal light on the shore a mile away and cried out to his mates. It meant that their plight had been discovered. It was then four o'clock in the morning, and taking hope the seamen clambered to the masts and hung on grimly despite the pitching of the craft. The life-savers finally reached the schooner and the nine men were brought ashore, but not till the surf boat had been abandoned near the rocky coast and the men had swam through the heavy sea to land. There is no storm in the material or spiritual world, and no danger to body, mind or soul in which it will not be the proper thing to read the Scripture and call upon God for help.

He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear them cry, and will save them. (Ps. 145:19.)

Dove Flies in Cathedral

While Bishop Greer was preaching a sermon on peace in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Christmas morning, a literal "white-winged dove of peace," which had gained entrance to the building through an opening in the southwest corner, flew back and forth over the heads of the congregation, and alighting on a pillar in the north choir sat there during the rest of the service. The audience, which at first seemed disturbed at the presence of the bird, was thrilled with the symbolical significance of the event. The bishop during his sermon looked several times at the dove, which did not seem in any way embarrassed by its surroundings. Bishop Greer said at the close of his message: "Statesman and politician, Senate and people, nations and individuals, with all thy faint misgivings, with all thy false timidities, thy personal prides and passions, thy personal justifications, thy personal glorifications, 'put thyself into thy scabbard'; and with all the old grudges and rivalries and hates making discord in the church and fighting among the nations wiped and blotted out, and with the blessed Christmas psalm ringing and singing in thy soul, go, old dying year, go, and depart in peace. Not the peace of the midnight gloom, but the peace of the morning dawn; not the peace of a passing stoical and submissive acquiescence, but the peace of glorious action and the peace of joyful hope; not the peace of a funeral march but the peace of a pæan of love; not the peace of death, but the peace of life, a more abundant life. Go, old and closing year; go and depart in peace, and thus help to usher in, not for a little fleeting hour, a day or a week, but forever, among all nations, kindreds, tribes and tongues, in the church and in the world, the victory of Christmas." At every genuine service in the house of the Lord there is the presence of the heavenly dove that appeared at Christ's baptism.

And, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him. (Matt. 3:16.)

A Sensible Nobleman

The Earl of Tankerville and his wife, who was Miss Leonora Van Marter, are on a visit to this country for the purpose of placing their son and heir, Lord Ossulston, fourteen years old, in an American school. The youth is in a preparatory school in Boston, and is known there as plain Charles Bennett. When prepared he will enter an American university. After one year at Eaton, Lord Tankerville decided that his son needed the kind of an education the universities in this country afford. The Earl said to a representative of the press in New York: "Your young men in America work. I want my son to work and I particularly want him to grow up in an atmosphere where work is not regarded as something to be ashamed of. He will inherit about 31,000 acres from me and he must learn how to manage and conserve this estate. If the House of Lords is in existence when my son succeeds me, I want him to be a helpful member of that body. With the propaganda Lloyd-George is putting through it begins to look as if English peers will have to take off their coats and chop wood. That wouldn't be a bad thing, either, for the peers. All a father can do for his boy is to give him a fair chance, and that's what I'm doing for my lad. I want him to be equipped to face whatever the future may bring in England, whether it be revolution or a gradual leveling upward of all classes of society. We are growing to look up more and more to the man and less to the title." This nobleman spoke very sensibly. Some sons of the rich in this country, as well as in England, think it unnecessary and degrading to work, and not all parents are wise enough to hammer better sense into their heads. His tribute to the value of our educational system and our democratic institutions in the preparation of young manhood for the largest usefulness is just. His recognition of the relation of hard work to earthly success, and to the development of the best manhood and mastery, is wise. The industry the Earl counts so necessary to his son, who is to inherit over 30,000 acres of land and a lordship in a great empire, is thus referred to by the wise man:

He that tilleth his land shall be satisfied with bread. The hand of the diligent shall bare rule; but the slothful shall be under tribute. (Prov. 12:11, 24.)

BRANDER CUSHING'S AMBITION

A Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By CHARLES M. SHELDON

Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER XIV—Continued

MARSTON called Sidney up just after dinner to tell him that Unc' Marston would be at home that night.

"You had better call without telling him you're coming," Ed's cheery voice rattled through the telephone. "I have an idea the admiral might retreat if he knew you were going to storm his works. If you see Pax tell her I'll be best man on short notice."

At eight o'clock Sidney stood at Admiral Marston's door, his heart beating with more nervous expectation than he had ever known at a critical athletic contest where he knew his university was depending on him for prize honors.

He told the servant he wanted to see Admiral Marston. It seemed to him he waited an unusually long time before the admiral appeared.

At last he came out of his little office room at the end of the drawing-room. Sidney walked slowly forward to meet him. At first Sidney thought the admiral was not going to shake hands. But he did finally put out his hand and said as he did so,

"I—I—this is an unexpected pleasure, Mr. Cushing. Will you—come in here?"

He motioned with evident embarrassment towards his little office and Sidney went in and took the chair the admiral motioned him to take. Marston shut the door carefully and sat down at his table.

Sidney's nervousness had all passed, and he was fully self-possessed. The admiral's hesitation and uneasiness seemed to grow.

"I'm glad to see you," he stammered.

"Are you really, Admiral Marston?"

"Of course. Things have changed—a good many things have happened since—since you were here last."

"Yes, a good many. May I venture to ask how is Mrs. Marston?"

"She is well, I believe."

"And—Miss Marston?"

"She has not been very well this winter."

Silence.

Then Sidney said, speaking slowly and with great care,

"Admiral Marston, I want to be perfectly frank with you. I have come to see Mrs. Marston and yourself about your daughter and get your consent to—to—meet her and—"

Admiral Marston's voice broke in harshly.

"Mr. Cushing, do you mean to say you love my daughter after the very brief acquaintance you have formed?"

Over Sidney's whole nature it seemed to him at that moment that his hunger for human affection flowed. There was a small photograph of Pax on her father's desk. It brought to poor Sidney's imagination the picture of her as she stood on the platform ready to christen the warship. Again he saw the little bow of ribbons as it floated over the river. Again he saw the streamer of color that the breeze that afternoon on the Potomac wafted to him from where she sat. And he answered with an impulsive, wholehearted, positive feeling that had not been with him when he entered the house:

"Yes, Admiral Marston, I do. I love her."

"I am deeply grieved, Mr. Cushing. To save you any suspense, I will say at once, the thing is impossible. It is out of the question for me or Mrs. Marston to give our consent to anything of the sort."

"Do you mean that it is because my father is in the State prison?"

"Since you are so direct, that is what I mean."

"What has my father's condition to do with—"

"Pardon me, Mr. Cushing, I will not argue. It can do no good. I believe you will see the matter as we do. Pax's happiness cannot be wrecked by an emotion. She does not know her own mind."

"Might I see Mrs. Marston and talk with her?"

The admiral hesitated curiously.

"She is not here."

"Might I see Pax with you, and—"

"She is not here."

"Could I see them at any time?"

"They are not in the city."

"Not in the city?"

"To be frank with you, Mr. Cushing, my wife and daughter sailed this morning for Europe."

"Europe!"

"By this time they are somewhere out near Point Judith. Listen to me, Mr. Cushing. When I learned that my nephew had gone up to Dockville to see you, I had a suspicion that you might come here. Mrs. Marston shares with me my anxiety about Pax. She is our only child. It is no secret, though it is a painful fact, that she has allowed herself to fall into a feeling for you which, in the nature of the case, her mother and I have felt would in the end lead to great misery and wretchedness for you both. We decided to send her abroad. I cannot express to you how exceedingly painful all this experience has been for us all."

Sidney sat still. What could he say? What could he do? The room whirled around him. The last things seemed to be slipping out from under him. He was sitting near enough the end of the admiral's table so that his arm was resting on it. Suddenly he flung his other arm down, laid his head on them and gave expression to a muffled cry of pain that made Admiral Marston wince.

"Come, come, my boy. You're taking this hard. I regret the necessity for our action. It seems the only thing possible."

Sidney lifted up his head. Slowly he sat back straight and proud.

"In other words, you are a judge of others' happiness on your own standard. You visit the sins of a father on a son and daughter. Are you God to do a thing like that?"

"I have done what seemed best," said the admiral stiffly. "I have no apologies. Personally I have no objection to you. If — if — your father had not— But there is no use to discuss it. The whole thing so far as you and our daughter is in question is impossible and I will say that nothing can ever change Mrs. Marston's mind or mine."

Sidney stood up. He looked very tall and straight. He bowed.

"Good evening, Admiral Marston," he said, and walked directly out of the room and out of the house.

He never knew whether Admiral Marston ever made any attempt to call him back or not. He was too much disturbed and for the time too much angered to notice. For the action of the admiral and his wife had seemed to him like tne grossest injustice. He hotly went over the interview and bitterly commented on the fact that to society in general, that is, to the society in which he had so far moved, the fact of his father's disgrace threw over the son as well the black cloud of distrust and the shrinking of those who drew their skirts about them to escape contact and pollution.

After he had gone to his room in the hotel he brooded for an uncounted time. It seemed to him that life was a wretched thing throughout and that he was an outcast and hopeless. For a moment also he felt a resentment against Pax herself. Why had the girl, if she really cared for him, allowed even her mother to take her away? She might have— Then he reproached himself for blaming her and sat wretchedly going over all the hopelessness of it, when the telephone rang.

It was Ed Marston's voice.

"I've been anxious to know how you came on and off. Did Unc' Marston silence your turret guns, or did you torpedo him before he got within range?"

"Mrs. Marston and Pax sailed for Europe this morning."

The silence was so much longer after this announcement than the usual pause which Marston's conversational habits allowed that Sidney did not know what he was doing. Then—

"Well—that beats me. Shall we capture one of Unc' Marston's cruisers and go after them?"

Silence on Sidney's part.

"I'll tell you what you can do, Cushing. Propose by wireless. A fellow in New York did that the other

Continued on page 87

LIQUORS POURED INTO THE SEWERS

ON DECEMBER 29 the old police headquarters of New York City, 300 Mulberry Street, was the scene of the destruction of the contraband wines and liquors which had been seized by the excise department in raids upon premises which were operating both as manufacturing plants and sales places for liquor and which were without licenses. Eight big casks, six crates of bottles and fifteen demijohns were rolled and carried out into the courtyard. They had been seized in raids made on houses in East Sixty-fifth Street and in Prince Street last June. The seizure included two casks, each holding 240 gallons of wine. The casks had been built inside of the Sixty-fifth Street house, and it was necessary, Mr. Charles Firestone, chief counsel of the New York office of the State Excise Commission, said, to tear down a section of the wall before they could be taken out.

In all there were 2,400 gallons of wine, fifteen demijohns of wine and whisky, forty bottles of Scotch whisky, three kegs of beer and several cases of miscellaneous cordials, syrups and fancy liquors. When all had been wheeled out into the court three men of the excise department armed with axes were set to work to break them up. The court is provided with a grated manhole opening in the center of its sloping pavement, and into this the liquids ran and so down into the sewer. Mr. Firestone was assisted by William W. Sweetser, his deputy, and Thomas F. O'Connor, property clerk of the Police Department.

Destroying Contraband Liquors at Police Headquarters, New York

The whole affair was not without its comic side, for somewhere out in Mott Street the Mulberry Bend Band was practising "The Heart Bowed Down" in a more or less indifferent fashion. When Mr. Firestone heard this he laughed and pointed to a shedlike door which leads from the courtyard to Mott Street and through which the strains of the music filtered. "If those fellows knew just what they were playing a dirge for," he said, "there wouldn't be enough men in the building to keep that door standing." Nobody volunteered to go out and make an announcement.

Only a few weeks ago Mr. Firestone superintended an even greater destruction at White Plains. There he broke 4,800 bottles of champagne, six cases of Scotch whisky and several casks of still wines seized in raids at Yorktown. Some of the wine destroyed on December 29, Mr. Firestone said, usually sold for $2.40 a gallon. It was made on the premises in Sixty-fifth Street, where an elaborate plant of presses, strainers and vats was found.

An Armenian Reader's Commendation

I have read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twelve years, ten years in Turkey, and two years here. When not provided otherwise, I subscribed myself, which cost me to labor ten or twelve days to pay one year's subscription. It is the best religious paper and is free from denominational prejudices. All Christian Armenians, either in Armenia or other parts of the world, like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

La Grange, Calif. S. SAMUELIAN.

The Noiselessness of Rebecca Leigh

By ELIZABETH NAGEL

REBECCA gazed about at the forlorn, precise room and formed her opinion immediately. "Cold looking!" she said to herself. "Not much—much heart!" "I hope you are well, Aunt Mary," she said aloud. "The people out home said you were very kind to take me. I'll try to be good."

"I hope so indeed!" The sharp, old eyes peered from out the lined, old face into the small, pale one of Rebecca Leigh. "Of course, you couldn't go to an orphan asylum! And I'll try to do my duty by you, child, though it's hard indeed at my age! Children are so noisy!"

Rebecca stared. "I didn't think it was just a duty, Aunt Mary," she said. "I thought you wanted me!" But Miss Mary Thorneley had not heard; she had already, as far as possible, dismissed the presence of her unwelcome guest from her mind.

In the months that followed her entrance into the house without much heart, Rebecca did try to be good—and she succeeded. More than that, she tried to be quiet, and she succeeded there also. She went to school, she helped in the housework, she studied and she read. If she ever played, it was not for Miss Mary to notice it. Playing always made noise and Miss Mary hated noise. Rebecca put it to herself this way in the very beginning: "Daddy used to say I could make more noise than a dozen other children. But I won't make any here—not a single—single bit!" So the cold looking little house was as cold and cheerless as it had been when Rebecca first entered it. The advent of a child had made no difference at all.

But for all this Rebecca Leigh, thin-faced bit of a girl that she was and daily growing thinner in the congealing atmosphere of her aunt's house, had some slight outlet for her child's nature. This outlet was the company of Sally Peters. Sally Peters was a fat, good-natured little girl of the village, who never asked questions, never thought anything strange, never minded, in a word, that Rebecca came always to her house, while she never went to Rebecca's. In Sally Peters's house, Rebecca Leigh became her wild, harum-scarum self, and laughed and shouted and played as gaily and as noisily as any child of her age; only perhaps more so, not only because of what Daddy had said, but because of the bottling up process she constantly underwent at her aunt's house.

Still, a child needs more than play, and that was another reason why Rebecca grew thin. A child needs love. Rebecca especially. For Rebecca had been the heart's delight of her mother and father before they had so suddenly left her and her nature was sensitively keyed to affection. And sometimes during the long winter evenings of that first long winter at Miss Mary's, Rebecca, with her wild eyes on Miss Mary's composed face, felt like running over and throwing herself in Miss Mary's arms. "She's my blood," would cry Rebecca's heart on these occasions. "My blood!" But that wasn't all of it, for deep down in her heart Rebecca Leigh had, even though seeing her many faults, come to love dearly that grim-featured, cold-natured Aunt Mary.

Then spring came, a very lovely and placid spring, balmy and life-giving, and with it Miss Mary awoke from her preoccupation with herself and her affairs past and present, to take note that the little face opposite hers at the table was becoming very thin. Perhaps after this Miss Mary commenced to notice her little niece with some feeling. At any rate she said out loud one day, when thinking the matter over, quite to her own surprise: "I wish she'd—I wish that child would make some noise. It's un—unnatural, that's what it is!"

A short while after this Rebecca made a request of her aunt, really her first request. Very primly and frankly did Rebecca accost her aunt, and thus: "If you please, Aunt Mary, may I go to Sally Peters's house after school to-day to stay for supper, and the evening? Several of the school children are coming and Mrs. Peters has asked me."

Miss Mary gazed at Rebecca and once again a sense of the pallor of the child's face assailed her. "Don't you feel well, child?" she asked.

"Yes, thank you," replied Rebecca patiently. "Please do you mind if I go? Sally's father will come home with me. It's my birthday and—"

"Your birthday!" said Miss Mary sharply, almost as if it were presumptuous of Rebecca to have such a thing. That wasn't the meaning of her sharpness, however, for with the word "birthday" had come, like a breath of a keen biting wind, the remembrance of a message sent her on the very day of Rebecca's birth by that brother now dead. Miss Mary was rather a spasmodic person and thoughts came to her suddenly. Somehow for the moment, gazing at Rebecca, she could see, not the Rebecca of to-day, but a tiny mite of a baby—her brother's baby.

"Yes, I suppose you can go!" she said. "You'll be home early?"

"Yes, Aunt Mary. Thank you."

And surprisingly enough, Aunt Mary, watching Rebecca go down the road, heard herself repeating aloud and as if the idea were utterly a new one, the same words that Rebecca had often spoken so passionately under her breath: "She's my blood! My blood!"

"Recklessly, Miss Mary got out from ancient trunks all the bright things of her youth"

Then, though subtly displeased with herself for this unwonted show of feeling, the old lady took her way upstairs. In her prim, cold room she sought out her brother's letter, and re-read his words of twelve years ago—the words written when Rebecca was a tiny, helpless little babe. And suddenly somehow, Miss Mary connected the tiny babe with Rebecca of to-day and this thought made her cheeks glow and her heart beat quickly.

It was a strange afternoon that Miss Mary passed, an afternoon peopled with spirits of other days. The old lady tried to frown all these loving spirits away, but she couldn't, any more than she could frown away the feeling that she was lonely in Rebecca's absence. Try as she would, Miss Mary could not chase from her mind the memory of that pale, little face, that unconsciously yearning little face of her dead brother's child. "Only a child still!" said Miss Mary finally aloud. "Only twelve!" And again, "I suppose she does miss them—why, she's only a little child!" And Miss Mary realized in a flash that certain things were missing in her house that shouldn't be missing in a house where there was a child.

Sitting alone at her early supper, Miss Mary tried again to push all of this away, and to force her mind into its regular severe grooves; but not so—something stronger than Miss Mary's will was at work and would not be withstood. "Her birthday!" said the old lady at last, arising from an untasted meal. "Humph!"

That "Humph" was the final shot thrown at herself by Miss Mary Thorneley, for with it that old lady, with very bright eyes and a swiftly beating heart, went out into her kitchen and recklessly making a huge fire, spent several hours in what she would usually term "foolishness." For she made—that prim, cold-hearted Miss Mary—she made a round, round cake, all pink and white, and she searched out twelve pink and white candles, and decorated that cake, and she powdered its icy pink and white top with pink and white candied caraway seeds, and then she stood looking at what she had done, and the glow surrounding her became more and more vivid, more warm and loving and—human. There was more to follow; Miss Mary wasn't the sort of a person who does things by halves. With unshed tears behind her eyes, tears for the lonely little girl of twelve, that little girl, pale, wistful and unwanted — unwanted until now—the old lady Thorneley moved about her small, cold house supplying as well as she could those touches of brightness necessary to young life. Recklessly Miss Mary got out from ancient trunks all the bright things of her own youth which she had put away as "foolishness" with oncoming years, and spread about with a lavish hand a very bloom of gay colors. And still that wasn't all. For by lantern light did Miss Mary go outside to gather what few spring blossoms she could find. When she re-entered her house again something in her heart raced gladly out to all the color and life. So you see Miss Mary was not quite dried up despite her years of solitary self-repression.

"Land, but I'm glad I woke up," acknowledged Miss Mary to herself, as in her warm and glowing dining room, with its festive birthday table, she sat down to wait for Rebecca's home-coming. Nine o'clock, chimed by the old clock, started Miss Mary to worrying and nothing would appease her but to start off to the Peters house to see if something had not happened to Rebecca. She lost all fears, however, on approaching that hospitable dwelling, for windows were gay with lights and the house merry with laughter. Amid the happy clamor, Miss Mary caught above the rest, one sweet, childish voice, clear and ringing with joyous life and — strangely familiar. Miss Mary paused in absolute wonder. "Can — can that be Rebecca's voice!" she whispered.

Then Miss Mary crept nearer to the window, and gazed within. In the midst of a merry throng was Rebecca Leigh, the noiseless Rebecca Leigh, her cheeks glowing, her eyes shining, her small limbs never quiet, her voice ringing laughter and infectious merriment. Indeed, to Miss Mary's astonished gaze, Rebecca was like a mad little sprite of pure joy. "I never knew," muttered Miss Mary wistfully, "I never, never knew!" Upon this Miss Mary gulped hard. For now she knew indeed!

And then Miss Mary, forgetting everything, called out—"Rebecca! Oh, Rebecca!"

Still so noisy were the merry children no one heard but Rebecca herself. So loving was Rebecca Leigh that I think she would have heard and answered the voice of love anywhere. And Rebecca quietly withdrew herself from the crowd and went out to Miss Mary. It isn't very clear how Miss Mary explained, or if she ever did explain, or if Rebecca just understood without a word, but the moon, appearing over the hilltops a few minutes later, disclosed to the soft spring night a very tender sight —an old lady and a little girl clasped in fond embrace. Then the moon saw Rebecca's face as she

Continued on page 91

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

J. M. C., Sonoraville, Va. 1. Since we are told that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, what became of Elijah's and Enoch's bodies? 2. Where was Christ's spirit during the three days in the tomb? 3. The Scripture says Judas was a thief. Where does it give the proof?

1. The bodies of these men were doubtless "changed" as Paul describes in 1. Cor. 15: 51, 52, the verses immediately following the one you quote. Their flesh was changed into bodies like that with which Christ rose from the dead. His resurrection body seemed to be made of flesh, but it was clearly different from that which he possessed before his death, and of which our "corruptible" bodies are now made. All the redeemed, the saints who have died before Christ's coming and those who are alive when he comes, are promised these new "celestial" bodies for the heavenly life. 2. We know in general that it was among other departed spirits, but under what circumstances or in what location no one can tell. 3. The proof is not given. The simple statement is made that such was his character.

I. A., South Dansville, N. Y. What became of Judas Iscariot? Did he ever repent of his awful sin?

The fate of Judas Iscariot is given in Matt. 27: 5. His fate was that of a reprobate, and there is no evidence that his remorse led to true repentance. See Acts 1: 25.

W. H. G., Lockport, N. Y. Please explain Ps. 103: 5.

The old eagle casts off its feathers and becomes bald, like the young ones, and is then covered with new feathers. The ancients believed that every tenth year the eagle soared aloft into the "fiery region" of the sun, and thence plunged downward into the sea, where, dropping its feathers and its outer skin, it acquired new life.

D. C., Toronto, Can. 1. Please explain Matt. 20: 10. 2. Also Matt. 22: 14.

1. This was a rebuke to the murmurers against the generosity which would give to the humble workers, though late, special recognition for their earnestness and zeal to make up for lost time. It may be that the worker who labored all day had only given perfunctory service, while the late brother had worked with heart and soul and with a spirit which won his Lord's approval. It is not the work itself, but the spirit of the worker, that counts with God. 2. This is one of Jesus' terse and pregnant sayings which he more than once uttered. "Called" here means "invited," and the sense is that many receive the invitation of the Gospel who will not ultimately be among those chosen to salvation through sanctification of the spirit and belief on the truth. In a wider application, it may mean that even some who have nominally worked in the Lord's service, may at the very last prove to have been no chosen workmen at all but insincere and self-seeking. This last view is an application so severe that one naturally recoils at its contemplation.

Mrs. J. A. H., Portsmouth, Va. Will you please explain Matt. 5: 17-19; Matt. 19: 17; Luke 16: 17; Rom. 3: 31; Rom. 8: 7; James 2: 10-12; I. John 2: 3, 4?

We get a better start in the study of this interesting list of passages by taking Luke 16: 17 first, reading also verse 16. The law, in its literalness, endured until the time of John the Baptist. After him the kingdom of heaven was preached, the new kingdom whose law is love, whose king is Christ, and whose members are empowered by the Spirit of Christ to keep the greater and more comprehensive law of love, the law which includes and intensifies all the details of the ancient moral law. The law, while in Jesus it loses some of its ceremonial details, loses nothing of its real power; it is no less powerful, even by the tiniest measurement, than it was before. Matt. 5: 17-19: Christ fulfilled the ceremonial law; he kept its authenticated details, and in his death all the requirements for sacrifice were satisfied and ended. While he kept the law and was to fulfil it, the Scribes and Pharisees were evading the law. By their interpretations and additions they really deprived it of authority. Jesus told them they must not dodge the law but keep it. He even indicated that those who kept the old law most carefully, as Paul did, would be given high places in the work of his new kingdom. Matt. 19: 17: This again was counsel given before the Atonement. The way of life then was to seek to keep the law. Rom. 3: 31: Here the declaration is made that the Gospel establishes the law. Men without the Gospel had little power to keep the law; the Gospel gives them power to keep it, and thus gives the law its rights, establishes it, makes it possible for its authority to assert itself. Rom. 8: 7: The carnal mind is Paul's expression for the natural, evil, wilful state of humanity. In that sinful, natural state a man cannot keep God's spiritual law. Paul uses also the term "old man" in the same sense. His teaching is that this "old man" is to be "destroyed" (Rom. 6: 6), "put off" (Col. 3: 8, 9; Eph. 4: 22). James 2: 10: This verse is undoubtedly true whether it is applied to law either before or after the Gospel. The judgment of the whole law as an institution came upon the man who violated any part of it; and under the Gospel a man is under the same obligation to keep the whole spirit of the moral law and to obey the words of Christ. We dare not disobey or displease Christ in the very slightest detail. I. John 2: 3, 4: These verses make a good climax. John tells about the "perfect love," which enables humble Christians really to keep Christ's law of kindness. That is the great secret. Paul declares: "Love is the fulfilling of the law." If we love Jesus perfectly we shall not displease him by disobedience; if we really love our neighbor we will do him no harm, but all the good we can.

W. W. N., Asotin, Wash. 1. Is the passage, Mark 16: 9-20, a later addition to the original MS. of the Gospel? 2. Please explain the expressions, "sons of God" and "daughters of men," in Gen. 6: 2. 3. Is there any Scriptural support for the theory that the giants of old were the descendants of angels who had taken daughters of men for wives?

1. This was answered in our issue of November 8. The verses are probably a later addition. 2. The best explanation of the expressions, "sons of God," is that it refers to spiritually minded men; here especially to the descendants of Seth as distinguished from the descendants of Cain. The passage about which this controversy has arisen is Gen. 6: 4. The best translation is that of the American revision, which brings out the fact that the "giants" and "mighty men" were the same. The whole matter is obscure, because the exact meaning of the expressions, "sons of God" and "giants," is not positively known.

S. E. A., Fenton, Mich. I have been very much interested in the story, "Brander Cushing's Ambition," and especially in the statements made concerning our navy. Why must we go on increasing our war forces after signing the peace treaty? It doesn't look to me as though the treaty meant much if we go into a war at the first chance, and if we do not intend to go into a war, why all this preparation?

Many others no doubt feel as you do on the subject, that it is inconsistent to advocate peace and yet continually increase our war armament. The only argument that can be advanced in justification is that under present conditions the power which is strongest is best able to preserve peace, while a weak power, which voluntarily reduced its armament either in troops or warships or both, would be an easy prey to other powers that might have designs upon it.

Reader, Pennsylvania. II. Cor. 12: 2 says: "Such an one caught up to the third heaven." I have heard two sermons recently by different ministers. The one said the birds lived in the first heaven; the clouds were in the second, and the third was the home of the soul. The other stated that childhood was the first heaven; the Church the second, and the third the home of the soul.

According to the ancient writers, there were several degrees of spiritual elevation, these being revealed in visions. The "first heaven" (the first of these degrees) was that of the clouds and the air, the "second" that of the stars and sky, and the "third" was above both of these, where God's glory continually shines. See Eph. 4: 10.

J. H., Sacramento, Calif. The books that have been written on the "signs of the times," as indicative of the approaching end of the Age, would fill a good-sized library. Many commentators and interpreters of prophecy have dealt with the subject of the restoration of the Jews. All agree that the time is coming when Israel will be reconstituted as a nation, some holding that the race will return to its ancient seat in Palestine. See answere to "G. B. L., California," in MAIL-BAG of January 10. Of late years, there has been a considerable influx of Jews from Russia and Turkey to the Holy Land, and there are now a number of thriving Jewish settlements between Jerusalem and the seaboard. The Zionist movement, founded by Theodor Herzl some years ago, and which had for its object the early return of the Jews to their native land, has lately seemed to languish. Palestine still remains a Turkish possession, although Jewish capitalists have now large holdings there and have greatly stimulated Jewish immigration. From time to time there have been hopes of such a development of the Jewish movement as would lead to acquiring Palestine by purchase, but such a thing has not yet been actually attempted. Still, it may come in the near future and the old land may once more be the home and Jerusalem the center of Jewish national life, although there still may be many members of the race in other lands. Prophecy clearly points to the restoration of Jerusalem, after it has been "trodden down of the Gentiles" during a prescribed period. See Luke 21: 24 and related passages.

J. L. L., Aberdeen, S. D. In The Christian Herald Almanac, you speak of restitution. Is the wrongdoer to make it right with the person to whom a wrong has been done, before he can expect to make it right with God and be forgiven?

Wherever it is possible to rectify a wrong, or restore to others what we have taken unjustly by any means, it should be done. Restitution is taught in both the Old and New Testaments. We are bound to restore a thing, or its value with the natural increase, to compensate for the loss sustained. Sometimes, however, it is impossible to make restitution, as the opportunity may have long since passed away; but where the opportunity exists, a man of true Christian principles should avail himself of it, if he has the means.

Two Chinese Revolutionary Generals in the Field

GENERAL YUANG HUNG, one of the revolutionary commanding officers, and the second figure from the left of the picture, is here photographed in the field near Hankow. General Li, with whom he has just been conferring, is the officer reading a despatch. The white sleeve-band badge of the revolutionists is plainly shown on General Li's arm.

Miscellaneous

S. K. J., Media, Pa. The names of the two thieves crucified with Christ are preserved in tradition as Dismas and Gestas, the former being known as the "penitent thief."

L. B. L., Smithfield, Pa. 1. There is no such passage in the Bible. 2. It is customary, in most denominations, for the audience to bow the head during prayer. The upright attitude is regarded as irreverent.

T. B. C., Prosser, Wash. There are cures by mental suggestion altogether outside of religious influences, and we are disposed to regard those you mention as belonging to this class. They cannot be said to have any spiritual value.

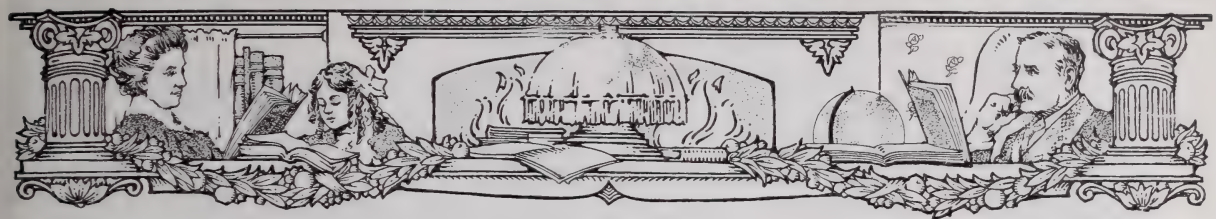
G. W. P., Lebanon Junction, Ky. Your letter shows the danger of dealing with text without context. If you will read Rom. 7th chapter, and especially verses 7 to 24, it will be clearly seen that the passage in I. John 1: 7-10 must be interpreted in the light shed by other related passages. See also Rom. 8: 1-3. Paul in these passages sets forth the continual warfare that is going on in every man's heart between the carnal and the spiritual, and which the regenerate feel, even while they realize that sin has lost its dominion over them, and that, through grace, they are enabled to resist temptation and to overcome the world.

Good Wishes From Virginia

I have just finished reading "Our Readers and Ourselves" in the November 29 issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and feel like writing you what a great comfort and pleasure the dear old paper has been to my husband and myself. It is sent us each year as a Christmas gift by our sister, Mrs. Grattan, as the one thing we most desire. Dr. Jowett's sermon in the same number has been worth the price of the paper.

Hoping you may long live to help others and have your subscription list doubled each year, I am, etc., MRS. GEORGE CHRISMAN.
Harrisonburg, Va.

Over the Four o' Clock Teacups



Is Calling Obsolete?

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

WE ARE really in danger of losing something very precious and friendly from our social intercourse because informal calling is gradually becoming unfashionable. The custom is not yet obsolete, but it is threatened with peril because of certain conditions that have obtained vogue lately. To-day a hostess sends out an invitation to every one on her calling list, in terms like the following: "Mrs. Abner Meredith Jones will be at home to her friends on Friday afternoon from four till seven," the place and date being clearly indicated.

The friends of Mrs. Jones take pains to accept her invitation, they assume their best apparel and their finest company manners, and they arrive in a crowd at four o'clock and keep on arriving in instalments until the darkness settles down on the day. There is a bountiful collation, and there may be hired waiters and an orchestra. There are several ladies in the receiving line, and the whole affair, while cordial and beautiful, is beset by formality. After it is over a tired hostess sits down and breathes a long breath. She has done her duty to society for the season. During the next fortnight she may receive a number of party calls, but they will soon be over, and she will then be in no danger of interruption from the neighbors or the outer circle of her friends for a long time to come.

Another method much enjoyed and not without arguments in its favor is adopted by women who have a series of days at home, when their friends may come to them informally from December until March, or from January until May. They send out their visiting cards by mail to every one they know, with "Thursdays until March" (or May), written or engraved thereon. They may prefer Monday, Wednesday or Saturday as the day to be reserved for friends, and if they thus set apart a day they are under an imperative obligation to stay at home until the period they have indicated is over. Tea and wafers, or an equally simple refreshment, is enough to serve to friends who call on one's ordinary day at home.

What we hope may return and regain its former pleasant sway is the old simple custom of running in upon a friend and having a bit of talk without notification or special invitation. The surprise of a little visit from a friend drops sweetness into the cup of life. When somebody whom one loves and admires has an impulse sufficiently strong to persuade her to leave her fireside and call upon one for a chat or a confidence, for the purpose of telling good news or expressing sympathy in a time of trouble, there is an evidence of actual friendship that is absent from our present formal hospitality. Let us determine for ourselves that the occasional caller shall receive a hearty welcome, and if, in the course of a morning or an afternoon, our thoughts turn to some one whom we would like to see, let us throw down the gauntlet to fashion and follow obediently the gracious inclination. Calling should not be permitted to become obsolete, nor should we always insist on seeing friends only when it is entirely convenient.

"TWILIGHT"

Soft falls the Sunset's lingering gold,
The day drifts on to evensong;
Soon night will rest on wood and wold,
And far above the stars shall throng.

. . .

Familiarity with the Bible

WHOEVER reads the fiction of this year, or dips into the essays of the season, or even reads the daily papers, will note that familiarity with the Bible is gradually falling out of fashion. In the works of Arnold Bennett, Ian Hay and William De Morgan there is constant use of the vigorous and idiomatic English of King James' Version. The essays of G. K. Chesterton, of Arthur C. Benson and of Samuel Crothers show that these writers were brought up in the daily hearing of the Scriptures and in their study from childhood. Family prayers have been crowded out of too many American homes. Children do not hear the Bible read morning by morning. They go to Sunday School or stay away at their discretion, and there is a conspicuous absence in many churches of children in the pews. "Are there no children?" inquired a visiting clergyman from England, "or do American children never go to church?" For one or another reason, the Bible stories, the Bible messages and the Bible phrases have ceased to be part and parcel of everyday life. The Bible is not read, as once it was, in our public schools. While the authors above mentioned display wonderful familiarity with the sacred Book, weaving its striking phrases unconsciously into their narratives, a great number of others who have forged to the front seem never to have heard anything that belongs to the sacred pages. We shall do nothing so good for the rising generation as to restore to it familiarity with the vocabulary of the Bible.

. . .

A Useful Suggestion

WILL you give me space to say a word about taking liberties with drugs? When a physician orders remedies ought they not to be taken precisely according to his directions? Many people are singularly careless about taking medicines in the dark. No one should ever rise at night and take pills or liquids without first lighting a candle or the gas and looking at the label on box or bottle. Valuable lives have been sacrificed to the lack of this precaution. I knew an agonizing instance of the death of a child who took from a shelf a piece of bread and butter sprinkled with arsenic and left for the purpose of poisoning rats. I wish to utter my word of warning.

"CORNELIA D."

. . .

Picking Up After Molly

I HAVE always trotted about and picked up after Molly," said a weary mother, as Molly disappeared down the street on her way to school. Molly in her early teens and her first year of high school left the house every day after breakfast in a mental state that might be supposed the fit accompaniment of a cyclone. She had invariably lost her grammar or her algebra, the report that had been signed overnight was missing, and even her hat and jacket had perversely hidden themselves out of sight. To start Molly for school took as much energy on the part of the household and subtracted as much from her mother's vitality as if the child had been booked for an ocean steamer and was setting out on a twelve months' absence. This is no exaggeration. It is only a plain statement of a commonplace fact. There are Mollys and Bettys and Dollys almost without number who can never find their raincoats, umbrellas or overshoes when they are needed; who grow desperate as the relentless minute hand points toward nine, and who inaugurate confusion in the home before they leave it in the morning, all because weakly indulgent mothers have trotted after them and picked up what they dropped. If you really love your daughter do not be a slave; do not run here and there to find what she has mislaid; let her learn the blessedness of order by having a place for everything, and personally depositing everything in its place. In her closet, on her special nails, in her bureau drawers and in her room a girl should be neat and look after her own belongings.

BETTER THAN THE DESCRIPTION

The Christian Herald Almanac for 1912 arrived several days since, and I think you people are a little bashful in speaking of the merits of your premiums. I find the Almanac much better than your description of it. Many thanks. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD minion, morocco-bound, Red Letter Bible also arrived in good condition. What a glorious holiday remembrance it was! It is much nicer than you have ever described it to be. Please accept my heartfelt thanks for your generous premiums.

Washington, D. C. JACOB PERSINGER.

Your New "NATIONAL" Style Book is Ready

YOUR New "NATIONAL" Style Book is ready and will be sent you free if you send us your name and address.

The New Spring Style Book gives you full information of New York Styles in every kind of apparel. It offers you your choice of all these most beautiful fashions at prices so low that purchasing from this Style Book will mean to you more clothes as well as better and more stylish and becoming clothes than you have ever bought before.

Waists	98 cents to $6.98	Hats	$1.98 to $19.75
Skirts	$1.49 to $9.98	Pimes	$1.00 to $25.00
Lingerie and Wash Dresses	$2.98 to $15.98	Coats & Capes	$5.98 to $15.98
Silk Dresses	$9.98 to $19.75	Raincoats	$7.98 to $12.98
		Gloves	50 cents to $3.95

And every kind of Apparel for Women, Misses and Children

"NATIONAL" Tailored Suits

Made to Measure $12.50 to $30

Samples of Materials Sent Free

These beautiful Made-to-Measure Suits alone would amply repay you for writing for your Style Book. Each suit is cut and made to the customer's measure. And there are over 300 materials to choose from. Nowhere in the world is equal opportunity offered you in the selection of your Spring Suit.

Upon request we will send you free a liberal assortment of samples, including the new Spring weaves and fabrics and the new mannish mixtures. Remember, while samples are sent gladly, they are sent only when asked for—and they are well worth asking for.

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and expressage on all our goods to any part of the world. Every "NATIONAL" Garment has the "NATIONAL" Guarantee Tag attached. This tag says that you may return any garment not satisfactory to you and we will refund your money and pay express charges both ways.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.

218 West 24th St., New York City

This Book will be sent you Free by return mail if you send your name and address.

Our Boys and Girls

The Value of a Friend

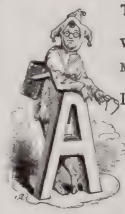
So long as we love, we serve; so long as we are loved by others I would almost say that we are indispensable; and no man is useless while he has a friend.

Robert Louis Stevenson.

TYLL EULENSPIEGEL

(Owlglass)

Where'er the wave of Rhine doth lave,
Man's memory is still his grave.



ALL in the little village of Brunswick, oldest, oddest town in Germany, where the people are a quaint, superstition-ridden folk, who believe in gnomes and witches, ogres and fairies, and even old men sometimes are known to put bowls of cream upon the doorstep at night by way of invoking good luck from the "Lubberfiend," Tyll Owlglass was born in the fourteenth century, and, by the magic of some unaccountable reason, Tyll is still the dominating spirit of Brunswick and of a great part of the surrounding Black Forest country.

Since our space is very limited and our story very long, I shall have to ask you to step with me for a moment, please, into the enchanting village square of Brunswick, ringed around with its little bakeshops, that have leaned together so long as to be entirely dependent upon one another now, and read Tyll's story in a nutshell there. Look into the windows of these really beautiful little bakeries, where to this day, in memory of Master Owlglass, heaps of fresh gingerbread owls and long-tailed monkeys with currant eyes are for sale. From generation to generation the little bakeshops dream of the old merry days when Tyll Owlglass was baker's boy to Arnold Kramer, chief of the famous Brunswick bakers, who made for himself a Brunswicker fortune out of the whimsical birds and beasts, and especially monkeys and owls, that Tyll cut and baked for him.

Now look at the beautiful bronze fountain in the center of the square. Did you ever imagine a fountain so fine as this one? See, there he lilts in bronze, Tyll, a boyish fellow, balancing a tiny slipper upon his toe, surrounded by a circle of solemn owls and grinning monkeys with long tails, spouting water from their mouths. Notice that the monkeys' heads are rubbed away a bit, and always they are very smooth and bright. This is done by loving hands of little children; for all day, and every day, from generation to generation, children play around that fountain on their way to and from school, and there is rarely a game but Tyll Owlglass has some part in it. Think of that! After so many years!

Tyll Owlglass was so beloved of the villagers of Brunswick in the fifteenth century that they accounted their general welfare at that time to his droll and bubbling high spirits. They met him more than half way in his rogueries and waggeries, and when he outwitted them the good folk only honored him more. "Tyll was always a gentleman," to this very day you can hear them say it: and when his fame spread abroad, for he was clever as well as mischievous, he was sent for by kings and princes and dukes to cheer them when they were low-spirited. His doings abroad were ever the good-natured gossip of the Brunswickers, and they glory in his memory.

We hear little enough of Tyll Owlglass in this busy, hurrying country, where we have small time for tradition and romance, but at least we may recognize that to few mortals has been granted such an enviable place in the history of his country as to Tyll Owlglass, whose native village is pointed out with pride to the traveler, and whose memory is kept alive by freshly baked gingerbread monkeys and owls, and by little children who fancy they play with him in their games around a rarely beautiful fountain where the traveler may read this delightfully whimsical inscription:

Tyll at His Pranks

ERECTED TO THE MEMORY OF
THE JOLLY CHAP
TYLL EULENSPIEGEL
IN THE PLACE WHERE HE ONCE
BAKED OWLS AND LONG-TAILED MONKEYS
FOR ARNOLD KRAMER

This is a true story, my boys and girls, and some day perhaps I shall be telling you more about the quaint places I have visited in my journeyings round the world.

Very lovingly and faithfully yours,

Uncle Ben

Little People's Corner

A Little Lecture for Little Girls

For the little girl who is pretty when she is good, "but when she is bad she is horrid":

"Young people have a right to be homely. They may be born so, and therefore cannot help it. But no older person has any right whatsoever to be ugly. She has had day after day in which to grow beautiful." — Mrs. Johnston, in "Talks to Little Folks."

Good Morning

Good Night

A CHILD'S HYMN

By M. Betham-Edwards

God make my life a little light,
Within the world to glow;
A little flame that burneth bright,
Wherever I may go.

God make my life a little flower,
That giveth joy to all,
Content to bloom in native bower,
Although the place be small.

God make my life a little song,
That comforteth the sad;
That helpeth others to be strong,
And makes the singer glad.

God make my life a little staff,
Whereon the weak may rest,
That so what health and strength I have
May serve my neighbors best.

God make my life a little hymn
Of tenderness and praise;
Of faith, that never waxeth dim,
In all His wondrous ways.

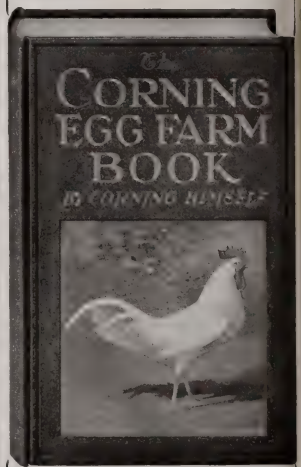
The Corning Egg Farm Book

by Corning Himself

The Greatest Poultry Book Ever Written, of the Greatest Egg Farm Ever Known

The Plain, Straightforward Story of What Has Actually Been Accomplished in Five and a Half Years, and Is Being Done Every Day, on The Corning Egg Farm.

Every Owner of Hens Needs This Great, New Corning Book. It Means an Increase in Eggs, Chicks, and Money Receipts that Will Astound You.



Every Corning building, every idea in mating, every wrinkle in hatching, brooding and feeding is adaptable to any size flock, a few hens in the back yard, or flocks of hundreds and thousands. Remember, the Cornings started with only 30 hens, and had to feel their way along, accommodating their method and increasing their Plant as their flock grew.

Marvellous discoveries in feeding for eggs have been made on The Corning Farm during the last two years.

American and Foreign poultry experts pronounce The Corning Egg Farm the most original, most wonderful, most reasonable, and profitable egg farm they have ever seen.

In this New Book the Cornings tell you how to get the large, white eggs of delicate, delicious flavor, and more of them than you have ever had before. We get higher than the highest market quotations, and are never able to fill all orders. Last year we received more than three times as many orders for hatching eggs as we were able to fill. Every hen we could spare for breeding was sold in the early Spring for August delivery. This is how we make so much money with our poultry.

To-day we have on the Farm 15,000 Pullets and Hens; 15,600 Incubator Capacity at a Hatching; 264 feet of Brooder House; 650 feet in length of Laying Houses and 58 buildings with a floor space of 18,455 square feet.

$6.41 per Hen, per Year Has Now Been Surpassed on The Corning Egg Farm and this New Book tells you how. Nothing has been done on The Corning Egg Farm that cannot be accomplished by any one of fair, average intelligence, and a reasonable amount of ambition. In fact, there are breeding and egg farms of different size, scattered all over the country, stocked with Corning Stock, run on Corning Method, and all making money. This New Book tells you how to do what Cornings have done.

"The Corning Egg Farm Book, by Corning Himself," is the story of a Poultry Plant and Egg Farm that has made good, that is making money right straight along—enough money to justify our giving all our time to it, and to provide for an expenditure on the Farm and plant of $40,000 in less than six years. We Cornings had no one to follow, no book like "The Corning Egg Farm Book" to be our guide. We had to think and work it all out, to pay for the experiments, the experience. You have simply to invest $1.00 for a copy of "The Corning Egg Farm Book by Corning Himself," and you need absolutely no further information or instruction than you find in this book to make poultry raising and egg producing pay you well.

Think all You Get in This New Corning Book

Plans, Measurements and Instruction. How to Build the Celebrated Corning Houses.—How the Corning Strain S. C. White Leghorn was Developed, Explained so clearly that you will have no difficulty developing a strain of any breed you fancy.—Incubation and Brooding.—Growing Youngsters on the Range.—Selecting the Breeders.—1,500 Pullets in a Corning Laying House.—Feeding, the Real Secret, As a result of The Corning Method we have made the LARGEST AVERAGE EGG PRODUCTION. The whole Corning Method, the most complete and biggest money-making plan of running chickens.

Bound in Rich, Blue Cloth, Stamped in Gold, and with Cockerel in Colors, 216 pages, text in clear type, on fine book paper. A magnificent reproduction of an oil painting, in all its glorious colors for the frontispiece. 35 magnificent full page, and larger, photographs in half-tone. 39 hen and ink drawings, plans of buildings, with dimensions, etc. A real book, not a paper covered pamphlet. Price $1.00 postpaid.

THE CORNING EGG FARM

Bound Brook, New Jersey

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 82

day because he couldn't wait. The girl was coming home from a summer vacation and he was afraid another young man in the same tours company with her would get ahead of him. If you say so, I'll get the wire right off."

"No, Marston, my good fellow, you can't help me in any way that I know. I'm not fit to talk now about it."

"I'm an ass. Kick me at your end of the line, will you? I want to see you to-morrow if I may. Good-night."

He hung up before Sidney could say that he would be glad to see him, and Sidney went to bed to pass a sleepless night.

In the morning he reviewed the situation from all sides. It looked as hopeless as ever. Marston came over to the hotel and offered sincere sympathy, his usual flippant, reckless manner so subdued that Sidney was touched deeply by it.

The business he had come for occupied him for the next two days, but by the end of the week he was back in Dockville.

The only thing left for him that promised any mental relief was the building. Into this he now plunged with a fierceness and at times bitterness that threatened to change in many ways his usual noble and high-spirited courage.

At this time in his strange career Sidney Cushing had, besides the finishing of the battleship, two factors determining his future. He did not at the time understand all the significance of these factors. They were Hermosa Howard and his own father.

Two weeks after his return from Washington he had carried the books to Mr. Howard and had an interesting talk with the blind man. At that time he learned through him a little more of Hermosa's character and purpose. He had called again with more material from the shipyard office, plans, diagrams and sketches in which Mr. Howard was interested and one or two models which he could feel with his sensitive seeing fingers. At that time Hermosa was present and what she said added to Sidney's growing interest in her. But it was simply an interest that touched his feeling of respect for her and raised a few questions in his mind.

With his father, the influence that at this critical period kept him from going to pieces entirely was the passionate desire to fulfil to the letter Brander Cushing's ambition to give the United States the most perfect fighting machine the world had ever known. That passion had grown with the son, as the time went by and the ship began to near completion. And when, several weeks later, he went up to the penitentiary to see his father on one of the few visits he had allowed himself to make, he carried with him papers, plans and photographs to show his father how the work was coming on.

CHAPTER XV

WHAT of Brander Cushing during this period of death in life for him?

When he entered the place, he had been assigned for his daily task the keeping of office records. This was supposed to be work suited to his ability and choice on account of his distinguished character and talents.

But one day after he had been in the prison two months and its clocklike routine had begun to envelop him in its daily monotony, he asked to see the warden on a special matter. The warden was a man of unusual ability and of deep and real Christian character. He had been appointed to the position by the earnest work of a group of churches which had influence with the State governor. He had known Brander Cushing before his conviction and had a great interest in him. When Cushing asked to see him he had him brought into his private office where he had frequent conference with the prisoners. When the door was closed, the following remarkable conversation took place:

"Mr. Armstrong, I have not made a request of any sort since I came here. May I make one now?"

"Certainly; and if it is possible we will grant it."

"I should like to do some work outside of the office."

The warden hesitated.

"There is no outside work just at present except the brickyard, owing to the refitting of machinery elsewhere."

"Put me into the brickyard, then."

"You?"

"Yes. Am I not flesh and blood like other men? The office work is killing me. I need hard physical labor to keep me in good condition."

"Of course you can be assigned to the brickyard. But — will you take charge of the foreman's oversight?"

"No. Put me to hauling clay and molding. I want to work with my arms and legs. I don't want to bother with my mind. I want to work so I can sleep."

The warden looked at him compassionately. He could see the regular signs of prison hardening in Brander Cushing's face. He wanted to do or say something to let Cushing know that in all the world, even in those prison walls, there was one man who cared for his soul. He ventured to say,

"My brother, will you, without my mentioning it again, as long as you are here, regard me as a friend instead of a jailor?"

Over Brander Cushing's pale face a great flush of color swept. Then his face grew hard. Lines around his mouth stiffened. His fingers clutched the arms of the chair tighter. The warden never ceased to look at him clear-eyed and manful. But Brander Cushing made no response, and the guard came in at Armstrong's summons. Cushing went away without another word.

Next day he was out in the brickyard working with a gang of the roughest men in the prison.

The nature of the work required a special heavy suit. This was soon plastered with wet clay. His nearest friend would not have recognized Brander Cushing after he had been in the brickyard two hours. He worked with tremendous energy. It seemed as if devils were lashing him. But one result of it was sleep. After the first stiffness was gone, he anticipated day by day the exhausting nature of the task. He had no acquaintance and sought none. The only time he ever met the other prisoners was at meal time and at the chapel service on Sunday. At these times the rule of silence was observed. Brander Cushing would have observed it anyway. He did not want to speak to any one. He would not have spoken if leave had been granted.

What was passing in this remarkable man's soul during these days of physical toil as a number instead of a human?

It is, of course, well understood that, for a man in his position, even after he had acknowledged his guilt in open court, he might have used every device known to the law, aided by unlimited means, to delay his imprisonment. But as has already been said, once he had determined to make the sacrifice for Sidney's sake, it seemed as if he were hurried by no choice of his own along the track he had followed. The business men and acquaintances who had known him were simply dumbfounded when Brander Cushing apparently submitted to go to prison without a fight. They did not understand the man. He had the foresight to see as well as his shrewd lawyers that no higher court would reverse the district court's decision, but there were other things entering into it all

Continued on next page

How to Ruin a Dish of Beans

Would it pay us—and does it pay you—
To spoil this dish for a cent or two?

IF ONE wants to skimp, or if one doesn't care, it is easy to spoil baked beans.

Take the beans as they come. Don't stop to pick out just the ripest and plumpest—beans all of one size.

Use a sauce made of low-grade tomatoes — of tomatoes picked green, or of scraps from a canning factory.

Bake in dry heat, and too quickly. Some will then be crisped, some broken and mushy, and all will be hard to digest.

In homes and in factories, millions of meals are spoiled in such ways.

DOES it pay?

One may save, perhaps, a few pennies per meal. But think what one loses.

Beans are 84 per cent. nutriment—more nutritious than meat. They cost one-third as much. Does it pay to make them uninviting?

And is any food worth eating if it can't digest?

WE KNOW that it isn't.

So we buy choice beans, and pick out the finest among them. They cost us last year an average of $2.45 per bushel.

We make our sauce from Livingston Stone tomatoes, ripened on the vines. It costs us five times what common sauce sells for —just to get a superlative zest.

We bake in high heat, and bake in small parcels so the full heat goes through. Thus the beans are made digestible.

We bake in steam ovens, so the beans come out nut-like, mealy and whole.

And we bake the tomato sauce with the pork and the beans, so the flavor and zest go through.

IS IT expensive?

The materials are. But we bake for a million homes, so we save on the baking.

Your home-baked beans cost a little more, if you figure the fuel and sauce.

Some factory-baked beans cost a little less. You can learn by one meal if that skimping pays. A million homes know that it doesn't.

Van Camp's
BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

Note that Van Camp's Beans now outsell all other brands together.

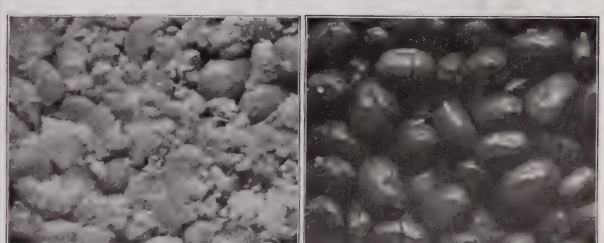
Note that a million housewives who used to bake beans now let our chefs bake for them.

That is due to the fact that no other kitchen bakes beans that compare with Van Camp's.

You will know this when you try them.

Three Sizes: 10, 15, and 20 Cents per Can.

Van Camp Packing Co. (Estab. 1861) Indianapolis, Ind.



Home-Baked
Mushy and Broken

Van Camp's
Mealy and Whole

(Taken from Actual Photograph)

(201)

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

that determined his course and led him to do as he did.

Two passions survived all the personal horror of his disgrace. One was his love for Sidney. The fact that he had saved the boy's honor was a glowing fact which his soul gloated over. As he threw the wet clay into the box, filled it, and piled it up, then took hold of the handles on his end while another prisoner carried the other, his proud spirit never ceased to picture Sidney as clean and pure out in the free world from which he himself was shut in, and the thought sustained him as if a lost soul in hell should claim credit for committing some crime to save a weaker one.

The other passion that still survived was his ambition for the new warship. After all it was his warship, the child of his own brain, the creation of his own genius. He had even been allowed to send out instructions to McLeish and Merrill that had been necessary when questions had arisen as to construction of parts that were beyond the skill of any one but himself. When the vessel was finished it would be his own. He had visions of its action in a real war. He prayed that a war might come so that the ship might be tested. He daily rejoiced in the thought that his own son was as deeply interested in the whole thing as himself.

There was added to all else, in Brander Cushing, an iron will not to go down in darkness. He said to himself, "I am coming out of here to resume my place among men and compel them to give me my old place again. I will not break down nor let them ruin me. I will take care of my body and mind. The world shall not break me even here." He was as proud as Lucifer. He shook his fist at society, the world and God.

He read constantly during every moment allowed by the strict prison rules. And he received permission from the warden to let Sidney bring to him all the newest volumes on the science of war and the newest data concerning the armies and navies of the Old World.

This then was the mental condition of Brander Cushing when Sidney next visited him, a few weeks after the visit to Washington. They were allowed freedom to talk together with no guards present.

At once Brander Cushing noticed the marks of unhappiness on Sidney's face. Do all he would he could not conceal what had been left there by his recent experience.

"You are in hell on my account. Can I do anything? Of course not."

"Father! Father! Don't. It kills me to have you speak so."

"Is it Miss Marston? I see. I see. Those fools that call themselves civilized would shut you out because of me. Sidney, I vow to God I will come out of here and make Admiral Marston and his wife apologize on their knees to me—yes, to me—for this treatment. I have influence, even here in this devil's cage, to bring to bear on him and his. I tell you, if you want to marry Admiral Marston's daughter, you shall."

"Father, it is not—you do not know all. Miss Marston and her mother are abroad, I do not know where. I do not know when they will return. It is all uncertain. For all the world, father, do not add to your trouble by worrying over me."

"I will not worry. I will act, when I leave this place. Sidney, do you not know I am ready to go through torment every day for you?"

"I know it too well. What can I do all my life to show it?"

"Fill out my ambition, boy. I know your heart is in this ship, as mine is. I don't hesitate to pray for war. Real war. There is no telling when we may get one. The nations are arming for some great conflict. When it comes it will be the greatest in history. And when it comes there will be no dreadnought can stand against ours, against yours and mine, Sid."

Used as he was to his father's former complete abandonment to his life work, Sidney almost shuddered at the blunt expression of the war mania in his father. But he responded as he had always done to his father's boundless enthusiasm over the subject, and when he was back again at Dockville he plunged heart and soul into the work over the new ship and took great pride every day as he watched its black and frowning strength, symbol of man's savagery and brute force even two thousand years after the advent of the Prince of Peace.

Four months went by. Brander Cushing still worked in the brickyard.

One day he noticed as he started to pick up his clay box handles that a new prisoner was on the other end. His face was so dirty and disfigured that he could not have recognized him if he had been familiar.

But when the men washed up in the brickyard wash-house at noon, Brander Cushing found this same man was next to him at the wash-bowls. When he wiped his face, Brander Cushing stared and could not refrain from an exclamation. But the men outside were permitted to talk a little.

"Andrew Brodig!"

The man stared back at Cushing.

"Yes. And you?"

"I? I am an enemy of the people. Do you remember having a little tussle with me in Dockville once?"

"Yes, yes. And you are here now?"

"Yes. And you?"

"And I."

That was all they said. Cushing was annoyed at dinner time to find this man sitting next to him. He ignored him as if he were not there. Andrew Brodig had evidently been blown up by something. His right eye was gone and there was a great unhealed scar running over his face from his left cheek to his chin.

At chapel service on the following Sunday Cushing was annoyed again to find Andrew Brodig seated next to him. He did not want to have anything to do with him and resented the man's presence. He reminded him of things he wanted to forget.

Next day out in the brickyard Andrew Brodig started to speak.

"I don't want to hear you," Brander Cushing said roughly. "Take hold of your handles and move along."

Andrew Brodig looked venomously at Cushing but did as he was told and throughout the week they worked together, this strange pair, as far apart physically as a clay-box, as far apart mentally and spiritually as the ends of the earth.

On Sunday there was a new face in the pulpit beside the prison chaplain. He was introduced later as the Rev. Rufus Freeman of Dockville. Warden Armstrong invited in on special Sundays of the year preachers from outside, men who, he knew, had a real message for men.

When Freeman began to speak Cushing prepared to listen, as he had listened to all the chapel speakers, with a cold sneer and a hardening heart.

But half way through Freeman's talk a sentence arrested him. What was that? How did Freeman, this hired priest, this canting hypocrite, know that about him, Brander Cushing? He found himself listening with a real resolve to follow the speaker's thought. The significance of that moment, which was to have such stupendous bearing on his whole being, did not for an instant suggest itself to him. He had turned his head slightly to get a better look at the speaker, and in doing so he noted Andrew Brodig's face. Over him also had come a look of startled surprise at something, and he was leaning forward, following the preacher's words with the greatest intentness of feeling.

To be continued

A Great "Queen"

Horse Story

"KATE and QUEEN"

By Prof. Jesse Beery

King of Horse Trainers

Equals the famous "Black Beauty" in human interest—surpasses it in practicalities. "Kate" a victim of poor handling is vividly contrasted with "Queen" who was more fortunate. You sympathize with one—rejoice with the other—even as you each for the glum waif and laugh with the child of fortune.

Prof. Beery has skillfully woven into this intensely interesting and true story, many valuable suggestions for handling horses—a result of a lifetime's experience.

Special Offer to Horsemen

Prof. Beery desires that every horse owner, trainer, breeder—everyone interested in horses—should read this great story. To make it possible, for a short time he offers every interested horseman a copy, worth $1.00, for the remarkably low price of

25c Postpaid

If you have even a passing interest in horses—if you own, train or breed them, you will gather from it a fund of knowledge worth many times the small price. Send for a copy today. Enclose stamps or coin.

FREE With each book we send free a beautiful colored picture of Queen—oil painting effect—suitable for framing. Order today. Address

PROF. JESSE BEERY

Box 505 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

"Free from Disagreeable Taste and Odor"

Peter Moller's Cod Liver Oil

It is pure cod liver oil, nothing else. Peter Moller's Oil is easy to digest, does not cling to the palate and does not "repeat."

Bottled in flat, oval bottles at the fisheries in Norway. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Schieffelin & Co.
New York
Sole Agts.

5% An Investment Both Safe AND Profitable

We pay earnings from the day of deposit to the day of withdrawal. These earnings for nineteen years have been 5% on the deposits of our patrons compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, as desired. Our business is conducted under the stringent regulations of the New York banking laws and deposits are secured by mortgages on the best class of New York and suburban real estate.

Money May Be Withdrawn At Any Time Upon Short Notice

This convenience with the thorough safety of capital and the liberal earnings make deposits with this company an ideal investment. Assets $2,000,000. Deposits received personally or by mail. Patrons all over the world. Write for particulars or can refer you to someone in your section.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

The IDEAL FENCE

Republic Ornamental Fence combines beauty and utility. Never sags or bulges, many beautiful patterns, handily put up. Also full line High Carbon, tubular steel Farm Gates. Secure Free Catalog.

Republic Fence & Gate Co., 236 E. St. North Chicago, Ill.

Lenox Guaranteed Goods Not Sold at Stores

A DOLLAR BILL will bring to your door, all charges prepaid, a "LENOX" Combination Box, containing the biggest kind of surprises in merchandise values.

$1.00

FOR THE WOMAN:

2 pairs guaranteed lisle elastic garter welt "LENOX" HOSE with spliced heels and toes, SEAMLESS on top of toes,—Black and Tan. . . . . Value $0.75

2 exquisite Swiss ribbed "LENOX" UNDERVESTS with elaborate imported hand crochet pattern tops and dainty ribbon effects. . . . . Value 1.00

ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Retail Value $1.75

FOR THE MAN:

3 pairs guaranteed soft lisle "LENOX" HOSE, with Linen toe and heel, choice black, tan, navy, gray, . . . Value $1.00

A beautiful "Lenox" all silk reversible tie of the latest pattern, to match, . Value 0.50

One pair stout silkweb garters carrying the usual "LENOX" guarantee, . . Value 0.25

ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Retail Value $1.75

Above items sold with the distinct understanding that money is refunded, if you are not entirely satisfied—you to be sole Judge in the matter.

When ordering do not forget to state color and sizes desired

Please remember that the "LENOX" line IS NOT SOLD AT STORES but can only be purchased direct or through our accredited agents. This protects you against substitution. We refer to any bank or commercial agency in N. Y. City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Clerk 3, 5 W. 31st St., New York

We need some good Agents—men and women.

Send Us Your

Old Carpet

We Will Make

New Rugs

By our improved method of weaving, we make beautiful rugs totally different from any other rugs woven from old carpets. Read our guarantee. Ours is the oldest and largest factory of its kind in America. Established 38 years.

Rugs, 75c and Up

Beautiful designs to your taste—Plain, Fancy, Oriental—fit for any parlor. Every rug guaranteed to wear ten years. Grand Prizes at three World's Fairs.

We Pay Freight

Your old carpets are worth money no matter how badly worn; don't throw them away.

FREE Write today for book of designs—in colors, prices and full information.

OLSON RUG CO., Dept. 24 40 Laflin St., Chicago

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. How?" Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right."

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

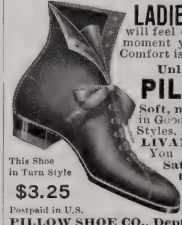
makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia



LADIES! Get this neat, dressy shoe that will feel comfortable from the moment your foot rests in it. Comfort is built into the

Unlined, Vici Kid

PILLOW SHOE

Soft, neat, durable — made in Goodyear Welt and Turn Styles. Price includes O'SULLIVAN RUBBER HEELS. You can order by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded. Write for free catalog and self measurement blank.

This Shoe in Turn Style

$3.25

Postpaid in U.S.

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3 Boston, Mass.

Adirondack Foot Warmers

for Autoing, Driving and Sitting Outdoors

Insure coziness, warmth, comfort! Make living outdoors delightful. Better than a rug. Worn by men and women. Sheepskin with heavy, warm wool inside; ten inches high. State shoe size and whether to be worn over shoes or hose. Money back if unsatisfactory.

$1.50 PAIR, SENT PREPAID

Illustrated Catalog of Outdoor Outfittings FREE

W. C. LEONARD & CO.
114 Main St. Saranac Lake, N. Y.

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN

Can be learned quickly, easily and pleasantly, at spare moments, in your own home. You hear the living voice of a native professor pronounce each word and phrase. In a surprisingly short time you can speak a new language by the

LANGUAGE-PHONE METHOD

combined with

Rosenthal's Practical Linguistry

Send for Booklet and Testimonials

THE LANGUAGE - PHONE METHOD
857 Metropolis Bldg., B'way & 16th St., New York

6% NET

For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709. 6% Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors.

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans

A Family Flock of Fowls

By A. F. Hunter

FRESH-LAID eggs are selling at sixty to sixty-five cents a dozen, and almost impossible to obtain even at that price; why should not every household keep a small flock of fowls and have its own "strictly fresh-laid eggs" for the breakfast table? The greatest obstacle to such a most desirable accomplishment is man's natural conservatism; he never has kept a family flock of laying hens on a few square feet of ground in the back yard, hence naturally supposes he cannot now keep them. Then, too, one's imagination conjures up objections on account of the labor involved, or by the neighbors who find the noisy rooster a nuisance. The great majority do not realize that with the advances in modern poultry keeping the labor of caring for a flock of fowls is insignificant, and that the pernicious male bird is not only a nuisance because of his noise, but that the usual flock will lay better if there is no male bird about; in other words, unless one plans to hatch and grow chicks in the spring he saves the cost of feeding a useless rooster and actually gets more eggs, if the flock consists of females only.

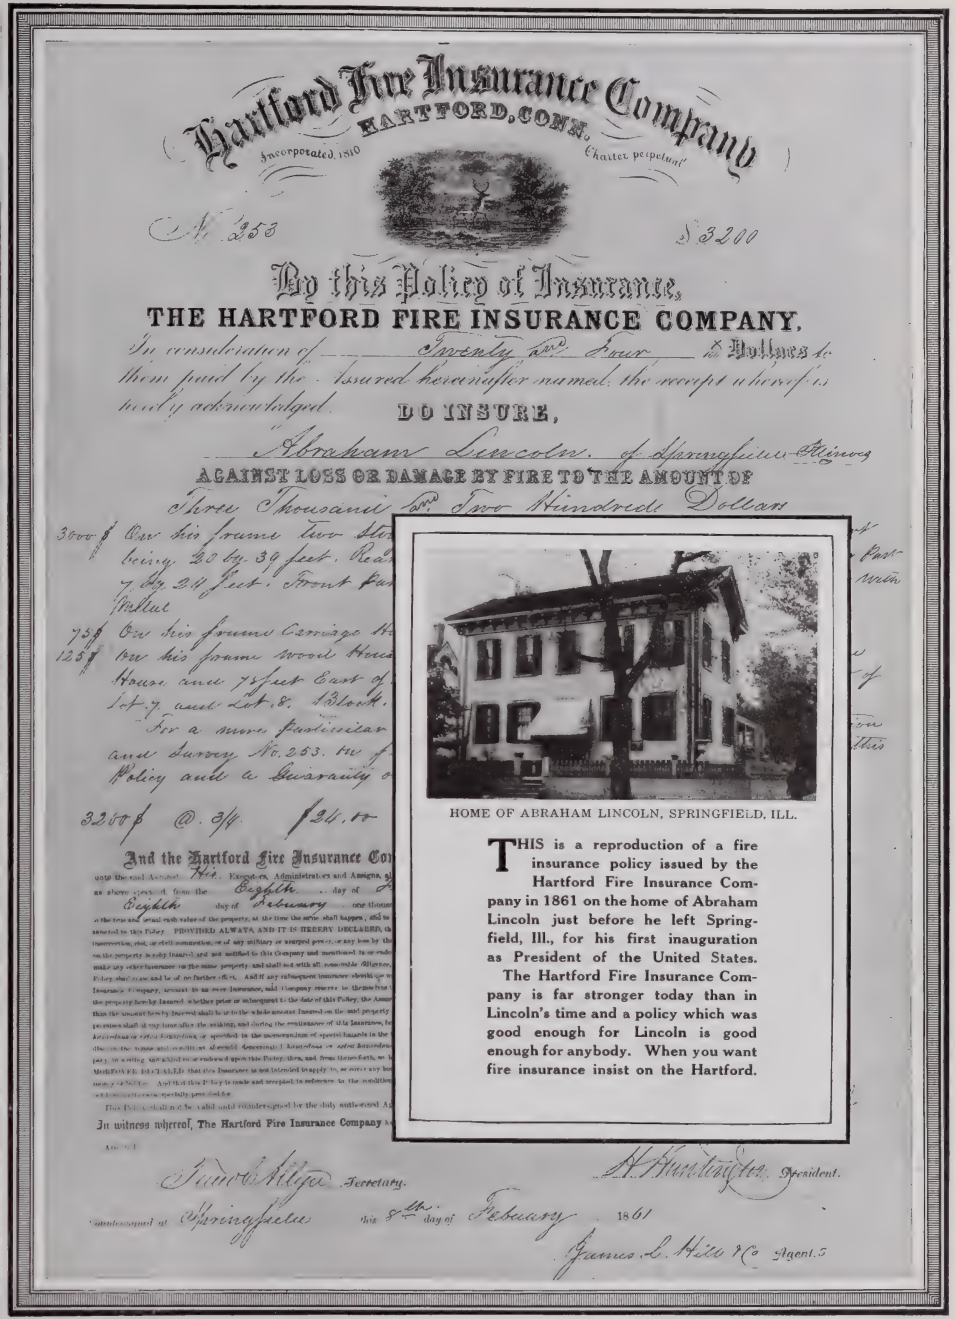
Little has been written about the possibilities of keeping a flock of fowls on a small piece of ground, a flock, say, of ten or a dozen layers, kept in a house 6 by 8, or 8 by 8 feet square, and never permitted outside the house at all. There are some minor advantages in having a small yard attached to the hen house, and allowing the birds to have outdoor range and exercise in pleasant weather, but it is not at all essential where the birds are kept for eggs alone, and many a town or suburban poultry keeper who keeps a flock simply to provide fresh-laid eggs for the family never allows the birds to go outside the house provided for them until they go to the butcher.

It is sometimes difficult for the back-yard poultry keeper to find desirable pullets each season, and not a few such make their arrangements with a farmer-friend back in the country to ship him a flock each fall; in some instances poultry keepers have grown into a line of this trade, and arrange to supply their customers with ready-to-lay pullets each season. One such with whom we are acquainted lives near Toronto. A friend living in the city was complaining of the difficulty of obtaining dependable eggs for his household and Mr. B—— said: "Why not keep a small flock in your own back yard, and produce your own eggs?" The pros and cons were discussed, and the result was that the city man built himself a small poultry house and the poultryman shipped him a dozen pullets that were about ready to lay. The eggs were soon coming along with praiseworthy regularity, to the gratification of the wife and children and envy of the less fortunate neighbors.

When the price of eggs began to drop rapidly, along in March, now and then a hen was killed and dressed for the Sunday dinner, and when the wife and children went back to the old home for a summer's outing the birds remaining were sold to the butcher to dress for market. The house was cleaned up, whitewashed and made ready for another flock of pullets in October, and the family flock was renewed. Others had by this time begun to see the advantages of a few square feet of ground in the back yard, and had built small poultry houses, also, and now Mr. B—— has something like a score of such families to whom he regularly supplies a flock of near-laying pullets each season.

That such a small flock of pullets may be made decidedly profitable is shown by the experience of a man living in a populous suburb of Boston. One fall this man was attracted by the good appearance of a flock of pullets he saw in the show window of a firm of

Continued on next page



Hartford Fire Insurance Company
HARTFORD, CONN.
Incorporated 1810 Charter perpetual

No. 253 $3200

By this Policy of Insurance,
THE HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
In consideration of Twenty Six Dollars to them paid by the Assured hereinafter named, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged
DO INSURE,
Abraham Lincoln of Springfield Illinois
AGAINST LOSS OR DAMAGE BY FIRE TO THE AMOUNT OF Three Thousand Two Hundred Dollars

3000 On his frame Two Sto... being 20 by 30 feet. Rea... 7 by 20 feet. Front Pa... Millar

750 On his frame Carriage H...
1250 On his frame wood Hou... House and 7½ feet East of... Lot 7 and Lot 8 Block...

For a more particular... and Survey No. 253. the... Policy and a Guaranty o...

3200 @ 3/4 $24.00

And the Hartford Fire Insurance Co... unto the said Assured, his Executors, Administrators and Assigns, ... as above specified, from the Eighth day of February one thous... at the true and actual cash value of the property, at the time the loss shall happen, and to... inserted in this Policy. PROVIDED ALWAYS AND IT IS HEREBY DECLARED, th... insurrection, riot, or civil commotion, or of any military or usurped power, or any loss by th... on the property hereby insured, and not notified to this Company and mentioned in or endo... make any other insurance on the same property, and shall not with all reasonable diligence... Policy shall cease and be of no further effect. And if any subsequent insurance should be m... Insurance Company, account in no event hereunder, said Company reserve to themselves t... the property hereby insured, whether prior or subsequent to the date of this Policy, the Assur... than the amount hereby insured shall be or to the whole amount insured on the said property ... premises shall at any time after the making, and during the continuance of this Insurance, be ... Assignment or other disposition, or specified in the memorandum of special hazards in the ... the on the house and on all of said described Merchandize or other Interests ... part, in writing, specially or endorsed upon this Policy, then, and from thence forth, we h... MODIFIED HEREALL: that this Insurance is not intended to apply to, or cover any loss ... more particular. And that this Policy is made and accepted, in reference to the conditions ... and hereto specially prescribed.

This Policy shall not be valid until countersigned by the duly authorized A...

In witness whereof, The Hartford Fire Insurance Company ...

Secretary. President.

Countersigned at Springfield this 8th day of February 1861

James L. Hill & Co Agents

HOME OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

THIS is a reproduction of a fire insurance policy issued by the Hartford Fire Insurance Company in 1861 on the home of Abraham Lincoln just before he left Springfield, Ill., for his first inauguration as President of the United States.

The Hartford Fire Insurance Company is far stronger today than in Lincoln's time and a policy which was good enough for Lincoln is good enough for anybody. When you want fire insurance insist on the Hartford.

AN INTERESTING LINCOLN DOCUMENT

GUNN SECTIONAL BOOK CASES

Write for our "Book of Designs"

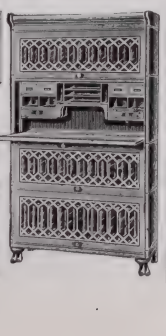
beautifully illustrated in colors showing our Sanitary Clawfoot Mission and Standard Bookcases, and how you will save money by placing them in your home.

The handsome designs, the rich finish, the removable non-binding doors, the absence of disfiguring iron bands, make them far better than the old-fashioned kind.

Our prices are lower than others

and high quality is guaranteed. Sold by dealers or direct. Address Dept. C. H.

Gunn Furniture Company, 57 Victoria St., Grand Rapids, Mich.



LADY WANTED AS REPRESENTATIVE

in unoccupied territory to introduce a beautiful line of Imported and American fabrics, consisting of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, bdkfs, petticoats, etc

The line is very strong on beautiful hand embroidered St Gall Swiss, Belfast Linens, white and colored Mercerized Cottons, fine Egyptian Tissues, Voiles and other beautiful novelties

Many exclusive patterns not shown by other houses of this character

Energetic ladies who will thoroughly cover their local territory preferred To such, a good income is assured as we pay liberal commissions and protect territory. Business continues the year around Liberal credit extended to responsible ladies upon satisfactory reference.

Several hundred choice samples, with full instructions, express prepaid in an attractive sample case

Business can be started at once without expense to yourself We guarantee our materials to give satisfaction An assured income for you

Your immediate inquiry will receive our prompt attention

Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3-A. A., Binghamton, N. Y.

Stop Forgetting

Read What Elbert Hubbard Says About Remembering

Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal, Dickson School of Memory.

Good memory is necessary to all achievement. Every little while I meet a man who has a memory—a trained memory—and he is a joy to my soul.

Prof. Dickson is teaching a science—a simple system of Memory Training—of more importance than the entire curriculum of your modern college.

I recommend that the man or woman whose memory plays tricks, write to Prof. Dickson for free booklet and facts regarding his system of home Memory Training—they are convincing.

How To Get a Free Copy of This Valuable Book
How To Speak In Public

This de luxe edition, handsomely illustrated and richly bound, is exactly suited to meet the needs of the man or woman who desires to be a successful public speaker. The price of this book is $2.00—write and learn how you may obtain a copy absolutely free.

Dickson Memory School
701 Auditorium Bldg., Chicago

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

HOME INSTRUCTION

We want to advertise and introduce our home study music lessons into all parts of America, and will give you absolutely free instruction if you will simply recommend the International Institute to your friends after you learn to play. We successfully teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, 'Cello and Sight Singing.

You may not know one note from another; yet, by our wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction.

Our lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. If you accept our free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and necessary sheet music.

We have successfully taught others and we can successfully teach you. Write to-day for our FREE booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC
98 Fifth Avenue, Dept. 341, New York

16 CENT SEED SALE

10,000 KERNELS OF Selected FERTILE SEEDS for 16c

1760 Lettuce	1000 Celery
760 Onion	100 Parsley
1000 Radish	800 Cabbage
100 Tomato	1000 Carrot
1760 Turnip	100 Melon

1700 Brilliant Flower Seeds, 50 sorts

Any one of these packages is worth the price we ask for the whole 10,000 kernels. It is merely our way of letting you test our seed—proving to you how mighty good they are.

Send 16 cents in stamps to-day and we will send you this great collection of seeds by return mail. We'll also mail you free our great 1912 catalog—if you ask for it—all postpaid.

JOHN A. SALZER SEED CO.
250 South Eighth Street La Crosse, Wis.

FERRY'S SEEDS

Plant breeding and selecting has been our business for years. We market the results in the shape of thoroughbred vegetable and flower seeds. They grow good crops.

1912 SEED ANNUAL FREE ON REQUEST

D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS

Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 30, Des Moines, Iowa poultry-supplies dealers in Boston, and finding that he could buy them for a dollar apiece he engaged them, went home and built a small hen house out of lumber obtained by knocking a few packing cases in pieces, and covered it with tarred paper, and when the birds arrived they were domiciled in the new house and a small run-way adjoining. The birds were just common, mongrel pullets, which explains why they were sold so cheap as a dollar apiece, but they proved themselves to be layers, and our friend was soon enjoying fresh-laid eggs and producing eggs to sell to neighbors.

A Family Flock of Fowls

Continued from preceding page

There were twenty birds in the flock, and from the date of their purchase in the fall till the 7th of July following the cost of the food bought for them was $19.50, making a total cost of twenty pullets and their food of $39.50. During the fall, winter and spring this flock of pullets produced eggs to the value of $80.89, many of which were consumed by the family and the balance sold to neighbors at the going market price; those used in the family were credited to the flock at the same prices as those sold.

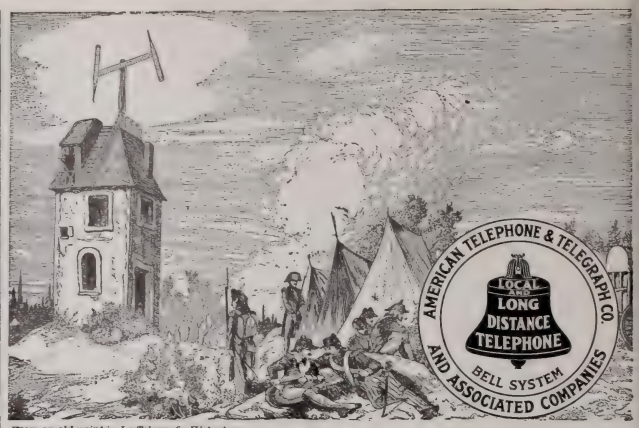
The family left home to go into the country for the summer on July 7 and the hens were sold to the hen-cart man, alive, at the market price, for $10.12, which makes the grand total of eggs and poultry foot up to $91.01. Deducting the cost of the pullets and the food bought there was a balance of $51.51 net profit, which is a fraction over $2.50 profit on each pullet purchased. The food cost would have been somewhat greater if all the food consumed by the birds had been bought, but the table waste of the usual household is a considerable help in feeding a flock of fowls, and the table waste costs nothing—it is usually thrown into the swill bucket.

Another case in point is that of a young lady living in a small city who had impaired her health by too confining work in a city office. Her physician ordered her to a sanatorium for rest and upbuilding, and when she returned to work he instructed her to eat four fresh-laid eggs daily; two eggs for breakfast and the others raw, in milk. Finding it difficult to obtain dependably fresh eggs she persuaded her mother to permit her having a small flock in the home yard. A portable house was purchased and fifteen pullets installed in it. A small brother was paid ten cents a week to feed and care for the flock, two bags of ready-mixed food were bought, and the result of the venture was not only all the eggs the young lady needed and a supply for the family, but there was a surplus which found a ready market at the corner drug store, bringing ten cents a dozen above the market price.

Such examples show how easy it is to have fresh-laid eggs for the family if we go about it in the right way. There need be no noisy rooster to impose upon the neighborhood, nor unattractive, filthy yard to offend the eye.

A mixture of meal, bran and meat scraps is kept before the birds all the time, they eating of it as the appetite prompts them; twice a day a small handful to each bird of dry grain is thrown into scratching litter on the house floor, and they are given needed exercise in scratching and searching for the grains. A hopper of grit, oyster shells and charcoal, each in a separate compartment, hangs upon the wall of the house convenient of access, and there is a drinking fountain of water, rinsed and refilled once a day. The droppings should be cleaned from the roost platform every other day in winter, twice a week in summer, and they are a most valuable dressing for the lawn and garden.

The simple "chore" of caring for such a flock of fowls calls for but a few minutes' time each day, and the satisfaction of having dependably fresh eggs for the family and an occasional fowl for the table is our best reward.



From an old print in La Telegrafe Historique.

Napoleon's Visual Telegraph

The First Long Distance System

Indians sent messages by means of signal fires, but Napoleon established the first permanent system for rapid communication.

In place of the slow and unreliable service of couriers, he built lines of towers extending to the French frontiers and sent messages from tower to tower by means of the visual telegraph.

This device was invented in 1793 by Claude Chappe. It was a semaphore. The letters and words were indicated by the position of the wooden arms; and the messages were received and relayed at the next tower, perhaps a dozen miles away.

Compared to the Bell Telephone system of to-day the visual telegraph system of Napoleon's time seems a crude makeshift. It could not be used at night nor in thick weather. It was expensive in construction and operation, considering that it was maintained solely for military purposes.

Yet it was a great step ahead, because it made possible the transmission of messages to distant points without the use of the human messenger.

It blazed the way for the Universal Telephone service of the Bell system which provides personal intercommunication for 90,000,000 people and is indispensable for the industrial, commercial and social progress of the Nation.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy One System Universal Service

A Better Stove at a Lower Price

400 styles—30 days' free trial and 360 days' approval—choose your style—pay factory price—no more. If it's not the biggest stove value you ever saw, send it back, we pay freight both ways—you won't risk a penny.

30 Days FREE

You can't make a mistake by paying factory price. 200,000 in use today. It's the quality stove, the KALAMAZOO.

Factory Price Book

Factory prices on cook stoves, ranges, heating stoves, gas stoves and furnaces. Every stove shipped same day order is received. Our factory prices will open your eyes on the real cost of a stove. Send for this Free Factory Price Book No.103 today.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

Save $5 to $40
Cash or Credit

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You" And Gas Stoves Too

WRITE to-day for Star Catalog of GUARANTEED ROSES Sent Free!

Leading roses shown in natural colors. Catalog is up to date—offers the cream of the world's roses—also new free delivery offer. Also contains "How to Grow Roses," "Rose Lover's Calendar" and list of best roses for your climate.

The Conard & Jones Co., Box 140, West Grove, Pa.
Rose Specialists—50 years' experience

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers Journals.

Patent Obtained or Fee Returned

CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Att'ys
Established 16 Years
925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

A GOOD SAFETY RAZOR FOR 25 CENTS
Guaranteed to Please YOU or money returned
Why pay more? Agents wanted
Six New, Sharp, Keen Blades by mail for 25c
The Orvis Co., 221 Fulton St., New York

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Farm, Poultry and Lawn. 26-inch Hog Fence 15c. 47-inch Farm Fence 23 1-2c. Catalogue free.

COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47 Winchester, Indiana.

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 114 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Our Peace Circles Busy

OPINION as to the fate of the pending arbitration treaties varies greatly, though it is almost universally recognized that when they are ratified a great advance will be made toward peaceful settlement of international disputes. Against those who have set themselves up as judges of the constitutionality of the arbitration treaties and pronounced adverse judgment, there is an array of distinguished jurists and lawyers who have taken the other side and have found the treaties constitutional. Some men who have declared themselves on their constitutionality are: President Taft, Secretary Knox, ex-Senator Edmunds of Vermont, Governor and former Chief Justice Baldwin of Connecticut, Senator Sutherland of Utah, Judge Alton B. Parker of New York, Senator Elihu Root of New York, Joseph H. Choate of New York, Senator Burton of Ohio, Senator McCuother of North Dakota, John Bassett Moore of Columbia University, James Parker Hall, Dean of the Chicago University Law School, and former Chief Justice Knowlton of Massachusetts. It would seem that after men of such high standing in the legal profession had passed upon the treaties and found that they neither violated the constitution nor infringed upon the prerogatives of the Senate, others might be willing to believe in them. Opposition to the treaties on legal grounds in the face of such an array of lawyers cannot be anything more than a paltry excuse to vote against them. In view of the fact that practically the entire population of the United States, England and France favors ratification of the treaties, it is apparent that they can be defeated only by technicalities and quibblings.

Debate on these treaties will in all probability be resumed in the Senate just at the time this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches our readers. Members of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Leagues should write to their Senators, urging them to support the arbitration treaties, and there will be a great work done in the advance of the Peace Movement.

Why the Arbitration Treaties Should Stand

The topic for discussion in CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League Circles for the fortnight ending February 7 is: "Why the Arbitration Treaties Should Stand." Booklet prepared by Denys P. Myers will be forwarded free to members of CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles or to peace advocates for a two-cent stamp to defray the postage.

Reference books recommended: War or Peace, by Hiram M. Chittenden. (McClurg & Co., $1). Universal Peace; War is Mesmerism, by Arthur E. Stillwell. (Bankers' Publishing Company, $1.) Peace Problems, by Frederick Lynch, with an introduction by Andrew Carnegie. (Fleming Revell, 75 cents.) First Book of World Law, by Raymond L. Bridgewood. (Ginn & Co., $1.50.)

Called Higher

Mrs. H. H. Morehead (88), of Newcastle, Pa., passed away September 7, 1911.

Mrs. Luthera Thaxton (94), of White Hall, Ill., died October 23, 1911. She had been for many years a reader of this magazine.

Emily F. Parrott (62) died August 15, 1911, at Joliet, Mont. She was for several years a devoted reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. Dora Fitzgerald (76) died November 9, 1911, at Boone, Ia. She was for thirty years a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Tobias B. Delinger (67) passed peacefully away on October 11, 1911, at Quarryville, Pa. He was for a number of years a subscriber to this paper.

Mary A. MacCracken (76) went to her last home on April 10, 1911. She was for thirty-three years a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Robert B. Meek, of Buffalo, N. Y., was called away to a higher life on September 28, 1911. He had been a reader of this magazine for over twenty years.

Mrs. H. C. Riddell died recently at her home in Marion, Ia. Being entirely deaf, she derived much comfort and benefit from the sermons published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Rev. B. G. Wood (80), of Bluford, Ill., passed away recently after a ministry of thirty years for the Church of the United Brethren. He was for several years a subscriber to this magazine.

T. W. McClellan, after sixteen years of invalidism, died at the Veteran's Home, Napa County, Calif., July 7, 1911. He was one of President Lincoln's bodyguard from 1863 till the close of the war.

Mary Elizabeth (Smith) Blauvelt passed away September 26, 1910, and her husband, John D. Blauvelt, October 12, 1911, both having lived three score years and ten. Mr. and Mrs. Blauvelt were residents of West Norwood, N. J., where they were for a number of years subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The burial services of Mrs. Barton C. Harp and her two small children, William and Henry, together with that of her sister, Miss Lena Hughes, took place in November last at Lexington, Ky. This family were the victims of a terrible accident at a railroad crossing in that part of the country. The wife and little ones constituted Mr. Harp's entire family.

Mrs. Cordelia A. Slack (80) passed away recently at her home in Malden, Mass., where for many years she devoted herself ardently to both home and foreign missionary work, and was one time president of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. She saw her duty and did it as bravely as her heroic husband who, in defense of his country, died on the battlefield of Antietam. The deceased was for many years a subscriber to this magazine.

Among the Workers

—THE ABIGAIL FREE SCHOOL and Kindergarten of New York is making an effort to secure a permanent home instead of the present premises at 25 Charlton Street. The superintendent and secretary of the school is Mr. C. P. Devare.

—THE ENGLISH evangelist, Rev. E. P. Telford, will hold a series of services in California towns and along the Pacific Coast at an early date. On former visits to this country his work was attended with great blessing.

—GIPSY SMITH'S revival campaign in the Pacific coast cities includes Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Great spiritual results have followed the work at the points already covered.

—IDA L. REED, author of the famous hymn, "I Belong to the King," and many others, is a chronic invalid and in extreme poverty. She is now an inmate of the German Hospital in Philadelphia. Miss Reed's beautiful hymns are sung all over the English-speaking world.

—DR. JAMES A. REED, pastor of the Charles Street United Presbyterian Church, New York, forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a check for $13.85, which was a Thanksgiving Day offering from the church for the Bowery Mission Bread Line. This generous and timely gift supplied a midnight meal to 554 men and lads at a cost of 2½ cents each.

The Noiselessness of Rebecca Leigh

Continued from page 83

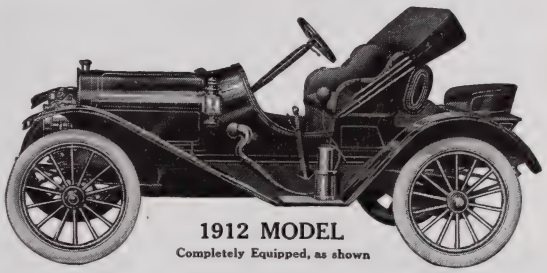
raised it to her Aunt Mary, and saw also the sweetness and light that answered its loving gaze, and the moon knew that the old lady and the little girl understood each other very well.

Miss Mary presently came enough out of the clouds to tell the child of what had happened at home. And then with a glance at the gaily lighted Peters house she said boldly: "It's a large cake, and if Mrs. Peters doesn't mind, can't we take them all over home with us and have a second birthday party? I want," continued the old lady with a tremble in her voice, "I want a lot of noise in my house—a lot of noise!"

"Oh, Aunt Mary!" cried Rebecca joyously. "Oh, Aunt Mary!" Her eyes were beaming like twin stars. She kissed the old lady and gave her a good, rollicking bear hug and catching her hand firmly said, "Come in and let's ask them—ask them home to my birthday party!"

$495.00

The Automobile Sensation of the Year!



1912 MODEL
Completely Equipped, as shown

METZ "Twenty-Two" ROADSTER

Every atom in the make-up of this car is strictly standard—in quality, strength and design. It is the greatest automobile value ever offered. It is the only four-cylinder, water-cooled, completely equipped car sold at a price within the means of everybody.

The METZ "Twenty-Two" is the most economical car you can buy AT ANY PRICE. It will carry you from 28 to 32 miles on one gallon of gasolene, 100 miles on a pint of lubricating oil, and from 8,000 to 10,000 miles on a single set of tires.

The three METZ cars which completed the famous Glidden Tour from New York to Jacksonville, Fla., where the lowest priced cars entered in that stamina-testing event. They were the only team, out of the eighteen that started, to arrive in Roanoke, Va., with a perfect score and inside the schedule, without time extension.

The METZ car is guaranteed to climb hills as fast as any other car made, regardless of its power or price. It is easy-riding, simple in operation, a marvel in efficiency, absolutely dependable under any and all conditions.

To Dealers—This is the big seller for 1912. We have a great proposition for live automobile agents everywhere. Write today for Book "H" giving full particulars.

METZ COMPANY, WALTHAM, MASS.

Tired Out!

IT sometimes happens that a woman, on the death of her husband, is left without any means of support. Her duties have not fitted her to meet the problems of making a living for herself and her children, and she has to fall back upon her skill with a needle. Such skill is so poorly paid that poverty and privation stare her in the face.

No man has any excuse for subjecting his wife to such a future. Whatever he earns, a part of it should be used to guarantee her against it.

The Travelers Insurance Company in its Guaranteed Low Cost Monthly Income Policy has the best safeguard ever devised for just this emergency.

THE TRAVELERS INSURANCE COMPANY
HARTFORD, CONN.

Please send me particulars regarding Guaranteed Low Cost Monthly Income Policy.

Name _____ Business Address _____

Date of Birth _____ City _____ State _____

CHRISTIAN HERALD

THANKFUL THOUGH WEARY

O MEN! grown sick with toil and care,
Leave for a while the crowded mart;
O women! sinking with despair,
Weary of limb and faint of heart,
Forget your cares to-day and come
As children back to childhood's home.

Go sit beside the hearth again,
Whose circle once was glad and gay;
And if from out the precious chain
Some shining links have dropped away,
Then guard with tenderer heart and hand
The remnant of your household band.

Draw near the board with plenty spread,
And if in the accustomed place
You see the father's reverend head,
Or mother's patient, loving face,
Whate'er your life may have of ill,
Thank God that these are left you still.

Thank God for friends your life has known,
For every dear, departed day—
The blessed past is safe alone;
God gives, but does not take away;
He only safely keeps above
For us the treasure of his love.

PHOEBE CARY.

Ever Clean COLLARS

IF you could rub a damp cloth over the collar you now have on and make it as clean and fresh as when it left the laundry, would you hesitate to do it?

This is just what you can do with Ever Clean Collars. They are made in Troy, N. Y. Identically the same as the collars you buy of your haberdasher; and they look the same, although treated by a new patented German process that makes them invisibly waterproof. No celluloid, no rubber, no imitation.

Made in every fashionable style that gentlemen of today require.

Write us size, style and brand of collar you wear, and we will send, on receipt of 25c, postpaid, an Ever Clean Collar of the same style.

Price 25 cents a collar.

EVER CLEAN COLLAR & CUFF CO.
253-36th Street, Brooklyn

EARN FROM $21 TO $50 PER WEEK

LEARN ABOUT OUR FREE COURSE IN SHOW CARD AND SIGN WRITING

A Great Opportunity!

We are offering, for a limited time, a complete course in show card and sign writing to those purchasing a trial assortment of our

"Litholia" Ready-to-Use Colors

This is a great opportunity for ambitious persons either sex to increase their earning capacity. Good show card writers in demand at $21 to $50 weekly salary or in business for yourself. Our show card course is not a book of alphabets. It is a complete course in lettering compiled by an expert New York show card artist for our "Litholia" is the only liquid water paint ever manufactured. "Litholia" is pigment colors, used the same as paint, distemper or tube colors, but far superior to either. "Litholia" lasts longer, almost never. Nothing to equal "Litholia" for the show card writer, theatrical, or the interior decorator. Don't miss this offer!

LITHOLIA CO. COLOR CO.
247 West 125th Street, New York

NASTURTIUMS

bloom for everybody. They grow well in pots or soil, bloom all season, require little potting. Our new giant flowering sorts never disappoint.

For 10c We will send 5 large packets all different colors.

SWEET PEAS

are everybody's favorite. We will send 3 Packets, differ- For 10c ent sorts and colors

FREE—Our beautiful 130-page catalogue Contains hundreds of pictures from photographs, colored plate and many helpful cultural directions. Offers quality seeds, bulbs, plants, etc. Write for your free copy today.

LIVINGSTON SEED CO.
21 High St., Columbus, Ohio

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donication Plan No. 44
E. W. VANDUZEN & CO. Est. 1826 Hillsboro, Ohio

WE PAY $80 A MONTH SALARY
and furnish rig and all expenses to introduce our guaranteed stock and poultry powders; money-back guarantee; outfit free; new plan; steady work. Address
BIGLER CO., X 562, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS

FIRELESS COOKING, What it Means to the Busy Woman. Keeps food hot 24 hours without fire. Send 5c in stamps to Dept. 1, Box 96, Muskegon, Mich.

Young People's Societies

Endeavor Ideals*

NOBODY wishes to intimate that the ideals of our society differ markedly from those of the Church Universal of which we are a branch; but there are many particulars which young beginners may well emphasize, and of which it is, perhaps, somewhat less necessary to remind older Christians. That was a clever speech of one of Miss Thornycroft Fowler's characters, in which she was made to say, "I used to think when one had got to a sensible age, one would have outgrown the snares and wiles of the devil; but I find that he has got them suited to fit all ages and sizes, as they say of ready-made clothes."

Thus certain temptations belong rather more to one decade of life than to another, and it is well to be stiffly on guard against those of our own especial time. When we walk "the slippery paths of youth" it is only God's grace and the most earnest efforts on our own part which can "preserve us safe and lead us up to man."

The saloonkeeper and the denkeeper expect to make their largest profits from the young. As the prophet says, it is for them that these beasts of prey "lay their wait." Eager to "see life," perfectly sure that they can never become like the unsightly wrecks of manhood and womanhood which they sometimes see haunting the purlieus of the town; ignorant and reckless of consequences, of which they may have been told but which they usually do not believe and cannot realize, our young men and women are all too likely to go astray, unless strong home or church influence deters them. It is therefore of the greatest importance that we of the Christian Endeavor should bring into our fellowship all that we can. The missionary spirit should burn brightly among us. The history of our society is ennobled and enriched with the stories of saved souls, through the loving services of our recruiting officers and members who have gone into the highways and byways and have bidden the wanderers to come in.

We may well pattern after Philip, whom Mr. Wells, in his Bible Miniatures, calls "the Finder." No sooner had he come to Christ than he urged Nathanael also to come. And Mr. Wells in that same book gives us a note of encouragement, when he points out strikingly that Peter, who was weak and wavering in early life, with no more stability than the water that he tried to walk upon, yet became like a rock through his love of Christ, as we may all become if we will but follow and trust him.

It is as evangelists and soul-winners that we young people must do our best work. Mr. Moody, in stinging words, often reminded his hearers of this great duty. "It is a thing to weep over," he said once, "that we have thousands of church members who are good for nothing toward extending the Kingdom of God. They understand bazaars and fairs and sewing-circles; but when you ask them to sit down and show a man or woman the way into God's kingdom, they say, 'Oh, I am not able to do that. Let the deacons do it, or some one else.'

"This is all wrong. There are many church members who are, as it were, hobbling about on crutches. They can just make out that they are saved and imagine that is all that constitutes a Christian. As far as helping others is concerned, that never enters their heads."

Heaven doth with us as we with torches do:
Not light them for themselves, said our greatest poet. We are here to help strenuously, continually those about us, and the noblest and best help that we can render is to lead them to Christ. That is what the "endeavor" means in the name of our society.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, February 4. TEXT: John 15: 1-8.

False Security of the Wicked*

THE secret of the bravado of the wicked in this world lies probably in their frequent prosperity. They sometimes flourish "as the green bay tree," and up to their death are apparently undisturbed in their sins. The Creator has undoubtedly prepared for such miscreants a punishment in the world to come.

But fortunately for the promotion of morality on earth, sin generally receives its compensation in this life. The drunkard has no real pleasure. His sole hope of peace is in sinking himself to that brutish condition in which he ceases to be a man, and is only a half-conscious and loathsome animal. The robber is usually haunted with such acute remorse that sleep deserts him. Within the past year the papers have told us of several such men who have voluntarily surrendered themselves up to the law rather than suffer longer the pangs of concealed guilt. Dissipation of any kind usually brings on disease, sooner or later. Often this is inherited by helpless children. "The fathers have eaten a sour grape and the children's teeth are set on edge," says Jeremiah, and this awful truth continues down all the generations.

One of the commonest delusions regarding this matter exists among men and women of genius. Some great painters, musicians, and authors have felt themselves to be superior to God's laws, and responsible only to their own souls. The so-called "great," the kings and princes, the very rich, the generals and admirals, have sometimes, indeed, too often, acted on a similar principle. "I am not a common man," said Napoleon, "and the laws which govern common men do not apply to me."

If the conspicuous characters in every community had discarded this pernicious doctrine; always been earnest Christians; had used their power as leaders to "set the pace" aright, had tried to turn the faces of men Godward, evil might even now have been greatly diminished. Let us be thankful that so many of the foremost men and women of America are setting an example to-day of purity and probity. Indeed, it is believed by many politicians that no man of tarnished character can ever again obtain an election to any high political office here; and there are signs that, though so-called "society," composed as it is largely of idle people (very busy over nothing), is still far from guiltless, the morals of our land are steadily improving. As for the so-called "leisure" people, they can scarcely be expected to do better until they are provided with some sort of regular and important work; for work is the only safety of the human race.

The rich and the highly gifted are not the only classes, alas, which dare to transcend the laws of the Highest. Each and every human being is all too apt to consider himself as an exceptional being in this respect. We invent excuses for ourselves—say to ourselves, perhaps, that we have never done this before, and that we are so good otherwise that our kind heavenly Father will surely not lay up against us such a trifling misdemeanor.

One of the best of men in most matters, a deacon and theologically very strict, was recently arrested for watering the milk which he sold. He pleaded in extenuation of his fault that his cows were highly bred and their milk was so much richer than his neighbors' that he felt obliged to water it in order to bring it down to the average. We are all too apt to treat our own shortcomings just as tenderly. Instead, we should learn to judge ourselves even more severely than others.

* Epworth League Topic for Sunday, February 4. TEXTS: Amos 2: 14-16; Gal. 6: 7, 8.

International Hover, Surest Appliance for Raising Baby Chicks

5 Years' Poultry Education FREE

This is what you get in the Rancocas Poultry Farms Book, which gives in detail five years' successful experience in poultry raising. The book is sent on approval. If you like it, remit $1.00, which will be credited to you for the purchase of $1.00 worth of Rancocas Hatching Eggs, or as part payment on Rancocas Day-old Chicks, or International Hovers, thus giving you the great book FREE. Rancocas Hatching eggs are famous for fertility. Rancocas Day-old Chicks are known everywhere for vitality. International Sanitary Hovers have revolutionized poultry raising. Send for the book at once. Don't send any money until you are satisfied with the offer.

Rancocas Poultry Farms
Box 102 J
Brown's Mills, N. J.

VIRGINIA APPLE ORCHARDS Pay Big Profits

$50 Cash and $10.00 Per Month Buys a 1-Acre APPLE ORCHARD tract in "The Beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia." Other farm and fruit lands $15.00 per acre and up. Best climate, water, neighbors, churches and markets. Send for "Southern Homeseeker" maps, rates, etc.

Address F. H. LaBaume, Agr'l Agt., Norfolk & Western Ry., Box 3092 Roanoke, Va.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 Bicycle. Write for special offer.

We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL and prepay freight on every bicycle.

FACTORY PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalogs and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer.

Tires, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, half prices.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. M 71, Chicago, Ill

To Christian Herald Readers

BOYS WANTED

No barrier, however formidable; no obstacle, however insurmountable it may seem to the timid or faint-hearted boy, can bar the way to any boy possessed with honest and earnest enthusiasm.

Lincoln was consumed with a desire for education. He walked six miles to borrow a grammar, and after returning home with the precious prize, burned one pine knot after another while he studied its problems. He did not dream of the White House in those lonesome days and nights when his enthusiasm urged him on. Who shall say it was not the early enthusiasm that made him the liberator of millions of his fellow men and the hero of every American boy?

Boys are always dreaming about genius, of what it can accomplish, and wondering why they do not have it. They do not understand, perhaps, that enthusiasm is the right hand of success, and that persistency performs miracles. They do not realize, as you do, that the great majority of men who have risen to be superintendents, managers and proprietors of great businesses, found their first opportunity at the bottom rungs of the ladder, and in their boyhood desires and pleasures.

Your boy is making his life now; let THE CHRISTIAN HERALD help.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can help your boy and others. They will surely earn good incomes if they do a little work for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week; but better than that, they will become more self-reliant and more manly.

A CHRISTIAN HERALD GIFT:

A Beautiful Picture—Free

This Picture—Called "DREAMLAND"—is Suitable for Framing

How to Get a Free Christian Herald Picture

Write the names and addresses of ten boys on a letter, pin ten cents postage to your list to cover packing and mailing, and then mail the list. That's all you have to do. Address:

The Christian Herald
Bible House - - - New York

Every Farmer Needs To Read

"HORSE SECRETS"

A Sensational Book Which Discloses all the Sharp Tricks of Horse-Trading Scalawags

READ this Partial List of "Horse Secrets"

- Secret of Shutting a Heaver
- Secret of Plugging a Roarer
- Making a Horse Act Mean
- Blowing Air Under the Skin
- Stopping a Switcher
- Turpentine and Gasoline Tricks
- Gingering a Show Horse
- Unnerving and Cocaining
- Secret of Hiding a Spavin
- Artificial Tail Trick
- Wedging a Cribber
- Making an Artificial Star
- The Loose Shoe Trick
- Wire Marks Over Side-Bones
- Black Spots on a White Horse
- The Galloping Past Dodge
- Keeping a Horse on Edge
- The Bishoping Trick
- How Bishoping Is Done
- Secret of Hand Raising a Foal
- Secret of Feeding Silage to Horses
- Secret of Fattening Drafters
- Secret of Feeding Molasses
- Secret of Stopping Halter Pulling

If you order promptly, we will send, absolutely free, "Poor Richard Revived"—our splendid new Almanac for 1912

IN the interest of the farmer, FARM JOURNAL is conducting a campaign of extermination against the "gyp" traders and dopesters who go around the country working off "fixed" horses on the unwary.

By publishing "Horse Secrets" and distributing it broadcast throughout the country we are rapidly running these nervy rascals to cover. In two years we have put this book in the hands of 75,000 readers—seven editions have been necessary to meet the tremendous demand for it. We expect to keep up the good work until we've put the last one of these bare-faced cheats out of business.

"Horse Secrets"

At Once, Postpaid, and

Farm Journal

For Four Years

Both for One Dollar

Read "Horse Secrets" before you buy or swap another horse. It will enable you to detect any smooth trick that may be tried on you. It will absolutely protect you against the sharper's wiles and may save you many dollars. In addition, it gives a number of the most successful remedies known for the cure of vices and diseases of horses. Also much vital information as to raising, feeding and conditioning. Whether you own one horse or many, you need the protection and advice which "Horse Secrets" affords.

Some of the secrets contained in this book are listed on this page. There are many others—a goodly percentage of which are exposed in this book for the first time. As far as we know, there is no other such collection of Horse Trading, Buying, Training and Feeding Secrets in existence.

And we positively know that there is no other farm paper so practical in its treatment of all branches of farming as FARM JOURNAL—so valuable for its money-making and money-saving suggestions—so intensely interesting and immensely helpful to farmers and their families—so free from all nasty and unreliable advertisements. It has nearly 50% more subscribers than any other farm paper published. It has been the welcome monthly visitor in thousands of rural homes for 35 years and will be the best loved paper in your home.

Mail the coupon with a dollar to-day and we will immediately send you "Horse Secrets" and put you down for a four years' subscription to FARM JOURNAL. That dollar will work its head off for you!

FARM JOURNAL, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia, Pa.

READ this Partial List of "Horse Secrets"

- Secret of Handling a Balky Horse
- Secret of Curing a Stall Kicker
- Stopping Pawing In Stall
- Preventing Casting in Stall
- Curing a Knee-knocker
- Stopping Tongue Lolling
- The Winter Board Trick
- Tricks in Measuring Horses
- The Twitch and Cording Trick
- The Secret Formula Swindle
- A Magic Cure for Cramps
- Color Secrets
- Palming Off a Grade Stallion
- Secrets of Stallion Pedigrees
- Remedies for Tail Rubbing
- An Astringent for Scours
- Secret of Drenching a Horse
- Facts About Pigment Tumors
- Auction Sale Rules
- A Little Ill to Distract Attention from a Big One
- The Recent Wound Trick
- Secret of Detecting a Dummy
- The Break Away Trick
- Secrets of the Auction Ring

FARM JOURNAL
184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed is my dollar, for which send me your book, "Horse Secrets," postpaid—and put my name and address on your paid-in-advance subscription list to get FARM JOURNAL for 4 years.

Name_____

Postoffice_____

R. F. D._____

State_____

If in time, send Almanac

You Can Weigh Exactly what You Should Weigh

You can be Strong—Vigorous— full of life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can have a Clear Skin.

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 49,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

NO DRUGS NO MEDICINES

My results simply comply with Nature's laws.

What My Pupils say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion; it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 216 pounds, this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong; no rheumatism, or sluggish liver, and I can breathe now. It is surprising how easily I did it, I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 16 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses, and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly, and contains other information of vital interest to women. Every woman is welcome to it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I'd like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Miss Cocroft is the best authority in America upon the regaining of woman's health and figure thro Natural, Scientific means.

THIS IS NO ORDINARY FLAVOR

But something very different — very distinctive, so much so that we have called it

MAPLEINE

(The Flavor de Luxe)

To distinguish it from all other flavors.

It contains no maple sugar nor sap, yet some pronounce it similar to maple while others think it is better.

Try it for yourself—you be the judge. Use it in place of lemon or vanilla for custards, ices, icings and fillings for cakes, candies, puddings, and above all for flavoring white sugar syrup.

Grocers sell Mapleine 35c for 2-oz. bottle (Canada 50c). If yours does not, write Dept. F

Crescent Mfg. Co.

Seattle, Washington

Jesus, the King Over All*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IT IS now a custom when a king-child is born to announce the birth with great pomp and ceremony. Bells are rung and high potentates assemble, and the king appears in their midst with his heir, the heir to the throne, lifted high in his hand. But Jesus Christ is the only newborn King ever announced from the high court of heaven, and for none other has a new star ever been set in the firmament. There appeared men to do him homage; first the shepherds with their tribute of praise, afterward the wise men from the far-away East with gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh; and later, principalities and powers, even hell itself, acknowledged his kingship, using King Herod as emissary, in the effort made to destroy him, when the edict went forth that all the babes in Bethlehem should be slain, of two years old and under. We have visited the litle chapel devoted to the memory of those innocents, which is connected with the Church of the Nativity; there our tenderest thoughts went out for those tiny first martyrs for Christ.

The Visit of the Magi

Not the least marvelous part of the advent of the Christ King was the visit of the wise men from afar, so very far that it was not less than twelve hundred miles in direct line from Persia to Jerusalem, across the Arabian Desert. It is probable that the wise men went a longer, round-about way to avoid the desert, and they went by slow camel train, so that their journey might easily have taken them the larger part of the year. Those wise men, not being Jews, and yet starting out to find him who was born King of the Jews, have been the marvel of the ages. How did they know about the expected birth of such a King? and how did they know about the new star which should appear at his birth? Their knowledge had two sources:

1. They had learned from their master-teacher, Zoroaster, about the coming of the Messiah. There is a legend that Zoroaster, beside the fountain of water called Glosha of Horin, predicted to his disciples the birth of Christ and the appearance of the star.† It is claimed that in a seven days' trance the whole future of religion was granted to Zoroaster. The Persians were so learned in the appearance of the heavenly bodies that "a new star" would be immediately recognized by them.

2. The second source of the knowledge of the wise Persians concerning him who should be born King of the Jews was probably from the Jews themselves, even from the prophet Elijah through one of his disciples, who informed the Persians of the sign of the birth of Christ, and that they should bring him gifts. (Quoted from Gottheil by Professor A. V. Williams Jackson in Zoroaster, the Prophet of Ancient Iran, pp. 98 and 201.)

The King of Kings

It really matters very little what was the source of their knowledge. The fact is, they had the true conviction, and loyally pursued it until it brought them to their desired end.

The newborn earth-king soon has his day, and it is only one day, or two at best, in the sight of the Infinite; but for nearly two thousand years the birth of Christ has been celebrated, and with ever increasing joy. His nineteen hundred and eleventh birthday celebration, just passed, has been the most widely observed, and the gladdest, of all. This worldwide holiday has a momentum which insures its still further increase from sea to sea, and to the uttermost parts of earth.

Let us hear the testimony of some of the great people of the earth who have spoken concerning the Christ King. At the coronation of the young Queen Victoria of England the oratorio, "The Messiah," was sung by a chorus of trained singers. When the "Hallelujah Chorus" was reached, and its climax burst forth in "King of kings and Lord of lords," the young queen arose, and meekly bowed her crowned head in recognition of Him "whose right it is to reign." And this she did in defiance of court etiquette, which required that she should remain seated.

Charles Lamb said: "We uncover to Shakespeare, but we kneel to Christ." Jean Paul said: "The Nazarene hath lifted the gates of empire off their hinges, and turned the streams of the centuries out of their channels." Carlyle's tribute was: "He walked in Judea eighteen hundred years ago, but his sphere-melody, flowing in mild and native tones, and being of a truth sphere-melody, still flows in sounds in all our hearts, modulating and divinely leading them." Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, making these quotations, added: "Looking backward we see the centuries sloping up towards Bethlehem's hill, and all the streams of civilization flow therefrom. Looking forward, all men wise and strong feel that the hope of society's progress is in this; that at last men will translate his spirit, teachings and example into all activities of the home, the market and the exchange." But none of these things will any of us do until we seek and find him whom the wise men sought and found.

The Hall of Christ

There is at the New York Chautauqua a unique building called "The Hall of Christ." The idea of having it originated with Bishop John H. Vincent, who says of it: "The hall is a symbol, a representation of home and church circles scattered all over the land, devoted to the same work, the study of Christ. It is again a place of worship of the Christ—a service of silence, of sacred song, of reading, of prayer and meditation, a place for reverent, honest and fervent study of Christ as a personal Saviour." The hall was built through the gifts of hundreds of people to whom the idea appealed. It is mainly constructed of white Roman brick and white terra cotta. The stained glass windows present in chronological order events in the life of Christ. Inside, large drawers are made to contain photographs, engravings and other pictures of Christ, and there are books on shelves about Christ, all easily accessible to those making a study of them. There is a large audience room where lectures can be given. There is a beautiful sentiment about the Hall of Christ, because it seems to embody the idea of the personal touch. It suggests how, by feeding upon Christ, we may make our own lives white and beautiful like his.

The Hall of Christ is white and glistening in appearance, and this is suggestive of the purity of Christ, and as we consider it, we can but wish that we might have purity in our lives.

But there are some people who have missed the mark by trying to copy the outward appearance of Christ. One evening at a Gospel meeting where two hundred or more were present, a man came in alone, and walked the length of the hall, taking his seat in the front row. He was dressed all in white, his

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for February 4, 1912. The Wise Men Led by the Star. Matt. 2. GOLDEN TEXT: "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else. Isa. 45:22.

† See Gottheil, References to Zoroaster, p. 29.

Sixty-four Years!

Every packet of Henderson's seeds that is sold has behind it the experience of 64 years of successful seed growing and selling. The methods of seed testing and trials that were the best three generations ago, have been improved and bettered by us from year to year and are, to-day still the best. The initial cost of the seeds is really the smallest cost of your garden and it pays to be sure you have started right. Henderson's are Tested Seeds.

Special Offer

Our 1912 catalogue Everything for the Garden, a book of 204 pages, over 800 illustrations, color plates, etc., will be mailed on receipt of 10 cents. In addition we will send our Garden Guide and Record and our collection of 6 Henderson's Specialties, in a coupon envelope which will be accepted as 25 cents on any order of one dollar or over.

Peter Henderson & Co.
35-37 Cortlandt Street
New York

15 95 AND UP-WARD AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. The bowl is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1194 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

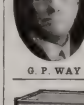
100% to AGENTS

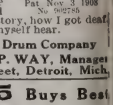
Built expressly for the housewife. The tool for every purpose around the home. Low price makes it sell like wild-fire. An agent should sell a dozen with about three hours' work a day, making a good, steady income. If you mean business, write for terms and free sample.

THOMAS TOOL CO., 924 Barny St., DAYTON, O.

I Was Deaf 25 Years NOW I HEAR WHISPERS



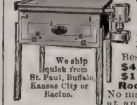
G. P. WAY



Medicated Ear Drum
Pat. Nov. 3 1908
No. 905705

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.

Artificial Ear Drum Company
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.



$7.55 Buys Best 140-Egg Incubator

Double cases all over; best copper tank; nursery, self-regulating. Best 140-chick hot-water brooder $4.85. Both ordered together $11.50. Freight prepaid (E. of Rockies). No machines at any price are better. Satisfaction guaranteed. Write for book today or send price now and save time.

Bello City Incubator Company, Box 127 Racine, Wisconsin

EARN MONEY IN SPARE TIME

The National Dress Goods Co., New York, needs a competent responsible woman to represent them in each locality. Pleasant, permanent work. Free outfit, good pay. Write today for full particulars. National Dress Goods Company. Dept. 7, No. 260 West Broadway, New York.

For Developing and Printing You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

SURPRISED DOCTOR
Illustrating the Effect of Food.

The remarkable adaptability of Grape-Nuts food to stomachs so disordered that they will reject everything else, is illustrated by the case of a woman in Racine, Wis.

"Two years ago," she says, "I was attacked by a stomach trouble so serious that for a long time I could not take much of any sort of food. Even the various kinds perscribed by the doctor produced most acute pain.

"We then got some Grape-Nuts food, and you can imagine my surprise and delight when I found that I could eat it with a relish and without the slightest distress.

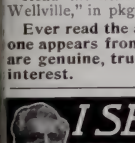
"When the doctor heard of it he told me to take several small portions each day, because he feared I would grow tired of it as I had of all other food.

"But to his surprise, (and that of everybody else), I did not tire of Grape-Nuts, and became better day by day, till, after some weeks, my stomach entirely recovered and I was able to eat anything my appetite craved.

"My nerves, which had become so weakened that I feared I would become insane, were also restored by the Grape-Nuts food in connection with Postum which has become our table beverage. I appreciate most gratefully and thankfully the good that your food preparations have done me and shall be glad to answer any letters inquiring as to my experience." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.



I SELL TREES & SEEDS THAT GROW

I want you to send for my 1912 Catalogue—just issued. Every page—108 of them—filled with special offers in price and quality. Be sure to get my free

Nursery and Seed Book

10c Offer!
1 5c pkt. mixed colors Petunias
1 10c pkt. extra fine mixed pansies
1 10c pkt. giant single pinks.
1 5c pkt. finest mixed poppies.
30 cents worth for 10 cents postpaid

written with my 26 years experience—for buying Vegetable, Flower, Grass and Farm Seed, Upland grown Alfalfa, Clover and Field Grass Seed, Seed Potatoes, Corn and Grains, Fruit and Forest Trees, Small Fruits and Flowering shrubs. Freight paid on $10 tree orders. All Seeds Nebraska Standard. None better.

German Nurseries and Seed House
Box 37, Beatrice, Nebr.
CARL SONDEREGGER, Preasident

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

Points that never disappoint. 12 samples and 2 good penholders for 10 cents.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
349 Broadway, N.Y.

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make of Typewriter. Our Factory Rebuilt Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branch stores in principal cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

On all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Soldiers Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches as machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. 1937 Broadway Dept 8 New York

AGENTS WANTED
QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

AGENTS Make $30 per Wk. This AWL

sews a lock stitch like a machine. Best thing ever made for repairing Harness, Shoes, etc. A dozen exclusive features. Demand is immense. Sales astounding. Roy Sage writes "Rec'd Awl today sold 5 in 15 min." A. Perrino says "Sold 9 on my home with sample." Lowest price, biggest profit, greatest value, quick sales. Drop everything and write for sample and instructions.

ANCHOR MFG. CO. Dept. 834 DAYTON, O.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth
Send 8 cent stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.
E. G. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 30 Washington, D. C.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

clothes being of a peculiar type. His hair was long and light in color, parted in the middle, and caught behind his ears. His face had the appearance of being modeled after the typical Christ pictures. The imitation of Christ was in his every attitude and movement. The apparition was startling; then came indignation that any one should have so presumed as to make himself up in that style, that he might make it seem that Christ had come again and taken his place among men. He of course attracted general attention, but said nothing, and finally at the close of the meeting passed out alone. The real imitator of Christ will think not of looks, but of words and deeds in helping others. How does Jesus help others?

He is a path if any be misled:
He is a robe if any naked be;
If any chance to hunger, he is bread;
If any be a bondman he is free;

If any be but weak, how strong is he!
To dead men life he is, to sick men health;
To blind men sight, and to the needy, wealth;
A pleasure without loss, a treasure without stealth. FLETCHER.

In our small way let us carry his Gospel of help, and find our greatest happiness in living service to our King.

Teaching the Lesson to Children

Let the lesson be introduced by having the children sing two, or even three, of the beautiful songs they learned at Christmas time. Let the teacher then pin to the blackboard a star cut out of gilt paper, and then sing herself, or repeat very slowly and tenderly, the following lines:

The star shone brightly overhead,
The air was calm and still,
O'er Bethlehem's fields its rays were shed,
The dew lay on the hill;
We see no throne, no palace fair.
Where is the King? Oh, where? Oh, where?

Let the teacher then fasten under the star a crown cut out of gilt paper, and sing:

An old man knelt at a manger low,
A babe lay in a stall;
The starlight played on the infant brow,
Deep silence lay over all;
A maiden bent o'er the babe in prayer.
There is the King! Oh, there! Oh, there!
Oh, there is the King! Oh, there!

Jesus is our King, and we ought to love and serve him as long as we shall live. Let us tell him so:

We fold our hands that we may be
From all our play and work set free.
We close our eyes that we may see
Nothing to take our thoughts from thee.
Into our hearts we pray thee come,
And may they each become thy home.
Cast out the sin and make them free,
More like the Christ child may we be.
Then open our eyes thy light to see,
Lift up our heads to praise thee still,
Open our hands to do thy will.

After the prayer, let the story of the coming of the wise men to find Jesus be told them.

Answered Prayers

E. M. P., Dwight, Ill. "My prayers have been answered many times, for which I thank God with my whole heart."

Mrs. M. R., Lynn Haven, Va. "God answered prayer, which gave me great joy. Thanks be to him."

Mrs. R. D. H., Baldwyn, Miss. "God in his goodness has heard and answered my earnest prayer many times, for which I praise his holy name."

B. W. C., Troy, N. Y. "I want to say that God answered one of my prayers, giving me what was most desired."

Mrs. E. M. P., Blue Lake, Calif. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering prayer."

Mrs. M. S., Port Republic, Va. "The Lord has been good to me and answered my prayers in sickness and trouble."

F. M. S., Hagaman, N. Y. "I prayed to the Lord to restore me to health. My health has improved wonderfully."

Fine Tonic for Blue Days

The Christian Herald Almanac received. It is the very best of the kind we have ever had, and the premium, Samantha, is fine. We all enjoy it; it is a fine tonic for blue days. May the year 1912 be one of prosperity to you.
Muncy, Pa. MRS. D. W. BUFFINGTON.

The Sheerest Hose for Dress Wear—
Guaranteed

It is easy enough to guarantee hose that are cumbersome, coarse and hot. The wear in "Holeproof" is in its yarn, not its weight. The light weights will wear just as long as the heavy. The reason is that we use cotton yarn costing an average of 70c a pound. We could buy common yarn at 30c a pound. But our yarn is 3-ply Egyptian and Sea Island cotton—the softest, most flexible, lightest weight, yet the strongest yarn that's sold. That's why the hose can be made light and strong. That's why 95 per cent of our output has always outlasted our guarantee, including these light weights.

A Million Wearers

A million people know "Holeproof." The fact that so many have been convinced should bring more or less conviction to you. If a million have tried them and swear by them now, don't you think you may do the same if you try them?

Carl Freschl

The signature above identifies the genuine "Holeproof," and you want to identify it for it is the original guaranteed hosiery, and there are scores of the heavier kinds.

FAMOUS
Holeproof Hosiery
FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Thirty-nine years of experience go into every pair of "Holeproof."

We spend $55,000 a year for inspection—to see that each pair is perfectly made. You never will get a pair that's defective.

Prices range from $1.50 for six pairs, guaranteed six months, up to $3.00, according to the finish and weight. Silk hose for men, three pairs guaranteed three months, $2.00—for women, $2.00.

The genuine is sold in your town. We'll tell you the dealers' names on request or ship direct where there's no dealer near, charges prepaid on receipt of remittance.

Write for free book, "How to Make Your Feet Happy."

Reg. U. S. Pat. Office, 1906 Carl Freschl

Holeproof Hosiery Co., 978 Fourth St., Milwaukee, Wis.
Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Ltd., London, Can., Distributors for Canada
Tampico News Co., S. A., City of Mexico, Agents for Mexican Republic (275)

Are Your Hose Insured?

A ROUGH SKIN

depends upon an improperly working stomach. Gas, fermentation, acids, are neutralized for Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), which regulate digestion and so insure a rosy, clear complexion and a smooth, flawless skin. For once only, a full size 25 cent box will be sent for 10 cents in stamps, enough to prove these claims beyond the shadow of a doubt. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

FOR A FINE LAWN

MICHELL'S GRASS SEEDS
READY FOR MOWING 4 TO 5 WEEKS FROM SOWING

sow Michell's Grass Seeds which have proved their superiority from the White House Grounds to the recent Exposition Grounds at Portland, Oregon, and in public parks and thousands of country estates.

For One Dollar we will mail, prepaid, our Fifth-of-a-bushel Introductory Package of Evergreen Lawn Seed (enough for the average lawn), our helpful Bulletin, "How to Make a Lawn," and complete 64-page catalog on Lawn, flower and vegetable seeds; and implements.

HENRY MICHELL CO.,
516 Market Street, - - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

Monarch Light Touch
TYPEWRITERS
$3. rental for one month
$15. rental for six months
Sold on EASY PAYMENT plan
Send for Literature and address of nearest office
Executive Offices: 300 Broadway, New York

POST CARDS

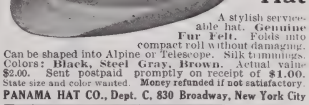
10 Valentine - - - 10c
10 St. Patrick's Day - 10c
10 General Subjects - 10c
10 Washington's Birthday 10c
10 Birthday - - - - - 10c
10 Greetings - - - - - 10c

Three 10 cent packages mailed for 25c. One package of each of above (60 high grade cards) mailed for 50 cents; 100 for 80 cents. We mail a special assortment of any of the above subjects for 80 cents per 100.
MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

$1 English Knock-about Hat

A stylish serviceable hat. Genuine Fur Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Can be shaped into Alpine or Telescope. Silk trimmings. Colors: Black, Steel Gray, Brown. Actual value $2.00. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1.00. State size and color wanted. Money refunded if not satisfactory.
PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS



BY ONE MAN with the FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. It saws down trees. Folds like a pocket-knife. Saws any kind of timber on any kind of ground. One man can saw more timber with it than 2 men in any other way, and do it easier. Send for FREE illustrated catalog No. 46 showing Low Price and testimonials from thousands. First order gets agency.
FOLDING SAWING MACHINE CO.
157-163 West Harrison St. Chicago, Illinois

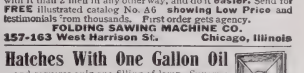
Hatches With One Gallon Oil

—and requires only one filling of lamp. Superior to old style machines. Thermometer always in sight. Eggs turn without removing. Regulated automatically. Guaranteed to please.

X-RAY INCUBATOR

—cheapest incubator ever invented. No smoke, smell—easiest to operate. Write for Free Book No. 78.

THE X-RAY
X-Ray Incubator Co.
Wayne, - - - Neb.
Freight Prepaid



ORNAMENTAL IRON FENCE
Strong, durable and cheaper than wood. Hundreds of patterns for lawns, churches, cemeteries, public grounds, etc. Write for free catalogue and special offer.
WARD FENCE CO., Box 904, DECATUR, IND.

The Night Raider

LOOK FOR THIS

W. K. Kellogg

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JANUARY 31, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 5. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The Opalescent River

By George Gardner Symons

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

U. C., Topeka, Kan. Please explain what was the sin of Saul, as mentioned in I. Sam. 13: 13, 14. If it was offering a sacrifice, why was that a sin for Saul any more than for Samuel, who did the same thing, though not a son of Aaron?

Saul's chief sin was disobedience. Samuel, the recognized representative of God in the nation, had commanded him to wait till he arrived in Gilgal, saying he would come in seven days. Saul did not wait till the end of the seventh day, thereby showing an impatient and disobedient spirit. God demands that men obey him implicitly. "To obey is better than sacrifice," Samuel said to Saul on another occasion of his disobedience. Probably, also, Saul had no right to conduct the ritual of sacrifice. As to Samuel's doing so, he may simply have ordered it done, directing Eleazar the priest to conduct the ceremony; or his office of prophet may have given him the authority to act also as priest. Furthermore, though not a descendant of Aaron, he belonged to the priestly tribe of Levi.

J. L. J., Sterlingville, Alberta. Please point out the harmony between Matt. 27: 7 and Acts 1: 18.

A very fair inference is that the word "purchased," in the verse in Acts, means that Judas had taken the first steps in the bargain. This may account for the decision of the priests to go ahead and complete the transaction and buy the field outright.

Mrs. C. B. C., Granville, Mass. Please explain (1) Eph. 6: 12, (2) Matt. 5: 5.

(1) This verse is a recognition of the existence and power of evil spirits. There are kingdoms of evil, ruled by wicked beings, which are fighting the powers of good. Against these powers the Christian, protected by the armor of God, is called to fight. The expression "in high places," or as translated in the margin, "heavenly places," may mean that even in the highest Christian experiences we are subject to temptation, which is of course the case, or that we must contend with the evil spirits for the possession of these high places in the spiritual world. (2) "The earth" or "the land" here probably has a spiritual meaning. Spiritual attainment is often compared to the acquirement and possession of land. Thus the conquest of Canaan by the children of Israel is sometimes used to illustrate the conquest of spiritual possessions by the Christian. Compare Heb. 3: 7—4: 11.

Friend, Jordan, Mont. Why is it that the Lord seems so much nearer and dearer at times than others, even when there is no sense of having wandered away from him? Are some Christians so perfect that they enjoy these supremely happy moments continually, or is such continual blessedness reserved only for heaven itself?

Even perfect Christians are sometimes "in heaviness through manifold temptations" or trials. The human brain is such a delicate organ, and the human body so imperfect that many times the things we are surest about become obscure; in sleep, for instance, or in extreme fatigue, or suffering, or even nervousness. Our chief concern must be to keep free from sin. We may be cleansed and kept clean by the blood of Christ; and while we are trusting him for cleansing, we shall be, under normal conditions, conscious of his presence.

W. H. H., Ambler, Pa. Please explain Ps. 90: 3.

This verse is a poetic statement of the natural process whereby God brings about the return of all physical life to dust (See Gen. 3: 19, last clause).

W. G., Lodi, Wis. Is it possible that the body of a person erroneously pronounced dead and being embalmed in the usual manner could revive again?

It is absolutely impossible. Furthermore, before the work of embalming is begun, a number of tests are made to establish positively the fact of death.

Mrs. P., Washington Court House, O. Please explain Heb. 6: 4-6.

It means that those who have once received in their hearts the knowledge of the word of truth, and have experienced the enlightenment of divine grace and blessing and a sense of forgiveness and acceptance, yet who have not enjoyed all the fulness of Christ or entered into the appropriation of his promises—when such fall away, it is in the nature of a wilful apostasy. They knew the truth and had the light, and yet, instead of going on to perfection and crucifying the world through the cross (see Gal. 6: 14), they crucified Christ anew. The Hebrews, who were addressed, had not yet so fallen away; but the writer warns them of what would be the ultimate result of deliberate retrogression. They would be sinning against light and putting Christ to open shame. He does not refer to the "elect," but to those who having begun the Christian life had not progressed sufficiently to make their calling and election sure.

P. A. G., Kenna, N. M. When was the Sabbath changed from the seventh to the first day of the week?

The New Testament indicates that the Jewish Christians held both days holy. Paul evidently preached in the synagogues on the Sabbath, but it was on the first day of the week that the Gentile Christians met to break bread (Acts 20: 7). This second sacred day was called the Lord's Day to distinguish it from the Sabbath, and was probably the only one observed by the Gentile converts. There is a hint of their being called to account for observing that day only, in Col. 2: 16, where Paul bids them pay no heed to their critics. The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, written certainly before the year 100 A.D., speaks of the Lord's Day and refers to it as a day of holy meeting and the breaking of bread (chapter 14). The primitive Christians everywhere kept it so solemnly. Pliny, the historian, refers to this fact in his letter to Trajan about A.D. 100. Justin Martyr (A.D. 140) describes the religious worship of the early Christians, their sacramental observances, etc., on the "First Day." Other early writers who make clear and unmistakable reference to the Lord's Day are Dionysius of Corinth, Irenæus of Lyons (who asserted that the Sabbath was abolished), Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Commodian, Victorinus, and lastly Peter of Alexandria (A.D. 300), who says: "We keep the Lord's Day as a day of joy because of him who rose thereon." These evidences cover the first two centuries after our Lord's death and indicate that the Lord's Day is an institution of apostolic sanction and custom. All grounds of doubt are swept away by the fact that Constantine in an edict issued in A.D. 321 honored that day by recognizing it as one sacred to the Christians, and ordered that business should be intermitted thereon. Finally, the Council of Nicæa (A.D. 325) in its official proceedings gave directions concerning the forms of Christian worship on that day, and the Council of Laodicea (A.D. 364) enjoined rest on the Lord's Day. Thus by apostolic usage, by law and custom, by imperial edict and by the highest councils of the early Christian Church the change has been accepted and approved.

G. A. P., Crab Orchard, Ky. Was the story of the rich man and Lazarus a parable or an actual fact?

It was a parable—an illustration of the kind made familiar in the teachings of Christ. It is the only parable in which a proper name is employed, and Lazarus was probably chosen because it was a common name. By some both men in the parable have been considered as real personages, and one tradition even gives the name of the rich man as Dobruk, while another gives it as Nimeusis. Neither tradition is deserving of credit, and the best commentators agree that the two characters were described by the Saviour simply to illustrate two types of men.

Reader, Milwaukee, Wis. What was the aggregate of the gifts made last year for benevolent and religious purposes?

Approximately $40,000,000 for home missions, $11,000,000 for foreign missions, $32,000,000 for education. In all over $250,000,000 were given for philanthropies of various kinds. Carnegie was the largest individual donor, his gifts aggregating $43,000,000. The greater proportion of all gifts to religion came from the rank and file. The Catholic gifts for philanthropy and education totaled $13,000,000.

New Model Tenements to Fight the White Plague in New York

THREE years ago Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr., decided that the white plague could be scotched by building sanitary homes for the poor. She selected a site on the East River, New York, taking in most of the block between East Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth Streets, and gave orders to an architect to prepare plans for such a home as she had in mind. With ample means Mrs. Vanderbilt was able to say, "Spare no expense; make the buildings absolutely fireproof and a model for the world." The result is a structure that is beyond criticism from a hygienic or any other point of view. Within a short distance from the river, the view from the roof or from any of the windows on the river side is a comfort to eyes accustomed to the squalor of New York's East Side. Access to this roof is easy for any of the tenants, for staircases adjoin every suite of rooms, leading to the roof, and affording easy escape in case of fire. The staircases make each apartment a unit, which communicates with others through the open air. This entirely eliminates the dark, ill-ventilated, disease-breeding interior hall and staircase of the ordinary city tenement. The open staircases are protected from rain and snow by glass louvres, projecting from each story. The rooms are provided with an up-to-date range for cooking, and the bath-rooms are provided with the very latest-style plumbing, with porcelain tubs and nickel-plated fittings. The rooms rent for from $1.25 to $2 a week per room, so that a small family, small enough to live comfortably in a three-room-and-a-bath suite, would pay $3.75 a week. A restaurant is to be opened at which food will be sold at cost. The roof is a sun-parlor and fresh-air garden combined.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under this notice, a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose subscriptions expire at any time during the month. If your copy has this subscription blank attached, please use it to renew at once. If you sent renewal within the last two or three weeks, pay no attention to the blank.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our new premium books, Women of the Bible, $2; Samantha at Coney Island, $2; or The Pilgrim Ship, $1.85, with your subscription, or a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3.

Send money by postal or express money orders.

Miscellaneous

McG. We know nothing about the pastor in question further than what appears in the daily newspapers.

H. R. H., Woonsocket, R. I., apropos of a recent note in THE MAIL-BAG, on "hoping against hope," calls attention to the passage in Rom. 4: 18, "in which (he writes) the phrase finds an almost exact Scriptural counterpart."

E. L. S., West Newton, Pa. The passage in Luke 18: 32, 33 was absolutely fulfilled. The Jews arraigned Jesus before Pilate, the Roman governor, and he was delivered over to the Roman soldiers and taken by them to Calvary. It was Roman soldiers who carried out Pilate's sentence by crucifying Christ. Roman soldiers who parted his garments among them, who kept guard by the cross and who pierced his side, and they did not leave until their duty was fully accomplished. (See Matt. 27: 27 and 54; Luke 23: 47 and rest of the chapter; John 19: 23, 32, 33, 34.)

Harriet L. Cahoon, Swampscott, Mass., writes: "In THE MAIL-BAG recently the question was asked, where the words 'the round world' are to be found in the Psalms. I should like to call attention to the fact that the Prayer Book version of the Psalms (which is an older translation than the Authorized Version) quotes these words in several passages. Three I give as follows: Psalm 93: 2: 'He hath made the round world so sure that it cannot be moved.' Psalm 96: 10: 'Tell it out among the heathen, that the Lord is king; and that it is he who hath made the round world so fast that it cannot be moved; and how that he shall judge the people righteously.' Psalm 98: 7: 'Let the sea make a noise, and all that therein is; the round world and they that dwell therein.'"

P. H. C., Evansville, Wis., writes: "I note that in answer to a correspondent in your issue of January 3, you say that 'the ten commandments are rarely taught to children nowadays.' Possibly this is true of the Evangelical Sunday Schools, but not of the communion to which I belong. One of the prayer book requirements for confirmation is: "That none shall be confirmed, but such as can say the creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the ten commandments.' Their teaching, therefore, becomes obligatory in every Episcopal Sunday School. It is safe to say that out of the 55,000 or more confirmed annually, not one would fail in their repetition. Also, our clergy are required to repeat the entire Decalogue, the people saying after each commandment, 'Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law,' once on every Sunday or Holy Day when they celebrate the Lord's Supper."

NEW YORK, JANUARY 31, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

HEROES OF THE LIFEBOAT

Quiet Days Along the Coast, Inside a Life-Saving Station

The Cape Henry Lighthouse and Wireless Station

"'Stand by to man the breeches buoy!' Waist deep in the winter sea"

ALMOST one solid month of storm and penetrating cold! Almost a solid month of continuous watchfulness and heroic duty for those sturdy fellows who patrol our coasts, the life-savers and the revenue cutter men. Housed snug beside the fire, safe from the gale that whistles in the eaves, it's hard to realize that such a winter as this brings no "piping times o' peace" for those who stand at the very door of the perils of the sea to save what they may of human life and property. Of the army and the navy unending tales are told in a thousand papers and magazines, but of the stalwart corps that braves the lonely dangers of our coast we hear little or nothing. Yet an army of over 10,000 men stands watch, and watch about to tend the lights and buoys or hasten succor to those who go down to the sea in ships. To-night through the winter starlight or the driving storms the beacons flash their warnings from the rocks and shoals and ruddy lights gleam in little gale-swept stations on the sand where the surges pound and pound and pound—little stations where the rocket-gun and motor boat there sit quiet men watching and waiting for the flare of the rocket, or the helpless shout that tells their patrols of a ship in danger on the shore.

Then comes the call for brain and brawn and bravery greater than ever sighted a turret gun or faced a bullet. Out with the boat, into the surf and over the bar! Out with the gun and the rocket to send her a line! Stand by to man the breeches buoy! Waist deep in the winter sea, what matter if the wind drives sand and snow and spume till it raws the face and hands are numb with the biting cold? There's life aboard that ship; and here are men for you.

When summer's blazing sun drives a million restless feet to the sands the winter storms have washed so white, the surfman loafs in the shadow of his station and yarns to us of a hundred wrecks and his babies at home and the chap who jibed his boat and was brought in very wet and penitent from just out there in the offing, day before yesterday. Perhaps next summer he will tell us of this January, for this month the storm-swept Atlantic coast has piled up a record of havoc and wrecked ships and suffering men that rivals any of the last decade. More than fifty tempest-tossed vessels and their helpless and frostbitten crews have been aided by the revenue cutter and helped to havens of safety. The aggregate value of the salvaged ships and their cargoes runs into millions of dollars. Almost hourly Captain Commandant E. P. Bertholf received wireless appeals for help sent by the disabled ships themselves or by passing steamers. Every one of his dozen and a half cutters and tugs on the Atlantic seaboard has been on duty in response to the "S. O. S." wireless calls for help.

When the Life-Savers' Work Is Done

Yet there come the days of placid seas and long quiet hours when thoughts turn homeward and to those deep things of the soul which few men who know the sea and its vast loneliness treat lightly. Isolated and with Sunday marked only by the ending rows of figures on the calendar these men seem shut away from much that the world holds dear in its religious life. Of all the missionary endeavor of the world there seems none more peculiar unto itself than the carrying of the Gospel message to these stations of the lonely dunes and islands and rocky steeps of the sea.

The work was started a number of years ago by the Rev. R. Ashley Cake, of Port Washington, an ordained elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who entered the work entirely at his own expense, trusting implicitly for the necessary support for the years to come. For the last fifteen years Mr. Cake has been carrying on this work which was at first intended to reach only the life-savers, who comprise the only department of government service which, though entirely dependent upon itself, is without a system of chaplaincies; but during the years that the work has been in progress it has not only reached the surfmen, but lighthouse keepers, sailors, baymen and fishermen and the residents of some of these lonely coasts and islands where there is neither church nor pastor. Mr. Cake is well known in most of the life-saving stations and lighthouses from North Carolina to Massachusetts. Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut and Rhode Island have all been visited year after year in this unique work of holding services on these windswept islands and lonely coasts. It takes a big, all-embracing Gospel to reach these men; so year after year they have listened to the sacred story shorn of all denominational doctrines—just the simple fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and salvation through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Congress has never as yet made any appropriation for the salaries of chaplains for the men of the life-saving service who, odd as it may seem, are Treasury Department employees. When the superintendent of the service, Captain Commandant S. I. Kimball, was asked regarding this matter he stated that though it would be an entirely new move he would willingly lend his support to a bill asking an appropriation for this purpose. At the suggestion of Mr. Cake, Congressman J. J. Gardner, of New Jersey, drafted and submitted a bill providing for a system of chaplaincies on the same principles as have the army and navy, which is now with the Congressional Committee on Foreign and Interstate Commerce.

In the meantime the self-appointed evangelist to the life-savers goes on his undisturbed way up and down

Continued on page 106

A SERMON ON CHRIST'S EXAMPLE

By Rev. Richard W. Jungfer*

TEXT—Mark 1:35-39

CHRIST had very little immediate and apparent success in his work. It is true, the people came to him in great numbers; sometimes there were several thousands. It is true, they staid with him for days, forgetting everything in the meantime—their business, their pleasures, their troubles, and even their bodily condition. It is true, they missed him and sought him, going miles and miles until they found him. It is true, they praised him with a loud voice and sometimes the whole country was astir on his account. But apparently it went no further. When he put the people to a test they all left him save the twelve disciples. And even these did not understand him. To the very last, even on the Mount of Ascension, they believed that he would found an earthly kingdom, and each sought to gain the most prominent position therein. It was discouraging. But the Master was not discouraged. It is true, he shed tears when he saw Jerusalem, but they were not tears of discouragement. They were tears of pity for the inhabitants because they did not know the things which belonged unto their peace.

Be Not Discouraged!

Why did he not get discouraged? Our text tells us why. Before he began his day's toil he prayed for help. He did his duty. In our text he says, "Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth." He did works of kindness, for we read that he cast out devils. Many a teacher in Sunday School and in public school, many a humble worker may be having no apparent success. Do not get discouraged. Follow the example of Christ and you will have no reason to reproach yourself; and if anybody else should do so you will have a good conscience.

Jesus was a very busy man. If he did seek rest in a solitary place he was sure to be followed by his disciples as in our text, or the multitude would seek him until they found him. And he gave himself no rest. There he was, sitting on the brink of Jacob's well, tired as he could be. But when the woman came for water he immediately began to talk to her about her spiritual welfare. When she had left he sat there in deep thought, making no effort to eat. At last the disciples begged him, "Master, eat." He said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." He was tired at another time, but when he saw the mothers come with their babes, when he saw how they were rebuked by his friends he was up in a moment and at work. Jesus loved the world. He strained every effort to save it. He said of himself, "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." He worked all the time, that they should have no cloak for their sin. Although he had so much to do, yet he had time for prayer. "And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed."

Family Prayer

I have asked many families if they have worship. Some of them have answered me, "We have no time, we have too much to do." These same people spend much time in gossiping, in reading the newspaper and in other ways. My friends, begin the day with prayer. God will help you. You will do better work than otherwise. Prayer is a source of strength and inspiration. If Christ had not prayed it would have been impossible for him to accomplish his task. He found strength in prayer when he was downhearted; he found strength to resist the tempter; he found strength to go his way of suffering. There were many things to vex him, but in prayer he found peace. Ah, I wish that every one in this wide world would begin the day's work with prayer. Surely every one who asks God's blessing upon himself will not only be helped in his work, but will also be kept from doing wrong.

A family which consecrates itself to God every day will be more closely united than one which does not. It is inspiring for the children to hear their venerable father ask God's blessing upon all, to see him perform the highest office man can have, the office of a priest of the Most High. Any one who prayed before he started the day's work began it right and feels himself under the protection of God. Indeed, the most courageous and best workers have been at all times men and women of prayer.

A child noticed a hod-carrier running down the ladder. When the man reached the ground the child said: "Aren't you afraid to go way up there?" When the man shook his head the child said, "Oh, I know why; it is because you prayed to God to protect you." From Scripture we know that the angel of the Lord encampeth around them that fear him and delivereth them. Prayer is the highest privilege that man has. Think of it! We sinful mortals can come to the Almighty and holy God, the King of kings and Lord of lords, and can address him not as a subject, but as his child, saying Abba, Father.

The Power of Prayer

There are people who are ready to pay any price for the honor to be received at a royal court. Here is a higher honor, but there are so many who scorn it. Honored is the man who can pray. He is rich though he be poor. I have prayed in the homes of the godless. I have noticed tears in their eyes every time. Why did they cry? They were conscious that they were lacking something; they were translated for the time being into a nobler sphere, they felt the presence of God. Prayer is a Jacob's ladder on which you can ascend into heaven. All our great men and women, I do not mean those whom history calls great, but whom God calls so, were men and women of prayer. Prayer is the most powerful factor on earth. The superintendent of the Bethlehem Royal Hospital in London comes forward with the declaration that prayer is the best remedy for mental distresses of all sorts. When a ship in mid-ocean is in distress it sends out a wireless message for aid. This message will be received by other boats and these will immediately rush to the distressed ship to give aid. A prayer is a wireless message for aid. It will be received in heaven and aid will come. Prayer will keep all purer in deed, thoughts and words.

A chaplain in a State penitentiary noticed a sentenced murderer say grace before he ate. "Did you always pray?" he asked. "No," he said, "at home we did, but when I left home I stopped, and that was the beginning of my downfall. I have been employed in more than twenty houses, but not in one had they prayer. We started the day's work like animals. And by and by one becomes an animal. If I had continued to pray, I would not now be here awaiting the day of my execution."

Ah, beloved, pray! It is for your sake and for your children's sake. Do take time to pray. It does not take a great deal of time to pray. Christ is opposed to long prayers. The prayer he taught is very short. Elijah's prayer on Mount Carmel was only a few words, and God heard it immediately. Paul does say, "Pray without ceasing." A pious woman was asked what this meant. She said, "I understand it this way. When I arise in the morning, I pray, 'Lord, let me arise from my sin that I may arise on the last day.' When I wash myself I pray, 'Lord, cleanse me from my sins with thy precious blood.' When I sweep I pray the Lord, 'Help that the old leaven and all wickedness may be swept and purged out.' And in this way I pray without ceasing all day." A person of prayer will never get discouraged and give up. If he does feel downhearted he will know where to go to get strength.

Not Prayer Alone

But Christ did not stop at prayer; he always did his duty. It was his business to save the world. But the world could not be saved unless it believed. And how could it believe unless some one preached the message? Therefore it was his business to preach: for therefore he came forth. Every time he preached he put his whole soul into it. He pleaded with the people; he told them of the love of the Father; he told them what the kingdom of God was like; he told them what to do. His whole face was then aglow with enthusiasm and his countenance was that of an angel. The people were astonished. They all said with one accord, "He preaches with authority and with power, and not like the scribes." When the officers returned without Jesus, whom they were ordered to arrest, they said, "Never man spake like this man."

Christ, having done his duty, never allowed him self to become discouraged.

On one occasion the disciples asked him, "Lord are there few that be saved?" He answered, "Man will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Thi knowledge must have been very painful to him, bu he knew that it was not his fault, as he had don everything in his power. Many a Sunday Schoo teacher has seemingly no success; she feels like giv ing up her work. Don't do it. If you can honestl say that you have done your duty, that you stud the lesson so that you almost live in it, that you d your best when in the class—if that is the case, the you need not feel discouraged. Keep at it and leav everything to the Lord. Who knows but that th good seed will some day begin to grow? Wheat lie in the ground during the entire winter, but as soo as the warm sun of spring strikes the ground th seed begins to grow. As soon as the love of God i able to penetrate into the heart of your children th good seed which you put there will begin to grow

The Best, in God's Strength

We shall see the result in glory. Many a publi school teacher is disheartened. Try as she may sh sees no advancement, and what is worse, some of th parents complain and find fault. Teacher, if yo know and can honestly say, "I have done my best my method has stood the test," you need not fea anything. Go ahead, try to do even better, and Go will strengthen you. No matter who you are, if yo are a servant, if you work in an office, store, shop o factory, always do your best. Every one who doe so will improve every day. That will give hin pleasure; his confidence in himself will increase an he will be more agreeable in his behavior to others

Look at the difference between a child tha knows its lesson and one that knows it not. Th first child's face will be flushed; it will be impatien for school to begin; it will talk about the lesson t the other children; if called upon it wants to recit the whole lesson. If any child misses, its hand wil go up in an instant. Suddenly the bell rings. Th child looks up in surprise. "What! recess already My, how time does fly!" The other child is differ ent. Does it love school? No. Does it love th teacher? No. It complains about the lesson bein too long, the teacher being too cross, and so on What is the trouble? It is a careless child. Wor will be a pleasure, life a delight, to all who do thei duty. Look at the Master, how he spoke to thos who criticized him. Surely it will be seen that thos who do their duty will have a clear conscience and consolation which will keep them from getting dis couraged. Therefore follow the example of Christ

The Great Example

Christ did works of kindness. We read tha Christ cast out devils. It was not his mission t work miracles. He did not come on earth to hea the physical ailments, but to save souls. It was fo this reason that he forbade the people to tell an one what he had done for them. But he had a hear full of love. When he saw the suffering of the people when he saw the tears of the bereaved, when h heard their cries and appeals for help, his heart over flowed with love. Those possessed of devils were sorry set of people. They were not lunatics, a these are separately mentioned, but people with ev spirits. These unfortunate ones were sometime very fierce, so that no one passed that way. Som were dumb and blind, others were like raving mani acs tearing all fetters and chains, crying and cuttin themselves with stones. Think of it. Here is person with a devil. He is changed suddenly into well person, who sinks at the feet of his Saviou crying, "O my God!" Think of the joy of the fam ily to see him well. No wonder that the multitud arose and praised God with a loud voice.

Jesus performed such acts of kindness all th time. If the people hated him they did so withou cause. He gave them no offense. He did them onl good. He showed no partiality. He healed the cen turion's servant, as also the beggar; he called bac to life the poor widow's son, as also Jairus's daugh ter. He spoke kindly to the rich young ruler, an also to the poor sinner. He treated all alike wit great kindness. Therefore he was not discouraged he did all he could. Let us do the same. To d

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Lutheran Church, Sharpsburg, Pa.

THE ROAD OF LIFE

CHILDHOOD is but a stepping-stone
To life's maturer years;
The prelude to a symphony
That fills our eyes with tears.

The way is long, the path is rough,
And reaches to the sky;
And though full oft is heard the laugh,
For oftener 'tis a sigh!

As we press on to reach the goal,
A backward look we cast
Upon the spots to memory dear,
The joyous springtime past.

The glad reunions Christmas brings,
With loved ones at the home,
Who, scattered now, are gone from earth,
Or o'er the wide world roam.

The missing ones we ne'er forget
Till shadows flee away,
And we are with them in a land
Where night is changed to day;

Where sighs and sorrow are no more,
But songs that never cease;
Where joy eternal fills the breast;
Where turmoil ends in peace.

I. H. B. H.

Christ's Example

Continued from preceding page

good makes happy. "Blessed are the merciful," says Christ. No one will dispute this who has ever done any works of mercy. God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. True, we cannot cast out devils, but we can cast out that spirit of despondency which has taken possession of many a poor family. You will find families destitute of the necessities of life. Many a father is downhearted when he thinks of the coming winter. Winter is not the poor man's friend. There is clothing needed to keep warm; one must eat, and the rent must be paid. And there is no work and no prospect of getting work. It is the spirit of despondency which consumes his strength, which is endangering his reason, which is shortening his life. You who have means can indeed become an angel of mercy. The streets of our cities are filled at night with pleasure-seekers. Some go to the theaters, some to concerts. They pay heavily for what they get, and it is poor pleasure, at best. Ah, if these would look up despondent families and cheer them up and help them to bridge over the hard times, if they would go to the sick, to the widows and orphans, they would get genuine pleasure.

There is fun in doing good. It is said that Christ never laughed. I do not know if this is true, but I do believe that Christ was the happiest man that ever lived, because he did so much good. You will find the largest number of happy ones around Christmas. Why? Not because they expect to be surprised, but because they are working to surprise some one. To do good beautifies character. The face is the mirror of the soul. A noble man will have a noble face. "You will find Abraham Lincoln a very ugly man," was said to a lady who wished to see the President in behalf of her sentenced son. "It isn't true," she said when she returned with the pardon for her son; "I never saw a more beautiful face in my life."

There are some who do not believe in heaven. I wish these would obey me during just one morning. I would tell them of the homes of the poor. I would ask them to go there with a basket full of groceries, to send them coal and pay their rent, and then read the Twenty-third Psalm, and then have prayer. If these feel sorry for what they have done, if they do not see heaven open, I will return to them their money. I am not rich, but I am not afraid to make such a bargain. Be kind to everybody; to friends, but especially to your enemies. God loves those who do his will; they are blessed. No disappointment can dispel this blessedness. He is wise who follows the example of Christ, who begins the day with prayer, who does his best, and who is kind to all. May God help you to do these things.

A Millionaire for a Day

By EUGENE THWING

YESTERDAY a happy-go-lucky fellow, living by his wits; to-day a "millionaire" spendthrift, scattering money in the giddy, gilded resorts of the metropolis; to-morrow without a dollar again, "broke," uninteresting, forgotten. That, in a word, is one week's history of John J. McDevitt, who bubbled and sputtered into notice a week or two ago, furnished columns of gossip for the newspapers, and then subsided into oblivion.

McDevitt was clever enough to turn a lot of voters in Wayne County, Pa., against the regular party choice, a rich contractor, and got himself nominated by the direct primary to be the Democratic candidate for county treasurer. The party managers were afraid he might also be elected, so they bought him off for $2,500 cash. Suddenly the whilom reporter, kitchen hand, lecturer, patent medicine vender, and jack-of-all-trades found himself facing the crisis of his life. He didn't know it. Opportunity stood before him unrecognized.

"Whatever shall I do with $2,500?" The burden of so much money lay heavy upon his soul. It meant nothing to him except as it represented something that millionaires are supposed to have in abundance for the gratification of every whim.

"I'm going to live like a millionaire for a day, and see if I can feel like one," declared McDevitt. "And then I'm going broke. Any man who has money must be selfish. Therefore the only way to be unselfish is to be broke."

With which distorted philosophy young McDevitt pushed aside the outstretched hand of opportunity and entered upon his brief heyday of lavish living as a mock millionaire. He hired a special train of Pullman cars with fast engines to take him in lordly style to New York. That cost him $600. He hired a valet and a doctor to attend him night and day. He distributed five-dollar tips, scattered twenty-five cent cigars, and posed for many photographs. Upon his arrival in New York he engaged expensive rooms at the Waldorf-Astoria and tried to eat like a millionaire in the dining-room, but oysters on the half shell, filet of sole à la Phileas Gilbert, and the various strange garnishments did not appeal to his untrained palate, so in despair he called for scrambled eggs and coffee. By his eager companions he was conducted through the dazzling lobster palaces of the Tenderloin, taken to the theater, flashed about town in taxicabs, and finally sent back to his home city with his ambition to "go broke" realized. But he had not learned how it feels to be a millionaire; and he had squandered far more than his money.

. . .

WHAT do you think of John Jay McDevitt? What would you have had him do with the $2,500 which came to him so unexpectedly? Is he more to be pitied or to be condemned? What a help that money might have been to him if he had used it to start in business! He is a young man, with the possibility ahead of him of many years of life. What kind of life will it be? What might it be if given a strong impulse in the right direction? Suppose he had decided on a college course, or a period of technical, or literary, or scientific study? He might have made himself in a few years a civil engineer, or the editor of a great newspaper, or a physician. Suppose he had said, "I was nominated by accident for a public office which I could not fill. I will turn the joke into a serious reality. I will equip myself for the public service, and next time I will be ready."

Suppose that John Jay McDevitt, knowing by experience the pangs of hunger, the bitterness of friendlessness and of cold, and exposure, had said, "Now is my chance to hunt out my brothers who suffer want and give them a helping hand." He might have made his name a blessing instead of a byword.

The young man stood at the crossroads of life's journey. He might have chosen the way which would take him on and up to a career of dignity and usefulness. In that one day of decision his hand might have grasped the beginnings of all things worth while for the days to come. Opportunity bade him be a man and rise to influence and power. He threw it all away for a fool's holiday.

. . .

HOW does it feel to be a millionaire? Let no one covet the sensation. Expert testimony is not lacking to prove that millionaires are the poorest of the earth when they count their store of happiness. Their worries are multiplied, their discontent increased, their labors, often, are most exacting; but their peace of mind is destroyed, and their hours of happiness few and far between. John Jacob Astor the First, with all his colossal wealth, was profoundly unhappy, and when one congratulated him on the gorgeous magnificence of his palatial mansion, saying that he must be a very happy man, he exclaimed in a tone of bitterness: "Happy! Me happy!"

. . .

ONE day a millionaire! Notwithstanding his prodigal spending, John Jay McDevitt failed to gain the experience he sought. Yet, in the truest sense, every man or woman, especially every young man or woman, who has one day of health and opportunity, is potentially a millionaire in the best things earth or heaven can offer. Not one of us can ever have more than one day at a time. The whole destiny of life is centered in this one day. What we shall be must grow from what we are. What we shall do must begin in what we do now. A career must start with a single act in a single day. If that act is not accomplished the career can never be realized.

"There never was a day," said William Burleigh, "that did not bring its own opportunity for doing good that never could have been done before, and never can be again." How many millionaires of future greatness, rich with blessing for the world and honor for themselves, are standing to-day at the possible starting-point of a noble career! Some simple act, some decision, some vision, some consecration, will make this day glorious forever.

Think naught a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year,
And trifles, life.

GROWING OLD

DID you say you were growing old? Ah, no, this is just life's morning;
Lives that are hid in Christ know nothing of growing old.
What are the years you have lived to eternity still before you,
Crowning the present life with a glory yet untold?

Life is Eternity's schoolroom, where we in our understanding
Are but as little children conning our lessons o'er.
Our life is all before us, glorious, never-ending,
Filled with a joyous fulness from the Father's boundless store.

Did you say you were growing old? Nay, your heart is young with gladness,
With joy of a life well spent, and a wealth of love untold;
While before you eternity's ages, whose glory we cannot measure,
Are yours forever and ever. Say not you are growing old.

Barron, Wis. MABEL BROWN DENISON.

"Praying Andy's" Table

ONE of the most remarkable instances of the innocent suffering for the guilty was brought to light in Pennsylvania last year when Andrew Toth, a Hungarian, was released from the Pennsylvania State Prison for a crime he had not committed. He was serving a life sentence commuted from a sentence to death. Keenly alive to the injustice of his sentence, poor and friendless, deserted by the few friends he had, Andy Toth did not lose faith in God. He had been a praying man all of his life and after he was cast into prison he spent so much time in prayer that he came to be known in the prison as "Praying Andy." The prayer sent up to the throne of grace many times a day was that his innocence might be established, and when it was established he expressed no very great surprise, for he said that he had felt sure that his prayers would some day be answered.

"Praying Andy" was very skilful with his fingers, and during his long confinement in prison he spent many days of his leisure in fashioning a remarkable mosaic table consisting of seven thousand and fifty pieces of wood of different kinds. This table may well be called the table of many prayers, for as Andy Toth put each bit of wood in place he stopped for a moment, closed his eyes and offered up a fervent prayer that his innocence might be established.

"Praying Andy" was unfortunate enough to be mixed up with a labor riot at Braddock, Pa., some twenty or more years ago. A watchman connected with the steel works was killed and Andy Toth and two other Hungarians were charged with the crime. He had come to our country from a little town called Abanj, leaving behind him a wife and several children. He had worked hard and had saved enough money in the six years he had been here to almost pay off the debt on his little farm in the homeland. It was on New Year's Day that the labor riot came. It was an evil day for Andy Toth, for the events of the day brought upon him a sentence of death on the scaffold. This was finally changed to a life sentence in prison. Andy Toth's faith in God held firm through twenty long years. Then came his reward. It was the confession of the guilty that set the innocent free. Some one tried to get a bill through the Pennsylvania State Legislature allowing Andy Toth ten thousand dollars for the time he had lost in prison. It would have been slight compensation for twenty years out of his life. The bill failed to pass because it was said that it was unconstitutional. The attention of Mr. Andrew Carnegie was called to the case, and after a careful investigation of all the facts Mr. Carnegie settled a life pension on Andy Toth and sent him back to his wife and family in Hungary. The story of "Praying Andy" illustrates the fact that the prayer of faith "availeth much." M. M. M.

THE PASSING OF THE HORSE

ONE bitter evening during the last week of the National Automobile Show, which nas just closed in New York, a draft horse toiling uncertainly over the slippery asphalt of Madison Avenue lost its footing and fell sprawling to the pavement. Automobiles, honk-honking an alarm, dodged alertly around on both sides of the poor beast, and proceeded swiftly on their way. On one side of the street stood the building of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; on the other side stood Madison Square Garden, into which was pouring a constant stream of enthusiasts eager to view the latest improvements in motor trucks.

"Does it occur to you," remarked a bystander, "that the Automobile Show and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals are rival institutions? The society has worked nobly for years to protect horses from brutal drivers, from bad weather conditions, etc., but the development of the motor truck has done and will do more for the relief of the overworked beasts than all the societies in the world. It is even possible that with the further development and cheapening of the motor truck the day may come when it will be declared inhuman and unlawful to use horses for many purposes which are considered humane to-day."

A review of the exhibition did indeed indicate that such a conclusion was not overdrawn. The great hall of the Garden was stocked full of motor vehicles seemingly intended for every possible use to which a horse might be put, whether in the city or country. A large majority of these vehicles had already been ordered by the various mercantile concerns throughout the country, and were here exhibited not with an idea to prove the theory of the motor truck, but as actual specimens in use or about to be used.

There were delivery wagons of all sizes, with the names of well-known department stores already painted upon them. There were coal wagons, the bodies of which were moving up and down in the act of dumping imaginary coal. Some of them were capable of holding six tons. There were automobile fire engines, hose carts, hook and ladder, chemical engines, with the names of the prospective companies and the towns in which they were to be operated, emblazoned upon them. In front of one of them was a placard to the effect that a similar engine in Lexington, Ky., had run 15 miles to a neighboring town in 36 minutes, drawn water from a creek with a 15 foot lift, pumped it through 1,050 feet of hose for 5½ hours continuously, with the result that $100,000 worth of property was saved. On another engine it was stated that a facsimile, located in Newark, N. J., had made 26 fire calls in one day, a feat which would have been impossible with horses.

There were great tank cars showing how Standard Oil is to be transported from small town to small town. There were great trucks carrying a load of huge beams of yellow pine, so heavy that not less than six horses could possibly have moved the load. There were patrol wagons which had been ordered by the police departments of various cities.

There were trucks which were soon to be operated by various health boards. These had "sanitary bodies"; that is to say, every part of the body of the machine was made of metal welded or brazed together and without any rough surfaces, so that every part of the body could be flushed and thoroughly cleansed of all disease germs. One of these was for Cleveland, O.

A safe deposit wagon was a curious affair which looked primarily like a huge cage on wheels. It had been ordered by a trust company in Newark, N. J., and was a marked contrast to an automobile bus, a comfortable looking, well upholstered affair, which had been ordered for the use of the officers of West Point.

Among the exhibits were several automobile ambulances which were expected to get over the ground to relieve prospective sufferers in quicker time than any mere horse would take. A fascimile of one of these ambulances had already been sent to Calgary, Alberta, Canada. It was a veritable hospital on wheels. Not only did it have all of the necessary appurtenances for quickly conveying a sufferer to the hospital, but it had many other appliances for giving first aid to the injured. It was entirely enclosed, had a heating system connected with the engine, hot water for the surgeon's use, an operating table, toilet arrangements for the patient, and shock absorbers so that the patient might feel the least possible jar in being taken to a hospital.

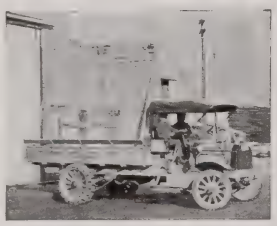
A number of the motor trucks had made records in carrying capacity and in long-distance going. One of these was covered with a "prairie schooner" top. It had traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, over hard roads and soft, through valleys and over mountains, over places where any horse might go, and over others where most horses could not. It left New York the afternoon of July 8 and reached San Francisco the morning of August 24, having covered 3,830 miles in forty-six and one-half days. The canvas "prairie schooner" top was used not only because it was light, but because it could be easily lifted off the machine and used as a tent by the operators of the motor car.

There were exhibits which indicated that the automobile is not only rapidly becoming the popular mode of transportation from small town to small town, but also that it may be of familiar use on the farm. Some of the exhibitors talked of motor plows which had been sold, particularly on the great wheat farms of the West. Perhaps it is less a feeling of human kindness for the horse than the greater economy of the motor truck that has induced many business men to abandon the use of the animal for the motor. In any event it would seem that the day of the horse is passing rapidly.

Several Boards of Education Use a Car Like This

Motor Cars Used by the Government Printing Office

A Garbage Truck Dumping on a Hillside

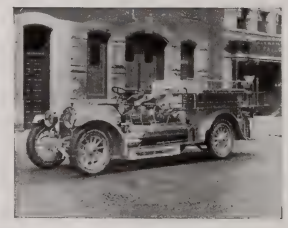


Carrying a Load of Plate Glass in a Motor Truck

Out on a Sight-Seeing Excursion

This Prairie Schooner Truck Traveled Across the Continent

A Load of Coal Going Up a Steep Hill



A Motor Fire Truck That Is Being Used in Small Towns

Shall the Government Own the Telegraphs?

SOMETHING of a sensation has arisen in official circles in Washington over the fact that Postmaster General Hitchcock has publicly pronounced in favor of government ownership of the telegraph lines of the United States and their operation as a part of the postal service. On January 15, the news was published in Washington dispatches throughout the country that the Postmaster General would embody this recommendation in an official message to be communicated to Congress. It was added that he had decided upon this course after a full year's consideration of the subject, including a study of the operation of government-controlled systems of postal telegraphs abroad. In a formal statement of his intention, Mr. Hitchcock said:

> Should this recommendation be adopted, I am convinced it would result in important economies and in very materially lower telegraph rates than now are exacted. In approximately fifty countries—notably Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, Russia and Japan—government-controlled telegraphs now are in successful and profitable operation. In many of the countries they are operated in connection with the postal service. These telegraphs serve an aggregate population of 950,000,000, and in every instance they have been found to be of immense practical benefit to the people, in both promptitude and cost of the service.
>
> In this country post offices are maintained in numerous places not reached by the telegraph systems, and the proposed consolidation, therefore, would afford a favorable opportunity for the wide extension of telegraphic facilities. In many small towns where the telegraph companies have offices the telegraph and mail business could be handled readily by the same employees. It is evident that the separate maintenance of the two services under present conditions results in a needless expense. A method for acquisition of telegraph lines is prescribed in Section 5267 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that for postal, military or other purposes the government may purchase telegraph lines, operated in the United States, at an appraised value. Because of the more extensive organization maintained by the postal service and the freedom from taxation and other charges to which private corporations are subject the government undoubtedly could afford greater facilities, at lower rates, than are offered by companies now conducting the telegraph business.
>
> Next to the introduction of a general parcels post, for which there is a strong popular demand, the establishment of a government telegraph system offers, in my judgment, the best opportunity for the profitable extension of the nation's postal service.

Mr. Hitchcock does not propose to recommend that the government should acquire the telephone lines except possibly in cases where they are operated in conjunction with telegraph lines and are integral parts of definite telegraph systems. About 100,000 persons are now connected with the telegraph companies throughout the country. A crude estimate appraises the value of the existing telegraph systems proposed to be acquired at $250,000,000, which, however, may be much below the actual value. It is claimed by those who favor the aquisition, that it will result in a reduction of one-third of the present rates to the public and yet leave a profit on the investment.

President Taft has never been regarded as an advocate of government ownership of public utilities. The Postmaster's proposition is understood to have been made on his own initiative, and not as a part of the administration's policy. How it will strike Congress cannot even be foreshadowed. Senators who were interviewed expressed surprise, as they had not even heard of the project.

Little Pu Yi, "The Son of Heaven"

China's Child Emperor and His Court to Go Into Exile. Yuan May be President

EVENTS of the greatest importance to the world are taking place in China. Although the war is not yet over and the revolutionary forces are still in sharp conflict at several points with the last remaining loyal imperial troops, it now seems to be inevitable that the republic will triumph and that the last members of the ruling dynasty will soon set their faces northward to exile. All of the Manchu princes are now reported as favoring the abdication of the throne. Premier Yuan Shi Kai has exhausted every expedient at his command to save the wreck of the dynasty. Should it depart, he will still remain the "man of the hour," to whom the distracted nation looks with hope for the restoration of peace and order. Provisional President Sun Yat Sen has intimated that if Yuan, being convinced of the nation's desire for a change, will espouse the common cause, he will be prepared to step aside in order that Yuan may become the president of the Chinese Republic.

Pu Yi, "The Son of Heaven"

According to the program, as arranged at Peking, Yuan Shi Kai and the cabinet will tender their resignations. These being formally accepted by the throne, Yuan Shi Kai will be delegated as the nominal head of the government. The next step is the formal abdication of the emperor. Of course, little Pu Yi is but a puppet in all of these arrangements. He is only seven years old and can hardly have any realizing sense of the importance of what is taking place. The court will then go to some distant retreat to live in quiet on a liberal allowance granted by the National Assembly.

Little Pu Yi, "Son of Heaven," has had a sad childhood. He was taken away from his mother while little more than an infant, and brought up by Princess Yehonala, whom he never learned to love. In the palace, he is addressed as Wan Sui Yeh ("Lord of Ten Thousand Years") by her order. His education has hardly a parallel anywhere in the world. At six every morning, the little fellow is awakened by the singing of the palace attendants, and should he cry, instead of smile or laugh, on awakening, the singers are punished with stripes. Ten court dignitaries superintend his toilet and take him to the Princess Yehonala, who completes it by putting on the imperial button, every one kneeling during this little ceremony.

Although Pu Yi is somewhat stunted in stature, owing probably to the fact that in babyhood he was not allowed to walk on the ground but was carried by attendants, he is by no means a weakling. He is fond of tricks and plays many pranks upon his attendants. He occasionally prods his guardian, Princess Yehonala, with a hatpin, and he thinks it a good joke to thrust some of his dessert down the necks of the kneeling attendants. He is fond of singing, and sometimes lies awake at night for an hour or two shouting his favorite songs. He likes toys, too, and has been known to take to bed with him a tiny train of cars, presented to him by a mandarin. He has a number of tutors who are fine scholars according to Chinese standards, but he gives very little attention either to the precepts of Confucius or the long talks on constitutional government, or the dreary language lessons they inflict upon him. He has been denied almost all the innocent pleasures of childhood and although he is nominal ruler of nearly four hundred million souls and is attended by nearly twoscore stiff and pompous Chinese nobles of high rank, whenever he walks, the poor little fellow, like all children, grieves for the companionship of little folks of his own age, and would gladly exchange all the pomp and vanity of the ancient dragon throne for a merry romp and an hour's freedom from his oppressively vigilant attendants. Even in exile, little Pu Yi will be surrounded by the same environment, his Manchu guardians hoping that some day the fortunes of the dynasty may change and that the "Lord of Ten Thousand Years" may be recalled to reign over his people—a contingency extremely remote, judging from present appearances.

Recent letters from missionaries to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD tell of the troubled conditions and widespread suffering that have resulted from the war. Miss Alice J. Whittier, whose remarkable poem appeared lately in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, writes from Shanghai, describing the retreat of the missionaries from their various posts down the river:

> A fleet of some twenty houseboats and eleven smaller boats were all herded together and guarded by two grim gunboats. There were two hundred refugees on board, the majority being Protestant missionaries. There are some missionaries still remaining behind, but they are almost entirely single men. We all think the consuls feared international interference. The British consul gave the order first to leave, and a great hum arose from the one hundred and one Canadian Methodists and twenty-nine China inland missionaries. Then came the combined order from all the consuls in Shanghai for all refugees to go down the river.
>
> The houseboats, stripped of all sails and masts and pulling ropes, and manned with rowers, look like huge water beetles with kicking legs on each side.
>
> But oh! the cry of the rowers! It breaks the heart—rising, falling, and ringing back from the cliffs like the wail of some forgotten younger world. Towards home? Yes! but we cannot yet realize it, and only think of pathetic faces of friends and servants and school children left at Kiating in fear and uncertainty; of pretty homes and personal possessions left behind; and of the great lonely land itself, that pulls at the very strings of our being.

At Ichang, Miss Whittier, with others, secured passage on the Japanese steamer Nanyang Maru, on which they made the rest of the voyage. On reaching Hankow, she writes:

> American consul not long after coming back, and he showed me a long steel bullet that he had picked up hot an hour before. It flew just over his head and flattened on a wall. They will not let us go on the upper deck, as a man was wounded there yesterday.
>
> The night after leaving Hankow, we met three gunboats stealing up river. We supposed they were the revolutionists' expected reinforcements.
>
> After leaving Hankow we saw the yellow dragon flag (of the Manchu dynasty) floating over only two cities. One was a large Manchu city, and they had shut the gates and slaughtered every Chinese soul inside! The other city is held by 20,000 imperial troops, but we passed a fleet of a dozen or more gunboats going to try to reduce it.

They reached Shanghai safely after their two thousand mile journey, and were there at last advices.

Rev. Z. Charles Beals, missionary at Wuhu, China, writes: "Blood has run like water around Hanyang and Hankow, and many terrible scenes have been witnessed in Nanking also, under the order of General Chang Hsuin. He has been chopping off the heads of any queueless student he could find. Hundreds have been slain by him. A reward of $60,000 has been offered for his capture. After the city of Nanking was surrounded by the revolutionaries he made good his escape one dark night and took the north road toward Peking.

"Trade for the last six months has been at a standstill. The native banks have done no business for a long time. The famine spreads all along the Yangtse River. Beggars beseech on every hand. Strong men, who were once honest farmers, have turned robbers. This, with the loose rule that is in vogue now, makes life for the wealthy rather uncertain. Relief work has begun to help relieve the strain. In almost all cases this relief is given to those who are able and willing to work repairing the breaks in the high dikes.

"To-day I received two letters with checks enclosed, one from Mrs. Thomas Campbell for $27 to be used toward a native worker, and one for $48 from Mr. W. A. Maw to be used for famine purposes. Thanks for your part of the work. God bless you."

The Foreign Military Attaches and the Officers of the Legation Guard at Peking

Mr. Dingle, of the American Bible Society, most kindly took us to dinner, after which he took us up to a high flat roof, where we could see the imperialists and revolutionists on opposite sides of the river blazing away at each other with Maxim guns. The revolutionists were waiting for reinforcements and not doing very much till three imperial steam gunboats made a sortie on their position. Then the old Yangtse looked as if it were filled with spouting whales. Poor Hankow! It looked, as we saw it from the river front, like the ruins of San Francisco after the earthquake.

Mr. Dingle thought it was too hot for us to come back to the steamer the way we went to dinner, and I was talking with the

The Opalescent River

(See cover)

MR. GEORGE GARDNER SYMONS, whose painting, "The Opalescent River," is the subject of this week's cover, is among the foremost American landscape painters and has been awarded many prizes and medals of distinction. Mr. Symons was born in Chicago in 1861, studied art in Paris, Munich and London, and was still a young man when he was elected member of the Royal Society of British Artists and appointed honorary member of the Union of International Beaux Arts. In 1909 "The Opalescent River" won for the artist the Carnegie prize of the National Academy and was forthwith purchased by the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

Mr. Symons' surpassing skill in composition and as a painter of delicate and transparent beauties, in scenes apparently bleak and colorless, is probably the main secret of his genius.

The Opalescent River is a small stream in the Deerfield Valley in Connecticut, and by the skilful handling of light and shade and his splendid command of delicate color effects the artist seems to show us as we have rarely seen before some hidden beauty of bleakness in a river blocked with ice. The landscapists of Eastern America are fast coming to their own in the painting of winter scenes. It has taken years apparently for them to discover that not in the opulent color and mass of the summer landscape lies their chance for distinctive work but in the winter scenery as it exists from the lower part of New England south to Virginia.

Other paintings in much the same key by the same artist are: "The Wind and the River and the Struggling Stream," which is in the Cincinnati Art Museum, and "Rock-Bound Cornwall," which, by a certain play of light and shadow and delicate tints, seem to persuade us of unguessed beauties in stern and rock-bound coasts.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A Prince of the Papacy

TO THOUGHTFUL Americans who witnessed the recent spectacular demonstration in New York, when 300,000 Catholics assembled to honor the newly created Prince of the Roman Church, John, Cardinal Farley, there must have come strange reflections. As a tribute to the distinguished prelate, it was picturesquely effective. But it was as a religious demonstration that it possessed a peculiar significance. For the first time in the nation's history, we witnessed on these shores scenes of religious veneration and enthusiasm that recall medieval days, when the Roman Church was at the height of its ecclesiastical and secular pomp and power in the Old World. Now, that power, though decadent at its ancient center, is strongest and most active at its periphery. In point of numbers and wealth, the Western Republic has become the greatest Catholic country in the modern world, and the recent spectacle in New York has heightened the hope of the Catholics that the dream of an American Pope may yet come true.

Looking at the situation with a broader vision, however, we cannot find any reason for serious apprehension. The Roman Church has lost its ancient hold in Italy, France and Portugal, and the same is doubtless true of Spain. This expansive emancipation is due in great measure to the spread of education, which is fatal to ecclesiastical domination. It cannot be forgotten that Rome has always been the foe of human progress and popular enlightenment. It has bound its humblest followers in chains of superstition and darkness. Ignorance and poverty are the lot of the common people wherever it has its greatest power and influence. It has even withheld the Bible from the people and forbidden it in the schools. Any one acquainted with conditions in Southern Europe, in Central and South America and in the Philippines, must admit the truth of this indictment. Here, however, conditions are wholly different. While religious freedom, to its utmost reasonable limit, is our valued inheritance, any attempt to abuse that splendid privilege would only result in disaster. This being so, we can see no cloud of Roman domination on the horizon. We owe it to the common sense and patriotism of our fellow-citizens of the Catholic faith to believe that they, too, realize the futility of attempting to revive, in this land of progress and enlightenment, the secular and political influence of the church when almost every civilized nation in the world has already thrown off these bonds in the struggle for social and religious freedom.

The Peace Treaties and the Senate

IT IS a splendid thing to have high ideals. To shatter these ideals, especially when they relate to the interests of a nation or of the world, would be nothing less than a disaster. For many weeks the fate of the peace treaties in the Senate has seemed to hang in the balance. At last a compromise has been effected which will save the dignity of the Upper House, and the treaties with France and England will be shortly ratified. Fortunately the time has passed when a great nation is in danger of suffering loss of prestige through favoring arbitration. Love of peace is no longer regarded as an index of weakness, but rather an indication of moral and spiritual courage. Universal peace may never be realized this side of the millennium, but it needs no argument to prove that it is the duty of every great and enlightened government to strive and struggle, by all honorable means, toward that end. And it is indisputable that the stronger is the better able to command peace, as the world is now constituted. But there will come a time when it will be different, and when the highest ideal of a great sacrifice for peace may yet be realized. "I would that some Christian nation," writes that spiritual preacher, Rev. J. H. Jowett, "would disown the answer that the law of nations is the law of beasts, and, 'laying aside every weapon of carnal warfare,' would rely for her continued existence upon the powers of reason, 'upon the service she could render to the world,' and 'the testimony she could bear to the Lord Christ.'" This seemingly unapproachable ideal may come to pass even before that day when the kings and rulers of the earth will cast their crowns at Jesus' feet, when the great capitalists, the captains of industry, of finance, of invention, the leaders of men in a thousand vast activities, will all lay down their power for a new consecration, and when the weapons of war will be converted into the instruments of husbandry. Meanwhile, let us be sincerely thankful for the progress peaceward thus far and take courage and go forward.

The "Obey" in the Marriage Service

THE beautiful marriage service of the Episcopal Church has always been a favorite with women, and they have frequently asked for it when, as members of other churches, they were entitled to a different ritual. The promise on the part of the bride to "love, honor and obey" the bridegroom has seldom seemed other than agreeable to the woman who is called upon to trust her entire future to the husband of her choice. There is an austere dignity and quiet grace in the Episcopal ritual that are matchless in their simplicity and fitness for the most solemn occasion in the lives of woman and man.

An incident that recently took place in England, where the Archbishop of Canterbury was the officiating clergyman in the marriage of an aristocratic pair, has been widely quoted and has called forth no little comment. The bride, in her repetition of the service, was silent when she should have uttered the word "obey." The question has been raised as to whether this omission on her part flawed the ceremony and made it illegal. Whatever the opinion of lawyers may be, it is obvious to the general public that this dumbness of the bride at an instant in the ceremony could have no effect beyond the marring of a perfect sacrament. Although the bride is usually the more self-possessed of the two who are pledging their life-long vows, she may be pardoned if a convenient tear or passing tremor should happen to seize her to her embarrassment, while repeating the phrases that fall to her in the solemn rite. The amusing part of the affair is to be seen in the tremendous seriousness with which clergymen and other men are discussing the relative positions of husband and wife. The man is declared with emphasis to be the head of the family. Sometimes he is; sometimes the wife is. When the man declares himself as the ruler of his house and the absolute lord of creation, there is always an undercurrent in the minds of his friends to the effect that he protests too much. In actual human existence, and in the loving relation that is the rule and not the exception in married life, there is only the question of mutual service, fidelity to the bond and continual affection, never intermitted. Until the end of time, the womanly woman will go on promising to obey, and putting her own interpretation on fulfilment of the promise. As for the manly man, he would scorn to exact obedience from the woman whom he regards in the depths of his heart as his comrade in all things.

Alpha and Omega

RABBI WISE said a startling thing in his address to the Free Synagogue in New York on January 14. Without entering at all into the discussion of the circumstances which led to the address itself nor its bearing on present social and political questions, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is interested in the statement made by this influential Jew that he does not consider Judaism a finality.

This is a frank statement made by a sincere man. But no Christian can read these words without feeling instantly that here is the foundation difference between Judaism and Christianity. Christianity is final. Even the most thoughtful believers find it so; that is their deepest conviction as well as their highest emotion. To have found Christ is to have found the ultimate goal for mind and spirit. He is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last.

"Art thou he that should come?" asked John's disciples of Him, "or look we for another?" But the disciples of Jesus cease to ask that question. "Lord, to whom shall we go?" they cry. "Thou hast the words of eternal life."

"To me Judaism is not a finality," Rabbi Wise declared. "I regard it as something more than a preparation for Christianity, but I believe that some day it will pass; that it will grow; that it will be merged into something still greater."

The Christian Church believes that this "something greater" is Christianity. No more splendid task awaits the church, its groups and its individual members, than the task of attempting to win the ancient people of God to the greater and final truth revealed by his Son. It is work that can be done quietly, without show or expense. In our cities and villages Jew and Christian mingle closely enough in business and social matters so that it is not hard to get them to discuss matters of faith. They come to learn that the Christians honor their Scriptures, respect their history, and claim only that Christianity is the very completion and fulfilment of the principles and promises of Judaism. The true meaning of Judaism is found, its true glory seen when the light of Christianity flashes upon it. Men know that this is the goal toward which the prophets pointed. Jewish children go to our public schools, read the books from our libraries, our newspapers and magazines. They learn that real Christianity is clean and kind and beautiful. They lose and help their parents to lose the ancient prejudices against it. They may be led to see that Christianity is the ending of the long journey of their fathers' faith.

The church has much to be ashamed of in the history of its attitude and conduct toward the Jews. We have come, here in America, to better days. We know that nothing but kindness can conquer. We must join again in Paul's great longing: "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." We must point them to that radiant life which stands out as the whitest, most dazzling light in their people's history and the history of all peoples. We must win them to this great Priest of theirs and ours, who is "able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him."

General Notes

—THE UNITED STATES has sent an official warning to Cuba, declaring that unless the internal disturbances there are quelled this nation will intervene to assure the continuance of the republican government.

—IN A SPECIAL message to Congress sent in on January 17, President Taft communicated the result of the work of the Economy and Efficiency Board, showing how three million dollars may be saved in the conduct of the government without reducing the efficiency of the service.

—THE SUPREME COURT OF the United States has upheld the constitutionality of the Employer's Liability Act of 1908. Decision was rendered in four cases on January 15, in one of which the much-discussed opinion of the Court of Appeals for the State of Connecticut was reversed.

—SOMETHING OF A STIR has been created in the presidential campaign by the dropping of Governor Woodrow Wilson's name as a Democratic presidential candidate from the editorial page of Harper's Weekly. The statement is published that at a recent conference in New York, Governor Wilson told Colonel Harvey that the support of his paper was injuring the governor's candidacy. Colonel Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, has stated that Colonel Harvey was "grievously wounded." Just how the incident will affect Governor Wilson's chances for the nomination is uncertain at the present time.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, January 31, 1912

	PAGE
The Opalescent River — From Painting by George Gardner Symons	Cover
Our Mail-Bag (Illustrated)	98
Heroes of the Lifeboat (Illustrated)	99, 106
Christ's Example. Sermon — By Rev. Richard W. Jungfer	100, 101
Millionaire for a Day — By Eugene Thwing	101
The Passing of the Horse (Illustrated)	102
Shall the Government Own the Telegraph?	102
Little Pu Yi, "The Son of Heaven" (Illustrated)	103
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	104
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	105
Our Flag's New Star (Illustrated)	106
Kansas Women Who Have Done Things (Portraits) — By Kate Upson Clark	107
The Last Letter (Illustrated) — By Grace Boteler Sanders	108, 116
Around the Cozy Home Hearth (Illustrated) — By Margaret E. Sangster	109
Brander Cushing's Ambition — By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	110, 111, 112
American Girl Papers (Illustrated)	113
Churches House the Homeless	114
Famous Author Preachers	115
Anti-Saloon Convention	116
Wildcat Investments	117
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	118
Young People's Societies	119

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Lawrence Mills Strike Riot

THE mill district of Lawrence, Mass., was thrown into a state of disorder on January 12 by a riotous outbreak of Italians and other foreign operatives, who left their work in the Wood, Ayer and Washington Mills of the American Woolen Company because of the reduction of two hours' pay a week incidental to the operation of the new fifty-four hours' law. As the Wood Mills, one of the world's largest worsted plants, employs 6,000 hands, and the other mills together total many more, nearly 15,000 operatives were idle when the mills were shut down early that afternoon. As this is the busiest season of the year the owners determined that there should be no suspension of operations and the following morning goodly numbers reported for work. But the strikers used force, employing shuttles, clubs, stones, coal, and even knives and pistols. The police were called to defend the mills and the men who wanted to work, but a huge mob of strikers resisted and fought them. Then Mayor Scanlon asked for the aid of the militia, and the riot virtually closed all the mills of the city and left 30,000 operatives idle. The police and soldiers used the hose with ice-cold water to some advantage, as well as the club and bayonet. Fifty-two nationalities are represented by the workers in the mill district, and forty-five languages are spoken.

As soon as the strike rioting assumed alarming proportions the mayor declared martial law and issued this warning against disorder: "The soldiers will shoot to kill to-day, if necessary. I will keep order here if I have to call on the whole Federal army. This trouble comes from about five hundred Socialists and Anarchists who are stirring up the mill hands and intimidating them and preventing them from going back to work." With a return of quiet conditions in the mill district through the presence of eight companies of militia, whose rifles and bristling bayonets awed the strikers, State and city officials busied themselves to bring about a speedy settlement of the difficulties. The strikers agreed to confer with the mill agents, in the presence of the State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation. Although John J. Ettor, of New York, the directing head of the strike in his capacity of National Organizer of the Industrial Workers of the World, declared his belief that the strikers could gain nothing by arbitration, other members of the executive committee were favorably disposed to the proposal, and after some demur the New York leader consented to it. The demands of the strikers are that the mill owners shall grant an increase of fifteen per cent. in the wages they previously received under the fifty-six-hour law, double pay for all overtime, and the abolition of the bonus or premium system. The original grievance which precipitated the strike was that the strikers wished to be paid for fifty-four hours' work the same wage scale which prevailed for fifty-six hours. Recent events have made the public very sore on Anarchists, who are the greatest enemies of labor, and who stir every bad passion at the least provocation and do not stop short of murder to carry out their diabolical plans. They are very well described in the good Book:

For they eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence. (Prov. 4:17.)

The Massachusetts State Militia on Duty in the Midst of the Strikers at Lawrence

A Little Sister Republic

The smallest republic in the world, without contradiction, observes a Paris contemporary, is that of Tavolara, a little island situated about seven and one-half miles from Sardinia. It is a little more than a mile in length, and has a population of fifty-five. The sovereignty of the island was accorded in 1836 by King Charles Albert to the Bartoleoni family. Up to 1882 Paul I reigned peaceably over his little island kingdom, but at his death the islanders proclaimed a republic. By the constitution of the republic the president is elected for ten years, and women exercise the franchise. A democratic form of government seems quite the fashion now. In the last generation or two the common people have been coming into their divine heritage of self-government. In another generation or so all nations, whether they call their chief king, queen, emperor or president, will be republican in fact. The tiny republic in the little island has the same principle of liberty the larger nations have, and France on one side and the United States, the greatest democracy in the world, on the other, will take the hands of this least republic and bid it godspeed. Out of one of the smallest communities there came the greatest One of the world.

But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel. (Micah 5:2.)

New Rochelle's Pearl Fisheries

Mr. Harry A. Archibald, a member of the City Council of New Rochelle, N. Y., ordered a half dozen raw oysters at a restaurant in his city. Something hard was found in the first oyster. He extracted it and found it to be a pearl. On examination he found that two out of the five remaining oysters on his plate contained each a pearl. The papers report that one of the pearls is worth $150, and the other two $125. The waiter was so excited that he took a day off and opened all the oysters in the cellar to find pearls, but failed. The councilman had worked the pearl fishery of New Rochelle for all it was worth. Some of the costliest gems of truth and virtue, and some of the most beautiful characters incarnating them are to be found in primitive and homely surroundings. The jewels of thought and sentiment and character are not to be found by accident like the pearls were in the plate of oysters. They are to be had by hard searching and diligent labor, and they are the more precious.

No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls; for the price of wisdom is above rubies. (Job 28:18.)

Brings Bugs 12,000 Miles

R. S. Woglum, of the Bureau of Entomology, Department of Agriculture, started from Washington a year and a half ago in search of a bug that would kill the white fly, which has done such damage to the orange groves of the United States. He had to go 12,000 miles before he found the parasite that would serve his purpose. After searching carefully in many countries and making a complete circuit of the earth he returned to Washington with six orange trees loaded down with the bugs. He found the desired parasite in the orange groves of India, and thence shipped the carefully boxed trees and their lively burden, which when unpacked proved to have stood the trip on sea and land in excellent shape, and were ready to breed and move on the enemy. Nature almost always has some remedy for every malady, some repair for every damage if men can find it; and it is also true in the spiritual world. There is a cure for every disease; a restoration of every wreck; life and growth from blight and death. This curative force and the necessity of its practical acceptance is included in the question of the prophet:

Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? (Jer. 8:22.)

Joy Ride Kills Five

Two young men and three young ladies, some of them of the leading families of Trenton, N. J., went out in an automobile for a joy ride the other night and on their return home from their gay time early in the morning with the thermometer at zero the car plunged over an embankment at the turn of the road at Brockville, a suburb of Trenton, on to the ice of the power canal there. The heavy weight of the car broke the ice and the car went down, drowning five of the six like rats in a trap. The young man driving his father's machine climbed up over the steering wheel and disentangled and saved himself. He ran along the icy road for a mile and a half to a roadhouse, where he told the story of the fatal accident and then fell to the floor. His icy clothing had to be cut from his body, and it was with difficulty his life was saved. A party was immediately formed for the rescue of the drowned bodies. It is the old story of the swift penalty that sometimes falls upon physical and moral recklessness. The visit to the roadhouse figures in the night's revel, and the liquor that was not consumed was found in flasks in the pockets of the dead. It is said that the young man took the car out not only without his father's consent but against his positive orders. This tragedy and others like it ought to be a warning to the young, but they are liable not to be so. Fast young men will continue to entice giddy young girls to the fatal merriment of the joy ride and there will be foolish mothers who will not have force of will or conscience enough to say no to it. The automobile run by a prudent, sober man sometimes meets accidents, but under the care of a reckless man and one muddled with rum it is a veritable engine of death. The driver who through folly or intoxication sacrifices precious lives should promptly be placed by the hand of the law behind the bars with the other murderers. Such criminal recklessness breaks the commandment,

Thou shalt not kill. (Deut. 5:17.)

Where Are the Mackerel?

Not many years ago vast schools of mackerel sported along our New England coast. Now that fish is becoming rare. Twenty-seven years ago there were 500,000 barrels of mackerel offered to the public; last year there were only 2,700 barrels; and it was not because there was less demand for this kind of fish, but because the fish itself could not be found. The sixteen hundred fishers who search the sea to discover the schools of mackerel have hoped in vain for the last ten years. Fifty years ago a barrel of mackerel could be bought for four dollars; it will take now something like ten times that much money to buy the same quantity. This passing of the mackerel should be a matter of concern and of practical consideration, and if possible help, from the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington. This fish whose departure we regret would not have been allowed as an article of food to the Jews of old; it would have been counted by the law as unclean, because, though it has fins, it has no scales.

These shall ye eat of all that are in the waters: whatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in the rivers, them shall ye eat. (Lev. 11:9.)

THE NEW STAR IN OUR COUNTRY'S FLAG

A PANORAMIC VIEW OF SANTA FE, THE CAPITAL OF THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO

A Holiday in Town

UNCLE SAM has just added, by presidential proclamation, a forty-seventh star to his flag, and New Mexico is finally one of the sisterhood of States. New Mexico, perhaps more than any other part of the Union, has been misunderstood and misconceived by those who have not visited the great and new Southwest, and to the average American all notions of what persists there are rather apt to consist of the melodrama of the motion picture film and the old stories of the mining camps and the desert. Only four or five years ago, when a great industrial and agricultural exhibition was held at Albuquerque in connection with the National Irrigation Congress, were the people even of the new State itself awakened to their own possessions and possibilities. All the Middle West has known for years that the great semi-arid lands of New Mexico were rich in natural resources not only of mineral wealth but of oil and water. Yet to them, as well as to the Eastern people who visited the exposition, the display of agricultural products was a revelation. They were prepared to see the wealth of gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc, iron, turquoise and other valuable minerals that were spread before them; but the exhibits of field and orchard products were a denial of all tradition. They went with the belief that New Mexico was a desert, where valuable ores and gems lay hidden in the mountains, but where the surface was impossible for the uses of man. So when they saw products of the soil, produced with the aid of irrigation and the evidences of the spread of agriculture that is rapidly putting the farms ahead of the mines of the new commonwealth, they faced a revision of ideas that bordered on revolution.

Still big with that bigness which all the world has come to associate with western America, still big in its wonderful mountains and deserts and ranches, New Mexico is changing its type. No longer the chaps and spurs of the two-gun cattleman, the pick and pan of the prospector and the other earmarks of her frontier days confront the traveler on all sides. To-day the farmer's wagon, not the rancher's pony, is found in the streets of her growing towns, and her valleys are clothed in the green of farm and orchard. Slowly, and as silently as any newly developing section of the country ever conducts, New Mexico has installed great irrigation projects, pumped water from the depths of the earth, planted her orchards and great vegetable gardens, sown her varied crops and now reaps the reward of her enterprise and industry in the accomplishment of her Statehood. Once more the new overlays the old in this the oldest, newest land of our country. Oldest, for here before the dawn of European civilization lived the cavemen, then the Pueblos, the outlying bulwarks of the high Aztec civilization of Montezuma, and Spain had set her stamp upon the Santa Fé of those days almost twenty years before the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth.

Staking Out a Claim

Though surrounded by the relics of man's age-long occupation of the land, Santa Fé, the new capital, is growing in typically Western style, growing with wide, pleasant streets, fine public buildings, and beautiful churches and residences.

HEROES OF THE LIFEBOAT

Continued from page 99

the coast, asking no aid for his work but accepting gratefully what offerings may come along to defray the expenses of his journeyings. Not phased by storm or danger, he goes about his life work, saying, "I could not be more conscious of divine leading than I would be if I saw the divine arms encircling me. I know the angel of his presence directs my pathway, as fully as though I could hear him say, 'This is the way, walk ye in it.' When not conscious of the divine presence I use my own intellect, but with the additional thought that at no time am I alone, but that God always is with me. It matters not whether I be climbing the rocky cliffs, walking the sandy beaches, treading stony paths, or crossing treacherous inlets, my implicit faith in God is the lamp that guides my feet at all times." It was in the worst of a cold storm of last year that Mr. Cake came across from Block Island to Newport, arriving at Newport in the snowstorm at a late hour in the afternoon. He started to Brenton Point Life-Saving Station, but darkness soon set in, and he was lost in the terrible storm. He later said, "Realizing I was lost in the thickets, unable to find the roadway, I climbed a large boulder, standing in the snow two feet deep, and peered through the darkness to see the lights in the far distance, but was unable to tell whether they were on land or sea. I lifted my whole being up to my heavenly Father and tried to pray; I was cold, tired, weary and almost ready to drop. In my efforts to pray I could only say two words, 'Our Father.' It was enough. I immediately came down, and some message sent of God led me out of the thicket into the roadway. Then going but a short distance, with a turn around the corner, I saw a light in the distance. It looked like a cottage home nestled among the sand hills. I was going to tell the inmates that I was lost, tired and hungry, and ask their hospitality through the night. Imagine my delight when I came to the door and found that I had been led direct to the Brenton Point Life-Saving Station!"

Mr. Cake not only commands the confidence and respect of those among whom he labors, but has the highest endorsement of the inspectors of the various districts and of the captains and lieutenants of the service. Ex-Governor Stokes of New Jersey has written: "If we had more men like Mr. Cake we would have a better country and better State affairs." The annual report of the Life-Saving Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, records that during that year 1,461 vessels met accident or disaster sufficient to bring them within the field of operation of the life-saving crews. The amount of property involved was estimated at nearly twelve million dollars, less than two million dollars of which was lost. On those vessels were 8,845 persons, 5,770 on the larger boats and 3,075 on the smaller craft; and although many hundreds would have perished without the life-savers, with their aid all but thirty-seven were rescued.

Calm Weather Drill with the Rocket Gun

"LITTLE MOONFLOWER"

ANY reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may send for our free illustrated booklet on Little Moonflower.

It tells a touching story of childhood in China, where there are thousands of poor, little destitute children, orphaned by the war and the famine—sweet-faced girls and bright boys—who need our help. Send us a postal stating how many copies you can use to advantage in your own circle and among your friends. Address CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Kansas Women Who Have Done Things

Lilla Day Monroe

KANSAS has always been one of the most interesting of the United States. A number of causes have conspired to this end. Kansas has put successfully into operation laws at which many other States have balked; its great land boom and remarkably rapid progress during the following years have all added to the State's unique interest. The passage of rather drastic laws in some of the nearby commonwealths drove into it many of their most liberal-minded and independent thinkers, who proceeded to try out one theory after another. Slavery, prohibition, the silver bugaboo, woman suffrage, and almost every other so-called "ism," have been discussed and voted upon in Kansas. Kansas is one of the few States that have successful prohibition laws and as early as 1887 women had municipal suffrage there. Some believe and predict that the State will, within a short time, join the ranks of those in which women exercise the full right of franchise. It is a good comment not only upon the climate of this famous State, but upon its high level of intelligence and morality also, that its death-rate is the lowest in the world (7½ to every 1,000). The average of education there is very high, the clubs are unusually progressive, and religion is reverently regarded. These fine conditions are said to be due largely to the splendid women of Kansas, an assertion which receives support from the records and faces of these noble examples.

One of the most prominent women of Kansas is Mrs. C. B. Hoffman of Enterprise, a devoted wife and the mother of six children, "who," says her biographer, "have been educated to work with their hands and to think." A studious and progressive club-woman, filling many high club-offices; active and sympathetic in charitable work; broad and loving in her religion; full of humor; an ardent advocate of equal suffrage and temperance; giving of her wealth freely, and opening wide the doors of her hospitable home to all good causes; Mrs. Hoffman rightly holds a foremost place in the respect and affection of her fellow-women.

Mrs. Lucy B. Johnston is the wife of the Hon. William A. Johnston, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Kansas, and has used her high position for the furtherance of the noblest ends. One of the first members of the Social Science Club of Kansas and Missouri, she early learned the value of organization. As federations were formed, she advocated the transformation of the club into a State federation. Through this, she was able to promote her favorite schemes of traveling libraries, and also of manual training and domestic science in the schools. She was especially successful in her efforts for establishing a State Industrial School for Girls. She has organized many clubs; is president of the Kansas Branch of the Western College Alumni Association; is vice-president of the board of directors of the Y. W. C. A. of Topeka; president of the Kansas Equal Suffrage Association; member of the board of directors of the General Federation; member of the visiting committee of the State Board of Control (over charitable institutions); State Regent of the D. A. R. Society.

Kansas has attained to unusual publicity this year chiefly through the plucky conduct of Mrs. Ella Wilson. Elected without an effort, and almost against her wish, as mayor of the little city of Hunnewell, she has still felt it to be her duty to accept the office. The mother of boys, she has desired for years to live in a community as free as possible from temptations to vice. She saw that if she should become the mayor of her little home town, she could do much to rid it of its saloons and gambling-dens. Therefore she decided, though a devoted and notable housekeeper and home-maker, that she would seize this opportunity to purify Hunnewell. But the six men who had been elected as the city council did not share her wishes. They refused to abide by her rulings, and the case of the rebellious aids and the firm and dignified mayor went to the attorney-general and to Governor Stubbs, and they decided that the mayor must be upheld.

"My office," said Mrs. Wilson, "means more to me than just a simple mayoralty of a Kansas town. If women can do good here, they can do good elsewhere." The plain, modest, common-sense course pursued by Mrs. Wilson has won her the sympathy of the entire country, especially of its mothers, whose battle she is so valiantly attempting to aid.

Mrs. C. B. Hoffman

The late Governor Robinson of Kansas was honored in 1898 by the legislative appropriation of $10,000 for a bust of him, to be placed in the State University. The regard in which he was held by Kansas was well deserved; but no small part of his success in life was due to his wife, Sara T. Dwight Lawrence. Born in Belchertown, Mass., the daughter of the distinguished lawyer and statesman Myron Lawrence, and of a mother who bore the famous name of Dwight, Sara Lawrence came honestly by her intellect and her high character. In 1849 she married Dr. Robinson. One night Mr. Thayer spoke in Chapman Hall in Boston upon the need of "Free State" believers as settlers in the newly opened State of Kansas. The enthusiasm ran high, and Dr. Robinson rose and promised to go, and at once, for "Kansas must be saved." He and his wife suffered unspeakable persecutions from hostile neighbors, but they bore everything cheerfully, sure that God was with them. This highly educated, refined and deeply religious woman has been a tower of strength to Kansas. Since her husband's death, she lives quietly at Lawrence upon the large estate that he left her, but which will ultimately go to the State University. Mrs. Robinson wrote Kansas, Its Interior and Exterior Life, and her facile pen has been ever at the service of all good causes.

Mrs. Lilla Day Monroe began teaching at the age of fifteen in the State of Indiana, but was able to study later in Terre Haute and to teach a few years more before she married Lee Monroe, a young Kansas lawyer, in 1885. She became not only his wife, but his assistant in the overwhelming rush of business which followed the great land boom of that period. She was admitted to the bar of the Kansas Supreme Court in 1895, her husband being then the judge in the Twenty-third Judicial District. Her legal training has greatly helped Mrs. Monroe in her devoted efforts to raise the status of women. She is a member and officer of the State Federation of Clubs; Kansas secretary of the General Federation; president of the Topeka City Federation; president at one time of the Kansas Equal Suffrage Association; member of the Eastern Star, Daughters of Rebekah and W. C. T. U. societies; founder of several important clubs; a loyal Methodist; editor of several departments in different journals, and an accomplished writer and lecturer.

Mrs. Monroe is the mother of four fine children; is an accomplished cook and needle-woman, and a most successful home-maker, and every other Kansas woman is proud of her.

Among the scores of other distinguished Kansas women are Mrs. Victoria Murdock, editor of the Wichita Eagle; Mrs. W. R. Stubbs, the wife of the governor, and Miss Margaret Hill McCarter, the author.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

Mrs. Ella Wilson

Lucy B. Johnston

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—PROFESSOR JOHN GRIER HIBBEN has been elected president of Princeton University, succeeding Dr. Woodrow Wilson, governor of New Jersey. The appointment of Professor Hibben has met with warm approbation from friends and alumni of Princeton and from educators and scholars throughout the country. He has been Professor of Logic at Princeton since 1893. Dr. Hibben is a Presbyterian clergyman, a graduate of Princeton Theological Seminary.

—THE FIRST IMPORTANT naval battle in the Turco-Italian war occurred in the Red Sea on January 7, with the result that an Italian cruiser squadron fought and sank seven Turkish gunboats after a sharp conflict. A large number of Turkish seamen went down with their ships, but others were rescued by boats from the Italian warships. The Turkish gunners displayed utter incompetence, their small guns being fired wildly. The shells from the Italian ships were not directed at the Turkish yacht Fauvette, which accompanied the gunboats, and she was the only unit of the Turkish flotilla which was not destroyed. She is being convoyed to Italy. The action occurred outside the Bay of Kunfida, a small walled town with a garrison and two forts about 500 miles north of Aden on the east coast of the Red Sea.

—ON JANUARY 14 the Spanish cabinet resigned as the result of a divergence of views with King Alfonso as to the advisability of commuting the death sentence of one of the rioters who murdered a judge and wounded several court officials in the town of Cullera, province of Valencia, last September. The trial and conviction caused a great stir throughout Spain, as the radicals, realizing that they could work up no sympathy for the perpetrators of such a sordid crime, raised a false issue, accusing the government of all sorts of cruelties and tortures. King Alfonso was persistent in his decision to save the man from death and even though Premier Canalejas y Mendes advised pardon for six of the accused rioters and felt that it was good policy on the king's part to lighten the sentence of the seventh, he advised making this case an example. When he learned that public opinion entirely supported the king, he announced that he deferred to his majesty's judgment, and would prepare a decree to that effect without delay, but, considering as he did that the ministry had made a mistake, it was his duty to hand in his resignation. King Alfonso urged him to reconsider his determination, but he remained firm.

—THE MINISTRY OF THE French Republic has again been changed. After a series of charges and countercharges, which filled the French press for several days, M. Caillaux, the premier, was forced to retire, and M. Raymond Poincare was called upon to form a new cabinet. The entire trouble arose from evidence which became public that M. Caillaux had, during the Franco-German negotiations on the Moroccan situation, carried on secret communication with the German authorities at Berlin. This, it is believed in France, seriously endangered that country's close friendship with Great Britain. The British public has in turn taken the matter so seriously that the foreign secretary, Sir Edward Grey, may be forced from his portfolio. The new French ministry is announced as follows: President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Poincare; Minister of Justice, Aristide Briand; Minister of War, Alexandre Millerand; Minister of the Interior, Jules A. J. Steeg; Minister of Marine, Theophile Delcasse; Minister of Colonies, Aubert Francois Lebrun; Minister of Finance, Louis Lucien Klotz; Minister of Public Works, Pierre Dupuy; Minister of Education, M. Guistchau; Minister of Agriculture, Jules Pams; Minister of Commerce, Fernand David; Minister of Labor, Leon Bourgeois. In all the forty-seven cabinets of its forty-one years of existence the French Republic has vainly looked for the "grand ministry." Some of the best authorities claim that this new cabinet is the most able and promising that France has ever had.

THE ALMANAC GAVE INSPIRATION

I received the Almanac, and reading the "Hard Bible Problems Solved" gave me inspiration. Indeed, its entire contents gives one valuable information on every page. Accept my warmest thanks. Sincerely hoping THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will have a prosperous year in 1912, I am, etc.,

Mayersville, Miss. MRS. M. B. FOSTER.

THE LAST LETTER

By GRACE BOTELER SANDERS

"IT'S a shame for you to go out such a day as this! Why, it's away below zero, pa!" grumbled Mrs. Bascom, shaking her head so vigorously that every stiffly starched ruffle on her gingham sunbonnet which she wore summers to keep off the heat and winters to keep off the cold, fluttered gaily. "There won't be a half-dozen letters; just a lot of silly post cards and notes to gratify the vanity of some giggling girls. I'd stay right at home, Jeremiah!"

The old man, who was reluctantly pulling on his heavy felts which had been warming by the fire, stamped one foot vigorously and with a jerk brought the refractory boot to place.

"I wonder how many times it is necessary to explain to a woman that business is business," he queried with mock severity, at the same time giving his old wife a fond glance which set every nerve to tingling. "'Tain't a question of what we want to do or think. The United States mail has got to go, rain or shine, if there ain't but one measly circular in the whole pile. Even passenger and special trains must make way for it."

"If you was a regular man or was getting big pay it wouldn't be so bad!" interrupted the wife emphatically; "but this business of you going out in the cold to take another man's place when you only get a few cents' pay—mebbe he'll never give you the money—is too much! You'll traipse all over the country road and get the rheumatism. Then who'll take care of you, and who'll pay the doctor's bill?"

Jeremiah Bascom, who had buttoned the shabby old coat about his throat, took the little woman to his heart.

"There, there, mother, you don't understand," he soothed, patting her shoulder awkwardly. "If I didn't get a cent of pay I'd go just the same. I promised Jim Harris's wife that I'd take Jim's place,I give my word,and I'll stick to it. When I qualified for a substitute I promised to attend to my duty. So there's another reason. But the principal one is this: Jed's been raving in delirium for several days and all the time he's been talking about the mail route and the letters. He was so afraid he would lose his job, for you know this rural delivery is all that stands between starvation and his family. It ain't no small thing to lose your job in the winter time. His wife said he was as crazy as a hare when she told him I would take his place, but he quieted right down and has been getting better ever since the worry was taken off his mind. You see he believes in me. Mother, do you want me to shirk my duty now?"

The little old man's gray head towered proudly above the shining one of his roly-poly wife. His whole shabby figure seemed to irradiate good cheer. The light within, the call of duty, had made Jeremiah Bascom forget that he was old and rheumatic and poor. In the light of sacrifice this commonplace service had become a hero's crown.

"The money'll come in handy, too, mother," he added hesitatingly. "At my age I don't get many chances to make two dollars a day. Why, that'll buy our groceries for almost two weeks. Be a good girl, now, and let me go!"

The old lady dashed her tears away to return his kiss, and in another moment he was gone. Through a mist of tears she watched him trudge across the barnyard and climb into the mail wagon which was waiting and drive hurriedly away.

Once out of his wife's sight, Jeremiah Bascom lost the cheery smile and the song. Other troubles than the cold made his heart ache this winter morning. And as the wind whistled and he drew the lighted lantern closer to his cold feet, it seemed to the old man that his very life blood was turning to rivers of ice.

Mary did not know, and he had not the courage to tell her yet. He had been discharged the week before from the little hardware store where he had worked ever since the bank had failed taking all their savings with it. Last week he had celebrated his sixty-eighth birthday with only a few dollars to keep them from starvation, with a debt hanging over their little home and with no work in sight by which he could earn a livelihood. Yesterday he had received a notice that the money must be paid or the property surrendered.

Only to-day did he realize the horror of being old and poor and childless. The chance to act as substitute on the Rural Route had come almost providentially, it seemed to him. But Mary did not know. Why worry her until it was necessary? She had believed that he stayed at home because he was not feeling well. Only to-day, as he drove through the desolate, snow-covered country, did the awfulness of old age without a support dawn upon him. He did not feel old. His eyes were bright, body strong. He was as anxious and as able to work as ever, but he was to be laid upon the shelf because he was old in years. If he could only prove his worth some way!

"With lantern and mail the old man started"

He stopped now and then at the comfortable farmhouses to leave the messages from the outside world. His heart writhed and burned with the injustice of it all, as he saw their prosperous, happy lives and compared them with his own need. For he and Mary were on the outskirts of the City of Starvation.

When the bank failed, taking their money with it, he had cheerfully set to work and grumbled little. Then he could work and save for the future. The blow had fallen without a moment's notice, and found them unprepared. A tear trickled over the old man's cheek. He wiped it hurriedly away as if he were ashamed. He had not shed a tear since Edward, their only son, had gone away. At the same moment a snowflake fluttered down and lay melting on the cheek beside the tear as if to show him that all the forces of nature knew and sympathized.

For the first time, the old man, looking up, saw that the sky was darkened by heavy clouds. An ominous roar came to his ears, and with a swoop and a howl the snow and storm were upon them. The light wagon was almost swept off the road. Jeremiah Bascom was obliged to use the whip on his fat old horse when the wind had quieted enabling him to go on. The snowflakes were falling so fast that he could not see ten feet in front.

But Bess knew the road. Continued urging was necessary at every drift. When noon came and he should have been through, they drove into Jim Hannigan's barnyard. It was the last stop but one.

The Hannigan boys saw the old man and his horse coming and ran to meet them. They hurried the horse into the stable, where she was rubbed down and fed with hot bran. Her master was warmed and fed in the comfortable dining-room. With cheerful company, in the fire's cheerful glow, the old man forgot his worries. It was one o'clock when he rose to go.

"I've only one more stop to make, and I'm not sorry!" he laughed as he pulled on his gloves. "I'm ever so much obliged to you folks for bolstering me up a bit. I don't see how me or Bess could have gone an inch farther. I've a letter for Miss Hornblow. I reckon she's expecting it. The postmark's from away off somewhere in Californy."

"Them Hornblows are queer people," volunteered Jim Hannigan; "they're poor as poverty, everybody says, though they made such a splurge when they first come into the neighborhood, buying that fine farm and vanloads of elegant furniture. Blackburn was telling me yesterday that they hadn't paid a cent since that first payment. The roads are turrible down that way. You'd better leave the letter until to-morrow. By that time mebbe they'll clear a little. It's probably nothing but a circular."

Bascom shook his head and laughed mirthlessly. "You're as bad as Mary Jane," he said. "Don't you know the United States mail has got to go? I'd better be trottin' along, I guess. It'll be night now before I get home."

It was a mile and a half from Hannigan's to the Hornblow farm, and over the worst of mud roads. The snow was still falling and was drifted high in the fence corners when Bess reached the crossroads. It was with great difficulty that she reached the schoolhouse, and the little bridge just on the other side. At the edge of the bridge Bess stopped, and no amount of urging would drive her on. When her master investigated he found that they were on the very brink of the precipice. The bridge had gone. The beautiful home of the Hornblows was still half a mile away. From the elevation at the top of the hill Bascom looked longingly at the column of smoke which was pouring from the chimney. How could he reach it? He could not cross the river with the horse and wagon. There was only one thing to do—hitch Bess and leave her here while he went on foot with the bit of paper. Drifts were almost waist deep, but he must brave them.

Tying Bess securely to an oak, with mail and lantern the old man started. His fingers became numb with the cold, he stumbled and fell, getting eyes and ears full of snow. Undaunted he went on until he ascended the tall steps at the big house and heard the clock striking two. Almost frozen, he fell upon the threshold.

Hatty Hornblow heard the noise and ran to the door. She picked up the old man and hurried him into the kitchen, where they plunged his feet into water and poured hot drinks down his throat.

When he produced the letter for which he had risked so much they knew who he was. Made comfortable, nodding dreamily, he listened while the girl read the letter to her mother and brother.

"DEAR ONES: I am afraid things are serious with you by this time. I am back from the Klondike and in the dear old States once more, and have been for almost a week. I wrote several times, but as I have received no reply, concluded that you had not received them. My partner and I left Dawson City with about $500,000 each, arrived in San Francisco O. K., but we had scarcely found a lodging-place when Ned was taken with rheumatic fever, and was perfectly helpless.

"He is an A number one good fellow, has been a friend to me, so of course I could not leave him sick and alone. He had been in the country longer than

Continued on page 116

Around the Cozy Home Hearth

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Fires in Winter

NO SOONER does the inclement season of winter fairly set in than households and communities are menaced by the terrible danger of fires. The old adage that fire is a good servant but a bad master is over and over verified when great buildings are wrapped in sheets of flame to the loss of life and property. The heroism of the men who fight fire surpasses that of soldiers on the battlefield. Climbing to dizzy heights, penetrating through blinding smoke and scorching heat to save those who are caught in a burning building, the brave fellows who fight fire think only of the duty that calls them into the midst of the furnace. The public is swift to forget their valor, they are seldom laureled, and the pay they receive is insignificant in comparison with what they deserve. Thus it has ever been with the real heroes of humanity.

It behooves every one to be vigilant in guarding against the peril of fire. On a night of roaring wind and wild storm it may well be that the carelessness of a single householder may start a calamitous fire that will at racing speed sweep over a whole village or town. Those of us who have had the life-long habit of caution are sometimes panic-stricken when we suddenly discover that we have been on the brink of disaster. A match supposed to have exhausted itself may be smoldering, and presently draperies are in a blaze. Sometimes it is the baby's bed or cradle with the baby in it that is caught in a whirl of flame. Sometimes a chafing-dish, a spirit lamp, the percolator on the breakfast table, the gas range or radiator, and very often an unsuspected defect in a flue is the occasion of the trouble. A woman one winter observed, or thought she observed, a suspicious smell of smoke in the house, yet could not account for it. This went on for nearly thirty hours; then it was discovered that a fire had been smoldering in the walls of the house during all that time, and it was with much difficulty and no little loss that the house was saved from ruin. Fire lighted on a hearth on a January morning sent at once a cascade of burning coals and wood directly into a pile of kindlings in a cellar below, with the result of entire loss of a house and everything in it, while the family escaped only with their lives.

Prudence should lead to the keeping of valuables in a safe, either in a deposit vault or in one's home. Every one retiring at night should know where to place a hand on clothing that may be needed at a moment's notice. The propriety of fully insuring property is manifest, but insurance covers only money loss, and this is sometimes the smallest. No insurance is sufficient to repay the owners of family heirlooms for their destruction by fire, and the thousand sweet associations that gather through the years around every home can never be compensated by gold and silver.

* * *

Plain Words With Women

EVE'S daughters have always been conscious that they possessed a delicate network of nerves. It has never been the fashion for the rank and file among women to bring their nerves to the front, making them the excuse for ill temper or permitting them to spell martyrdom and melancholy, at least so far as the majority are concerned. Considering the present situation as American women confront it, their nerves are responsible for more suffering than was common in former days. Notwithstanding all the labor appliances of the period we women seem to have little leisure, not enough time and far too much to do. The demands of growing children are increasingly in excess of what parents can easily supply. To educate a girl or boy, even in the public school, costs much more to-day than thirty years ago. To dress a young girl so that she may appear to advantage not merely in the regular school work, but in the various social functions that are school adjuncts, costs money. Beyond this, if the income is limited it makes a drain on the mother's energy, initiative and strength. The pace of life is rapid, and in cities especially, the close proximity of neighbors whom frequently one does not know, and the incessant noises of the street, consume vitality and are a potential cause of nervous trouble. Here are two or three suggestions for the nervous woman. Take them at their face value.

First, eat fat. Do not smile at this practical bit of advice. Ask the family doctor whether the physical nervous system does not require nutrition, and he will tell you without demur that part of every woman's daily diet should be fat. Those who carefully eliminate fat from their diet on the plea that they do not like it are taking the obvious road to nervous breakdown. Not only ought women to eat the fat of meat and of nuts, but they should make good use of butter, olive oil, cream and other substances in which pure fat predominates.

Second, the woman who is nervous should rigidly restrain herself from its outward expression, either in fretfulness of tone, down-drooping of her mouth, contraction of her forehead, or complaint of any sort. A good rule is to look cheerful when one feels blue. At the moment college slang has introduced a new word. If somebody is cross, he or she is said to be "peeved." Don't be "peeved." "Laugh and the world will laugh with you." "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine." Never, whatever happens, condescend to wear the air of one who is injured. Self-control and uniform politeness go hand in hand. She who disdains to be considered nervous will not be at the mercy of her nerves.

Third, trust in God. Not only rest when you are tired, but rest your heart by living in the sweet and helpful thought that God is caring for you. Nobody ever dropped down under to-day's load, but the load of accumulated future days is too heavy for human endurance.

Build a little fence of trust around to-day
And therein stay.

* * *

THE WEDDING DRESS*

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

HOW much of life it hath held, dear,
This little warder of thine,
Filled with the dreams and the fancies
Ever to girlhood divine.
Wasted and useless and woful
Seem the fair broideries now,
For the dreams that can never come true, dear,
Since a craven has broken his vow.

Put them away in the chest, dear,
Hide them and turn the key;
All the sweet hopes that have faded,
All that was sacred to thee.
Over a broken troth plight
Tear-drops are falling like rain,
Life hath its hour of anguish,
Sharp is the smiting of pain.

Fold them away in the chest, dear,
Drink the last drop of the cup;
Then arise brave and undaunted,
Breasting the gale with head up.
Yet shall the mists of thy sorrow
Melt in the sunshine of love,
Peace in some brighter to-morrow
Over thee bend like a dove.

Close up this room in thy heart, dear;
Pure as the virginal snow
Is the white of the exquisite raiment,
To thee the heart's symbol of woe.
Walk on thy journey alone, dear,
Somewhere are waiting for thee
Honor and faith and good cheer,
In the dawn of a day that shall be.

* This striking picture by Frederick W. Elwell was one of the exhibits at the London Academy last summer.

Gifts for Missionary Box

IT IS a little singular that in the choice of gifts for the missionary and the missionary's wife, people in general fancy that they must either adhere strictly to that which is useful without much reference to the beautiful, or that they must eliminate everything secular, amusing and ornamental. The wife of a missionary in the home or the foreign field is a Christian woman with tastes and desires precisely akin to those of other women in the church. She does not wish to limit her reading to books of devotion. A book of interesting fiction about which people are talking is quite as appropriate for her as a collection of sermons. The minister himself does not exclusively read theology, nor is his preaching the better for having his library filled with commentaries. If books are sent in the missionary box, they should be chosen with a view to the pleasure of the whole family. In every missionary box there should be an envelope containing money, with a brief word saying that the recipient is to spend it in whatever way will add most to the comfort, security and enjoyment of the household.

In the selection of gifts for friends whose birthdays or pleasant home anniversaries it is a delight to remember, caution should be observed in at least one direction. "Why in the world," said a lady who is popular and beloved, "does every one send me either a cross or a Madonna? On one of my birthdays I received no less than seven pictures of the Madonna."

In the presentation of a variety of gifts we should ask ourselves how they may be made to confer the greatest happiness. A surprise gift from wife to husband, husband to wife, or friend to friend, conveys a unique pleasure. The tired woman at home will be wonderfully helped over her hard place by an unexpected offering that may have cost husband or son a trifling self-denial, but is to her the sudden flashing of a little candle of love on the commonplace road.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By CHARLES M. SHELDON, Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER XVI

IT WAS Saturday night and Sidney sat alone in the library of the big empty house. The mail had been late that afternoon, owing to a fire at the post office, and Angus had only just brought in some letters and laid them on the table.

"Is there anything you want, Mr. Sidney?"

"No, Angus, thank you. You may go out for the evening if you like."

The servant went away and Sidney picked up the letters to look them over carelessly. He was very tired after the hardest week's work he had ever known. As he slipped the envelopes slowly through his fingers one with a foreign postmark arrested his attention.

He started at the sight of the handwriting, let the other letters fall, opened the envelope and with trembling fingers took out the letter. A faint perfume of wood violets softly breathed through the room.

The letter was dated at Balholm, on the Sogne Fiord in Norway.

"DEAR FRIEND: I am breaking all the conventions of the society into which we have both been born, but I must do something or lose my own self-respect even more than I am now in danger of doing by writing this letter to you. My father has written my mother and me of your visit to Washington and its result. This will perhaps help you to forgive the seeming boldness of this which I am doing and explain to you in part my leaving home without a word of farewell. If I had surely known that you cared—but how can a woman know surely? I thought I knew—but—even now I cannot be sure that father told all that you said, or fully gave to mother the exact words. But it seems so cruel—all that has occurred. And my heart is heavy for your great and bewildering trouble—your father. May I be allowed to mention him? What a sacrifice! How it shames poor me, who have never known what it means to endure a real grief of that sort.

"I am sitting in the little forward room of a cottage hotel at the head of this beautiful Balholm Bay. The mountains come down so close that the town has only one main street that is level. The farmers are rowing their little loads of hay across the water in their skiffs and carrying it ashore in their arms. The men and the women seem happy together. There is a great tourist vessel at the dock and a small cruiser a little farther out, besides a flock of pleasure yachts which have come in here from Gudvangen. The little boys and girls knock at our door every morning with baskets of the most beautiful strawberries at a ridiculously low price, and sometimes they carry delicately carved tinas and the curiously whittled chains with the bride spoons made in Nordanger. And the quaint costumes of the women in the hay fields hanging the wisps of hay on the fences, the little two-wheel carts, the neat and fresh-faced girls in the dining-room, the absence of all worry and money-making on the part of the men one sees—all these things, together with a most delicious color in a Norwegian sky and clear blue and white in its glacier water, combine to make one happy at heart if the heart could forget, forget—

"I remember you said once in what seems to me years ago that you had been brought up from childhood to obey your father implicitly. The same is true of me also. I have never for a moment thought of doing anything contrary to my parents' wishes. My father has been all his life accustomed to issue orders and to have them obeyed. So when he ordered my mother and me to leave home so suddenly, I had no thought of resistance. I should, perhaps, have said or done something—do you blame me for going? Besides, what hope—but I am again feeling that my understanding of all is not fully what it ought to be. Do not—you will not, will you?—do not think me over bold and lacking in all true womanly feeling, but I am sure your eyes did speak to me that day before you went back home, before your father—

"I do not know how long we shall be gone, or what our next address will be. My mother does not take me into her confidence as to our future plans. I know nothing about them.

"If you should write me you can address to the care of Bennett's in Bergen. There is one reason I am writing, about which I am more certain than about anything else. I want you to know that the horror which has come to your life has not changed my friendship for you. My heart is filled with overwhelming pity as I think of the strange thing which has come to pass with you. May I therefore sign myself as your sincere and faithful friend, PAX MARSTON."

For a very long time Sidney sat there pondering over this letter from the daughter of the admiral.

When somewhere in the house he heard and counted mechanically a clock strike eleven, he was still sitting in the same place re-reading the letter and going over certain phrases in it.

What was the matter with him? Why did his heart feel so strangely dissatisfied? Was he criticizing the girl because she had not written, in so many words, "I love you"? How could he expect that? On the other hand was he criticizing her because she had written even all she had? What more or what less could she have done? Would he answer the letter? If so, what would he say? Did he truly love her as he had told the admiral he did? And if so, and she also loved him, what hope of happiness with Admiral Marston and his wife bitterly and irrevocably opposed to their daughter marrying the son of a convict? And could he ever ask her to break all those strict rules of society and of family prejudice which were a part of her very being? What happiness could ever flow out of such a departure from custom and social standing and above all of consent on the part of the family? It was too great a risk, it involved too many people.

Should he write to her, and if so, what could he say? Again the question tortured him, did he really love her enough to break with all conventions, ask her to break all the filial ties of her home, deliberately disobey her father and mother and run the fearful risk of losing out of her life all the things which are held so dear by all those to whom society and its regulations mean the very life itself?

Anyway he could compel himself to look at the question he was confronted with difficulty. And after unavailing tossing of it all back and forth almost the only conclusion he could reach was that in spite of his position, in spite of the disgrace which he shared with his father, she had not allowed that to influence her friendship; was that the strongest word she had written? Yes, friendship. At least, she was not like some of the friends so-called who had known Brander Cushing before he went to prison; she at least had not permitted that horror to warp her feeling or prevent Sidney from establishing some sort of understanding that might grow into a love so great that all other ties, even those of the family, might be broken and thrown away.

The next day was Sunday. He had been to hear Mr. Freeman twice since that first time. The religious unrest that beset him was as deep as ever. During all this upheaval of his mind and heart he had passionately longed to find a spiritual peace which he knew some people really possessed. And—he could not escape the fact—every time he thought of his own religious longings, Hermosa Howard occurred to him. There was something about the girl unlike other girls he had known. He tried to think it was perhaps her unusual bodily health and strength. He recalled how on that afternoon of the fire she had obeyed his shout when he called across the swirling smoke, "Push your end of the board there! It's slipping off here!" Again he could feel the board move under his foot. Again he realized as he had at the time the fact that over there in that blood-red room where hell was raging, one girl had kept her senses, as calm and collected and resourceful as if she had simply gone to the window to open it for fresh air. And he recalled his own thought as he stood there agonizing to reach out farther and grasp the arm of a girl who had fallen off the board — "Brave lass! Oh, she is brave!"

But when he mused over it, there was something more than physical courage in this girl of the people. It was spiritual. It touched heights of religious faith to which he was a stranger. And he was hungering for the same possession. The trial that had come to him had left him stranded on a stretch of undefined territory. He did not doubt or question the existence of God. But aside from that he found no comfort in religion, no peace of mind, no ecstasy or enthusiasm. His father had taught him great ethical truths which had kept him straight and clean morally. But when it came to deep or high acquaintance with a heavenly Father he was as ignorant as a child. And it must also be said that he had never known any personal feeling for Christ as a Redeemer or a Friend and Comforter. In other words, a personal Christian faith was absolutely unknown to him. He had never experienced it, and he longed to know what it meant, with a desire that grew upon him and expressed itself in his very face, which revealed more and more his longing and his heart hunger. His countenance had grown to have a wistful expression, a search for an unrealized hope, for a goal of peace which the wings of his soul had never been able so far to attain.

It is not strange, therefore, that he had gone to hear Mr. Freeman again, and finding that something about his preaching began to touch his aspiration, he went this Sunday after Pax Marston's letter had come. It is not strange, either, that yielding to a vague questioning about Hermosa Howard's religious life he should again accept Mrs. Ward's simple invitation to come and take tea with them that evening.

CHAPTER XVII

AGAIN, as before, Hermosa and her father were guests at the Wards' table. Again, as that first time, Sidney was touched by the simple words of grace spoken at the table, and again he almost eagerly led the talk himself up to the question of the church and asked the privilege of putting questions. Every moment his astonishment grew

Continued on next page

May we show you all of Spring's New Styles?

Will you write today for your FREE copy of the "NATIONAL" Style Book—showing complete Fashions for Spring?

This advertisement gives you an opportunity to secure clothes of greater beauty and becomingness than you have ever bought before. It gives you an opportunity to know all of Spring's fascinating new styles, to see what is worn in NewYork, and to select from everything new the fashions best suited to you.

And above all—it presents an opportunity to save money.

All of these advantages are yours—through the "NATIONAL" Style Book—which shows for your advantage 200 pages of new fashions in all kinds of apparel at "NATIONAL" prices.

Read again the advantage your "NATIONAL" Style Book offers. consider the full measure of pleasure, of economy, of personal satisfaction it offers—and write for it today.

Tailored Suits, $12.50 to $30

Made to Measure Samples of Materials Sent Free

These beautiful Made-to-Measure Suits alone would amply repay you for writing for your Style Book.

Nowhere in the world is equal opportunity afforded you in the selection of your Spring Suit. And remember, a perfect-fitting garment and your entire satisfaction are absolutely guaranteed. So in writing for your Style Book, be sure to state whether you wish samples of materials for "NATIONAL" Tailored Suits.

May We Save You Dollars On Your Spring Apparel?

Never in the history of the "NATIONAL" have our prices been so low, our values so wonderful. Never has the money advantage in buying at the "NATIONAL" been so attractive. Never has your saving been so large.

In every kind of apparel "NATIONAL" prices are the lowest in America---quality considered. Write for your Style Book, compare prices, and see for yourself the important saving the "NATIONAL" offers you.

Made-to-Measure Suits	$12.50 to $30.00
Waists	.98 to 6.98
Skirts	1.49 to 9.98
Lingerie and Wash Dresses	2.98 to 15.98
Silk Dresses	7.98 to 17.98
Ready-Made Suits	10.98 to 17.98
Hats	1.98 to 9.98
Plumes	1.00 to 25.00
Coats and Capes	9.98 to 15.98
Lingerie and Wash Dresses for Misses and Small Women	2.98 to 8.98
Silk Dresses for Misses and Small Women	7.98 to 11.98
Coats for Misses and Small Women	7.98 to 10.98
Suits for Misses and Small Women	9.98 to 15.98
Junior Dresses and Coats	1.98 to 9.98
Dresses for Girls	1.25 to 4.98
Children's Coats	1.98 to 3.98
Infants' Wear	.35 to 3.49
Boys' and Young Men's Clothing	1.49 to 16.98

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and expressage on all our goods to any part of the world. Every "NATIONAL" Garment has the "NATIONAL" Guarantee Tag attached. This tag says that you may return any garment not satisfactory to you and we will refund your money and pay express charges both ways.

This Book will be sent you FREE by return mail if you send your name and address.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,
218 West 24th St., New York City

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

as he listened to the answers Hermosa gave. For as if almost by mutual consent, after a little, nearly all the conversation was confined to these two, not by any formal agreement but as if it were natural and to be expected. As it went on, Sidney almost forgot that any one else was present except Hermosa and himself.

"Then, does the church to which you belong satisfy your heart and mind? I cannot understand it."

"It is not only the local church that appeals to us. It is the church of all history, the church of all time that has been in the world. We also remember that, whenever we think of our own church."

"But has not the church of history been very often wrong and has it not done some very wicked and foolish things?"

"Yes. Because it has been made up of common men and women. But the good the church has done has been infinitely more than the harm. Do you know any institutions of our modern life that are to-day doing greater good that have sprung into existence without having been inspired or started by the teaching of Christianity in the church?"

Sidney tried to think of some, but was not able. His mind was absolutely honest always. He was unfamiliar with quibbles and sophistry.

"It would be interesting to hear your list of the things in the world which have helped it upward and forward and have, as you believe, come into existence through the efforts or inspiration of the church of history."

"Let me name them, Hermosa," broke in her father. "Let me give Mr. Cushing a list. You know we have just been over the social outline of 'Christianity as a Source of World Progress.'"

"Well, father," Hermosa smiled, "if you miss any I will try to remember them."

Sidney will not soon forget how the blind man eagerly checked off each item on his fingers, speaking with a certain glow on his face that was like a clear light shining through the skin.

"I think first mention should be of the Brotherhood Idea which the church started. It was absolutely unknown before then. Let me go over the list without explanation:

"The abolition of slavery; the emancipation of woman; the value put on childhood; the education of the masses; the evolution of republics; the movement against intoxicating drink; the organization of missionary societies; the organization of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations; the rise of young people's societies; the organization of social centers to fight disease; the establishment of hospitals and asylums for sick and dependent people by the State; the use of co-operative institutions in business; trade-unions; organizations to educate the people against war; Sunday Schools; Bible study classes; the printing press; reform associations to produce a cleaner dramatic life; the gathering of the people in mass conventions to discuss great questions of common interest."

"I don't agree with you about trade-unions," said Sidney with unusual spirit. "Do you mean to say you consider them the offspring of Christian teaching?"

"That is because you are a capitalist. I don't excuse the shortcomings of trade unionism, but it should be regarded as a whole. On the whole I believe it has benefited the world of labor and of capital as well."

"But take this very tenement in which you are now living, this double-decker. It is a product of a Christian age. And in many ways you must know, far better than I do, what a miserable thing this is to house human beings. Forgive me, Mrs. Ward. Your rooms are as neat as wax. But you know how inconvenient the whole tenement is. What has the church done all these years to improve such conditions?"

Hermosa's cheek glowed with a deep red spot. It was the first time Sidney had ever seen her angry.

"Is the church to blame for all the bad things in the world? Then you can blame Christ for not being able to convert the Scribes and Pharisees. Everybody nowadays takes an easy fling at the church whenever anything goes wrong in society. In a recent muckraking magazine a writer who never belonged to a church in his life and never spent an hour on any real problem to solve it personally, blames the church for everything he sees that is vile and unjust. Was the father of the prodigal son to blame for his son's riotous living? I am angry, Mr. Cushing, every time I hear people blaming the church for not doing everything. Has the business world no duties? Has the home no obligations? Has the press no divine law as well as the pulpit compelling it to do all it can to make a better world? Who or what keeps up the war spirit of the world in spite of the church of the living God? Is it not the manufacturer of warships and explosives and armor? Is the church to blame for all that? Is it to be scored for not creating miracles when even Christ had to say of the people, 'They will not come unto me that they might have eternal life'? The church has borne all through the ages the burden of a criticism that I believe is wickedly unjust. It should be judged by the unparalleled achievements it has wrought for human advancement, not by the miserable stumbling-blocks which man's own selfish and hateful resistance has thrown in its way."

Hermosa forgot herself as she spoke. She had risen from the table and her tall, vigorous figure, her outstretched arm, her clear, deep voice appealed to Sidney with a new and thrilling experience. What a splendid creature she was, this girl, this woman of the people! What a picture or statue she would make if she could now be depicted on canvas or in marble by some great artist! He must have shown something of his feeling to Hermosa as he sat opposite her at the table, for after a moment of pause as she stood there, she colored deeply, looked around at the little circle of silent forms and sat down quickly.

"Isn't Hermosa fine when she gets mad?" said Athanasia simply.

"Athanasia, hush!" Hermosa said in a low tone, putting her hand on the crippled girl's arm.

"But you are, you know. You never look so fine as when you are really and truly angry. Don't you think so, Mr. Cushing?"

Sidney smiled. Hermosa blushed deeply and tried to laugh. But she was not able to conceal her embarrassment.

"Miss Howard hit the manufacturers of war material pretty hard. Of whom I am one."

"I wasn't thinking of you," said Hermosa, looking down.

"I know you weren't. It was the thing itself you were thinking of. But really, isn't it the government that is to blame for the warships? We simply make what the United States asks for. Do we create the demand for warships?"

"I wish you were making something else," said Hermosa sadly.

"But that does not answer my question. Am I to blame for making warships or is the government, the congress, the people, that orders them built?"

"You are both to blame. There should be neither demand nor supply for such murder machines."

Hermosa spoke as bluntly as if Sidney had been a stranger to her. Again she asked herself, "Shall I not

Continued on next page

Madam—Your Grocer Will Tell You the Facts About Heinz Tomato Soup

We believe, Madam, that you would have Tomato Soup more often in your home if tomato soup were easier to make. Or, if you knew just how Heinz Tomato Soup measures up to the very best home-made—with none of the bother and fuss.

Everyone likes Tomato Soup, and Heinz Tomato Soup needs only an introduction to make it a steady and welcome visitor to your home. It is ready to serve in next to no time—just heat.

Your grocer knows what the Heinz Pure Food Institution stands for, and what the Heinz label means on any food product.

He knows that on Heinz Tomato Soup it means choice tomatoes—picked at the prime of ripeness—prepared the very day they leave the vines—with the addition of rich cream and pure spices.

He knows the painstaking care that has made Heinz quality possible. And he should tell you—for his own interest as well as ours—that he is satisfied to make a little less profit on Heinz 57 Varieties in order to give you more quality for your money.

These are the facts about Heinz Tomato Soup and it is the easiest thing in the world to satisfy yourself of its goodness. Just try one can.—If you do not like it your grocer will refund your money.

H. J. Heinz Co.—57 Varieties

Member of Association for the Promotion of Purity in Foods

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

crush my feeling for him by anything I can say that will rouse his dislike?"

Oh, Hermosa, do you know this young man's character at all yet, to think that may be the way to create his hostility? May it not in the end provoke his admiration?

However that might be, Sidney certainly showed no feeling of dislike towards Hermosa for her plain language. He said thoughtfully and with great simplicity:

"Of course, the Columbia is a sacred contract made between the government and our company. Have I told you, my father's heart is bound up in the ship? He is just as proud of it as if he were— He expects me to be just as enthusiastic over it as he is. He says he prays daily for a war so the ship when finished can have an actual test in battle."

"Do you do that?" Mr. Howard asked soberly.

"I can't say that I do exactly. But could you blame me very much if I felt willing to do anything to please my father, who is where he is to-night for my sake?"

The little group around the table was silent. That scene in the court room! That cell at the penitentiary! What tragedy this young man, this young fellow so willing to obliterate all social distinction, had known! How could the little group feel anything for him but profoundest pity? And oh, Hermosa, you have good reason to say wildly in the silent command you are uttering, "My heart must be still! I cannot bear to see him here! It is too cruel a pleasure for me to bear!"

When the simple meal was over and Mrs. Ward and Athanasia were clearing off the dishes, Sidney had wheeled the blind man into the other room as he had the first time. There was a longing with him to talk with Hermosa again, without even the presence of her father. And as if to help him in bringing about such an opportunity which his own simple and direct nature would never have attempted by evasion or diplomacy, Hermosa's father again asked to be wheeled into his room to gather his weaving materials together before he came back. And Hermosa with a little heightening of color returned and without any real suspicion of Sidney's longing, gave him the opportunity he had been wishing for.

"Do you, would you—be willing to answer a few more questions, Miss Howard? I seem to be in the questioning mood to-night."

"Yes. I may not be able to answer, but I will do my best."

"It is about your religion. Naturally, I hesitate. But do you really get satisfaction from it?"

Over Hermosa's face a change came. At first Sidney feared for a moment that she was going to be angry. Next he experienced a swift self-reproach that he had even imagined such a thing.

"I cannot tell you—can any one tell another a thing like this? But my religion is my life. I cannot imagine my life without it."

"Then you are satisfied?"

"Yes." And Hermosa answered truly. For compared with her love even, her religion was the greater.

"I don't understand it. I am not satisfied. Of course, I believe in God. But the belief does not make me happy."

"You have had great and terrible experiences to face. Do you think that would account for some of your unhappiness?"

"And you? Surely your experiences must be far harder than mine."

"My mother," Hermosa spoke almost as if she were alone in a meditative mood, that fascinated Sidney, "died when I was six years old. Even at that age, I can remember how splendid her Christian faith was. She and father both belonged to the church and owed everything to it. In times of illness and trouble I do not know what would have happened to us if the church had not helped father and mother out. We have always been poor. One year after several months' illness when our expenses were twice father's earnings, a group of women in the church quietly paid off every obligation, leaving father to settle in time when he got well and was able to work again. Scores of times people in the church have helped not only in money but in deepest sympathy and friendship. The young people bought father's chair for him and they are sending him now copies of the Bible for the blind. I have belonged to the Sunday School all my life. It has given me a wonderful amount of help. I do not know what I would be without it. One of my dearest friends is my old Sunday School teacher. Our minister, Mr. Freeman, has stood by us in all sorts of trouble. He has been with us at times of death, at mother's death and again when my younger sister died, and when my older brother was brought home from the shipyard fatally injured, and again when father received the blow that led up to his present condition. All through these experiences it seems to me the church has held out its helping hand and blessed us with its fostering care. I learned to love my Redeemer in the little church where Mr. Freeman has preached for twenty years. It is not a dead thing of formality and custom, but a warm living reality. And eternity only can tell the story of what the church and religion have been to father and mother, to Mrs. Ward and Athanasia and to me."

"I would give anything, Miss Howard, if I could have something like that in my life. I am hungry for it. Can you not tell me now how I can get it?"

"I? Tell you?"

"Yes. You feel all this as a real thing, you say. If it means so much to you why does it not mean the same to me? I am hungry for it. I am unhappy without it."

"Unhappy?"

"Yes."

And for the moment across Hermosa's mind and heart flashed the wild question, "If he loves Pax Marston and she loves him how can he be unhappy? If—"

But she answered quietly:

"My religious life has been a growth. I was born as naturally into the church as I was into my own home. I inherited my father's and mother's affectionate feeling for it. It has seemed as easy and natural to love the Lord Jesus Christ as to love my own father or Athanasia. But when you ask me how you can come to have that feeling, that experience, do you think it possible for me to tell you exactly? I—I—"

Hermosa faltered. Deep waters seemed to roll up at her feet. Facing this young man, looking into his wistful eyes, remembering all she owed him, and all she had come to think of him—her heart was bewildered at the request he made, and no wonder she faltered in front of his heart hunger. In all her brave strong life no such thing had ever happened to her. She had always believed that one person could lead another one to Jesus even as Andrew brought Peter to the Master. And so she said, with a bravery which even she herself never fathomed, "Have you not always called yourself a Christian? It has always seemed to me you have all the marks of one."

"But why has not the church meant more to me? Why have I not known all these beautiful things you say about it?"

"Because the church has through all the years worked silently and perhaps you have never realized yourself the debt you owe her. In the nature of the case, vast deeds of mercy, of daily philanthropy, of personal helpfulness, of world-wide sympathy have flowed out of the church in a stream so constant, so quiet, so unadvertised, that the world, pardon me, your world, has come to overlook the greatest force in all history. You have forgotten that the church is of divine origin. You have thought all the time that human progress was being caused by science, or education, or modern methods of business, or inventions, whereas the church of the living God has been the historical power under all real progress and happiness. And Christianity has not been a personal thing to you. It has been a thing of history but not of your history. You have respected it but never loved it."

Sidney looked thoughtfully at Hermosa. He could hear her father calling her name.

"Tell me, Miss Howard, how I can be a real Christian and enjoy my religious life as you enjoy yours."

"Oh," Hermosa cried with a passion that was the finest and purest that ever filled a human heart, you must learn to love the Lord and Master as your Redeemer. You cannot be a Christian and stand outside of Christianity, any more than you could be a real lover of some one and simply respect her. I cannot, oh, I cannot tell you. It is a thing between your own soul and the Saviour. You should not be asking me, but him."

She was so deeply agitated that she covered her face and before she heard her father calling her, she had offered a prayer as sincere as an angel's that this soul she loved (oh, how truly!) might find the peace of God.

Hermosa Howard, girl of the people, you will never know until you reach heaven, what a great prayer that was you offered for the soul of the man you loved.

Sidney did not stay much longer. His talk with Hermosa had opened up new channels of meditation. He wanted to get home, back into the big empty house, and in silence there muse over his own soul's needs.

When he came away he felt that somehow he was attended by the prayers of that simple group he had left in the little room. There was a tear on Hermosa's cheek as she said goodnight. And it was her face and words that lingered with Sidney as he walked home.

To be continued

INCREASING THE EGG CROP

SECRETARY WILSON of the Department of Agriculture estimates that, between the producer and the consumer, there is an annual loss of $45,000,000 in the egg crop of the United States, the greater portion of which falls on the farmer, who is by far the largest producer. Of this enormous loss, fully one-third, or $15,000,000, is caused by heat, which develops the embryo in the fertile egg.

The Secretary says that if farmers and others engaged in this production of eggs would market their male birds as soon as the hatching season is over, a large saving would be made, as practically every unfertilized egg would grade a first or second, if clean and properly marketed.

An Appreciative Reader

I desire to thank you for two things. First. For your very valuable Almanac for 1912, for it reflects creditably on the management of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Second. For your very accurate and honest restatement of the doctrine of the "Single Tax" as proposed by Henry George. Being a firm believer in the justice and efficiency of the proposition of Mr. George, I am glad to say that yours is the first ungarbled and accurate statement of the doctrine that I have seen in the public press in thirty years. Honesty and candor are not dead yet; there is some pure gold even if there is much dross. GEORGE M. STOVER.

Boonsboro, Md.

SUNLIGHT AT NIGHT

Our new mineral-gas burners 10% cheaper, more light made of steel enameled green outside, crystal globe, burns 3½ cubic feet of gas per hour. Perfect combustion, never smokes if properly regulated

Also our Sun-Ray Kerosene Mantle Burners 100 candle power light. One quart of kerosene lasts 16 hours. Money back if not as represented. Particulars free. Simplex Gaslight Co., 20 Park Row, New York City.

COPYRIGHT, 1911 RIDGE'S FOOD CO.

"Who loves Ridge's Food?"

RIDGE'S FOOD

will make your baby grow

RIDGE'S — The Milk Modifier

It will give him plump, red cheeks. It will give him a strong, well-developed body. It will make him gain steadily every week. It will agree from the first feeding.

RIDGE'S FOOD WILL MAKE YOUR BABY GROW

Get a package from your druggist. It is inexpensive and easy to prepare. A trial size gladly sent free on request.

Ridge's Food Co., 6 State St., Boston, Mass.

For the nervously tired, for folks who cannot sleep, for dyspeptics, Ridge's Food is the very thing. It tastes good, it digests without a suggestion of distress, it nourishes and, so, quiets the nerves and comforts the whole body.

FREE OIL FOR ALL

The best oil for all purposes. Cleans, polishes; pianos, dressers, chairs, grill work, picture frames, hardwood floors. Prevents rust on nickel parts of stoves, bathroom, fixtures, door plates, railings.

"3 in One" lubricates anything—locks, clocks, sewing machines, hinges, bicycles, firearms. No acid, no varnish odors, all dealers. Big bottle, little price. New booklet and generous trial bottle free.

THREE IN ONE OIL CO., 54 Broadway, New York City.

Paper Three Rooms At Price of One

With the money you usually spend to paper one room you can beautify three rooms—buy the paper from us at mill prices and hang it yourself. Our book of instructions shows how you can easily do this. Send for it and samples of many new and beautiful Spring designs. FREE.

Write To-day

Penn Wall-Paper Mills

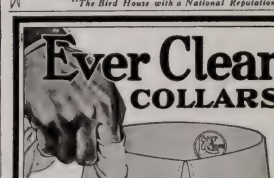
Dept. 15, Philadelphia

Breed Canaries Interesting and profitable. No experience necessary. Small outlay. Bishop's New Book gives full information; also about Goldfish and Aquria. 100 pages, profusely illustrated. 15c postpaid.

BISHOP, The Bird Man, Dept. 10, Baltimore, Md.

"The Bird House with a National Reputation"

Ever Clean COLLARS



IF you could rub a damp cloth over the collar you now have on and make it as clean and fresh as when it left the laundry, would you hesitate to do it?

This is just what you can do with Ever Clean Collars. They are made in Troy, N. Y. Identically the same as the collars you buy of your haberdasher; and they look the same, although treated by a new patented German process that makes them invisibly waterproof. No celluloid, no rubber, no imitation.

Made in every fashionable style that gentlemen of today require.

Save laundry and collar bills. Write us size, style and brand of collar you wear, and we will send, on receipt of 25c, postpaid, an Ever Clean Collar of the same style.

Price 25 cents a collar.

Ever Clean Collar & Cuff Co.

253-36th Street, Brooklyn, New York

American Girl Papers

By AN AMERICAN GIRL

Our Birthright to Beauty

THERE are no ugly girls. There are only girls who do not know how to be beautiful. This is a broad statement, and will no doubt be contradicted; but I shall stand by it, and if you will permit me for a moment to defend it, I believe you will agree with my point of view.

Youth is beauty in much the same sense as God is Love, Right is Might. Youth includes beauty, the way the flavor of the grape is in the vintage. Beauty in youth is an inheritance, reaching back to the origin of life, and is the eternal evidence of God in his handiwork. The pageantry of the spring; the procession of flowers; the new grass; the plumage and songs of birds; the beautiful pelts and mysterious and lovely ways of young animals; the miracle of the morning, its lights and its shadows; the lowliest savage arraying herself in paint and bright feathers and little shells in an attempt to bring herself into harmony with the freshness and beauty of nature; the transcending spectacle of the night with its subtle powers to awaken in our souls ever fresh emotions of supreme delight; these are some of the ever living manifestations of beauty and youth everywhere about us in the world.

Beauty Is a Talent and Can Be Cultivated

Part of All Beauty

NOW, we as girls are a part, a very important part, of that youth and beauty; and to be included in God's plan of beauty in his world is our birthright. Have you ever really thought of yourself as youthful and beautiful and a part of God's plan? Try it and see what it will do to your spirits. Look into your mirror, and if what you see there is the reflection of a dissatisfied or selfish or undeveloping personality, it is with selfishness then, and dissatisfiedness that you are concealing your youth, your beauty. Believe me, and look again. If you see reflected there eyes that are dull, a complexion that is not clear, a mouth around which there are no lines of sweetness and strength, the beauty of your youth has been impaired and you must hasten to repair it before empty vanity shall replace it. Remind yourself of your birthright and ask yourself, "Whose fault is it that my image in the glass is unlovely?" Do not bother much about the answer to your question, but from that moment allow your perfectly normal and innate desire for beauty to take a definite hold upon you. Do not be afraid of it—it is God's written message upon your soul—and make up your mind promptly to clear up all doubt of your comeliness in the shortest possible order, by simply daring to be beautiful. Invite the beauty that you miss from your face and find hidden away in your disappointment, out into your life; welcome it and recognize it incessantly. Set beauty where it belongs, in your life—and it belongs everywhere. Beauty in its human manifestation is largely a question of capacity for expressing it. Make up your mind that you will see it, and seeing it, that you will express it, and already a new life shall begin—a life to make your girlhood a joy to live, a glory to look back upon.

The Privileges of Youth

THERE is no beautifier in the world like the wish to scatter joy. There is no beauty so great as the buoyant energy of youth, the elastic step, the fresh glow of health and intelligence, the ever ready sympathies and generous impulses that are the instincts and privileges of youth. Waken up to them, be strong, courageous and determined. You will be surprised at the transformation that your body will undergo; for remember this, your body is built of living cells with an infinite capacity for fresh impulse. Just as those cells have responded to the call of selfishness and discontent and written their message upon you, just so unerringly will they at your suggestion write the message of beauty and gladness there. In the ruddy light of your youth the promise of a glorious womanhood shall shine through and blot away the close scrutiny and the small point of vision behind which your beauty may temporarily have vanished. Lest from so exalted a point of view you shall maintain that my theory of your beauty is impractical, I ask you, my dear girls, to try it out. Help yourselves along by minding carefully the little touches of dress and hair that make for charm. Have a care for your manners and voice. Remember that out of a sincere and loving nature untold beauty springs. And above all else, have the courage to be beautiful, for beauty follows such courage as surely as the day follows the night. And no one can truly say that you are not beautiful.

Answer to the Puzzle of December 27

Listen, my children, and you shall hear
Of the midnight ride of Paul Revere;
Yes, Johnny, you might have seen him pass,
Had you been living near Boston, Mass.
You are so foolish I think we will Go on to the Battle of Bunker Hill.
No, Willie. You'll find that history states
Burgoyne surrendered to General Gates.
What? No, Eliza, you must forget:
The name of the Frenchman was Lafayette.
Well, getting back to our work again,
Stony Point was captured by General Wayne.
From across the ocean came moans and groans,
At the sea-fight won by John Paul Jones.
What's that? Of course he was not the one;
Cornwallis surrendered to Washington.
And now I guess you can go and play;
That's lesson enough for a single day.

The Prizes Were Awarded to:

Howard Medert, Ohio, age 14. Gunmetal first prize watch.

Ruth L. Buddington, Connecticut, age 14. Rochester premo camera.

Robert Rankin, Tennessee, age 12. Best quality jack-knife.

Hazel C. Foster, New York City, age 9. Japanese paints.

Supplementary Prize-Winners

Wilmont Harvey, Pennsylvania, 13; Edward Brown, North Carolina, 8; Ethel M. Watts, New York, 13; Anneta Griffiths, Wisconsin, 11; Bessie Garrison, South Carolina, 16; Ruth Gaylord, Connecticut, 12; Emma Martin, Iowa, 14; David B. Chisolm, Ohio, 9; Herbert Seers, Wisconsin, 10; Ruth Benson, California, 16; Arlo Vance, Maine, 12; Arthur Thomas, Michigan, 10; William Blair, New Jersey, 11; Edith Lemke, Minnesota, 11; Edward Aiegiman, Pennsylvania, 11; Thelma Marshall, Ohio, 8; Lora Eastman, Massachusetts, 14; Grace Johnston, Nebraska, 12; Eddie Standstadt, California, 14.

The names of other prize-winners will be published later.

Aunt Ruth's Cozy Corner

HAVE YOU HAD YOUR SAMPLE OF Utility Wall Board?

Forget both lath and plaster in the building of your home—and simply cover the walls with Utility Wall Board nailed direct to the studding.

Do you realize what it means to be free from the muss and bother of plastering, to be able to complete your home, or reconstruct it at any time, without reference to weather conditions and without having to wait for plaster to dry?

Utility Wall Board is a tough, durable fibre board—

It is waterproofed on both sides and is impervious to moisture, or atmospheric changes. It will not warp or crack, it is not effected by jolting or vibration. When once put on it is there to stay as long as the building lasts.

It does away entirely with the need for lath and plaster—and produces a wall or ceiling more permanent, more efficient and more economical than lath and plaster.

It is extremely easy to put on, any carpenter, or anyone else, for that matter, who can use a saw and hammer, can readily handle it.

Utility Wall Board comes in various lengths and widths and is attached to the studding. It is easily cut to any size with a hand saw, and when in place makes a wonderfully smooth, attractive wall or ceiling.
It may be paneled or decorated in any manner desired.

Utility Wall Board is Extremely Economical and Convenient in Making Over An Old Home

At slight expense you can turn an unattractive attic into a cozy bed room or den—or you can partition it into two or three rooms of any size and shape desired.

You can finish the laundry or the garage in perfect keeping with their requirements—or you can produce an enameled or tiled effect in bath-room or kitchen.

You can use it with perfect success over old plaster that is cracked or that has partly fallen off.

You can use it to make wardrobes or closets or in a hundred other ways that will readily occur to you—

Utility Wall Board is more lasting than lath and plaster—More easily put on—More impervious to heat and cold—More nearly fireproof and soundproof—

And it costs 25 per cent less.

We want to send you a free sample—and a copy of our illustrated book. Write today

THE HEPPES COMPANY
4511 FILLMORE STREET, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

START A MILLINERY BUSINESS
For $50.00 or $100.00

HERE IS YOUR CHANCE FOR A PAYING BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN

MAKE YOURSELF INDEPENDENT

Now is the time to establish yourself in a paying, pleasant business of your own. A small investment is all that is necessary to open a retail millinery store or department. Thousands are now enjoying good incomes that we have started in this way.

With one of our special complete stocks of ready Trimmed Millinery, you can open a store or department without the services of a trimmer. These stocks are made up of the very latest city styles. Every hat is a positive success and will sell quickly at a large profit, thereby assuring your success.

We conduct one of the largest wholesale and manufacturing Millinery concerns in the world, producing over 7,000 Trimmed Hats daily, and the most important department in selling Millinery stocks.

THERE IS MONEY IN MILLINERY

No other legitimate business offers the same opportunity. In no other business can you invest so little and draw out so much. Many of our successful customers, not wanting to start a separate store, rented space in a store where millinery was not handled, or used a room in their own home.

WE PROTECT MILLINERY DEALERS BY REFUSING TO SELL CONSUMERS

If you can invest $50 or $100 now you should be able to turn over your investment many times during the season. After you have opened your store we send you catalogs, style books, etc., thus keeping you always in touch on the best and latest correct styles that are in popular demand. By using our catalog you can, without any previous experience, re-order such goods as you need, in as small a quantity as desired, thereby keeping your stock always new, up-to-date and complete. You can succeed in this business without previous experience and with less effort than in any other line.

WRITE TO-DAY for itemized list No. 300. It tells just what our Spring and Summer Millinery stocks consist of, what they will sell for, just how much profit you can make, also full particulars how best to start a successful, paying Retail Millinery business. Write—right now. If in our city call on us.

CHICAGO MERCANTILE CO.
159-161-163-165-167-169-171 N. Michigan Ave., CHICAGO

5% Three Splendid Investment Features 5%

OUR patrons are assured of the safety of their capital, of liberal profit, and of the privilege of withdrawal of their money upon short notice, when they need it for other purposes. Our patrons are careful investors all over the world, who recognize what an ideal investment this combination of advantage represents. For nineteen years we have paid 5%; this is paid for every day of deposit, and is compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, as desired. In nineteen years our assets have increased from $9,000 to 2,500,000. Loans are made only on real estate mortgages, following the stringent regulations of the New York banking laws. Deposits received personally or by mail. Write for information.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Building,
Broadway and 42d St., New York

2¢ A WEEK 100 CANDLE POWER

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Makes and burns its own gas and produces a pure white, steady, safe, 100 candle power light. No wick, smoke, dirt, grease or odor.

Lighted instantly. Over 200 styles. Agents wanted. Write for catalog

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

Elastic Stockings

From pure gum rubber, woven absolutely to your measure, at the same price you pay for poor-wearing, ready-made goods.

Our Stockings are best that can be made. Write for self-measurement blank, testimonials and FACTS ABOUT VARICOSE VEINS. We furnish all appliances for swollen limbs. Write us your needs.

Worcester Elastic Stocking & Truss Co., 58 Front Street, Dept. 9, Worcester, Mass.

Fine Garden For 94c

Cut down cost of living by growing vegetables in yard. This splendid assortment of vegetable and flower seeds is 1 g value at $1.25—our special introductory price only 94c. Complete directions for planting, cultivating and harvesting, free. Write for catalog. O. S. Jones Seed Co., Box 733-D, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Churches House the Homeless

IT HAS been proved again.

The churches are eager to do the thing that needs to be done if some one will just suggest it. Most of the big forward steps have seemed simple things when taken. Everybody says, "To be sure! Why wasn't it done long ago? We ought all to have thought of it."

Or sometimes the suggestion has been made and the way of taking the first step has not been clear. So the thing was delayed. Then suddenly some one has the thought and says: "Look here quick! This is the thing to do. Come on!"

And straightway the thing is done. To think that it ought to have been done a hundred years ago should only make us step more lively, now that we have started. There is no need of looking back with regret that it was not begun sooner; the job now is to keep moving and call others to get into step.

That's one introduction to this story.

Here is the second. A man stands at the corner of Second Avenue and First Street at night, when the thermometer is showing a perverse determination to reach that cipher on the scale and go below it. He is not barefooted—not quite. He really has a pair of shoes. He also has a pair of trousers—no suspenders; but a rope answers fairly well if you draw it rather taut—and there is little inside to interfere with a very taut pull. Then a coat, and some sort of a hat. Overcoat? Oh, that would be a joke. A vest? Not for many months. Surely a shirt? No, indeed. An undershirt, of course? No, positively not.

Where is our friend to sleep? With the thermometer at zero the park bench is inhospitable.

But there are churches in this city, nearly a thousand of them. That is, nearly a thousand Protestant churches, besides the Catholic churches and the synagogues. Well over a thousand places set apart to the worship of God. Our friend with no undershirt nor overcoat nor socks can surely find some church door swinging open where he may stagger in out of the killing weather and lie down, can he not?

Yes. There is one place of worship whose door swings open to him. It is the chapel of the morgue.

Snow is whirling down now. It gets into his neck, and rattles down inside his coat. This sends a new sort of shiver along his skin and through his bones. He feels a bit dizzy. Twenty-second Street!

"I guess I can make it."

So he gives the rope another hitch, pulls down his cap to shield his eyes, tries again to hunch his coat collar tight enough about his neck so that the snow will not drive in and down. His fingers? His fingers stopped aching long ago. And his feet will begin soon to grow numb. Head slanted toward the stiff north wind; hands huddled in the holes where pockets used to be. Never mind the ears. Forward, march! To the chapel of the morgue.

And mellifluously, worshipfully, through the starlit night the church bells send the note of midnight through the icy air; while not one man but hundreds of men wander shelterless on the streets.

Nothing was needed but a word. And the word came. The people down at the Bowery Mission were working night and day. Conditions were worse than at any time in almost twenty years. Conferring with his board of managers, the acting superintendent of the Mission, Mr. James T. Hunt, sent out a straight-from-the-shoulder call to about a dozen pastors of prominent churches. Would they, he asked, help lead a movement to open the city churches to the shelterless during the zero weather? And the answer was as quick and eager as the call. They would.

Grace Church, fine old beautiful Grace Church threw open the door of its parish house, even interrupting, for the time being, its kindergarten arrangements. Trinity Church, historic Trinity, hurried to equip a disused hospital on its property, putting in beds for 135 men. Along with Dr. Manning and Dr. Slattery, the rectors of Trinity and Grace, Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Leighton Parks, rector of St. Bartholomew, were among the first to act.

Dr. Coffin sent a man down to the Mission with money from his Men's Association to be spent in putting men to bed who were homeless. St. Bartholomew's opened its Lyceum hall, making room for 150 men each night. Dr. Jowett, Dr. McLeod, Dr. Sedgwick, Dr. Lange and other pastors sent money or promises of co-operation. Dr. Ernest M. Stires opened St. Thomas parish house. And the movement has just begun. The warmth of the churches is to save Christ's poor from freezing.

Meanwhile at the Bowery Mission the men keep crowding in. One night so eager were they to get out of the cold that when the inner doors were opened the crowd surged in, breaking the iron gate before it could be folded back. They lie there on the benches, packed in tight, and on the stone floor, under the seats. They crowd upstairs to the floors above and sink gratefully down wherever they can find a place.

And they are not bums nor hoboes, nor drunks, nor panhandlers, these fellows. They can't find work; that is all. So of course they haven't the ten cents they need for a bed, nor the two cents for a cup of coffee.

Willing to work? Give them a chance. While the ruins of the Equitable Building were being hurriedly cleared away the manager sent word to Mr. Hunt that he wanted thirty men at once to work all night. Mr. Hunt answered that he would have them there in three-quarters of an hour. The manager was skeptical. Could he find them? Would they come? Would they work?"

Mr. Hunt said: "I can give you 30 or 300. And they will work."

This was the night the boys broke the gate. Mr. Hunt put the question to them one by one after he had them inside.

"It's an all night job. I think they will give you something to eat at midnight, but I'm not sure. Twenty cents an hour."

Understand, these men were right in off the sidewalk, and there is no likelihood that they had had any supper, nor dinner. And the first thirty men who were asked agreed to go; and the squad showed up unbroken at the appointed hour, much to the manager's amazement.

Meanwhile letters from the pastors are coming in saying that they will continue to help, and others are joining the ranks.

To-night the wind will be rising a tone or two on the scale; the blinds will shake on their fastenings a little more savagely; perhaps, if your bed is near the open window, a flake of snow, slipping in, will float down lightly to your face. You will wake up and reach out to draw the extra comforter from the footboard, tucking it lazily under your ears. Then you will drift back to sleep, smiling.

And these brothers of yours and mine will be huddled on the mission benches and on the floor. Some of them will be seeking wistfully an open door under the steeple where the bells are chiming. More doors will be open night by night, and week by week. And when spring comes again, conquering frost and snow, the churches will have been blest with new grace, and the humble brothers of the streets will be surer than they have been hitherto that the Church of Jesus is their friend.

A boon to the busy housewife is a dessert all ready to serve. By using

There's no lie on the label

There's no LYE in the can

She will find variety, flavor and perfection.

"Hunt for Hunt's"
They're worth looking for.

The grocers who carry them are grocers who deserve your patronage.

Write at once for particulars of our World's Fair Contest. 100 Free Trips to California.

HUNT BROS. CO.
112 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

BECOME A NURSE

"I have found The Chautauqua School of Nursing prompt and reliable. The school has done all it could to make my studies a success. With pluck and perseverance there is no reason why one cannot became an efficient and successful nurse by taking this course. This statement has been endorsed by physicians for whom I have worked. I have been employed by eight different physicians since taking the C. S. N. Course"—Clara Huffner, (photo) Donnellson, Iowa.

Send for a copy of "How I Became a Nurse" and our Year Book explaining methods; 248 pages with intensely interesting experiences by our graduates, who mastered the art of professional nursing by the C. S. N. home-study course.

Thousands of our graduates, with and without previous experience, are to-day earning $10 to $25 a week

TENTH YEAR

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St.,
Jamestown, N. Y.

HOW TO GET BETTER LIGHT From KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Recent test by Prof. Rogers, Lewis Institute, Chicago, and Prof. McKergow, McGill University Montreal, on leading oil burning lamps show the Aladdin Mantle Lamp is the most economical and gives over twice as much light as the Rayo and other lamps tested. It is odorless, safe, clean, noiseless. Better light than gas or electric. Every Aladdin Lamp fully guaranteed and protected by patents in nearly every country on earth. Our burners fit your old lamps. To introduce the Aladdin, we will give in each neighborhood. Send postal with name and address, ask for cat- AGENTS Ball sold over 1000 on money back slogue M. guarantee—not one returned. Bruner sold $800 in 15 days. Ask for liberal agency proposition. Sample lamp furnished.

ONE LAMP or BURNER FREE

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 104 Aladdin Building, Chicago, Ill.

Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, Blankets

FROM THE MILL 33⅓% SAVED

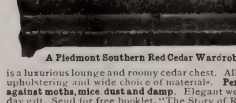
Buy from the manufacturers and save dealers' profits. 25,000 satisfied customers.

Well-known Regal Rugs, 6x9, Reversible, all-wool finish, $3.75. Brussels Rugs, 9x12, greatest value known, $3.60. Splendid grade Brussels Rug, 9x12, $8.75. Famous Invincible Velvets, 9x12, $16. Standard Axminsters, 9x12, $16.80. Best quality Lace Curtains, 45c per pair and up. Tapestry Curtains, Wilton Rugs, Linoleum and Furniture at mill and factory prices. Write today for our New Illustrated Catalog, No. 15, showing designs in actual colors. SENT FREE.

UNITED MILLS MFG. CO. 2438-62 JASPER ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WE PAY FREIGHT

Moth-Proof Wardrobe Couch



A Piedmont Southern Red Cedar Wardrobe Couch

is a luxurious lounge and roomy cedar chest. All prices. Finest upholstering and wide choice of materials. Perfect protection against moths, mice dust and damp. Elegant wedding or birthday gift. Send for free booklet, "The Story of Red Cedar" and big illustrated catalog showing full line of couches, chests and chiffoberes. Many sizes and styles. Shipped DIRECT FROM FACTORY AT FACTORY PRICES ON 15 DAYS' FREE TRIAL. ALL FREIGHT CHARGES PREPAID BY US. Write us TODAY.

PIEDMONT RED CEDAR CHEST CO., Dept. 21, Statesville, N.C.

GRAND TO LIVE

And the Last Laugh is Always the Best

"Six months ago I would have laughed at the idea that there could be anything better for a table beverage than coffee," writes an Ohio woman, "now I laugh to know there is.

"Since childhood I drank coffee freely as did the other members of the family. The result was a puny, sickly girl; and as I grew into womanhood I did not gain in health, but was afflicted with heart trouble, a weak and disordered stomach, wrecked nerves and a general breaking down, till last winter, at the age of 38, I seemed to be on the verge of consumption.

"My friends greeted me with 'How bad you look! What a terrible color!' and this was not very comforting.

"The doctors and patent medicines did me absolutely no good. I was thoroughly discouraged.

"Then I gave up coffee and commenced Postum. At first I didn't like it, but after a few trials and following the directions exactly, it was grand. It was refreshing and satisfying. In a couple of weeks I noticed a great change.

"I became stronger, my brain grew clearer, I was not troubled with forgetfulness as in coffee times, my power of endurance was more than doubled.

"The heart trouble and indigestion disappeared and my nerves became steady and strong.

"I began to take an interest in things about me. Housework and home-making became a pleasure. My friends have marveled at the change and when they enquire what brought it about I answer 'Postum, and nothing else in the world.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

LADY WANTED AS REPRESENTATIVE

in unoccupied territory to introduce a beautiful line of imported and American fabrics, consisting of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, lidkfs., petticoats, etc.

The line is very strong on beautiful hand embroidered St Gall Swiss, Belfast Linens, white and colored Mercerized Cottons, fine Egyptian Tissues, Voiles and other beautiful novelties.

Many exclusive patterns not shown by other houses of this character.

Energetic ladies who will thoroughly cover their local territory preferred. To such, a good income is assured as we pay liberal commissions and protect territory. Business continues the year around. Liberal credit extended to responsible ladies upon satisfactory reference.

Several hundred choice samples with full instructions, express prepaid in an attractive sample case.

Business can be started at once without expense to yourself. We guarantee our materials to give satisfaction. An assured income for you.

Your immediate inquiry will receive our prompt attention.

Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3-A. A., Binghamton, N. Y.

Buy the Original

ZIMMERMANN "AUTOHARP"

"The Nation's Favorite"

None genuine without our trade mark "Autoharp." A musical instrument adapted to all classes. Actual music goes to direct from us.

"Easy to Play, Easy to Buy."

Send for Free catalog. Up-to-date music. Write today.

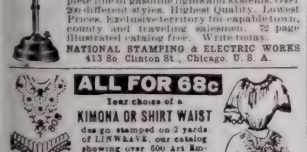
THE PHONO-HARP CO.
East Boston, Mass

Nulite Gasoline Table Lamp

A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c. p. brilliant light ½ cent per hour. Saves 90% of your light bill.

AGENTS Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory for capable users, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
413 So. Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.



ALL FOR 68c

Your choice of a

KIMONA OR SHIRT WAIST

dress pattern stamped on 2 yards of LINWAVE, our catalog showing over 600 Art Embroidery designs and 20 different embroidery stitches.

ALL DELIVERED FOR 68C.

P. W. Keller Co.
Waterloo, Iowa

POST CARDS

10 Valentine - - - - 10c
10 St. Patrick's Day - 10c
10 General Subjects - 10c
10 Washington's Birthday 10c
10 Birthday - - - - - 10c
10 Greetings - - - - - 10c

Three different packages mailed for 25c. One package of each of above 30 high grade cards mailed for 50 cents; 100 for 90 cents. We mail a special assortment of any of the above subjects for 60 cents per 100.

MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

Famous Author-Preachers

IN A RECENT issue of one of the great metropolitan dailies, Mr. E. J. Edwards instances a number of well-known authors who are at the same time engaged in the active pastorate of well-known churches. He speaks of Dr. Lyman Abbott, who, even at his advanced age, is carrying on his combined professions of clergyman and author. The most notable examples he cites are Charles W. Gordon, who is perhaps as well known to the world as Ralph Connor. Mr. Gordon's entry into the profession of literature might also be taken as a type of many of those who follow in the course of the article, for it was to a certain extent unpremeditated.

"My break into literature was accidental, as well as providential for me," said Mr. Gordon on a recent visit to New York. "I had lived to be thirty-eight and no thought of ever getting into print had ever entered my head. I had been pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Winnipeg for about four years and was deeply interested in missions, especially at the mining and lumber camps of the Canadian Northwest. The apathy shown by the people of my own denomination got on my nerves, and the small size of the appropriation made by the Committee on Missions for my district so exasperated me that I went to the editor of a religious weekly published at Toronto and told him what I thought of the matter. I asked him to wage a campaign for mission funds through his columns, and he gave me permission to ventilate myself. 'Put it in the form of a story,' he advised, 'or no one will read it.'

"It was an untried proposition, but it seemed possible. I had lived among the people I wanted to help so long that I knew them and their condition and had but to tell the truth to make an interesting story. I sat right down in that office and wrote a sketch—what is now the first chapter of Black Rock. When it was finished, I showed it to my friend, and he was very complimentary. 'It's good enough to print,' he said, 'and it will go into our next issue.' I was not willing that my name should appear in connection with the story, for it might have put me on bad terms with the Mission Board. Ralph Connor was the invention of my Westminster friend. I never heard of Ralph until I saw his name at the end of my story. I have never had any reason to cut his acquaintance."

Another name which has become known throughout the world as that of one of the great literary clergymen is Cyrus Townsend Brady. Dr. Brady was graduated from the United States Naval Academy but found that he was unsuited for the life of the sea. He went into railway construction engineering and it was not until several years later that he took up the study of theology and became a Protestant Episcopal minister. It was not until he was thirty-eight years of age that Dr. Brady "happened" into literature, as he chooses to phrase it. It was because he needed funds to carry on his mission work that he took up writing and though since then forty popular books have come from his pen he has never allowed his literary career to interfere with his profession as a clergyman.

Charles M. Sheldon is another of the famous clergyman-authors. When Mr. Sheldon's first book appeared in 1891 his name was known only to the comparatively small circle of his home city, Topeka, Kansas. Ten years later, his name was known through the whole civilized world and this rather mild-mannered, shy Congregational minister had become a greater importance to the American newspaper world than any other novelist of the day. His comings and goings and sayings were flashed by wire all over the country like those of a President. During the intervening years, millions of volumes of his books had been sold.

The works of Dr. Reuben A. Torrey, although all of a religious and evangelical nature, have been translated into more different languages and dialects than those of any other clergyman either living or dead. Dr. Henry Van Dyke has taken a place as one of the foremost men of letters of the day, yet he does not allow his professorship of English Literature in Princeton University, or his successful career as an author to interfere with his regular duties as pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York City.

Mr. Edwards names many more clergymen whose personalities are familiar to all the reading public of America. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, though still in the active pastorate, has found time to provide the publishers with material which makes for him a popularity entirely outside his vogue as a forceful pulpit orator. Dr. Parkhurst, having become famous as a great preacher, has added to that fame the laurels of a well-known author and writer for the daily press.

Called Higher

Lewis K. Chandler (58), of Montchanin, Del., was called to his heavenly home on April 30, 1911.

Harlow Fassett (82), passed away on October 15, 1911, at Binghamton, N. Y. He was for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. L. W. Gray (63), a prominent woman of Indianapolis, Ind., died September, 1911. She was one of the first school teachers of that city, where she taught for many years.

Mrs. Mary H. Hall (70), after long suffering, died at Ravenna, O., September last. Mrs. Hall was the writer of many poems, two of which have been placed in standard song books.

Mr. A. Spencer Wolcott (84), of Fayette, Mo., died August 23, 1911. He was an earnest Christian worker, and as a member of the Salvation Army was instrumental in saving many souls.

Mrs. T. W. Waring (68), of Hartsells, Ala., was called home to her reward on December 18, 1911. The poor and needy were never denied her charities. She was for twenty years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Fannie C. Moore (70), a resident of Austin, Texas, since 1873, died suddenly in that city November last. She was the widow of Rev. F. Carson Moore, one of the religious pioneers of Texas. Mrs. Moore was a life subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Frederick P. Allen (79) died recently at Troy, N. Y., where he was for many years prominently identified with commercial, political and social interests in which he adhered to the strictest principles of honesty and integrity. He was long a subscriber to this magazine.

Answered Prayers

E. T. S., Lubbock, Texas. "I want to acknowledge prayers answered."

G. A. B., Wilcox, W. Va. "I desire to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering prayer."

E. C., Creighton, Mo. "I wish to acknowledge to the world that the Lord has answered my prayer."

Mrs. M. K., Moundridge, Kan. "I know God hears and answers prayers, for he has helped me through great trials."

E. M. A., Elderton, Pa. "I was in great trouble for almost two years, and I went in prayer to God. He has answered my prayer."

H. B. McC., Bellingham, Wash. "I kept praying to the Lord to heal my body, and he has taken away all my pains and I am well again."

G. J., Wethersfield, Conn. "I prayed to God that I might have strength to overcome an evil habit. My prayer was answered, and to-day I am free."

Mrs. W. B. O., Timonium, Md. "I want to acknowledge that the Lord has heard and answered my prayers many times, and I bless his holy name."

Mrs. A. VanD., Georgia. "My baby was sick for six long weeks and I asked the Lord to restore her to health. He has answered my prayers."

Mrs. M. J. C., Littleton, Colo. "The Lord has healed me of an almost incurable disease, and I wish to acknowledge to the world his answer to prayer."

"Our Folks" Wrote This Advertisement

Here is an advertisement made up of phrases culled from letters written by Farm Journal subscribers:

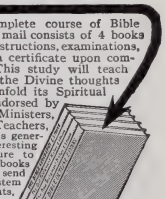
"It beats everything I have ever seen in the value you get for the money you give for it. . . . We cannot keep house without it. . . . It is the most instructive paper that comes to our home. . . . When I want reliable information on any subject I consult Farm Journal. . . . It's the only paper my wife reads, and we take many others. . . . The variety and quality of its material is surprising. . . . To stop it would be like stopping the visits of a good friend."

Pretty strong advertisement, isn't it?—and remember it was written by our subscribers, not by us—and we could print easily a thousand such advertisements from the letters we have on file. Wherever you live, whatever your business, you need such a paper in your home. For only $1 we'll send it monthly for five years.

FARM JOURNAL
184 N. Clifton Street, Philadelphia

I WILL TEACH YOU THE BIBLE

My complete course of Bible study by mail consists of 4 books with full instructions, examinations, etc., with a certificate upon completion of the course. This study will teach you fully to understand the Divine thoughts of the Bible and will unfold its Spiritual meaning. It is fully endorsed by ministers, is adapted to Ministers, Sunday School Officers, Teachers, Parents and Bible students generally. My course is so interesting that it becomes a pleasure to study. Write me for my books and start now. I will gladly send you endorsements of my system by leading ministers, students, etc., upon request.



Prof. E. S. Young, D. D.
Dept. 2. Canton, Ohio

Some fine day You'll Come West!

Yes sir, yes ma'am, you'll come right into this garden land of yours where birds sing and flowers bloom all year; where winter is but a name! You'll come into your own in the wonder states of the Pacific Coast!

Life's Worth Living to sit by the winter's fire and plan what you'll do about the real west; not this year, perhaps, but before many years. For the call of the real west is right in your blood.

Will you listen to over 100,000 men and women—members of the Sunset League—who want you to know the real west as they know it? Will you kindly sign and mail the accompanying coupon TODAY? And enter into the spirit of good living and sunshine and gladness!

We want to tell you the name of a family in your own neighborhood who know the real west. They want to help you now, too.

A 2c Stamp brings to your home or office immediately a sample copy of "Sunset-The Pacific Monthly Magazine," with its magnificent four-color photographs of Western scenes; a booklet describing the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco and the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego in 1915; and any one of our descriptive booklets about California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona or New Mexico.

Besides, that 2c stamp puts at your command the "Sunset-The Pacific Monthly" Information Bureau. Let it tell you everything you want to know about this real west of yours. And we'll send information about the Sunset League that has no dues.

"GET ACQUAINTED" COUPON

SUNSET-THE PACIFIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE
INFORMATION BUREAU, San Francisco, Cal.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed find 2c stamp. Please send, fully prepaid, Exposition booklets, marked copy of Sunset-The Pacific Monthly Magazine, and booklet about

_____, without any further obligation on my part.

Name _____

Street _____

City or town _____ State _____ F-2

Anti-Saloon Convention

THE Anti-Saloon League of America held its Fourteenth National Convention in Washington, D. C., recently. Several hundred enthusiastic delegates from forty-three States were in attendance. The convention's close not only saw the temperance forces in general more united and aggressive than ever, but the adjournment was the signal for the opening of a nation-wide campaign for a bill to limit the interstate liquor traffic.

A banquet, at which nearly four hundred sat down, including more than fifty Senators and Congressmen, not to mention ex-governors and distinguished workers from many States, was the opening feature. The following day, two sessions were held in the Calvary Baptist Church, attended by 172 delegates, representing 39 States and 26 organizations. Governor Mann of Virginia presided at the morning session and Mr. George W. Norton of Portland, Me., during the afternoon. The proceedings at the banquet had included addresses by Dr. Baker, Senator Curtis of Kansas, Congressman Sheppard of Texas, Ex-Governor Hanly of Indiana, and others, all pleading the necessity for a bill which will prevent the "dry" community being provided with liquors under the Federal protection of interstate commerce. The sessions of the following day concerned themselves with the same topic. There was a spirited legal debate, in which Ex-Governor Hanly, Mr. Fred S. Caldwell, an Oklahoma lawyer, Judge Alexander of Mississippi, and others took part. The main difference of opinion came as to whether the proposed law should direct itself to prosecuting liquor shippers as soon as the consignment passed the State line into "dry" territory, or to prove the purpose of shipment contrary to the laws of the State to which it was consigned. A committee was appointed, which met on Saturday, and decided by majority vote to endorse the Webb bill, modified somewhat, which involves the proving of unlawful intent.

Hon. John G. Woolley gave a splendid address at the opening mass meeting on "Prohibition with the People Behind It." Next night Governor Noel of Mississippi and Congressman Hobson of Alabama supplied the inspirational element with strong speeches. A third evening's program was filled by speeches from Dr. George R. Stuart, Mr. Ernest H. Cherrington, and Judge Blair of Portsmouth, O., "the man who cleaned up Adams County." Senator Luke Lea of Tennessee, the tall, handsome, stalwart "Baby of the Senate," added his plea for a law against the interstate liquor traffic. Among the other speakers were Dr. Homer C. Stuntz, of the Methodist Foreign Board, on "Foreign Missions and the Liquor Traffic"; Mr. Fillmore Condit of New Jersey on "Alcohol and Insanity"; Mr. G. R. Moore of Newark, N. J., on "Temperance in the Army"; Rev. Joseph Clark, D.D., of Columbus, O., S. E. Nicholson and others.

Superintendent Baker's report was a militant one. He demanded an increase of his working force from 350 men now in the field to 1,000. If the present Congress did not enact the needed legislation against the interstate liquor traffic, a body would be elected which would do so.

Legislative Superintendent S. E. Nicholson, in his report, gave a survey of the interstate legislation question. Interesting, too, were the reports from Maine, where prohibition just won, and from Texas, where it almost won. Then there was a report on the growing work of the Lincoln Legion, in which Dr. H. H. Russell, founder of the Anti-Saloon League, is enrolling thousands of boys for total abstinence. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, Bishop Wilson, and Dr. Ervin S. Chapman of California were among the other speakers. The sessions were held in the historic First Presbyterian edifice, and in Calvary Baptist Church. The sessions were enlivened by enthusiastic singing, led by Prof. E. O. Excell of Chicago. The choice of the next place of meeting, two years hence, will be left to the Board of Trustees.

THE LAST LETTER

Continued from page 108

I and was able to tell me many things which contributed to my success.

"During his illness I learned several things which I did not know, although I have been with him constantly for more than a year. He left home when but a boy because of a quarrel with his father. His name is Bascom."

The old man by the fire ceased to nod and sat up stiff and straight. What was this girl with the musical voice reading so calmly? Could Ned be Edward, who he had always believed had slept beneath the Southern soil for years?

"Strange to say," the girl continued reading, "he was raised only a few miles from our new home. If you see his father tell him that we shall be in Midway in two or three days. With us we shall bring enough to quiet forever your financial worries. By-by until we meet again."

The joyous wife and the children were silenced by the sudden activity of their visitor.

"Will you read that again, Miss?" he cried, rushing over to the chair where the girl was sitting, "that about Ned Bascom. Can it be my boy who I thought was dead, coming back to his father? Read it, Miss!"

Slowly and carefully the girl read once more the news which meant so much to Jeremiah Bascom.

The stars were shining in a clear sky when the old man drove into the lot at home. In a maze of joy, all the long way he had been singing and turning this question over in his mind: What if he had not done his duty?

The old wife, who had been frightened because of his long absence, met him at the door, tears raining over her cheeks, but the complaining words were never spoken. Silenced by the joy written on her husband's face, Mary Bascom listened for the words: "Glory to God, Mary! Our son who was lost is found!"

A few days later a bearded man, who had gone away a dimpled boy, arrived in Midway with money enough to keep his parents in comfort until the end of their days. The tangled business affairs were made straight. Jim the mail carrier was cheered by a substantial present which made him forget the worries of convalescence, but only Jeremiah Bascom knew of the sudden transition from joy to sorrow which came on that winter day, when he delivered the last letter.

A Western Reader's Appreciation

Dear Christian Herald: As well as I remember, it was in 1889 I first became a reader of your paper. Several years later, I had the paper sent to my mother, and I do not think I have missed a number during all these years, and I want to say, except from the Bible, I have had more encouragement and real pleasure from it than anything else I have read. The work you are doing is one of good far beyond me to express in words. I have watched you grow from year to year, and while I have been able to assist in the work but little, my sincere, heartfelt interest has been with you and the good work you are doing. T. E. ADAMS.
Del Norte, Colo.

THIS BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAVURE, IN COLORS, FREE. To every member of the great Christian Herald Family who will send us a list of 10 names of boys who will be likely to sell THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, together with 10 cents in coin or stamps to cover the cost of postage, packing and handling, we will deliver—Free—the famous photogravure of "Dreamland," measuring 18x13 inches, in water color applied by hand.

Read the Following

NO barrier, however formidable; no obstacle, however insurmountable it may seem to the timid or faint-hearted boy, can bar the way to any boy possessed with honest and earnest enthusiasm.

Lincoln was consumed with a desire for education. He walked six miles to borrow a grammar, and after returning home with the precious prize, burned one pine knot after another while he studied its problems. He did not dream of the White House in those toilsome days and nights when his enthusiasm urged him on. Who shall say it was not the early enthusiasm that made him the liberator of millions of his fellow men and the hero of every American boy?

Boys are always dreaming about genius, of what it can accomplish, and wondering why they do not have it. They do not understand, perhaps, that enthusiasm is the right hand of success, and that persistency performs miracles. They do not realize, as you do, that the great majority of men who have risen to be superintendents, managers and proprietors of great businesses, found their first opportunity at the bottom rungs of the ladder, and in their boyhood desires and pleasures.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can help your boy and others. They will surely earn good incomes if they do a little work for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week; but better than that—they will become more self-reliant and more manly. Read how easy it is to sell THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Chadron, Neb., January 8, 1912

Dear Christian Herald Publishers:—I got my first ten papers this evening after school and sold all in about an hour of canvassing. Had in mind a number of people I was sure would buy, but did not get to them at all. I enclose my order for 20 more papers.
Yours truly, FLOYD EDWARDS.

Saskatoon, Sask., Jan. 6, 1912

Dear Sirs:—I received five copies of The Christian Herald yesterday morning. I sold them all in twenty-five minutes. I like my job fine. I hope I'll win the pony.
Yours sincerely, NELSON VOGAN, 507 Avenue G, South.

Aurora, Ill., January 12, 1912

Christian Heralds sell fine here. I received 15 copies at 3:30; all gone at 5:00. Enclosed find order for 30 copies. THOMAS PATERSON, Jr.

Your boy is making his life now; let THE CHRISTIAN HERALD help.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

6% BONDS Six Per Cent and Par for 24 Years

THIS is the record of the American Real Estate Company's 6% Gold Bonds, based on its ownership of selected New York real estate. That this security is REAL and DEPENDABLE and its earning power assured is shown by the tremendous advance in New York realty, whose assessed valuation of $7,525,474,063 marks a gain of nearly 15% per annum for the last ten years.

¶ For nearly a quarter of a century A-R-E Six's have sold at par, paid 6% interest, and matured at par, returning to investors nearly $8,000,000.

¶ A-R-E Six's assure safety of principal and certainty of interest, and also offer unusual conveniences, including cash convertibility.

¶ They are issued in these forms: 6% Coupon Bonds, for those who wish to invest $100 or more. 6% Accumulative Bonds, for those who wish to save $25 or more a year.

¶ Descriptive matter, map and views of New York sent free on request.

American Real Estate Company

Capital and Surplus, $2,011,247.80
Founded 1888 Assets, $23,026,889.67

Room 534, 527 Fifth Avenue, New York

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.
¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.
¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.
¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.
¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.
¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

Write today for the Book
Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED
in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 Bicycle. Write for special offer.
We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL and prepay freight on every bicycle.
FACTORY PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalogs and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer.
Tires, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, half prices.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. M 71, Chicago, Ill

Print Your Own
Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $18. Rotary $60. Save money. Rest for all printing. Type, all easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog, type, cards, paper, etc.
THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut

WILDCAT INVESTMENTS

A FEW weeks ago Julian Hawthorne, a son of the illustrious Nathaniel Hawthorne, and himself a writer of some note, appeared before the Criminal Branch of the United States Court in New York City, to answer to a charge of using the mails to defraud. The specific charges against Mr. Hawthorne and his associates, among whom is Josiah Quincy, ex-mayor of Boston, is that they had induced the public to invest to the extent of $3,000,000 in the stock of various companies owning worthless mines or mining rights in Canada. To persuade the public to buy these stocks, the literary gifts of Mr. Hawthorne contributed more than any other element. He wrote personal letters to thousands of citizens of the United States setting forth the enormous profits to be realized in the mining properties and advising the purchase of stock before the price was advanced. The apparently friendly and guileless style of these letters proved peculiarly effective and led great numbers of people all over the country to invest their hard-earned savings in the shares of the Hawthorne Companies. It is the claim of the United States Government that these investors will never get anything from their interest in these companies, except the beautiful gold-sealed stock certificates which were issued to them. In other words, the public invested $3,000,000 and got nothing, if the contention of the government is correct.

The bringing to light of fraudulent schemes of this character should impress the people of this country with the extreme danger of putting their money in enterprises of which they know nothing except for the letters and advertisements they read regarding them, written by those who have the stock to sell. Yet the fact remains that the country is flooded with letters and advertisements offering for sale stock in mining, real estate and manufacturing companies, and promising huge profits, and that not one in a thousand of these companies will ever pay back to the investors a cent of profit or principal. The pathetic fact always reveals itself in connection with these swindles that it is not the wealthy or the well-to-do who are made the victims of these enterprises, but the poor and those in moderate circumstances, whose savings represent years of self-denying economy, and who are led away by promises of quick and large returns on their investments. The plan adopted by the promoters of most of these companies is to advertise and sell stock in localities as far away as possible from the plant or mine or real estate which the stock is supposed to represent. This prevents inconvenient inspections by the prospective investor. Experience has shown, too, that distance lends enchantment in such cases, and that the farther away the victim is from the locality of the investment, the more attractive the investment seems to him. After the investment is once made, and the savings of the investor safe in the pockets of the promoter who sold the stock—for that is as far as it generally gets—the very fact that no return is made on the investment can be used as a source of additional profit by the promoter, for after a time inquiries begin to pour in from anxious investors asking why no dividends have been paid, or if any have been paid why they have ceased. In reply to this the promoter answers that if the stock certificate is returned, and an additional payment made, the stock can be exchanged for that of some other and more successful company. The new company may then proceed to pay one or two small dividends, and the promoter pockets this second payment, which his victims have oftentimes ruined themselves to make, and the new stock soon proves as worthless as the old.

There is no adequate remedy at law for the victims of these swindlers, for they generally have no funds left to employ attorneys, the company whose stock they hold has nothing, the promoter's ill-earned fortune cannot be reached, and nothing remains but a beautiful stock certificate, and the lesson learned at the expense of the savings of a lifetime. The fact that the promoter may be convicted by the government of the crime of using the mails to defraud, and imprisoned for a term of years, is cold comfort to those whose funds have contributed to his defense.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers these simple facts relative to investments:

1. The fact that a company has a large so-called "paid-up" capital is no proof that its properties are of any value.

2. In all probability the money paid by small investors for the stock of unknown companies will never get beyond the pockets of promoters, though a small percentage of it may be returned as "dividends" as a bait for further contributions.

3. Don't invest your savings in any company which does not give you good references both as to itself and as to its promoters, unless you are personally acquainted with the actual business and prospects of the company. Besides this, get a financial report of the company and go over it with some one experienced in investments of the character offered.

4. Do not invest in stock at all. A good well-secured bond, a high-class first mortgage, a secured note, a savings bank, are to be preferred.

5. Be content with a small rate of interest and safety. Most experienced capitalists are.

Why Not Our Own Tea?

OUTSIDE of the consumption in Ceylon, China and Japan, at present the chief lands of production, the commercial world consumes annually 700,000,000 pounds of tea, or about one-half pound for every human being on the earth's surface. Although we are considered a coffee-drinking nation, yet we consume yearly about 70,000,000 pounds, or one-tenth of the total exported from tea-producing countries, and costing us at the lowest estimate, $16,000,000. In the days of John C. Calhoun, the wide-awake planters of South Carolina believed that their State, favored in so many other ways, was well adapted to tea culture. The experiment was tried before our Civil War, and but for that event, the first venture would, long ere this, have been a demonstrated economic success. Again, under the encouragement of the government, South Carolina is turning her attention to the tea-plant. It has been proven that, next to wheat, there is no plant that so readily adapts itself to a wide range of conditions as does the tea shrub, or tree. The countries now producing tea for export have the seemingly great but really doubtful advantage of cheap labor, for such a condition cramps initiative and makes for stagnation. American ingenuity is already testing mechanical pruners and pickers, meant to do quickly and thoroughly what the human hand has so far done laboriously. While it is not well to prophesy, unless one knows, it requires no great gift of penetration to foretell that within the next generation the United States will be growing, if not all the tea necessary, certainly a goodly part of it, and that part of a goodly quality and at a reasonable price.

Short Term Investments

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations. In addition, such securities, particularly of the larger issues, usually command a ready market and are less subject to wide fluctuations in price.

We have prepared a booklet giving brief descriptions of the principal issues of such securities, which we will be pleased to furnish on request.

Ask for Booklet S-642

Guaranty Trust Company of New York
28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - 156,000,000

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES
For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

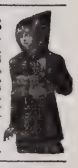
Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

CHOICE VIRGINIA FARMS
ALONG THE
Chesapeake & Ohio Ry

Abundant rainfall (4 in. per month) rich soil, mild winters, close Eastern markets. 10 acre farms $275. Write today for booklet "Country Life in Virginia" (154 pages) and low excursion rates.
Address K. T. CRAWLEY, Industrial Agent, C. & O. Ry. Room 10, Richmond, Virginia
$15.00 AN ACRE AND UP

Adirondack Mackinaws



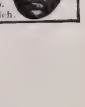
for men and women help you in your Winter's fun and comfort. They cost $8. Made of pure virgin wool; wind-proof and almost water-proof. Various solid colors, mixtures, stripes and plaids, 35 inches long, 5-inch storm collar and detachable storm hood. State regular coat size and color. Sample cloths in all color and combinations sent on request. Ask for large illustrated catalog of outdoor outfittings.
W. C. LEONARD & CO.
114 Main Street, Saranac Lake, N. Y.

SALESMEN WANTED

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD wants in every State in the United States and every province in Canada, an intelligent traveling salesman, agent, or organizer who may desire to secure a highly profitable side line, paying $25 to $50 per month and upward. No samples to carry, no house-to-house canvassing. Work will bring our representatives in touch with the best Christian people in every community. Full information will be sent if you address The Sales Manager, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

WANTED—MEN
Prepare as Fireman, Brakeman, Electric Motorman, Train Porters (colored). Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 a month. No experience necessary. 500 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for Application Blank and Book. State position.
I. Railway C. I., No. 16 Indianapolis, Ind.

Do You STAMMER
Send for my 200 page book with Free Trial Lesson explaining methods for Home Cure. Established 15 years. Reputation world-wide.
G. A. LEWIS, 34 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.



JESUS, THE BOY OF BOYS*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE child grew"—Jesus grew. If Jesus had not been born a child, and grown as a child, it could not have been said of him that he was "One that hath been tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. 4: 15), for children have temptations as well as grown-up people.

"Waxed strong." (The Revised Version omits "in spirit.") His little body day by day gained strength, first to sit up, then to stand, then to walk, then to run, then to work in the home, and in the carpenter shop of Joseph. Every mother and Sunday School teacher should make a collection of pictures of the childhood of Jesus, copies of pictures by the great masters, costing but one cent each, cabinet size, and smaller, one-half cent each. These should be pasted in a scrap book, or on a long strip of paper folded in book form, the children doing the work assisted by the mother.

The Home Training of Jesus

"Filled with wisdom." Undoubtedly Jesus had the same training that was given to other little boys in Nazareth; first he had the home teaching, beginning with the Mezuzah, which was a small roll of parchment having the name of Jehovah on the outside, and hung up in a little case at the side of the entrance door. As parents passed in and out of the house with the little child in arms, they would reverently touch the Holy Name, and then kiss their fingers. First the child would wonder, and then come to understand the lesson of reverence toward God. Then there were certain feasts observed in all Jewish homes, and undoubtedly in the home of Joseph and Mary, such as the weekly blessing of the house; the week of unleavened bread during the Passover, and the Chanukah, the Feast of the Dedication of the Temple, with its illumination in each house. The first evening one candle would be lit for each member of the household, the number increasing each night till on the eighth it was eight times that of the first.† And then there was the Feast of Tabernacles, when the whole of the family, even the youngest child, lived for a week in a booth of leaves. So it has been said, "Long before a child could go to school, or even to the synagogue, the private and united prayers, and the domestic rites, whether of the weekly Sabbath or of festive seasons, would indelibly impress themselves upon his mind."

How incomprehensible it seems to us that the Infinite swathed in the infant could thus grow in wisdom! But that was God's way of giving a Saviour to all mankind, from youth even to old age.

Jesus' School Days

At five years of age Jesus was undoubtedly sent with other boys to the synagogue school, where he began the study of the Bible, the Pentateuch, or more definitely with the book of Leviticus. We seem to see the little boy Jesus at school, seated on the floor with the other boys in a semi-circle around the teacher, "thus encircled by his pupils as by a crown of glory." Jesus might have had a tin slate, such a one as we secured in a synagogue school in Nazareth, a text of Scripture partly written on it with ink and a reed pen. Until the boys in the Nazareth school were ten years of age they were instructed in the Law and the Prophets, after that in the Poetical and Historical books of the Bible, called by the Jews "the Hagiographa." From ten to fifteen years of age Jesus undoubtedly studied in the synagogue school the Mishna—a Commentary on the Law; during the latter part of that time boys were expected to enter into theological discussions, hearing the rabbis (teachers of the law). Now we understand why Jesus was found among the rabbis, both hearing them and asking them questions.

"Why hast thou thus dealt with us?" Mary and Joseph had taken the boy Jesus at twelve years of age to the temple at Jerusalem, at the time of the Passover, that he might become according to custom "a son of the law" (we would say "join the church"). After they had started on their return journey, they could not find Jesus among the pilgrims, so they went back to Jerusalem to seek for him. After they had sought for him a whole day in the city, they came to the temple, and found him among the doctors (rabbis). He was indeed the center of attraction, a wonderful boy, whose understanding and words astonished everybody who heard him. Notwithstanding this, Mary and Joseph upbraided him because he had lingered behind. And when they told him that they had been seeking for him "sorrowing," he answered in a surprised way, "How is it that ye sought me? Knew ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" It was as if he had said: "It is surprising that you could expect to find me anywhere but here in my Father's house."

"Christ Among the Doctors"

We think everybody has seen a copy of the marvelous picture of the boy Christ among the doctors, painted by Hofmann. Mr. Robert E. Speer in his book, The Master of the Heart, tells the following beautiful story about it: "I went one Sunday afternoon in New York City, not long ago, to a religious meeting, where a man was talking to men about Hofmann's pictures of our Lord. He had an excellent collection of them in stereopticon slides which he was showing to this crowd of men. He reserved until the last the picture of Jesus as a lad, talking with the doctors in the temple. As he threw the picture on the screen, he told the story of how he had come into possession of his copy of it. He had gone to visit Hofmann immediately after the completion of that painting, and the artist gave him the first copy. He brought it home, and put it in his business office in New York City. One day as he was sitting there, a judge of the Supreme Court of one of the New England States came to consult him about some business. He saw the picture standing on the easel. He looked at it all the time he was discussing his business, and after business was over he sat a little while, still looking at the picture, and then went away. Later in the morning he came back and said: 'I want to see that Boy again.' He was invited to sit down, and he sat down, and gazed at that face, at those great open eyes, at that look of purity, which speaks of such hope and strength for men. He sat for nearly an hour looking at it, and then got up, his eyes very moist, and walked away. In the afternoon he came back, and said: 'I would like to see that picture of the Boy once more.' The owner gave it to him and said: 'Go into my private office, sit down, and look at it as long as you want to.' He took the picture, and went into the office, and laid it down in his lap, and wept over it. An hour passed, and then he came out and laid the picture down, and with the tears running down his cheeks he said: 'The Boy has conquered me.' And he went out from that room with the picture of that Boy lingering in his life and transforming it. 'He is living now,' said the speaker, 'an influential Christian man in his own State, teaching scores of young men in his Bible class of him upon whom he had looked, and by whom he had been changed."

Jesus as a Pattern for Boys

"He went down with them." He left the temple and returned to Nazareth with Mary and Joseph. He obeyed those who had the rule over him, being yet a boy.

"Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man," and so there was a beautiful harmony in his unfolding life.

We will say to every boy reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, if you want to be a Christian gentleman, you must be a Christian gentle boy first, and the very best places for you to show forth the Christian graces are in your home, and on the school playground, or in business if you have become an employee.

We cannot think of Jesus as having been an idle boy, or one who had to be urged to get busy. There are beautiful pictures of him helping his mother carry water from the fountain; bearing a board on his shoulder as Joseph directed him out of the shop window where to take it; holding the line while Joseph is marking a chalk line; cleaning up the shop by gathering up the shavings, with his mother Mary sitting by, and doves resting overhead. Opportunities for boys to get busy are continually widening. For example, twenty-one boy corn-growers from the Southern States have recently visited Washington to receive prizes from the Agricultural Department. One boy had raised two hundred and twenty-eight bushels and three pecks of corn on one acre of ground. As a boy Jesus must have had something to do with the fields, or he could not have said so many things about sowers and husbandmen and harvests.

The way Jesus studied the Bible as a boy should be an incentive to every other boy to do the same thing. As we glance through the Old Testament in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Red Letter Bible, where we see printed in red the passages which Jesus quoted afterward in his preaching and teaching, showing that he had learned them when a boy, we can but feel that Bible study is just the right thing for boys. Why would it not be a good plan for each boy to have a Red Letter Bible, so that he might more closely follow Jesus in his Bible study? If a boy can have time to read and study only one book, that book had better be the Bible.

The Guide to Success

When Moses had died, and God had appointed Joshua in his place as leader of Israel, he appeared to Joshua with this message: "As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. . . . This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein, for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and thou shalt have good success." (Joshua 1: 5, 8.)

Above all things to be learned from the boy Jesus is the habit of being found in God's house, and of becoming a son of the law—a son of the Gospel—a member of the Church.

Just as I am, young, strong and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth and righteousness and thee,
Lord of my life, I come!

Premiums Highly Satisfactory

This morning I received The Women of the Bible, by Margaret E. Sangster. It is a splendid book, and the pictures are beautiful, giving one a knowledge of ancient dress. I shall enjoy reading it. The Almanac came a few days ago. It certainly does give much information. Please accept my sincere thanks.

ANNA AGNES THOMAS.

Germantown, Pa.

---

* The International Sunday School Lesson for February 11, 1912. The Boy Jesus in the Temple. Luke 2: 40-52. GOLDEN TEXT: "How is it that ye sought me? Knew ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Luke 2: 49.

† We are indebted to Edersheim on The Upbringing of Jewish Children for these facts.

Lenox Guaranteed Goods Not Sold at Stores

A DOLLAR BILL will bring to your door, all charges prepaid, a "LENOX" Combination Box, containing the biggest kind surprises in merchandise values.

$1.00

FOR THE WOMAN:
2 pairs guaranteed lisle elastic garter welt "LENOX" HOSE with spliced heels and toes, SEAMLESS on top of toes,—Black and Tan. . . . . Value $0
2 exquisite Swiss ribbed "LENOX" UNDERVESTS with elaborate imported hand crochet pattern tops and dainty ribbon effects, ... Value 1
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Retail Value $1.

FOR THE MAN:
3 pairs guaranteed soft lisle "LENOX" HOSE, with Linen toe and heel, choice black, tan, navy, grey, ... Value $1.
A beautiful "Lenox" all silk reversible tie of the latest pattern, to match, . Value 0.
One pair stout silkweb garters carrying the usual "LENOX" guarantee, . . Value 0
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Retail Value $1.

Above items sold with the distinct understanding that money refunded, if you are not entirely satisfied—you to be sole judge in the matter.

When ordering do not forget to state color and sizes desired.

Please remember that the "LENOX" line IS NOT SOLD AT STORES but can only be purchased from us direct or through our accredited agents. This protects you against substitution.

We refer to any bank or commercial agency in N. Y. City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Clerk 3, 5 W. 31st St., New York
We need some good Agents—men and women.

GREGORY'S SEEDS

Here is a big offer of choicest seeds—10 packages—worth 90 Cents—postpaid. 25c coin or stamps

1 pkg. Aster, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture, . . 10c.
1 pkg. Pansy, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture, . . 15c.
1 pkg. Coreopsis, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture, . 5c.
1 pkg. Poppy, Gregory's Fancy Double Mixed Annuals, 10c.
1 pkg. Mignonette, Gregory's Large Flowering, very rich, 10c.
1 pkg. Bachelor Button, Gregory's Finest Mixture . . 10c.
1 pkg. Petunia, Gregory's Finest Hybrid Mixture, . 15c.
1 pkg. Candytuft, Gregory's Finest Mixed. . . . 5c.
1 pkg. Nasturtium, Dwarf, Finest Mixed, . . . 5c.
1 pkg. Sweet Peas, Extra Choice Mixed, . . . 5c.

GREGORY'S HONEST SEEDS

Get our new 1912 catalogue.
J. J. H. GREGORY & SON
109 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.

STOKES' SEEDS

"Seed catalog time" is here and I have a beauty with colored illustrations and a free proposition with cash prizes which you will be interested in.

Send for a copy today—free if you mention The Christian Herald.

Walter P. Stokes, Seedsman
Dept. 40, Philadelphia

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ MFR'S PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15 UP
First-class Machines Fresh from the MFrs—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

Agents, $2.40 per Hour
cannot be made without hustle. No article "sells itself" but some men sell Automatic "Clean" Curry Combs at the rate of a dozen per hour. Sells at 40 cents, worth dollars in time and labor saved. 100% profit and samples on approval if you are ready for business.
Address, CLEAN COMB CO., 107N St., Racine, Wis.

PHONOGRAPH AND PIANO MUSIC
Save from 50 to 65 per cent. by using our circulating libraries of cylinder records and player piano music-rolls. How many and what kind have you?
REGENTS CORPORATION
Dept. "E," University City, St. Louis, Mo.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Relieve Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Coughs, Bronchial and Asthmatic Complaints. Unexcelled for clearing the voice. Free from opiates. Sample free. JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.

LAWN FENCE
Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Coiled Spring Fence Co., Box D Winchester, Ind.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE AT YOUR HOME
Write Today for our Booklet. It tells how to learn to play Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, etc. Beginners or advanced pupils. American School of Music, 63 Lakeside Bldg. Chicago, Ill.

Young People's Societies

The Strong and the Weak*

TENNYSON long ago bewailed the "lust of gain," which has made the hand of power forever oppress the helpless, till only "the ledger lives" and

. . . the poor are hoveled and hustled together like swine.

* * * * * *

And chalk and alum and plaster are sold to the poor for bread,
And the spirit of murder works in the very means of life.
And another is cheating the sick of a few last gasps, as he sits
To pestle a poisoned poison behind his crimson lights.

It seems now as though the day of pure food and pure drugs has dawned; but it is not yet in the full flush of noontide, and even if it should ever come to that, there are plenty more evils of the same sort to cure. The greed of the unregenerate man who feels himself growing stronger and stronger, is apt to keep pace with his power.

Thus was born slavery, probably in the infancy of the race, and it is a shame to our humanity that it was not until the middle of the last century that, first, Great Britain, and then our own country, broke forever the shackles of the slave in the two freest lands on earth. Greece and Rome had a civilization to which, in some respect, our own is inferior; yet the idea of getting the world's work done without slaves was to them incomprehensible. Even their wisest men, in works which in point of style and depth of thought are considered by many critics to surpass any of modern times, astonish the candid reader by the naive manner in which they assume that slavery must always exist, and, on the whole, is a good thing.

Fine men began to work with their hands and saw that it was good for them so to do. It was an epoch in human history when the discovery was made that the refined and tenderly bred could do so-called "menial work" and still preserve their "gentility." For ages the hearts of the generous had yearned over the privations and sufferings of the slave. Now it was revealed that a civilization could exist without him, and still get its work done. It was even claimed that no civilization could fully develop while slavery blotted it.

The arch-apostle of this great doctrine was, perhaps, Abraham Lincoln. He realized, as probably few had ever done before him, that liberty was the dearest treasure of man, and it was his happy lot to bestow it upon millions of his fellow men. It would have come to them ere long in any case, for the spirit of justice was strong among our Southern planters, and a movement was on foot to gradually abolish slavery; but in the providence of God, it was to Lincoln that the task fell.

In the same way, throughout the whole world, slavery must go, not only the slavery of the cotton and rice fields, but all the other minor forms of slavery by which those who can, push wages lower and lower; or form great trusts, under a guise of "economizing production" in order to lower prices, and end by doing just the opposite.

The strength and influence of many great combinations are alarming. They make slaves of mankind; but "instead of the thorn shall come up the myrtle tree." The spirit of brotherhood is abroad in the land, and our God shall make it to prevail.

* Epworth League Topic for Lincoln Sunday, February 11. TEXTS: Amos 8: 4-7; James 5: 4.

The Best Kind of Almanac

I received your Christian Herald Almanac yesterday, and hasten to thank you. We think it very nice indeed, for it contains much valuable information. No one can go without an almanac of some sort, but many of them contain things which we can well go without. I have no doubt your subscribers one and all will be much pleased with the new almanac.

Exeter, N. H. ELIZA W. B.

Generosity*

THE need of cultivating this most captivating of the virtues is well indicated by the constant admonitions of Holy Writ. (See the words of Jesus in Matt. 5: 42; 6: 1; 10: 8; 19: 21; 25: 40; Mark 12: 44; Luke 6: 35, 38; Luke 12: 15, 21, 22, 33; Luke 14: 12-14. Then look through the Acts and Epistles and see how many there are the commands to give.)

But the giving of our money is only one of the modes which Christ has provided for us whereby to show our generosity. Paul says: "To you it hath been granted not only to believe on him, but also to suffer in his behalf."

"We must all," says Henry Kingman, "stand like a rock for the kingdom of Christ among men. That kingdom does not make headway against the world, save by stern effort and self-denial, rooted in prayer and in fellowship with God." It can come only by lavish giving on the part of all of us who are trying to serve him—giving, let us repeat, not only our money but also of our time and thought.

No character in history has more wonderfully illustrated the nobility of this virtue than did Savonarola. Against the wishes of his parents, and desiring only to escape from the awful sin of the period, which saddened and bewildered him, he entered the monastery of St. Dominic. He did not ask to become a monk, but only to be a drudge and to do the most menial work. From this place he went to St. Mark's in Florence. He had heard much of the culture of that beautiful city and he hoped to find virtue there; but there, too, beneath the outward veneer of refinement and education, lurked the same corruption which had so depressed him in other cities. He preached here and there, but his severe denunciation of their favorite sins only offended the people, and they would not go to hear him. At the same time, Fra Mariano, another monk, was preaching and drawing great crowds, with poetry, with classical quotations and philosophy.

"This is only play," said Savonarola. He prayed harder than ever, convinced that sound doctrine, simply preached, was all that would save the people from their sins. The power of the Most High came upon him as he mercilessly condemned the frightful vice of the Church and the populace. After years of this inspired preaching, the people were deeply stirred and a great revival of pure religion took place. But the wicked Pope Alexander VI, with his cardinals and priests, could not bear the bitter attacks of Savonarola, and in 1498 he ordered the great evangelist to be burned to death in the public square of Florence. His last words were, "The Lord hath suffered as much for me." He gave up wealth, comfort, popularity, everything for his Lord.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, February 11. TEXT: II. Cor. 9: 6-15.

15.95 AND UPWARD
AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. The bowl is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:
AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1184 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

11½ CENTS A ROD
For 18-in. Hog Fence, 22 3-4c
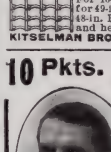
For 49-in. Farm Fence, 27c for 48-in. Poultry Fence. 100 styles and heights. Catalogue free.
KITSELMAN BROS. Box 237 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

10 Pkts. Flower Seed 5c



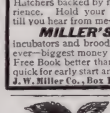
One packet each: Asters, Sweet Alyssum, Calif. Poppy, Candytuft, Larkspur, Phlox Drummondii, Velvet Flower, Poppies, Butterfly Flower, Glorious Mixed. A whole flower garden. Ten popular flowers, easily raised from seed, and an illustrated catalogue for 5c. Send today.
L. L. OLDS SEED CO.
Drawer 31 Madison, Wis.

BEACON LAMP BURNER FREE

100,000 satisfied users
Incandescent. 100 Candle Power. Burns common coal oil. Gives better light than gas, electricity or six ordinary lamps at one-sixth to one tenth the cost. Fits your old lamp. Unequaled for fine sewing or reading. COSTS ONLY ONE CENT FOR SIX HOURS
We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer new customers. Take advantage of our Special Offer to secure a Beacon Burner FREE. Write today. Agents Wanted. HOME SUPPLY COMPANY, 224 Home Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Get This Bargain Offer

Big 1912 surprise on quality and price. Hatchers backed by my 25 years experience. Hold your incubator money till you hear from me—SURE.
MILLER'S IDEAL
incubators and brooders are better than ever—biggest money makers. Miller's Free Book better than ever, too. Write quick for early start and biggest saving.
J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.
Send Your Name Now



SMALL FRUITS
I grow Strawberry, Raspberry, Blackberry and other small Fruit Plants, Grape Vines, Shrubbery, Privet, etc. My FREE Catalogue tells the truth about them, and the prices quoted are fair for good stock, true to name. Write me today. W. F. ALLEN,
23 Market Street, Salisbury, Md.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth.
Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.
B. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

Fresh Air
Sunshine
Scott's Emulsion
Happy Thoughts

Let these Vitalizing Elements
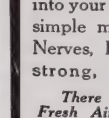
into your home; they are the simple means of keeping Nerves, Brain and Body strong, active, enduring.

There is no substitute for Fresh Air, Sunshine, Happy Thoughts or

Scott's Emulsion

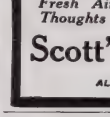
ALL DRUGGISTS 11-63

Great Crops Of . . STRAWBERRIES And HOW to GROW THEM



Is a complete treatise on strawberry culture written by America's greatest strawberry expert. Indorsed by agricultural colleges and strawberry growers of highest authority. Government reports show that strawberries yield more dollars per acre and give quicker returns than any other crop. Get our book and learn how. IT'S FREE!
FREE BOOK
R. M. KELLOGG Co.
Box 670 Three Rivers, Mich.

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK on POULTRY



and Almanac for 1912 has 224 pages with many colored plates of fowls true to life. It tells all about chickens, their prices, their care, diseases and remedies. All about Incubators, their prices and their operation. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It's an encyclopedia of chickendom. You need it. Only 15c.
C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 905 Freeport, Ill.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

These trade-mark criss-cross lines on every package
GLUTEN FLOUR DIET FOR DIABETICS and cures of Kidney and Liver Troubles, Rheumatism, Obesity and ills arising from excess of Uric Acid
Rich in Protein. Ask your physician. Leading grocers. For booklet or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N.Y., U.S.A.

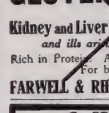
GREIDER'S FINE POULTRY



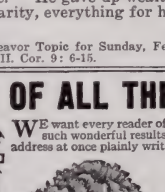
Book and calendar for 1912 contains 200 pages, 72 varieties pure bred, 62 colored plates. Many other illustrations, descriptions. Incubators and brooders. Low prices on all stock eggs. How to raise and make hens lay. Get my plans. They all say it's great—this book—only 15 cents.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 79, Rheems, Pa.

WE PAY $80 A MONTH SALARY
and Turnish rig and all expenses to introduce our guaranteed stock and poultry powders; money-back guarantee; outfit free; new plan; steady work. Address
BIGLER CO., X 562, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS

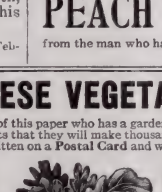
PEACH TREES 800,000 Peaches 5 to 7 feet 10c; 4 to 5 ft. 8c; 3 to 4 ft. 6c; 2 to 3 ft. 4c. 200,000 Apples, 50,000 Pears, 50,000 Plums, 100,000 Cherry, 300,000 Carolina Poplar, and millions of Grape and Small Fruits. Secure varieties now, pay in Spring. Buy from the man who has the goods and save disappointment. Catalogue Free to everybody.
Sheerin's Wholesale Nurseries, Dansville, N. Y.

SEEDS OF ALL THESE VEGETABLES GIVEN AWAY FOR TESTING

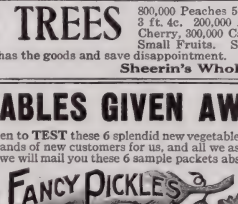
Giant Climbing Tomato—Most wonderful tomato we ever knew. Climbs trellises 12 to 20 feet. Fruits often weigh 2 lbs. each, very smooth and solid, few seeds, handsome red color.



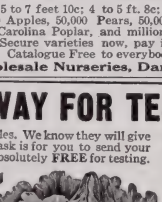
12 Day Lettuce—After once trying this variety you will say it is the quickest grower on record, always very tender, crisp and sweet.



15 Day Radish—A wonder for quick growth. Will produce radishes fit to use in 15 days. Is very crisp and tender, scarlet color.



Fancy Pickles—Here is a cucumber to be proud of. It is a marvel of beauty, grows very quick and just right size for pickling. You should grow this excellent variety.



60 Day Cabbage—Quickest growing cabbage in the world. Heads quick, very solid and splendid quality. Try it and you will say it is a wonder.

Sugar Parsnips—Very best variety for home gardens. Roots large, very smooth, flesh fine-grained and excellent quality

Remember we will send a Sample Packet of all these 6 varieties of SEEDS absolutely FREE to every reader of this paper who has a garden and will test them. Several dollars worth of vegetables can be grown from this lot of seeds. Write your name and address plainly on a Postal Card and it will bring them. Do it today before all the sample lots are taken.
Our 1912 CATALOGUE of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, and Rare Fruits with our Special Bargain List with Color Plates, will be sent FREE with every lot.
Address—MILLS SEED HOUSE, Dept. 21, ROSE HILL, N. Y.

The Wheel of Fortune keeps turning in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana.

Every Month turns out profit for the Gulf Coast Farmer

HE does not earn for a few months and yearn for the balance. His year is a complete circle of profits and big profits too. He is traveling the road to wealth with the throttle wide open and a clear track ahead. He no sooner markets one crop and banks the profits than he plants another.

$2,500 Profit from 9 Acres Cabbage.

M. C. Myrtle planted 9 acres in cabbage on his farm four miles from Brownsville, in the lower Rio Grande Valley of the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana, and made a clear net profit of $2,500, after paying all water, rent, labor, commission, brokerage, etc. An average net profit of $277 an acre.

$2,300 from 6 Acres of Strawberries.

M. L. Mebene owns a farm near Chocolate Bayou, in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. He has a 6 acre patch of strawberries. For his strawberry crop, this past season, he was paid $2,300 cash, f. o. b. cars at his home station of Chocolate Bayou, Texas.

$4,000 Net Profit from 37 Acres.

A. P. Begley, a farmer 2 miles from Brownsville, in the irrigated section of the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana, owns 25 acres, and rents 12 adjoining. He raised sorghum, cotton and cabbage; and after paying rent of land adjoining and all other crop expenses, he realized a net profit of $4,000 in one year.

THESE crops represent only a part of a Gulf Coast farmer's profit. Other crops, grown on the same land, also add to their bank accounts. As many as three or four crops come off of the same land in one year.

Mail This Coupon Today

Are You Making Money This Fast?

There is no reason why you shouldn't. There is plenty of land to be bought at low prices, in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana, where you should be able to duplicate these results.

If you are a farmer you do not have to stop farming and go to raising "garden truck." You can grow staple crops just as you do now—only you will get bigger yields. The crops you grow after your staple crops are harvested are just extra—that much profit you do not get now.

If you are a city man, tied to a desk or to some job in a shop, secure in your position only so long as the boss likes you, the Gulf Coast Country holds out to you security, health, independence and profit. You do not have to become a regular farmer—the garden trucks and fruits offer you abundant profit the year round.

A Delightful Place to Live

You could not imagine a more delightful place to live than the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. From one end to the other this wonderful country skirts the Gulf of Mexico. Its people practically live in a summer resort all summer and in a winter resort all winter.

The climate of the Gulf Coast Country more nearly reaches perfection than that of any other part of America. The people are good families—mostly from the farms, shops and offices of the north—drawn there not only by the certainty of big profits, but to get away from the cold, dangers and expense of northern winters. They have established schools and churches and have built up modern towns and cities where every social advantage is to be enjoyed.

Go See This Wonderful Country via Frisco Lines

while land prices are LOW. The pleasure of a trip through the Southwest, via Frisco Lines, would alone be worth the little cost of going. Every 1st and 3d Tuesday of each month you can buy round trip excursion tickets, via Frisco Lines, to any point in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana as follows—Chicago $37.50—St. Louis $32.50, or less—Kansas City $32.50, or less—Birmingham $37.50, or less—Baton Rouge and New Orleans $20.00, or less. To many Louisiana points the fares are even lower. The Frisco Lines operate splendid, electric lighted, solid steel trains daily from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and New Orleans. Every day in the year these trains carry through cars to the Gulf Coast Country, and on excursion days have through tourist sleepers.

Three Splendid Books Free—one on the mid-coast country of Texas, one on the lower irrigated sections of the Rio Grande Valley and one on Louisiana—all beautifully illustrated, showing some scenes in COLORS. They describe the country and crops from one end to the other—giving examples of successes, with PERSONAL statements by men who have gone there and made good. This coupon, signed and sent to me will entitle you to a FREE COPY OF EACH BOOK (while they last). MAIL IT TODAY.

A. HILTON, General Passenger Agent, Frisco Lines,
1426 Frisco Building, St. Louis, Mo.

A. HILTON,
Genl. Passenger Agent,
Frisco Lines,
1426 Frisco Building,
ST. LOUIS, MO.

I would like to know more about the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. Please send me free of charge, your handsome books describing the country.

Name.....

Address.....

.....

FRISCO LINES

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 7, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 6. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Lincoln Studying Law in His New Salem Grocery

From a Painting by Blendon Campbell

Ivory Soap in the Nursery

HERE are suggestions, information and advice that will interest mothers.
They are intended to be helpful, and we think they will be.
They cover as many phases of child life as space permits—the care of the body as well as the articles of wear that protect it.

Thousands of women who read this were "brought up" on Ivory Soap. We do not need to tell them how good it is. They know!

The Procter & Gamble Co.

The Bath In order that the body may be in a state of good health, it is necessary that the skin be kept absolutely clean. For that purpose, nothing is quite so good as Ivory Soap.

To bathe a baby, you need: A soft linen washcloth or a piece of flannel, a sponge, a cake of Ivory Soap and a couple of very soft towels. A piece of rubber sheeting, about fifteen inches square, to go on the bottom of the bath tub, to prevent slipping when getting in and out, is desirable.

The water should be about 95° in winter and from 85° to 90° in summer. Test the water with a bath thermometer or bare elbow. If it feels warm, not hot, it is all right.

Put baby in the bath. Moisten the washcloth and apply soap, first to the head and neck, then to the arms, next to the body, and last, to the legs and feet. Fill the sponge with water from the tub and squeeze its contents over the face, arms, body and legs, repeating this until all dirt and soap are removed. Dry by "patting," not rubbing, with the towels.

The best hour for an infant's bath is about ten in the morning. In no event, should a bath be given immediately after a meal.

If a child's skin is unusually sensitive, a salt bath should be given occasionally—a teacupful of salt in two gallons of warm water.

For children over three years of age, three full baths a week are sufficient. However, they should be given a sponge bath, without soap, every morning, before breakfast.

In very hot weather, a sponge bath, twice daily, in water about 90°, is recommended.

The Care of the Hair Until a child is three years old, its hair should not be cut. Use a soft brush—not a comb. For older children rub the scalp gently every night. This brings the blood to the scalp and stimulates the follicles from which the hair grows.

Washing the hair once a week is often enough for cleanliness. The use of a pure soap is essential because any excess of alkali in the soap will make the hair brittle.

To remove dandruff, massage the scalp with warm olive oil, and wash with warm Ivory Soap suds.

Brushes and combs should be washed once a week in a quart of cold or lukewarm water with a teaspoonful of ammonia in it, using Ivory Soap and water to complete the operation.

An Inexpensive Tooth Powder An exceedingly satisfactory tooth powder is made by mixing five cents' worth of powdered orris root and five cents' worth of precipitated chalk with half a cake of Ivory Soap, which has been chipped, dried and thoroughly pulverized. Add 15 drops of oil of wintergreen. Bottle and use as needed.

To Clean Children's Finger Nails Moisten a cake of Ivory Soap and draw it gently across the child's nails until they are filled with the softened soap. Then the nails can be cleaned easily If the finger tips are allowed to soak for a few minutes after being soaped, the nails will clean themselves.

A Physician's Advice "Having had repeated cases of skin irritation from the use of ordinary laundry soap, I now request mothers and nurses always to employ Ivory Soap for washing all articles that come in contact with the skin. It not only cleans the garments perfectly, but there is no injurious effect."

Woolen Undergarments, Sweaters, Jackets, Etc. Full information about the best way to wash woolens and flannels will be given in next month's advertisement of Ivory Soap. For present purposes it is sufficient to say that children's undergarments, sweaters, jackets, etc., should be washed in a heavy suds of Ivory Soap and warm water. They should be rinsed in two waters of the same temperature* as that used for washing, gently pulled into shape and laid on a flat surface in a warm place where they will dry quickly. A little Ivory Soap in the last rinsing water has a tendency to make woolens, etc., softer.

* This is very important, for if water of a different temperature is used for rinsing, garments will shrink.

To Clean Children's Stuffed Toys, Etc. Make a heavy suds of Ivory Soap and, with a small brush, apply it to the surface of the toy. Rinse thoroughly and quickly by pouring clear, lukewarm water over it. Do not squeeze the toy but shake it as free as possible from water and let it dry in the sun. Rubber toys, too, should be cleaned frequently.

To Clean Children's White Kid Shoes Apply Ivory Soap Paste with a flannel cloth; polish with a clean, dry cloth.

Another way to clean white kid shoes is to rub the soiled places with a cloth dipped in ammonia and then applied to a cake of Ivory Soap.

IMPORTANT! Exquisite cleanliness is necessary in the care of bottles and receptacles used in the preparation of a baby's food.

To Clean Bottles: Dissolve a few shavings of Ivory Soap in a quart of hot water. Rinse a bottle first with cold water, wash in Ivory Soap suds and then scald with boiling water. Pitchers, bowls and spoons should be treated in the same way. Rubber nipples should be scalded daily besides being turned inside out and washed.

An Ivory Soap Bubble-Party An excellent way to amuse children who have to stay indoors on account of the weather is to have an Ivory Soap bubble-party. The expense is trifling; and the bubbles are a source of endless delight.

Directions: Dissolve half of a small cake of Ivory Soap, shaved fine, in two quarts of lukewarm water. Add five drops of glycerine. Furnish each child with a clay pipe, a quill or an empty spool. Gum arabic added to the Ivory Soap suds will make the bubbles more elastic. Strawberry juice will make them red.

IVORY SOAP PASTE—We cannot emphasize too strongly the value of Ivory Soap Paste, not only in the nursery, but also in the laundry and for general household use.

How to Make Ivory Soap Paste: With a knife, vegetable grater, or food chopper, shave one large cake of Ivory Soap into three quarts, or two small cakes into four quarts of water. Keep nearly, but not quite, at boiling point for about 15 minutes, or until the soap is perfectly dissolved. When cool, it will be like jelly. Keep in a china or glass jar with tight-fitting top. Use as needed.

Next Month's Advertisement of Ivory Soap will deal with its uses in the Laundry—for the Washing of Woolens and Flannels.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 7, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Greek Peasant Woman

The Fortress on the Summit of Acro-Corinth

A Greek Soldier and His Bride

In the Footsteps of St. Paul

On the Way to Corinth, and What We See To-day

By REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President Christian Endeavor

MY PURPOSE, in the articles which I propose to write for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is to make as vivid as possible to my readers, by pen and picture, the present-day aspects of the places made forever memorable by the visits of St. Paul the apostle.

Paul was an indefatigable traveler. It is scarcely too much to say that there were few important parts of the then known world that he did not visit or plan to visit, for he was really on his way to far-off Spain when, in Rome, a longer journey (or shall we say shorter?) bore him to his heavenly home.

The love of Christ constrained him to go from city to city, from country to country, to preach the unsearchable riches of the Glad Tidings which he was especially commissioned to bear to the Gentiles.

Fortunately, we can trace his route of travel more definitely and surely than that of any other man of antiquity. Paul was a man of the cities. He was no John the Baptist, crying in the wilderness. He went where men were congregated. He visited the market-place, the synagogue, the arena of national sports and contests, the precincts of heathen temples even; wherever he could get a hearing for his wonderful message of Christ and him crucified.

On this account, too, we are able to identify his routes of travel, and to walk in his very footsteps as in those of no other sacred writer, for these great centers of population with which he is identified, Tarsus, Jerusalem, Damascus, Antioch, Ephesus, Salonica, Corinth, Athens, and a score of others are still on the map of the world.

Some of them are even now great and important cities. In others, we can only trace their former greatness by their crumbling walls and scattered marble fragments. Yet there is scarcely a single town, large or small, which St. Paul is known to have visited that cannot be identified to-day.

It has been my privilege, in meeting my engagements in many lands, to visit most of the cities of St. Paul, some of them more than once; and I have been impressed with the freshness and vividness which is imparted to the Gospel narrative when read upon the spot where the events occurred, and the new interest aroused in Paul's great epistles when read in the very cities from which or to which they were indited. Something of this freshness I hope to impart to these articles, which will be actually written from these same cities, and with the scenes which Paul saw newly stamped upon my mind.

Of course it will be impossible, except by the study of ancient sources of information and perhaps a permissible use of the imagination, to reconstruct the cities as St. Paul saw them, for they have been buried for many a century, and new cities have often been built upon their ruins; but Nature's unchanging monuments are much the same now as then.

The Cilician Gates—a great cleft in the Taurus Mountains—open their narrow doors to the traveler to-day exactly as in St. Paul's time, and there is no other possible way of traveling overland from his birthplace, Tarsus, to Iconium and Derbe and Lystra except over the very same path that he trod and over the same Roman bridges that he crossed.

The Ægean Sea laves the shores of Salonica to-day as it did when St. Paul wrote his letters to the beloved Thessalonians. Acro-Corinth looms up behind the ruins of that ancient metropolis as it did when, in the zenith of its power, Paul found Aquila and Priscilla there, and worked with them in their tent-making establishment.

Though the shrines and the statues of their gods no longer adorn the agora of Athens, and only the ruins of the greatest temples remain, yet the Acropolis towers above Mars Hill as it did in Paul's time. Hymettus, still famous for its honey, extends its encircling arms around the fair city as in the olden days, and the waters of Piræus, the harbor of Athens, still glitter in the brilliant sunlight as when Paul gazed upon them from the spot where he made his eternally famous speech to the "men of Athens."

I shall not attempt to follow chronologically the journeys of St. Paul, for each place that he touched leaves its own unique, individual impression, and I desire to write about it while its spell is still upon me rather than from the remoter, even if calmer, study.

We will begin with Corinth, which St. Paul visited three times. I write while I can still see the mountains that surround it on the east, and hear the lapping of the waves of the beautiful gulf as they are stirred by the north wind.

Paul came to Corinth on his first visit by way of Athens, when he had been driven out of Berea in peril of his life, sailing from some unknown port at the northern end of the Ægean Sea, and going overland probably from Athens to Corinth.

The modern traveler is more likely to reach Corinth from the Adriatic, sailing from Trieste in Austria or from Venice or Brindisi in Italy to Patras, on the northernmost edge of the Peloponnesus. Patras has

Continued on page 132

Acro-Corinth or the National Citadel, the Modern Village in the Foreground

A Sermon

By

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.*

Changing the Collar for the Yoke

TEXT: "Take my yoke upon you."—Matt. 11:29

THE yoke does not impose an extra burden; it is an implement by which the old burden is made light. The oxen plowed in couples, sharing the yoke. The burden which would have been irritating, wounding, exhausting, if dragged by a single ox, becomes tolerable when shared by two. And so a yoke was just a curved wooden collar by which a pair of oxen were joined together for the purpose of drawing a wagon or a plow. The all-significant matter to remember is this: the yoke is an implement for two, and in the double pull the yoke becomes easy and the burden light.

How His Yoke Lightens Our Load

And therefore Christ's yoke is not a collar of obligation, a responsibility slipped upon our single neck, in which we are then sent forth to plow our lonely furrow in the heavy field. Christ has no single collar; he only deals in yokes. If we are wearing a single collar, and straining at our load, the collar is of our own fashioning; we have not obtained it from the hands of Christ. The Lord's collars are yokes fashioned for two, and he himself is always one of the two.

And thus the significance of our Master's appeal is this: "Take off that single collar! Exchange it for this yoke, and let me share the burden with you!" The offering of a yoke is the gracious offer of a partnership. It is the tender purpose of the Lord that we should pull our loads in fellowship with him. But we decline the partnership. It is the tender purpose of the Lord that we should lose our loads in fellowship with him. But we decline the partnership; we work in single collar, and our necks are galled, and our strength is broken.

Overburdened People

We "labor and are heavy laden." We are like the laboring ox, straining, fainting, falling, burdened to the point of pain, crushed beyond endurance. Such are the deadly effects of the single collar. Life becomes irksome and burdensome. Our spirits become irritable and despondent. There is no spring in our goings, and our days are gray and commonplace. But this is not the purpose of our God. Life is not intended to be a bloody tragedy, its roads choked with fainting souls dropping beneath their load. Life is purposed to be bright and buoyant, with gleams of innocent comedy, and its night-times filled with songs. But let my readers look around. There are a multitude of burdened men and women carrying loads beyond their strength. The pilgrim's way is loud with groans and sighs. Where is the dance of the vintage? Where is the song of the harvest home? God's children are fainting on the long road; they are dropping at the hill. What is there wrong? It is the fault of the single collar. We are resolving life into individualism when it was proposed to be a fellowship. We are making it merely human when it was intended to be divine. We are wearing a single collar when it was intended that we should wear the yoke. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

The Master's Offer

Let us look at some of these burdened people, in whose lives a moral and spiritual revolution would be worked, if only they would share the yoke of Christ. Here is a man plowing a bit of heavy land. It is a patch of desert abounding in scrub, or it is a stretch of unclean soil, filled with wiry roots of ancient custom and tradition. Or it is a plot where everything seems unyielding, and the plow can make no headway. And the strain tries the spirit; the heart loses its optimism, and the will becomes lax and irresolute. He "labors and is heavy laden." Work of this kind is a very hopeless labor; it is positively heart-breaking if it be attempted in a single collar. And so our Master speaks to such a man, and says: "Take off that collar; share my yoke with me! Let me be a fellow in thy labor! Take me into partnership; let us do that long, heavy furrow together! Let me bring the power of the resurrection into it." "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

The Monotony of Life's Burden

Here is another man dragging the burden of the constant commonplace. When life is full of changes the changes themselves may provide a rest. The change brings other muscles into play. It is restful even to lift the eyes away from the detailed work, and allow them to roam over wider space. But some lives are burdened by a fearful monotony. Theirs is the monotony of waking to the unchanging program. Theirs is the monotony of the road to work. Theirs is the monotony of the work itself. There is the monotony of the return; a gray, gray road! Gray, gray, gray, for ever gray; never a change to scarlet or blue! Every morning the same gray load on the same gray road, the journey to begin at the metallic stroke of the clock, and at the metallic stroke of the clock to cease. And oh, the sighs that rise along that road! The old, old round! And often it is so hard to drag along; and the ox-like soul staggers and faints.

His Yoke Makes Labor Sweet

What shall we say about it? We were never intended to drag along that gray road in the harness of a single collar. Let the man try what will happen if he changes the single collar for the yoke of the Lord. It is not only that the load will become lighter, but the road will become brighter. What a difference a companion makes to one's pilgrimage! I said to a couple of pedestrians, "Did you see Warwick's gloomy prison as you came along?" "No," was the answer; but then they were two lovers, and their absorption in each other made them immune to the gloom! And I might say to many a soul, "Was not that a bit of monotonous road at noon to-day?" or, "Was not that a wearisome struggle in the evening?" and the answer would be, "I never noticed it, I felt like singing all the time!" But then these people are lovers, and their Companion-Lover is the Lord. They shared a common yoke, and walked a common road. If my readers want to see what the Lord can do with a monotonous road, let them exchange the collar for the yoke, and "the desert shall rejoice and blossom like the rose."

The "Burden of Ruined Hopes"

There are other people who are dragging along the burden of ruined hopes. This is a very burdensome road. Life's early proposals are defeated and broken, and the desolate heart is dragging the ruins to the grave. Life began in some soaring purpose, some fond, aspiring vision, which lifted the soul into the high firmament of hope and vision. And then the beautiful, delicate thing was smitten, and its ruins were borne along through the rest of the dull and leaden days. Here is a young woman with strong desire to be a missionary. She lives for it, thinks of it, dreams in it. It fills her entire vision, and constitutes the magnetic goal of her life. The season of consummation is drawing near. She is medically examined; she is condemned as physically unfit, and her application is rejected. And so all her fine aspirations fall to the earth in pathetic ruin, and for the rest of her days she drags a big load of wrecked ambitions and broken hopes.

Loads that Oppress the Heart

Or here is a father who builds a stately palace of hopes, founded on the future achievements of his son. The palace is big and roomy, restful and inspiring, bright and sunny with the light of filial triumph. And then the son is stricken! He faints and fails, and this stately house of ordered hopes tumbles in disastrous heaps. The broken things are gathered together, and the heart just drags ther along the dull and cloudy way. What can be said t all these troubled souls? Just this: The mistake o all mistakes is the single collar. To harness our selves to the pathetic burden of ruined hopes an tug them along by night and day is fearfully ex hausting work. There is nothing like it for induc ing premature age; nothing like it for creating mood in which the song of the birds is never heard But with Jesus as our yoke-fellow the heavy broke hopes become lighter, for newer and more wonderfu hopes appear on the road, full of life-giving grace and inspiration. Here, too, "death is swallowed u in victory."

The Heavy Burden of Sorrows

And there are those who are dragging the burden of common sorrow. There is nothing unusual about their sorrow; it is just a wan piece of a familiar grief. Perhaps it is the death of a little child, and the light is out! It is a rutty road on a cold wet night, and a heavy load to boot. There is nothing for it but to take the yoke. When the Lord comes into the bereaved life, a strange, quieting light begins to shine, even the holy, hopeful light of the Eternal Morning. When he becomes our yoke-fellow, yesterday decreases in burdensomeness as the morrow increases in glory. That is ever the ministry of the divine fellowship in any kind of human need. The golden age of a life is removed from the past and enthroned in the future. The light that followed behind goes on before. The examples might be multiplied. There are those who are cumbered with a load of care. There are those whose lives have to be dragged through temptations which act upon the soul like magnetic mud. There are those whose hindrance is a loneliness unbroken by any familiar friend. There are those whose goings are hampered and entangled by uncongenial attachments. And there are those whose burden is an imperfect body, the very vehicle having a broken axle or a broken wheel.

Help for the Heavy Laden

What shall we say to all these laboring and heavy laden souls? We will give them the old, sweet, evangelical word: Drop the collar and take the yoke! accept the partnership of Jesus, and let the fellowship be divine. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Anvil Sparks

..OPPORTUNITY spoils if kept waiting.

..REFORMATION, like charity, begins at home.

..HOME-MADE religious experience is the best.

..DON'T expect to be stampeded home to glory.

..THE coveted goal does not approach while you wait.

..SOME folks run off from duty to vainly stalk happiness.

..THE heart of granite is seldom celebrated on a tombstone.

..A SINCERE heart does not need to be advertised by a solemn face.

..A CHARITABLE disposition is one of the secrets of a benign old age.

..WHILE we look for a better day to come, let us see how good we can make to-day.

..FEW preachers ever thaw out a frozen church by presenting hell-fire all the time.

..THERE are folks who seem to think that they cannot have backbone without bristles.

..THERE is no car line to heaven; if you find yourself sitting down as you journey, you are not on the way.

* Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

COMPENSATION

WHAT matters it how long the day,
If, having done the best I could,
I look back at its close and say,
"I've wrought some little good"?

What matters it how long the years,
If I shall know, when life is done,
Though wrought with toil and pain and tears,
The victory has been won?

Dyersburg, Tenn. MARIE LOUISE MOSS.

More Bible Class Blunders

NOT long ago, a lady consented to teach a class of young girls in the Sunday school of a prosperous city church. The ages of the girls ranged from twelve to seventeen. Some of them were in the second year of the high school, none were classed lower than the highest grammar grade. The lesson was one of a series on the life of Christ. The teacher began by asking where the events of the lesson took place. The girls referred to their lesson papers and promptly answered, "Palestine." Ordinarily this would have ended the geographical questions, but this teacher put one more, "Where is Palestine?" and to her surprise received no reply. She restated the question, varied the name by calling it the Holy Land, Judea, even Canaan, but in vain.

Another Sunday school has written tests. Here are a few answers, culled not from the younger children's papers, but from those of the highest grade, many of them written by high school pupils.

"Samuel's wife's mother had a fever."

"Jacob was one of the six apostolic leaders."

"Peter's vision was of a ladder on which angels ascended and descended, while God was standing in the center."

"Agrippa was Peter's wife."

There was some difference of opinion about Peter's wife, for one boy stated that her name was "Ananias" and that she "deceived Peter."

A certain Sunday school had just begun the study of the life of St. Paul. The lesson papers did not arrive in time for the first lesson, so one teacher decided to find out how much her class knew about Paul to begin with. The class was composed of seven young women, none less than seventeen years of age. One of these went to business, two were high school girls, two were in a training school for teachers. All came from Christian homes.

"I want one fact from each of you about Paul," said the teacher, "but a different fact from each one. I will begin with you, Ruth."

Ruth appreciated her good fortune. Every shrewd Sunday school pupil has learned that there is a formula which, with the change of two words, will describe any Bible character. Ruth applied the formula. She answered promptly, "Paul was a good man and did that which was pleasing in the sight of the Lord." Had she been asked to give one fact about Judas Iscariot she would have said, "Judas was a bad man and did that which was displeasing in the sight of the Lord." The formula having been appropriated, there was nothing left for the other six girls. The teacher did not succeed in drawing from the united class one single definite fact about the life of the greatest of the apostles. There was no reason to think that they would not have been glad to tell any facts at their command. The conclusion is forced that these bright girls, two of them at least expecting to become teachers, knew absolutely nothing about St. Paul. But, as they had just finished a two years' course of Old Testament study, they did not ask, as did a young woman recently, if "Saul of Tarsus was the same Saul as the one who was king of Israel."

Yet the ignorance of many an adult, even, is amusing as well as amazing. It was a clever member of a brilliant circle who could not see why her friends smiled when she referred to "Christ's talking with Rebecca at the well."

MAY ELLIS NICHOLS.

What a Subscriber Discovers in the Publisher's Office

By EUGENE THWING

TO SAY that the publisher was surprised would put it mildly. In a few minutes the subscriber was even more surprised. Then, a little later, both were so thoroughly pleased and satisfied that it is worth telling about. Here is the way the talk began:

"Yes, we like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD very much indeed," said the subscriber; "it grows better every year; but I do wish you wouldn't print so much advertising. The paper would be a good deal better without any. It crowds out the reading matter. Especially, I object to finding advertisements alongside the reading columns, where they distract the attention."

"Why, bless your heart!" exclaimed the publisher as soon as he could recover a little from his surprise, "we'll do almost anything for an old subscriber; but wait a minute; is your subscription paid up for this year?"

"Yes, indeed! It's always paid before the end of December, and will be, I hope, for many years to come."

"So! Delighted to hear you say so. Shake hands again. How long do you count upon receiving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, did you say?"

"Why, as long as I live, I hope."

"Or, as long as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD lives. Naturally, you hope THE HERALD will live at least as long as you do, since you are so fond of it."

"Yes, certainly, of course, and much longer," exclaimed the subscriber, cordially.

"Thanks; but we were speaking of advertising. You would like to have us stop printing advertisements in the paper?"

"Yes, personally, I should be glad if you would."

"Well, my friend, death would part us very soon if we did that. The amount you and other subscribers pay for a year's subscription does not cover the actual cost of producing the fifty-two copies sent to you during the year, and without the income from advertisements it would be impossible to make such a big, fine weekly at so very little cost to you."

"Well, that puts another aspect on the matter. I hope you will always have plenty of advertising if it is so necessary to your welfare."

"And to yours; you must remember that our interests are inseparable. But to change the subject, what do you think of the China famine relief work this past year?"

"Splendid! It was positively one of the noblest things that happened in 1911. Thousands of people are thankful that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exists and is such a power for blessing humanity."

"Yes? I wonder if you happen to be interested in the Children's Paradise at Mont-Lawn?"

"Most certainly I am. I contribute to it through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every summer, and I have been up there more than once. It is a very beautiful work. Many of our future men and women will have reason to bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for sending them to Mont-Lawn."

"Fine! Doubtless you approve also the work done for the Bowery Mission, and in other similar directions?"

"Of course. It is a constant inspiration to me, and I believe to many of your subscribers. I devoutly pray that you may continually be strengthened in all these noble enterprises for helping those in need."

"Thank you. Did it ever occur to you how large a part of that 'strength' you pray for comes to us from the advertising income of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD? With a large advertising patronage we can make a large, handsome, interesting paper, which would be impossible otherwise. We can thus attract and hold a large number of subscribers and interest them in these noble works for humanity which you commend so highly. Take the advertising out of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and you take the support of every good enterprise which receives such support through this paper."

"Dear me! What have I been saying? Forgive me for being so short-sighted. Now I shall be positively greedy to see you get as much advertising as you possibly can."

"Not so fast, my dear friend. We never want as much advertising as we can have, not even for the sake of Mont-Lawn or the Bowery Mission. Every year we refuse thousands of dollars' worth of advertising because we are protecting your interests."

"Indeed! You surprise me."

"Perhaps you have been accustomed to thinking that all the editors and editing of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were in the editorial rooms. The truth is that the advertising columns are just as carefully edited as the reading matter. The Advertising Manager would no more allow an unclean, or deceitful, or ugly advertisement to gain admittance to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD than would the Editor admit an improper story, or editorial, or illustration. The Advertising Department is just as fully controlled by a lofty spirit as the Editorial Department, and just as careful of what it sends into your family."

"This is really a revelation to me. I never thought of it that way."

"Just a moment; not only do we watch the quality of the advertisements themselves, but we make every effort to be sure of the honesty and reliability of the advertiser. We want to know that all claims and promises made to our readers will be made good. We even go so far as to insure our readers against loss from any misstatements or misdealings, and agree to refund any money so lost.

"This rule does not apply to advertisements of a financial nature, for the reason that, while we scrutinize advertisements of this class even more closely than all others, we expect our readers to exercise their own judgment when it comes to investing their savings. Furthermore, one single error on our part might mean a loss to so many of our readers that it would be absolutely impossible for us to make good the loss. We do not promise anything that we might not be able to perform."

"Say! I'm glad I came in. What you tell me makes me more than ever proud to be a subscriber for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

"By the way, you said something about the advertisements crowding out the reading matter, I believe."

"Yes, that did make me a little sore at first, but after what you have told me I am perfectly willing to sacrifice part of the reading space."

"That shows a generous spirit, but let me tell you just one thing more about our friend the advertiser. He gives you more reading space instead of taking any of your space away. With the advertiser's help we are

Continued on page 142

BE YE STEADFAST

WHAT matters it though pleasures lure
When duty calls to serve?
A steadfast soul will stand secure
Nor from his purpose swerve.
The right with him shall be maintained
Until his good intent is gained.

What matter though the shadows fall
Across his onward way?
Though darkness hovers like a pall
To hide the light of day?
A steadfast soul—undaunted still—
Will seek to do the Father's will.

What matters it though chilling frost
Be felt on every hand?
He still will hope, all is not lost,
More firmly he will stand!
A steadfast soul still toils and strives,
He'll do his best for human lives.

What matters it though desert sands
Are stretching on before?
He'll forward go, if God commands,
As did the saints of yore.
The steadfast soul, unharmed by strife,
Shall wear at last a crown of life.

No pain, no pleasure, shall prevent
His onward, upward course,
His Father's will his chief intent,
His Father's wish its source.
The steadfast soul his goal shall gain;
His noble work is not in vain.

J. M. MORSE.

A Sermon a Mile Long

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, head of the China Inland Mission, was a man whose heart and soul were to an unusual degree bound up in the principles in which he believed. He would countenance no compromise with evil. An illustration is found in an incident related by his son, Dr. Howard Taylor, at a memorial service in Shanghai. Among other instances showing his father's characteristics Dr. Taylor gave this story:

"We arrived in China with him on April 17 last, and at once proceeded up the Yangtse River to Hankow. From there we went by rail into Honan, with no plans made in advance, but just following God's leading. Two or three stations were visited, one requiring two half-days in a sedan chair. He was so weary at times that it seemed he could not keep his seat. At one station the residence was nearly two miles away from the worship hall. After resting on Saturday the question arose as to whether he would take a sedan chair there on the morrow. It seemed the only possible way for him to be present at the service.

"The question was put to him. He would not have the sedan (which is carried on the shoulders of four men), and so break the day of rest for others. He began the walk, starting an hour and a half before the time, managing to take a few steps and then resting upon a little chair which we carried. His progress could be only step by step, and then a rest. The country people gathered around and asked why we did not have a sedan. We explained God's wish that all should rest and worship on that day. Indeed, before we reached the place of worship we had preached a sermon more than a mile long."

Is not this also a sermon to many Christians who lightly regard the Fourth Commandment, and in many ways dishonor the Sabbath day?

REV. WALLACE S. FARIS.

Rooseveltian Epigrams

THE only way to achieve anything in religion, in business, in politics, is through co-operation.

The big man in this world must learn humility, if he is to do his work well. If he does not realize how small he is in comparison with the other men and women, he will not help the world to go on.

The work of any leader sinks into insignificance compared with the work of average citizens.

We are all on life's chessboard. In business, farming, politics, town or government we are all players. There is no one man, no, not the best player, who can dispense with one pawn.

3,000,000 STARVING IN CHINA

The Christian Herald Appeals for the Famine Orphans—An Opportunity for Service

WAND DRILL KINDERGARTEN SEWING CLASS

Scenes in an Orphanage Among Famine Waifs Supported by Christian Herald Readers

AFTER passing through a series of experiences such as no other country in modern history has undergone, China has again reached a point where she is entitled to the sympathy and the immediate assistance of the civilized world, in order to prevent a still greater calamity. Afflicted by floods, famine, and plague, her condition, even before the outbreak of the revolution, was one to awaken universal pity; but now it is immeasurably worse. At the present moment, according to the reports received from many reliable sources, including missionaries, there are not less than 3,000,000 Chinese facing actual starvation!

Mr. M. C. D. Jameson, a well-known engineer who was sent to China to devise a plan for preventing the devastating floods which annually resulted from the overflow of rivers, reports that the misery and distress which followed last year's famine have been "incredibly magnified and increased." He adds that if ever there was a time for Americans to relieve suffering, "it is here and now in China." This trouble is just beginning, and before the middle of May it will attain the proportions of a national tragedy. Without seed to plant or animals to plow, the people in several of the provinces will "simply have to lie down and die of sheer starvation." Even now, the land is full of beggars—all starving. Most of them a few years ago were thrifty farmers; now they are penniless and hopeless. Mr. Jameson says that the dead bodies of men, women and children are frequently found lying on the roads.

Our government at Washington has received full information and is taking steps looking to relief measures on a large scale, in conjunction with the Central Relief Committee at Shanghai. An influential committee has been organized in New York, with Bishop D. H. Greer (Protestant Episcopal) as chairman and leading representatives of other denominations and many prominent citizens as members, for the purpose of raising a large relief fund. The various foreign mission boards are also represented. A committee has been appointed to consult with President Taft regarding a plan of operations.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have been identified with relief work in many lands and who gave generous aid to China a year ago, are again invited to practical service in aid of suffering humanity. We are in receipt of letters from a number of missionaries in the Chinese field which present prevailing conditions in terms that cannot be misunderstood. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD takes this opportunity to make a special appeal in behalf of the Chinese famine orphans. There are at the present time nearly 2,000 of these waifs of the last famine in orphanages in different parts of China, who were provided for by the generosity of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Through the death of patrons and other causes, that provision in many cases has ceased, leaving several hundred orphans unprovided for.

Famine Waifs Need Our Help

The following touching plea in behalf of the little boys and girls in the Christian Herald orphanages is from the pen of one of the missionaries and is personally addressed to our readers, whose thoughtful and generous consideration it deserves. The writer is telling of the seven hundred famine waifs who are now without support, yet who cannot be dropped, especially at this terrible time in midwinter, and with war and famine raging. To drop them now would mean to send them out to death by starvation. He writes:

I am writing from the depth of my own heart, for I am one of those who were instrumental in opening one of the orphanages, into which we received seventy-five bright little boys about ten years of age.

But the funds are not sufficient; the number of orphans must now be cut down to 1,200, and so 700 children, who had been given over to the care of your representatives in China, must be turned out into a cold, hungry, homeless world, and the doors barred behind them. We do not believe you would permit such a cruel and inhuman thing. It would bring reproach on the good name of the American people just at the time when a new-born nation is looking to us for sympathy and help.

There is only one way to prevent it. That is: to send in the funds which will enable the work to be carried on. The managers are perfectly willing to forward for this purpose all that is sent to them, and surely you do not expect them to become personally responsible for a work which was undertaken on your behalf?

There is no kind of work done by any of the missionary organizations which presents such an unanswerable argument for the disinterested benevolence of genuine Christianity. This work not only puts a worthy emphasis on the importance of caring for the children of the poor of the land, but it promises also to provide the church of China with many useful servants. My last letter from the superintendent of the Compassion Orphanage at Ningpo (who by the way is himself a splendid type of consecrated young manhood) tells of ten or more of the lads going about in companies of two or three doing evangelistic work in the neighborhood. Summer before last, an epidemic visited the orphanage and some five or six of the lads succumbed to its attack. The testimony to a genuine trust in Jesus as their Saviour, which some of these lads gave, was truly beautiful and inspiring. It is a work that is tremendously worth while—this planting the seed of eternal truth in the rich soil of young hearts. And whoever becomes a participant in this splendid work may take as his own the word of the Master: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

J. E. SHOEMAKER,
Compassion Orphanage, Ningpo, China.

Food at Famine Prices

E. Christopherson, a missionary at Loging, South China, writes: "There is great suffering among the people on account of the lack of food. In this district the crop has been destroyed by drought and the price of rice is very high. Truly, God is visiting China and teaching her some hard lessons. Pray for us and for poor China!"

L. E. Jones, China Inland Mission, Sinchanghsien, Chehkiang, writes:

The troubles of China have entered into every detail of our life-work. In spite of the greatest possible unrest and fear of being revisited by outlaws, we have kept the schools together, and some of the children have given themselves to prayer as never before. "The Lord is my refuge," has a new meaning now for quite a few. A band of robbers, numbering several hundreds, visited our city. Their shots came whizzing over our buildings, and once we narrowly escaped. But "He covered our heads in the day of battle." I was very sorry to learn that you cannot keep up the support of as many orphans as in the past, and wonder what will become of those dropped. Another opportunity of proving that God is faithful. But why should America forfeit such grand service for God and China? Will the people who did so grandly in the past again lend a helping hand to China, for surely there never was greater need for training the children of this vast empire in the way they should go, than now. With thanks for the past and a plea for the future, I am, etc.

The Worst Famine in Fifteen Years

Rev. W. F. Junkin, of North Kiangsu, writes:

As far as I can judge, after a trip through the three districts, Suchien, Suining and Pichow, the famine this winter and next spring is going to be the worst, not only in these fifteen years, but the worst in the lives of any of the inhabitants. I think flour will be selling at 100 cash a catty before Chinese New Year.

Sad accounts have been received of the present condition of affairs in different parts of the country. At Sianfu in Shensi Province it is a story of bloodshed, murder, pillage and outrage. The foreigners fled, but too late to save some of their lives. Manchus were shot, sabered or burned wherever found. It is said that in one week twenty to thirty thousand of Manchus had been butchered or disappeared. There was a dreadful carnival of slaughter, looting, incendiarism, when the rebels entered Sian—an orgy which lasted three days and at which no sentiment of humanity was shown to the victims. Women and even children were cruelly butchered. Foreigners shared the general danger of those days of anarchy and massacre and a number are known to have perished, including two or three missionaries, several teachers and six boys and girls of the orphanage. In Hantcheong, in the southern part of the province, churches and Christian homes were burned, native Christians killed and missionaries compelled to fly. Brigandage followed the uprising.

What a Trained Nurse Saw

Miss Elizabeth Corriher, a trained nurse, writing from Kashing, says: "The question of famine help is again upon us and some feel that only Christians should have help; but then comes the humane side. It is not easy to eat while at your door numbers are starving.

"The revolutionists seem well organized, and there seems to be no secrecy as to their intentions—that they are to overthrow this dynasty. Several cities in the north have been taken and a new flag is flying. The flag is red, white and blue. They have issued a proclamation that no foreigner is to be touched, but they do not want any foreign power to interfere. Thursday night a boatload of wounded were brought—gunshot cases all ten of them—from a little skirmish just below here. Next day, a messenger came to tell one of our patients his grandfather had been bitten to death and his body torn to pieces. He was one of the wealthy gentry of the city. Another man was bitten to death also. This is a common way to kill a man. A mob jumps on him and bites him to death. Don't forget to pray for us and our work in these unsettled days."

Rev. E. C. Lobenstine writes from Shanghai: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S aid, especially last year, is most gratefully remembered, and did more than any other agency in securing relief. The need this year is worse than ever. China is passing through a flood of fire and blood. We plead with you to bear with China a little longer. We have faith to believe that there are better days ahead."

Send Your Gift for the Famine Waifs

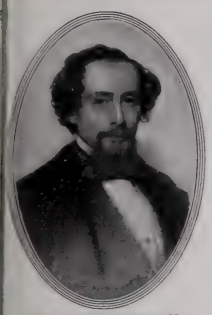
These extracts are taken from a few of the many letters received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. While all are pitiful in their tales of sorrow and suffering, the case of the little famine orphan waifs presses most heavily upon our hearts. We ask our readers to help us care for these helpless little ones. And we believe that in the great generous heart of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family our appeal will find a quick response.

The following contributions for our China Famine Orphan Fund have been received up to date:

E. O. Tryon	$2.00
Miss A. Taylor	1.00
Mr. Samuel M. Engle	2.00
Miss F. Wetmore	1.00
Mrs. M. T. Andrews	1.00
Mr. William N. Hamilton	5.00
Mary E. Horton	2.00
J. D. Williams	2.00
Mrs. Lippold	1.00
Mary R. Walker	1.00
Mr. John E. Parvely	10.00
Mrs. I. J. Steanne	2.00
Mrs. Amanda Smith	1.00
Mrs. George Gruetzmacher	1.00
Mrs. E. M. Buck	5.00
E. E. Hafenriechter	10.00
Mrs. George Watson	1.00
Mrs. E. J. MacArthur and Mrs. Mary E. McCormick	2.00
Mrs. C. O. Graves	5.00
Sarah E. Rosedale	10.00
Mary B. Gillespie	1.00
Cecil G. Osborn	1.00
Mrs. J. A. Goodnow	5.00
Mrs. L. H. Gietzen	1.50
Mrs. C. B. Randall	2.00
Anna A. Mains	1.00
C. H. R., Brooklyn, N. Y.	1.00
Reader, White Cottage, O.	2.00
I. H. N., Lanark, Ills.	10.00
Two Readers, Peterboro, Ont., Can.	2.00
No Name, Philadelphia, Pa.	2.00
No Name, Ypsilanti, Mich.	1.00
No Name, Oakland, Calif.	1.00

All contributions should be addressed: "CHINA FAMINE ORPHAN FUND, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York."

Centenary of the Beloved Novelist



Charles Dickens When He Visited America

CHARLES DICKENS was born just a hundred years ago. Into the home of a clerk in the Navy Pay Office at Portsmouth, a baby was born on February 7, 1812. And two nations are vying with each other now to make his centenary notable.

It is probably not too much to say that Dickens has been more genuinely and more ardently loved by more people than any other novelist of any land or time. Men laughed with Thackeray and smarted under his keen satire, men and women admired George Eliot's skill, Charles Kingsley has his faithful and affectionate followers, Victor Hugo stirred France and fascinated other nations, Tolstoy was truly loved in Russia and sincerely liked and revered in other lands, Hawthorne aroused a nation's pride and made all the world praise his noble work, Kipling has won enthusiastic praise and a strong personal following—but Dickens has been loved by successive generations with an ardor which is entirely unique. Dean Stanley, delivering the eulogy at the novelist's funeral in Westminster Abbey, thus expressed his estimate of the world's affection for this gifted and hearty man of letters: "Of Charles Dickens I would rather say that no one was ever so much beloved or so much mourned."

Many a traveler to London finds the memories of Dickens and the atmosphere of his books more real and vivid than the history of the great city and the nation. Slipping into London on the train from Dover on a typically wet London day as the great pile of the Parliament buildings, the towers of Westminster and the dome of old St. Paul's become visible through the gray air, one is apt to think, not of the great statesmen and rulers and warriors and churchmen who have made the Empire, but rather of David Copperfield, struggling with shorthand and literature in the courts and in his chambers near the Strand, loving, winning and losing Dora, then coming back, after many years, to Dover and riding out through the frosty air to win the heart of Agnes at old Canterbury. One thinks of Micawber, of Steerforth, of dear old Traddles, of Mr. Peggotty hunting through the mazes of London streets for little Em'ly. Then one thinks suddenly of the stormy sea at Yarmouth, of the old house torn down by the wind, of Ham lying dead in the sand at Steerforth's side. Wandering about the London streets, one hopes to meet Sam Weller or his father, or Mr. Snodgrass, or perhaps even Mr. Jingle. One begins to pity Dick Swiveller again, shutting himself off, street by street, from all approaches to the Strand through his distressing habit of contracting debts in the shops along the various thoroughfares. One shudders at the thought of meeting Blandois, one looks out for shrinking Little Dorrit, one hopes to catch a glimpse of Captain Cuttle or Walter down where the ship-chandlers flourish. One goes, of course, to the Old Curiosity Shop and looks about for sign of Little Nell. If one takes a bus out of the city and walks along the river bank, one remembers Clennam, strolling thoughtfully out to Mr. Meagles' home, meeting "Pet" at the end of the avenue of trees and bidding her good-by, stooping to give the roses to the softly flowing water, then going on to the house to talk with his host and Mr. Doyce. Back in the city, crossing the damp streets, one thinks of little Jo, then suddenly of Lady Leicester clasping the bars of the cemetery gate, and one's fancy flies to the dark old manor house where "the rains were out in Lincolnshire."

Mr. Pickwick, Tom Pinch, the Cherryble Brothers, Martin Chuzzlewit, Bob Sawyer, Mark Tapley, Eugene Wrayburn, Lizzie Hexam, Jennie Wren, Esther Summerson, the Little Marchioness, Mr. Wardle, Mr. Wickfield, Mr. Boffin, how they haunt the streets and fields! This is the real England—the England of dashing stage coaches and resounding horns, of swinging lanterns at the inn-yard gate, of frosty fields, of Christmas cheer, of love and friendship and good hope that is not blind to the sorrow and the shame and the sin, but strives to put an end to these. Such is the England Dickens knew and made immortal.

But he wrote not for England, but for all the world. The human nature he knew was human nature everywhere, and the people to whom he gave life are friends and brothers of mankind. It is no wonder that such fire as he had is called the "divine fire." He made a world and peopled it, and his people are blessed with immortality.

It is impossible to estimate the effect of Dickens' work upon the social structure of the civilized world. At a time when nations were waking with a new sense of freedom, when people were realizing that the real power of society lies not in gold nor crowns nor books, but in men and women and little children, Dickens made his vivid, kindly, often humorous, and sometimes grotesque interpretation of humanity, and showed again the worth of every human soul. The citizens of France had not yet completed the overthrow of oppressive royalty; America was taking its early steps in the long journey of freedom; the men of England had still in their minds the memory of the barons' victories over King John, and Cromwell's vanquishment of tyrannous King Charles, but there were more victories to be won for the workers and the children and the countless legions of the lowly. In France a great skeptic and fanatic dreamers and frenzied mobs had led the way toward true democracy; in England the Wesleyan revival had stirred the nation's conscience towards God and humanity, and sturdy statesmen had planned for laws which would protect and uplift the people; in America Franklin and Jefferson had prepared the way for Lincoln and for later leaders of social reform. And on this stage where the drama of social freedom, social justice, and social kindness was being enacted, Charles Dickens came, with his tender heart, his restless mind, and his magic pen, and he added to the characters of flesh and blood a host of spirit lives who made men see the real values of life, and led them to hasten the day when oppression and injustice shall perish, the day when—as that other dreamer hoped who sang instead of telling tales—

> Man to man the world o'er
> Shall brothers be—and a' that.

It is of course impossible to calculate with anything like accuracy the relation of a nation's literature to its laws, but history must always concede to Charles Dickens a large part in the social quickening of Great Britain and of America, which led to greater concern for the unfortunate and to legislation which made for society a more just and consequently a more solid foundation. Other items beside the cleansing and later the abolishment of the debtors' prisons will be accredited to him when the whole story is told of the ultimate triumph of social kindness.

Charles Dickens as a Young Novelist

The hundredth anniversary of the novelist's birth began in New York with a centenary banquet at Delmonico's on February 6, at which notable men and women were given the honor of expressing their appreciation of his character and work, among them F. Hopkinson Smith, Dr. William T. Manning, Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, Miss Agnes Repplier, William Bayard Hale, and Edwin Markham. Forty-four years ago, shortly before Mr. Dickens' return to England from his second American trip, he was given a dinner at the Delmonico's of that early time on this same evening, February 6. The resentment felt against him for his previous criticisms of American life and character had given place to a cordial appreciation of the author's work and a great personal fondness for him as a man, an artist and a friend. The chief function of the centenary celebration is to be a great meeting at Carnegie Hall on the evening of February 7, at which Mr. Hamilton Wright Mabie will preside, and Dr. Henry Van Dyke and others will speak. Ex-President Roosevelt, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. J. P. Morgan and many other people of prominence are members of the Dickens Centenary Committee, which has been acting in connection with the Dickens Fellowship, the Civic Forum, and the League for Political Education in completing arrangements for the anniversary.

The question of Dickens' religious life and teachings is of perennial interest to Christian people. He was essentially a conservative in religion, liking the quiet, stately ways of the old Church of England, rejoicing alike in the services and chimes of its great cathedrals, and the dim, still atmosphere of the little rural churches where shy young couples were wed, where infants were christened, whence the dead were buried. Here is one of his many confessions of faith:

"Going through the woods, the softness of my tread upon the mossy ground and among the brown leaves enhanced the Christmas sacredness by which I felt surrounded. As the whitened stems environed me, I thought how the Founder of the time had never raised his benignant hand, save to bless and heal, except in the case of one unconscious tree. By Cobham Hall I came to the village, and the churchyard where the dead had been quietly buried, 'in the sure and certain hope' which Christmas-time inspired. What children could I see at play, and not be loving of, recalling who had loved them! No garden that I passed was out of unison with the day, for I remembered that the tomb was in a garden, and that 'she, supposing Him to be the gardener,' had said, 'Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.' In time, the distant river with the ships came full in view, and with it pictures of the poor fishermen mending their nets, who arose and followed him—of the teaching of the people from a ship pushed off a little way from shore, by reason of the multitude—of a majestic figure walking on the water, in the loneliness of night. My very shadow on the ground was eloquent of Christmas; for did not the people lay their sick where the mere shadows of the men who had heard and seen him might fall as they passed?"

The Old Shop in Portsmouth Street Where Little Nell Lived With Her Grandfather

The Temple Where Tom Pinch Worked for a Mysterious Employer

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Suffering in China

THERE is no sadder picture presented to the world to-day than that which is described in the missionary letters from China, which we print in this issue. To famine, flood and plague have been added the horrors of war, and we are not surprised to learn that millions of the people, ruined by this succession of misfortunes, have now reached the last extremity and are face to face with starvation. In the relief movement begun on a large scale in our own land there is much hope. America will respond with its usual generous promptness, and with all the agencies of helpfulness at work, many thousands of precious lives will doubtless be saved.

There is one aspect in the Chinese situation which appeals with more directness than any other to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is the sad condition of the famine children in the orphanages. Some two thousand of these little waifs for several years past have been supported through the generosity of our readers; but now, through the deaths of patrons and other circumstances which could not be foreseen, many of them are left totally unprovided for. This, happening in the midst of so many calamities, constitutes a very sad problem for the missionaries. Our hearts thrill as we read of the perils which the devoted workers are facing, in their efforts to protect their little charges during these days of danger. They deserve the most loyal and generous support our readers can give and we confidently appeal in their behalf. Let us assure the welfare of the helpless little famine waifs, who are friendless save for the missionaries, and homeless but for their sheltering care. There are several hundred of them who need to be provided for at once. If every reader of this journal who has the welfare of the orphan children of China at heart will come to their rescue now, a great blessing will result!

We do not believe that the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, which has done so much for China in the past, will turn a deaf ear to the appeal of the orphan children. They were placed in the orphanages by the missionaries, who look to us confidently to uphold their hands in this time of trial. Not one orphan child should suffer through our neglect. All must be assured of food, shelter and protection. We plead their cause In His Name who loved the little children. Every gift, no matter how small, which you may send will be applied to their support, and will be a means of joy and comfort to the missionaries who are risking their lives for these little ones. For the honor of Christian America let it not be said that a single child in any orphanage throughout China suffered. Send in your gifts to-day to the China Famine Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Our Princely Visitors

THE American populace is a delightfully inconsistent aggregation. We profess to disdain all pretension to royalty, yet when a royal visitor arrives we never take second rank as enthusiastic welcomers and entertainers.

His Royal Highness Prince Arthur, Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, accompanied by the Duchess, and their daughter, Princess Patricia, have just been making an unofficial journey to this country, paying a visit to their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid of New York, with whom they became acquainted when Mr. Reid was the American Ambassador at the Court of St. James.

Everybody was glad to see them. And everybody who did not see them wishes he had. There will be some anxious-eyed, quaking citizens who will see in this popular interest in royalty another perilous sign of a growing desire on the part of the American people for a royal family of its own. They fear that America will repeat the ancient folly of Israel and beg its prophets to anoint a king. They foresee the dreadful time when the Montreal papers will be announcing, under-shouting headlines, the arrival of the reigning king of the United States, with queen and royal princesses and stalwart princes of the blood.

We may laugh at such fancies without lessening our respect for the ancient and noble institutions of the great Empire which is our mother. Queen Victoria was loved here in life, and mourned in death; the late King Edward was prayed for here as well as at home during the alarming illness preceding his coronation, was hailed on his ascension to the throne and honestly mourned when he died. With the young King George we have hardly become acquainted, but we are going to like him and shall be glad to give him a royal welcome if he can find it possible to visit us. And we are glad to have Queen Victoria's son come with his family to see our big city and meet our handsome ladies and gallant men. We are proud to see him, with his hand at the lever, running a railway train out of the Pennsylvania terminal station on his way to see our President and survey our capital. We are pleased that all our social leaders and government functionaries appeared so well at ease in doing him honor. We hope he will like the United States, and that he will help our Big Sister of the Snows to work with us in making North America not only a continent of wealth and power but a land of real freedom, of true justice, of pure worship and of widespread kindness.

A Year of Church Progress

THAT the year lately closed has been one of substantial progress among the various Protestant denominations in the United States is shown by the latest report of Dr. H. K. Carroll, who was in charge of the government census on religions. Dr. Carroll in an article in the New York Christian Advocate reviews the present standing of the various denominations and gives statistics which show that during 1911 the aggregate increase in membership has been 600,000 and in the number of churches 2,800. The following figures state the growth of the leading denominations:

Denomination	New Churches	New Communicants
Adventists	11	118
Baptists	121	31,428
Brethren (Dunkards)	28	830
Catholics, Eastern Orthodox.	no report	39,000
" Western	240	131,565
New Jerusalem	6	76
Congregationalists	no report	6,000
Christian Scientists	202	no report
Evangelical bodies	(decrease) 20	1,509
Friends	70 (decrease)	922
Lutherans	519	46,411
Scandinavian Evangelical	421	10,500
Pentecostal	42	501
Methodists	394	204,289
Presbyterians	255	23,416
Protestant Episcopal	49	18,540
Reformed	38	3,748
Salvationists	(decrease) 44	449
Spiritualists	500	50,000
United Brethren	(decrease) 40	8,515
Unitarians	10	no gain
Universalists	5	898

Dr. Carroll notes that the total net increase is less than one and seven-tenths per cent. No statement as to the increase or decrease of the Christian Scientists was furnished and this is true of several other minor bodies. Lutheran churches are shown to be gaining rapidly in organization, equipment, and numbers. The figures, though by no means as complete as could be wished, are instructive as showing the material vitality of the different denominations.

Bacon's Theology

FRANCIS BACON, statesman, philosopher, theologian and confessed corruptionist, was one of the most brilliant figures in English history. His system of philosophy had a distinct influence upon the thought and feeling of his age, and his pronounced literary ability gave to that system a vogue which even yet holds attractions for many students. In theology, however, while he was a firm believer in the divine revelation, his studies were for the most part superficial and tended towards materialism and rationalism. The attempt to prove that he wrote the plays of Shakespeare, though insistently maintained by a small faction of his admirers, has never been seriously considered. Now comes the intelligence that the same group of Baconians have put forth the claim that Lord Bacon was the final revisionist of the Authorized Version of the Bible in the reign of King James, and that his facile pen gave to it that finished grace of diction and charm of style which have been the admiration of Bible readers for three centuries. Specifically, the claim is put forth that after the revisionists completed the Bible, the result of their labors was entrusted to the king, and that for nearly three years Francis Bacon then solicitor-general for the crown, and immersed in court politics and intrigues, was occupied in editing and revising the manuscript before it went to the printers.

To those who know the history of the Authorized Version, the absurdity of this claim of Baconian authorship is at once apparent. The task was entrusted to a large body of the most learned men in the two leading universities, Oxford and Cambridge; the real work began in 1607, was completed in 1610 and revised the same year, the revision occupying nine months. Forty-seven eminent scholars shared in the translation. Each of the six great companies of workers passed its finished task on to the others "to be considered seriously and judiciously." Thus the whole Bible underwent at least six different revisions by the most learned men of that age. Within a year after its completion, the Bible was printed in Gothic letters by "R. Barker of London," published in folio, with the royal approval, and issued to the churches. The first copy was presented to the king himself. To assume that it was given over to Lord Bacon or to any one else for subsequent revision, is so obviously absurd that the very claim carries its own counter-evidence and reputation. All the historical facts concerning the Authorized Version are well known and absolutely authenticated, so that the Baconian revision theory must simply be set down as a silly literary conjecture.

Telegraphs and Telephones

POSTMASTER-GENERAL HITCHCOCK'S declaration in favor of government ownership and operation of the telegraphs has already borne fruit. Representative W. J. Carey of Wisconsin has introduced a bill in the House which provides on an elaborate scale for the purchase and operation of the lines. This is only one of several measures which may be expected on the subject during the present session. The Carey bill provides for putting the whole system under the supervision of the Postmaster-General, with a Commission of Telegraphs in immediate charge, the cost of the lines to be covered by an issue of bonds.

It is a rather notable coincidence that, simultaneously with the presentation of this scheme in Congress, the government of Great Britain assumed ownership and control of the gigantic business and assets of the British National Telephone Company, including practically the employment of its entire staff of 18,000 persons, one-third of them women, who are now under civil service rules. Arrangements for this wholesale transfer occupied one year and the change was accomplished without the slightest interruption to business. It included the transference of 1,600 exchanges, 560,000 telephone stations, 600,000 subscribers, and 1,253,890 miles of telephone wires. This is a pretty good record for an invention which less than half a century ago was regarded merely as a "scientific toy."

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, February 7, 1912

	PAGE
Lincoln Studying Law . . . . . From Painting by Blendon Campbell	Cover
In the Footsteps of St. Paul (Illustrated) . . By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D	123, 132
Changing the Collar for the Yoke. Sermon . . By Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.	124
What a Subscriber Discovers in the Publisher's Office By Eugene Thwing	125
3,000,000 Starving in China (Illustrated) . . .	126
Centenary of the Beloved Novelist (Illustrated) .	127
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	128
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated) . . .	129
Deaconess Work in America (Portraits) . . .	130
The Saving of Billy (Illustrated) . . . By Wayne Whipple	131, 138, 139
Brander Cushing's Ambition . . . . By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	132, 136, 137
American Girl Papers (Illustrated)	133
Our Comfort Corner. By Margaret E. Sangster	134, 135
Modern Poultry Keeping. By C. S. Greene . .	140
Our Mail-Bag	141, 142
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	143, 144
Good Work Accomplished	145
"No" and "Yes." Christian Endeavor Topic . .	146
The Call to Service. Epworth League Topic . .	147

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Visit of Duke of Connaught

THE first visit of British royalty in many years to this country was made by the Duke of Connaught, Governor General of Canada and uncle of the King of England and the Emperor of Germany, the Duchess of Connaught and their daughter, the Princess Patricia, who were the guests of Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid in New York. The royal visitors reached New York from Ottawa on Monday morning, January 22, and remained until Friday of the same week. There was a round of luncheons, dinners, and receptions of the most brilliant character. Some of them rivaled the splendor of king's palaces. On the first day the royal party displayed good sense and taste in visiting the Metropolitan Museum of Art. They were greatly pleased with the new Egyptian Hall, with its ten rooms full of priceless antiquities. There they beheld the likeness of Artenesia, a princess of two thousand years ago. A painted portrait of her is attached to the costly gold-leaf casket which contains her mummy, one of the best preserved and most valuable in the Egyptian collection. The visitors were deeply impressed with Van Dyck's life-size portrait of James Stuart, Duke of Richmond and Lennox, a distant relative of theirs. The Duke went to Washington on Thursday to call on President Taft, and, accompanied by Ambassador James Bryce, he was received at the White House in the afternoon, and at night dined with the British Ambassador. This is the Duke's second visit to America. The first was when he visited New York as Prince Arthur forty-four years ago. He entered the army as a mere boy, and since that time has been connected with every arm of the service as an infantry officer, a gunner, a sapper, a cavalryman, and a guardsman. He fought in the Soudan. He was major general in India for six years, three years of the time in command of the army of Bombay. The Duchess, who accompanies the Duke, is the daughter of one of the most celebrated military leaders of the nineteenth century, the late Prince Frederick Charles of Germany, to whose army Marshal Bazaine surrendered Metz with thirty generals, 10,000 officers, and 200,000 men. The Duke and Duchess have three children, a son, who is a soldier and diplomat, and two daughters—Princess Margaret, married to the Crown Prince of Sweden, and Princess Patricia, born on St. Patrick's Day, who accompanied them on their visit. Princess Patricia is twenty-five, very brilliant and singularly popular. The circumstances of her birth and her name, as well as her democratic spirit, have made her an idol of the Irish people. It is reported that she declined offers of marriage by King Alfonso of Spain, Manuel, lately King of Portugal, the Crown Prince of Germany, and other royal personages. The royal visitors were worthy of the splendid reception they received, not only because the Duke is the son of Queen Victoria, the duchess the daughter of one of the greatest generals, and the princess a woman charming and popular, but because they have the real royalty of ability, character and service. Their visit will be another cord of love to bind the United States more closely to Canada and to the mother country. The preservation of dignity and authority among princes in Israel is thus referred to:

So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for every one of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers. (Num. 36:7.)

H. R. H. the Princess Patricia

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught and Ambassador Whitelaw Reid Leaving Mr. Reid's Residence

H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught

Advice in Securing Riches

Frederick Weyerhauser, the St. Paul multimillionaire, was interviewed the other day at Pasadena, Calif., and gave the following rules on how to get rich: "Make up your mind to work at something really worthy of work and work hard. The surest way to make money is to save money and to use what you have. Don't be afraid of long hours or constant attention to your work. Work can be made a joy, an economy, a pleasure, if you combine an object worth while with the determined ambition to win. Any young man can get rich, can succeed, if he saves, if he has a definite and honest purpose and is so filled with the purpose that work ceases to be a hardship and becomes a privilege." This advice is splendid and can be followed to advantage by many a young man anxious to make a financial success of life. But it must not be forgotten that many who undertake business for themselves fail. After the young man has done all the millionaire has advised, there will then be enough unforeseen unfriendly circumstances, enough things for which he is not responsible; enough competitors a little smarter and more industrious than he, and it will be the few, not the multitude, that will get rich. What of that? Getting rich and success are not synonymous terms. Besides the advice the rich man gave, there should be added reliance upon divine wisdom and power, which is so potential a factor in even purely earthly success. The relation of piety to earthly prosperity was taught in the earlier history of the race:

And the Lord was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man. (Gen. 39:2.)

Devotion to Mother Rewarded

As a reward for years of devotion to a sick mother comes a bequest of $75,000 to Mrs. Harriet Hall of New York City from an old great-uncle in Glasgow. Years ago, when Mrs. Hall was a little girl, her great-uncle visited her parents in Syracuse, N. Y. The mother was ill, and though there were eleven children in the family little Harriet seemed to consider herself the guardian, companion and nurse of her mother. The beautiful picture of the child's devotion to her mother attracted the notice and affection of the Scotch uncle, who, dying childless, left Harriet his fortune. When asked what she intended to do with the fortune, she said: "First of all, I am going to see that my mother has every comfort possible for her declining years. Then when the time comes that mother no longer needs me I am going to see something of the world. In doing that I shall live over again the scenes that my mother knew. She was born in France. My father was an artist in Glasgow years ago, and of course I shall some time visit the places he knew and loved." While there is some neglect of parents severely to be condemned, the rule in America is, revere and love, and treat with tenderest care, father or mother in health, and especially in sickness. Mrs. Hall did not expect the fortune as a reward, yet it came to her. Reverence for parents, which Mrs. Hall manifested, had a promise of an especial reward.

Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee: that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. (Deut. 5:16.)

German Boys Fought Duel

Two German schoolboys only seventeen years of age fell in love with the same girl, aged thirteen, and consequently fell out of love with each other. The jealousy and hate burned to such a blaze that they had recourse to the "code of honor" to settle their dispute. So on a cold day in January they went to a forest outside Detmold, and at daylight they settled the matter with arms. They fought the duel with pistols at fifteen paces, in accordance with the most approved regulations governing such affairs in the best German society. At the first exchange of shots one of the boys fell dangerously wounded in the chest. The other was not hit. This was the second duel of the kind between schoolboys during the same month in the same neighborhood. This is a shocking relic of barbarism, and the strong arm of the strong German law should put a stop to it once for all. The victor, instead of being looked upon with honor, should be put in a cell for a long term for the purpose of meditation. Grown-up boys do not do much better. They quarrel and fight over their loves for people or money or fame, often using weapons upon each other, and the papers and courts reveal the tragedy. And nations do worse than the boys; they often fight and shoot each other for little or no reason. The overt act sheds the blood but it is the hate in the heart that prompts it. The boys and the older people they imitate were murderers in heart before they took in their hands the weapons of steel.

Whoso hateth his brother is a murderer. (I. John 3:15.)

Railroad Officials Killed

On the morning of January 22, there was a fearful wreck on the Illinois Central Railroad at Kinmundy, Ill., in which were killed James T. Harahan, until recently president of the Illinois Central, Frank O. Melcher, second vice-president of the Rock Island, E. B. Pierce, general counsel of the Rock Island, and Eldridge E. Wright, vice-president of the Rock Island Bridge Company, and son of Luke E. Wright, formerly Governor of the Philippines and Secretary of War. The New Orleans express was standing on the track somewhat behind time when the Panama Limited came crashing along the same track at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The engine of the limited ran into the rear car of the express and half way through the private car in which these unfortunate officials were asleep. The men were fearfully mangled. Mr. Harahan was born in Lowell, Mass., in 1843. He worked his way up from a peanut vender on the train to the presidency of the Illinois Railroad system, which E. H. Harriman took away from Stuyvesant Fish and gave to him. A few months ago he was retired by the company on a pension. On Thanksgiving Day, 1906, the Southern Railway killed its president in a rear-end collision. The Illinois Central now kills its former president and other officials in the same manner, and the criminal recklessness of human life in the operation of our American railroads is bitterly criticized. During the year of Spencer's death in 1907 fatal accidents to passengers in this country reached the maximum of 610. The number of passengers killed fell in 1908 to 381, in 1909 to 253, and rose again in 1910 to 421, of whom 217 lost their lives in train accidents. In 1911, 356 passengers were killed, 142 in train accidents. The British railroads killed but 23 passengers in train wrecks in 1910, and while in 1908 102 passengers lost their lives on British railways and in 1909 83 from all kinds of accidents, it is claimed that but one was killed in two years in train wrecks. This fearful massacre should wake the States and nation up to immediate action and reform. There must be some heavy penalties for those responsible for these murders. Some long or even life sentences would be salutary. The running down of Italian laborers on the tracks does not arouse the country as it should. Maybe the killing of presidents of the roads will bring the public to its senses and duty. This responsibility for careless killing was punished by death in the Mosaic law.

If the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to its owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death. (Ex. 21:29.)

DEACONESS WORK IN AMERICA

A FINE FIELD FOR WOMANLY ENDEAVOR

THERE are tens of thousands of women in America to-day who might give a few years of their lives to some direct religious work, and so not only do much that is waiting to be done, but also be the better and broader for it in their own personal character." Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, founder of the Methodist Deaconess work and secretary of its Deaconess Association, writes these words to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, sending the photographs of a number of young women who entered the work last year.

There are hungry people to be fed, sick people to be tended, lonely people to be cheered, sad people to be comforted, bad people to be helped to holiness. All these and other tasks are attempted and wrought by the noble band of women called deaconesses.

The office of deaconess in the church dates from the beginning of Christianity. The Lutherans, led by Dr. Fliedner, of Kaiserworth, were the pioneers of the modern movement, which has recognized the ancient order and given it new vitality and scope. He established an institution for deaconesses as early as 1836, and the movement was communicated to the Lutherans in America, who began the work on this continent some years later. The Episcopalians have long emphasized the value of women's work in the church and have various orders and groups of women workers. But the Methodists of America have done more than the other denominations to make the order of deaconesses prominent and to organize and promote its work. The General Conference of 1888 recognized the deaconess as an official of the church and provided for her formal consecration.

A few years before this Mrs. Meyer had established the Chicago Training School for City, Home and Foreign Missions. From the beginning the movement has grown among the Methodists, until there are now over one hundred deaconesses' homes and training schools in the United States under the direction of that denomination. Homes have also been established in several cities of India. The Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists and other denominations also conduct training centers for deaconesses and direct their work.

Mr. James N. Gamble, of Cincinnati, a prominent Christian layman, is the president of the Methodist Deaconess Association, of which Mrs. Meyer is the secretary. There are now four hundred and forty-seven workers in the association. On this page are the photographs of twenty-eight of the women who took up the task of Methodist deaconess ministry in 1911.

The deaconess movement is abreast of the times. Young women feel nowadays that they are not getting the most out of life by sitting still and merely "being ladies." There has been a serious economic waste in the policy that brought a young woman home from boarding school or college and placed her in her father's house with no definite claim upon her time and abilities. The deaconess movement offers a fine medium for connecting these strong, clean lives with the needs of a waiting world. The call for new workers is constantly going forth. Mrs. Meyer writes: "More women still are urgently needed—visitors, nurses, workers with children, evangelists, stenographers, teachers, field-workers, singers." It is a happy life. She hopes that many young women, studying the bright faces of the brave, consecrated women whose photographs are given here, will ask earnestly: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Mrs. Meyer will be glad to answer any communications about the work addressed to her office at 4949 Indiana Avenue, Chicago.

Among the Workers at Home and Abroad —COMMISSIONER BOOTH-TUCKER, of the Salvation Army in India, writes that the Army has been awarded the gold medal for its exhibit at the Mysore Silk Exhibition. The Army missions are making a fine record in their silk weaving industries.

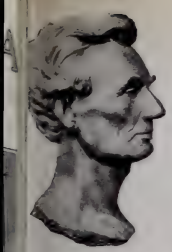
—EVANGELIST DAN SHANNON, of Grand Rapids, Mich., recently held a series of meetings at Clovis, Calif. Special trains came from Madera, Selma and Sanger, near by towns in the San Joaquin valley. Among his converts are quite a number of Catholics.

—EVANGELIST NICOLAS ZAMORA writes that the Evangelical Methodist Church in the Philippines has work at present in the provinces of Manila, Cavite, Bataan, La Laguna, Rizal, Bulacan, Nueva Encija, Pangasanan, Albay and Cagayan. The church has ten ordained ministers; four not ordained; 175 preachers; and 12,000 members.

—DR. W. H. FORSYTHE, Louisville, Ky., writes: "God willing, please open THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S doors and receive subscriptions again for the suffering in China now. I inclose a little for China ($10). Many will give, I believe, if only given an opportunity." All contributions for China will be forwarded to the missionaries.

—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in receipt of an interesting letter from Mr. George Washington Laurence, of Seguin, Wash., telling of his trip to Seattle at the time of the Gipsy Smith evangelistic meetings in November. He writes that in one afternoon 1,150 school children made the decision for Christ. At the men's meeting, when the request was made for those who loved God to stand, 6,000 men rose to signify their loyalty to him. Altogether 4,500 conversions were reported—a glorious work!

—SELDOM IS A FINER story told than the simple story of the life and work of the Rev. John Fleming Cowan, D.D., pastor for fifty years of the Presbyterian Church at Auxvasse, Mo. He was born in 1837, studied theology with his father, also a Presbyterian clergyman, was graduated from Westminster College and from Princeton Theological Seminary, returned to the West and accepted, at the age of twenty-four, the call to the Auxvasse Church. And now, after fifty years, he is its pastor still. He has preached to his congregation 2,500 times, besides numerous sermons preached elsewhere. Since 1888 he has resided at Fulton, Mo., where he is professor of modern languages in Westminster College, but his educational work has not interfered with his pastorates, and he still keeps the church he cared for a half century ago. His parishioners in Calloway County held a two-day celebration recently commemorating this fiftieth year of his pastorate.



THE SAVING OF BILLY

A Lincoln Story Never Before Published

By WAYNE WHIPPLE, Author of "The Story-Life of Lincoln"

LAWYER LINCOLN was in a quandary. It was the ever present question, "How much?" On one side stood his honest charity; on the other was arrayed his family. His little wife had been reminding him again that the boys were growing up and would have to be educated. They ought to have the chance that had been denied him by stern fate and by his father. Yet with all his want of knowledge and advantages he had been elected once to Congress.

"She says I'm always saying 'Give the boys a chance'—then why not my own boys as well as that Bill Herndon? What if one of our boys, with his mother's wit and 'know-how'—and her big ambition, too—should get to be President of the United States! Then she'd be mistress of the White House after all." He laughed sadly at the very idea. "The son of poor, awkward, ignorant 'Abe' Lincoln, the backwoods roustabout—that never had a chance in the world—a President! Well, why not? Stranger things have happened. This is a free country. Which one of the boys could do it? Poor little Tad! Bless him—he couldn't—handicapped from birth. Strange folks don't understand him! Willie?—he's altogether too fine—too good! And Bob?—he don't care a continental whether school keeps or not. His mother would have a hard time making a President of Bob. Too independent!

"Mary's chances for the White House look pretty slim! She's too ambitious—for her own comfort—and mine. She's like the child crying for the moon. Says I'm the one that's got to gratify that whim o' hers! Ridiculous!" He laughed again. "Don't the women get the queerest ideas into their heads? Can't help it, I reckon. 'Tis their nature to."

He started up and glanced around the dingy, dusty office. Everything grated on his present mood. He had the habit of thinking aloud—in the tone of one long accustomed to being alone. "I do think Billy might plow out here once in a while; he never gives it a 'lick and a promise' even. But I suppose if he should slick up, it would be like that time Mary raised the roof a half-story while I was out on the Circuit. I'd think I'd got into the wrong pew. I wouldn't know the place."

He began to paw among the papers on the old secretary-desk with such vehemence that a piece fell down from the broken pane in one of the glass doors. "Oyez, oyez, oyez," he called forth with the monotone of a court crier, "Strout versus Anderson, come out of your hole if you're within the sound of my voice, and enter your appearance, or I'll have you up for contempt. I wish Billy'd keep track of the calendar at least. When it comes to law and order he's even worse than I am. That's saying considerable, I'll admit. But what I can't carry in my hat I manage to keep in my head."

His head just then was in the cloud of dust he had raised, so he stopped pawing and slumped back into the wooden armchair, coughing.

"Poor old Billy! Maybe I'm—too—har—hard on him. He—he's—hav—having his struggle—too—hoo—hoo!" and he gave way to a paroxysm of compunctions and coughing. "He promised last time that he'd never touch it again. It must be terrible—that appetite and the constant temptation. I wish that Hogan and his rum-hole were in—the place where they hail from. Whenever Billy comes up missing like this, it worries me. Didn't expect me back so soon. Thought I wouldn't know. Poor Billy!"

Mr. Lincoln heard footsteps out in the hall. "There comes Billy now!" and he rose and stood with a long arm outstretched and a broad smile of welcome on his face. "I was too suspicious—why, hello, Clarke! I thought 'twas Billy Herndon—my partner, you know. I just got home from Bloomington late last night. I suppose you got my little remittance from there."

"Big remittance, you mean, Mr. Lincoln. Why, it's like picking up a thousand in the gutter. How on earth did you manage it—without a suit or anything?"

"Well, I was strolling along on the sidewalk, thinking about nothing in partickler and everything in general, when who should I see looming up ahead but our old friend Smithson. I skipped across and kept my eye on him from the other side. Before long he turned in. He had a shingle out—but the name on it was 'Smith' without the 'son.' I could see he was making himself to home there, so I jest skips round to my friend Green, the constable. As quick as that"—Mr. Lincoln snapped his long fingers—"I decided not to get out a summons for him—not at first, anyway. I jest told Green I had a man I wanted him to meet. He thought 'twas some one I wanted shadowed—and arrested some time, perhaps. I thought Smithson would be likely to know the constable by sight.

"My little scheme worked like it was greased. When Smithson saw us coming in he turned red as a beet, then white as a sheet. His eyes went this way and that, and if there'd been a winder open, he'd ha' dove out of it sure as preachin'. But I sings out, assuringly, 'Hello, Smith,' says I, calling him by his alias. 'Jest dropped in to extend my condolences for your loss,' says I.

"'My loss,' says he, 'what—'

"'Yes,' says I with a meaning grin, 'I see you've lost your "son."'

"In a second he saw what I was driving at and he says as quick as scat, 'Yes, so I have! Thank you, Mr. Lincoln, thank you,' so cheerfully that Green he stood and stared at the pair of us. Then I introduced my friend Green to my friend 'Smith,' and Smithson began to turn all the colors of the rainbow again. But I gave Green the wink to vamoose, and asked him if he'd be in for an hour or so, as I was coming to see him on particklar business. As soon as he went, I says to Smithson, 'Get rid of that young feller somehow, for I want to speak with you privately.' He was that flabbergasted he told the clerk he'd 'better go to dinner now'—when 'twasn't much after nine o'clock! The young man stared, and opened his mouth—but he decided not to ask any questions. He seemed to sense it that something was up. As soon as he'd gone I asked Smithson what he meant by leaving Springfield between two days, and sailing under a false name, and all that. I told him I had a good deal of information of deep if not painful interest to him. Was he prepared to get bail? Would he take the chances of a suit, with disagreeable consequences, or was he willing to settle up your claim right away?

"He asked the amount of the claim. I told him that with interest it came to over eleven hundred dollars, but we would accept a thousand if collected without delay or expense. He looked relieved and said he had about that much in the bank. His hand shook so he could hardly write the check. I had him draw it to my order and I endorsed it. He shut up shop and went along to identify me, though they knew me well enough at his bank, but it was coming so easy I was afraid he'd slip through my fingers yet. Then I walked back with him, and there, alone in his office, I talked to him like a Dutch uncle. I think he soon got the impression somehow that he couldn't go round swindling people right and left without getting come up with. I showed him how we were doing him a great kindness in not exposing him, jest to let him draw out gracefully. I told him if I heard of his playing another underhanded trick, I'd turn all the constables loose on him and he would end his days in some cool, quiet retreat. He broke down, and gave me his hand and word that he would walk straight as a die hereafter. I wish I was sure he would, but I'm afraid of deathbed repentances. I made that collection and gave him all that free advice before his clerk got back from dinner!"

"That was quick work, Mr. Lincoln. You remember we agreed to go halves on this."

"Did we, though? I recollect that you said we'd go halves, but you also said I could have all I could get out of that rapscallion. Have you brought it all over for me?"

"No. I knew you wouldn't take it all. You said you weren't a highwayman. But I did bring half."

"Well, I'm not a half-highwayman either. I don't do things by halves. 'Whole hog or none,' you see. Clarke, I'll tell you jest what I will do. Give me ten per cent. of the collection and we'll call it square. That's liberal for you and more than I've earned, for I was there on other business and happened to run across our man, so I didn't have to bring suit or make costs or anything."

"That's just it, Mr. Lincoln. You collected the whole amount without involving us in costs and expenses, and you should have the benefit of it. Please be reasonable. If you won't accept half, take two hundred and fifty. Twenty-five per cent. isn't a big commission for a risky collection like that. If we hadn't got any of it you would be the last man to charge anything. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways."

"No, Clarke, I'm sorry I can't see it that way, but I can't. Right's right, and wrong's wrong. It's awfully liberal and kind of you, but a hundred's all I can take. I don't believe in riding a free horse to death. If you want to, you might send Josh Green, Constable, Bloomington, Illinois, five dollars for the service he did us—to make up for the summons he didn't get to serve."

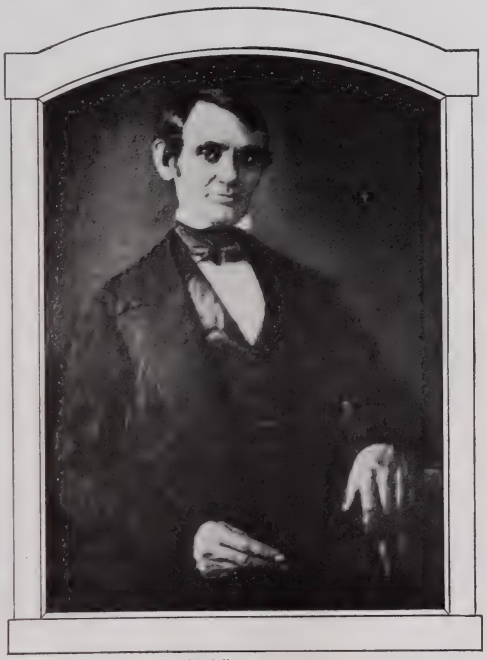
"All right, Mr. Lincoln, I'll make a mem. right away and we'll take care of Mr. Green. Now I'm going to tell you what we'll do! I won't pay you your hundred now, for you would consider the account closed. But as soon as I get back to the office, I will enter on our books $250 to the credit of Abraham Lincoln, as his commission on the Smithson collection. You're not a rich man, Mr. Lincoln, and you can't afford to throw away money like this. You'll need that two-fifty one of these days, and it will be there ready, on demand, for you and you only. I didn't think you were back, so I brought this cash over to hand to your Mr. Herndon in your absence. He would have accepted it, and then you would have had to take it."

"Clarke, you're mighty kind, and if I were in need I'd come to you as quick as anybody. But you can see that this is a business, not a charity transaction. A hundred dollars is ample for the service rendered. If it weren't for Herndon I wouldn't accept over twenty-five or fifty at most. I have no right to stand in his light. And the sooner you make up your mind to charge the rest off to profit and loss, the better for all parties concerned."

"Well, I'm sorry you can't see it in a different light. It seems funny, doesn't it, for a client to be pleading with his attorney to accept a larger commission?"

"Yes, and it's still funnier for a lawyer to refuse it," said Mr. Lincoln with a twinkle that showed that the humor of the situation was not lost on him. Mr. Clarke repeated that the money would lie idle till called for, and left Mr. Lincoln alone to his apprehensions about Billy.

Continued on page 138



From the collection of Americana of F. H. Meserve

Lincoln in 1848, From His Earliest Known Portrait

In the Footsteps of St. Paul

Continued from page 12

always been a place of importance in Grecian history, but the modern town is a dirty, uninteresting city of some 40,000 inhabitants, important commercially because of its fine harbor, but in no other way. St. Andrew is the patron saint of Patras, and tradition has it that he was crucified and buried there.

The traveler, bound for Corinth eighty miles distant, waits only for the first train that can take him out of Patras. It is indeed a charming ride that is before him. The little railway, with its diminutive cars, is little more than a steam tram whose express trains travel at the astonishing speed of some fifteen or sixteen miles an hour! But what is lacking in speed and comfort is more than made up by the beautiful scenery which meets the eye at every turn. This expression means more than in ordinary parlance, for the railway follows the sinuosities of the Gulf of Corinth, and the turns are many and rapid.

Now it skirts the shore so closely that one could throw a stone into the blue waters from the car window. Then it shoots inland for a few rods, only to be stopped by the impenetrable wall of the stern granite hills of the rocky Peloponnesus, when it turns to the shore again and is carried over causeways of stone that cross great gullies, and sometimes through rocky galleries that seem to be cut out of the overhanging mountain.

Yet the scene is not altogether one of forbidding mountains and fathomless gulfs, for there are stretches of fertile plains covered with vineyards, from which come the little grapes, called "currants" in commercial language, which form the chief article of Grecian commerce. It is an interesting fact that our English word "currant" is a corruption of Corinth, the city from which these little dried grapes were first exported.

We see from the car window also many olive trees, sometimes standing in orchards but more often singly, stretching their gnarled and distorted branches toward heaven, wherever on the rocky hillside they could find a little soil in which to plant their feet. Orange and lemon trees, too, abound, and figs and Indian corn testify to the semi-tropical character of the climate.

The people whom one sees from car windows and at the railway stations are not at all the heroic Greeks of the Iliad and Odyssey, but for the most part are dirty and ragged, with the exception of the soldiers, who are smart and fine enough, especially the officers in their elegant uniforms.

The country houses match the country people, and generally look as dirty and dilapidated as their inhabitants. Mostly built of adobe bricks, sometimes of stones daubed with mud, few contain more than two rooms each and most of them but one.

But children abound wherever there is a village or a single farmhouse. Bright, attractive, black-eyed, black-haired boys and girls they are, giving hope for the future of Greece if only she can have a few more generations of peace and comparative prosperity under a just and progressive government, such as the last generation has given her.

There is but one place of any size between Patras and Corinth, the town of Ægion, and as the town lies back from the railway, the only impression the traveler gets is of some great sheds stored with currants waiting for shipment, and a throng of frowsy peasants waiting to crowd into the third-class cars.

But though man, as in most countries of the Near East, is somewhat vile in his outward appearance, yet every prospect pleases. Through more vineyards and orange groves, past tall cypress trees and pine forests we ride, now cutting our way under the beetling brow of an overhanging mountain, then again skirting the very edge of the Gulf, until after some five hours of such an enchanting journey a great conical hill rises before us out of the center of an elevated plateau. The train circles around this hill, though at some distance from it, slows up, comes to a halt, and the conductor calls out, "Korinthos."

A Group of Greek Peasant Children of To-day

We are at last in this world-famous city. Here for three thousand years men have lived and loved, have worked and traded and fought. Twenty-five hundred years ago Corinth was at the zenith of her power. Since then her star has often waned and waxed. She has fought many battles, conquered and been conquered in turn. The Greeks of various provinces, the Romans, the Sicilians, the Turks, the Venetians, and again the Turks, have been her masters. Now again she is ruled by her own chosen king, though she has not yet recovered from the last hundred years of Turkish rule which she endured.

After all these triumphs and vicissitudes she to-day has scarcely the shadow of a shade of her ancient glory. A poor little Greek village of a few score of inhabitants occupies the site of the once magnificent and luxurious city, whose splendor voluptuousness and profligacy were a proverb throughout the world.

The striking, conical hill that we saw as we approached the city by the railway is Acro-Corinth, the Acropolis or citadel of Corinth, and during all these thirty centuries it has looked down upon the grandeur and the squalor, the utter destruction and the magnificent rebuilding of this devoted city under the Roman Emperors.

It has seen dynasties come and go, and conquering armies of many nations marshaled on the plain below, while its rocky fastnesses, fortified by its many conquerors, have dominated all the country about. It has seen great men come and go with different dynasties. Emperors and kings, philosophers and statesmen, poets and historians; but among them all is one supreme figure. He is not imposing in appearance or magnificent in raiment. According to his own modest statement, his "bodily presence was weak, and his speech contemptible." He came not with a conquering army or a kingly retinue. Quietly and unobserved he entered Corinth and took his place in a tent-maker's shop, side by side with the other workmen, who very likely were slaves.

Yet this man, above all the kings and philosophers and orators and wits of all the ages, has made Corinth famous. Who would go to Corinth to-day had not Paul trod those ancient streets? A few archæologists might dig for the treasures of antiquity in the buried city, to be sure, but it is safe to say that the modern world, as a whole, would know little and care less about Corinth had not that little, poverty-stricken Jew visited the city some 1,850 years ago, and made it his abiding place for long months and years.

From Corinth he wrote his first pastoral letters, those to the church in Thessalonica, and later his important Epistles to the Galatians and the Romans.

To Corinth, after his departure, he sent those wonderful Epistles which bear that city's name, and made it forever famous. So that either from or to this city were written the greatest of the Epistles and a large part of the New Testament.

But what Paul found in Corinth, and what we shall see there to-day, we must reserve for another article.

BRANDER CUSHING'S AMBITION

A Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By CHARLES M. SHELDON

Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER XVII—Continued

IT WAS a habit of Sidney Cushing to follow everything out to its logical conclusion. He had been trained by Brander Cushing to ways of exact thinking. In the work of the shipyard there was not a bit of designing or construction that did not come under the rule of strictest probing and testing. Sidney had developed a habit with himself of exactness and honesty which permeated every phase of his thinking being. He was incapable of hypocrisy. A thing must be true all over or it was not true. If it led to a complete upsetting of all previous habits let it, but the main thing was not to be juggled with.

He was tremendously in earnest in his longing for religious satisfaction. For the time everything else was of less account; even Pax, even his father, even the ship and all it stood for were not to be compared with his own soul-hunger for God and his peace.

As the time went by unnoticed that night, Sidney Cushing entered upon a wrestling for a soul-vision by the side of which all physical battles are pastime. Men talk profoundly of what they call the great historical battlefields and campaigns of famous captains of war. They are all as cheap and childish as the blocks a baby piles up and tips over compared with the conflict that a soul feels when it is really battling for its own life. And it may truly be said that when Sidney bared his heart to God that night and cried out in real soul-hunger for Him, a scene was being enacted that surpassed for magnitude and grandeur all the pitched battlefields of history.

At last at some time in the deep silence that settled on the library where he knelt (how long, he had not measured) there came to him some clear and distinct personal feeling of his relation to the divine and he was saying to himself as he unconsciously repeated Hermosa's very words, "Oh, I must love Him as well as respect him. And if I love him, I must follow him, and if I follow him where will it lead me? If I actually become a Christian what will it require of me? A belief in the Brotherhood? A love for the Kingdom of God and a real honest passion to build it up?"

And then there flashed into his mind the picture of his father as he had last seen him, his hard indomitable will defying disgrace, living in the ambition of his vision of that perfect engine of destruction for which he daily prayed a war might occur to test its proud and towering strength. How? If he, Sidney, became a real follower of this majestic Redeemer of the world, could he continue to have an enthusiastic faith in the things which made his own father enthusiastic even in the penitentiary? And what did he owe to that father? Would it break his heart to say to him now, "Father, I am a personal lover of the Lord Jesus Christ. I do not and cannot any longer feel as you do about the business of our lives. I cannot be honest with you and conceal a real revolution of heart and mind. You will have to seek your satisfaction alone. I cannot any longer meet your ambition. It does not represent my passion in life."

It seemed to him, as he asked these questions, that he was in Gethsemane with his Lord. He pressed his head upon his hands and cried aloud, "My Lord and my God!"

CHAPTER XVIII

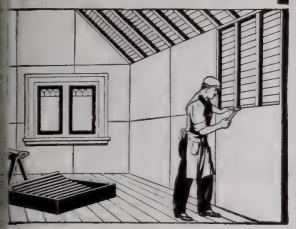
WHEN the gray light of early dawn first entered the library where Sidney Cushing had spent the night in his quest for a God to love, it found him very close to his heart's desire.

This was how Sidney Cushing found God, in his overmastering demand, in his soul hunger which would not be denied. And up he rose from his knees as the sun came into the library, thenceforth a new man in Christ Jesus.

I do not think even he realized the full meaning of that change in his whole life purpose. He could not. It was too great. Men talk about the beauty

Continued on page 136

Finest Walls Half Cost of Plaster



Applying Wall Board to Studding

Send for Free Book and Big Free Sample

BISHOPRIC WALL BOARD comes to you in sheets 4x4 feet, all ready to nail on studs. Any man can put it on.

Build right through the winter and save a month's time. Ready at once for paper, paint or burlap. Makes handsomest walls, ceilings and partitions in residences or cottages. Ceil attic or cellar. Proof against cold, wind, dampness, rats or other vermin.

BISHOPRIC WALL BOARD

Better Than Plaster and Costs Less

Bishopric Wall Board is asphalt mastic (toughened asphalt in which kiln-dried dressed lath are imbedded). Surfaced with strong, well-sized cardboard. Lath is the only thing that makes wall board rigid and keeps it flat. Bishopric Wall Board is the only wall board made with lath.

Bishopric Sheathing Saves 75 Per Cent of the cost of application and is far better. No knot holes, no cracks. Made of the same materials as Bishopric Wall Board. Ideal binder for cement and stucco.

Makes rat-proof, bug-proof, moisture-proof bins, storehouses, barns, stables, dairy buildings.

Price of Bishopric Wall Board.—Each crate contains 16 sheets, 4x4 feet, making a total of 256 square feet. Price, $6.40 per crate of 256 square feet, or $2.50 per square of 100 square feet, f. o. b. Cincinnati.

Price of Bishopric Sheathing.—Each crate contains 16 sheets, 4x4 feet, making a total of 256 square feet. Price, $6.00 per crate of 256 square feet, or $2.35 per square of 100 square feet, f. o. b. Cincinnati.

Write Us—We Will Tell You How Much You Need

Tell us the length, width and height of the rooms you want to use it in and we will figure cost. Address

The Mastic Wall Board and Roofing Mfg. Co.
146 Este Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio (8)

elect Your Own Terms

NOT for a cheap, trashy instrument, but for the good old reliable Cornish Pianos and Organs, standard for 50 years. Our New Credit Plan permits you to select a plan of payment on the Most Liberal Basis ever offered by a responsible manufacturer. We can do it because

Cornish Pianos and Organs are sold direct from the factory at a saving of one-third or more to you. We have no dealers, so can make our own terms. Every instrument sold on a ll Year's Trial every one backed by a bonded guarantee for 25 years. Send today for the New sh Book and learn how easy it is now to own a highest grade o or Organ. TODAY. Cornish Co., Washington, New Jersey

A BEAUTIFUL PLANT BOOK PRINTED IN COLORS—FREE

You need this book whether you have a city lot or a large country home. Suggests new and unusual trees, shrubs and old-fashioned garden flowers which will make your garden distinctive.

Meehans' Trees and Shrubs are vigorous—hardy—dependable growers. Fifty eight years of horticultural experience has taught us what is most artistic and practical. Be sure to get this valuable book—a request brings it.

THOMAS MEEHAN & SONS
Box No. 81, Germantown, Penna.

50 Best Paying Varieties Pure-Bred Chickens, Ducks, Geese, Turkeys, Eggs, Dogs and Incubators. All at Low Prices. nd 4c. for my Book which gives reliable formation worth many dollars to you . A. WEBER, Box 940, Mankato, Minn.

American Girl Papers

Amy Dorrit
Drawn by R. B. Birch

David Copperfield
Courtesy Bobbs-Merrill

By AN AMERICAN GIRL

Dickens' "Little Women"

AMONG the anniversaries which the nineteenth century prepared for the twentieth, the centenary of Charles Dickens is one of the most brilliant, and the 7th of February, which is the great author's birthday, will be commemorated throughout the English-speaking world.

No one can quite escape from Dickens. People may or may not care for his works, may or may not be familiar with his world peopled with types of men and women and girls and boys so true to life that from generation to generation they remain types still; but escape that world one scarcely may, and indeed nowadays it would be difficult to think of a world without Dickens's characters in it. Old Scrooge, for example, and Mr. Pickwick, Oliver Twist, Pecksniff, Barkis and Betsy Trotwood, Uriah Heep and Sairey Gamp, The Artful Dodger, Dolly Varden—we know them and their characteristics the way we know our own fingers and toes, and David Copperfield, the poor-house boy. If you boys and girls who should be reading this article do not as yet know David Copperfield, get acquainted with him at once, for you will almost need to know him before you are much older.

Dickens' Girls

NOWHERE does the transcendent art of the great novelist shine more radiantly or with greater warmth than in the creation of his girl heroines. The deep kindly interest and gentle courtesy, the tenderness and love with which the great-hearted genius portrays types of girls has never been surpassed. They are human beings each one of them, and it is surprisingly good to add them to our own world. Do you know Florence Dombey, "the blessed daughter," "the adored sister," that girl of girls? Do not miss knowing her; you will ever after recognize lovely, lonely girls when you meet them, and your understanding of them will grow very keen. And Kate Nickleby, and Little Nell, Ruth Pinch, Jennie Wren, the doll's dressmaker, Charlotte Neckett, familiarly known as Charley, whose capable hands were never idle and "gave even to the poor garret with its one chair, its big uncomfortable bed and bare walls, an air of home"—do you know these girls?

Do you know Dora Spenlow? Could any warm-hearted boy or girl help falling in love with Dora? There are so many Doras in the world — gay, faithful, trifling, adorable Doras. And Em'ly, that dainty little person with blue eyes and shy quiet ways, living her little life in the old hulk house by the sea; and then Emily, the older girl, going away to a new world to begin life over again, and ever willing to live her little "span" as best she could. I sometimes think if I could know and love only one of Dickens's wonderful girls I should choose to know Emily in the story of Copperfield. Do not miss Sissy Jupe or Louisa Gradgrind in Hard Times, or Amy Dorrit with her wonderful love for Arthur Clennam, or Lizzie Hexam in Our Mutual Friend. Lizzie, brought up in the shadows of ignorance, with no education and less knowledge to help her on in the world; yet what a radiant creature she blooms at the end of the story! There! I must stop; the company grows too numerous, and I have about reached the limit of my space; but to girls touching their teens these are friends worth making.

A Tribute to Dickens

IF THOSE of us who shall not be able to pay the tribute of a flower on his grave in Westminster Abbey on the 7th of February, would take down our David Copperfield from the library shelf on that day and read somewhere along in the twelfth and thirteenth chapters where the little boy sells his jacket to the old-clothes dealer and sleeps under the walls of Mr. Creakle's school where he had known Steerforth and Tommy Traddles, and then makes his way into the old-fashioned gardens, where Betsy Trotwood calls out, "Go away, go away, no boys allowed here!" and our heart stands still, we would not stop there, we would skim over the fascinating pages until David finds a home at last, and prays his immortal little-boy prayer. Perhaps you will be able to put the fascinating book down then, but I fancy you will reassure yourself by reading headlong on and on to the very end; and this would be a genuine tribute to the great Charles Dickens, who said of his David Copperfield, "Of all my books this is the one I love best."

Among the Little Folk

Lullaby, My Dolly

Rockaby, lullaby, dolly of mine;
Now day is ended, the little stars shine;
The kitty looks like a white snow-ball,
Curled up so cozy in grandmother's shawl.
Old Bruno, too, is tired of play,
Soundly he sleeps on his bed in the hay.
Out of the window I see the moon float
Through the dark sky like a bright silver boat
Rockaby, lullaby, while fairies peep
In at the window to see if you sleep.

REGINA BEVERLY MASON, age 15.
Georgia.

O CALICO TOWN

HAVE you ever been to Calico Town,
Where all the houses tumble down,
And the roads are paved with calico brown?
The cobblestones are calico—
The horses and carts and the trees, you know.

O Calico Town!
O Calico Town!
That is the place to go,
Where all the houses tumble down
Each time the brisk winds blow.

The calico people live up there,
And trim little calico clothes they wear.
They've calico shoes and calico hats,
Calico dogs and calico cats,
And everything there is calico.
If you haven't been you must surely go!

O Calico Town!
O Calico Town!
It's just beyond the rain;
So when it comes a-pouring down,
Just take an aeroplane.

RENA SHEFFIELD.

Our Good-Night Verse

And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest. Ex. 33: 14.

Lovingly and faithfully yours

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

First on the List

In oyster season, especially, the wise provider orders a good supply of

SNIDER'S Tomato CATSUP

"Condiments are essential constituents of the diet. Their importance rests upon the power they possess of improving appetite and, by so doing, of increasing the digestive power," says Dr. Robert Hutchinson, the recognized authority on dietetics.

If you want a delightful appetite producer, just try Snider's Catsup upon oysters in all styles, on meats, hot or cold, especially steaks and chops, and upon fish, spaghetti, macaroni, in all gravies, etc.

Snider's Catsup, famous for over a quarter-century as the catsup, is made of most costly materials. Only sound, perfect tomatoes and the best seasonings are combined in the special Snider way, to make this "sauce par excellence," a delicious dainty that keeps indefinitely.

Snider Process Pork & Beans are a perfect food. Serve them often.

Snider's Chili Sauce is a universal favorite upon meats.

"Snider's and none other" should be the order — for quality and purity.

"It's the Process"

The T. A. SNIDER PRESERVE CO.
Cincinnati, U.S.A.

All Snider Products comply with all Pure Food Laws of the World

The simplest Gown looks well on a Figure of Correct Proportion if Carried Well.

You Can Weigh Exactly what You Should Weigh

You can be Strong—Vigorous—full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can have a Clear Skin.

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 49,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you.

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's laws.

What My Pupils say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion; it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 216 pounds, this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver, and I can breathe now. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses, and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. Every woman is welcome to it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I'd like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT

Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Miss Cocroft is the best authority in America upon the regaining of woman's health and figure thro Natural, Scientific means.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"Mother"

"MOTHER" is the sweetest, holiest, tenderest and blessedest word in the language. No other name means quite so much to hearth and home. Kathleen Norris had a happy thought one day, and it crystallized into a happy book that came out at a happy hour. She named her book Mother. On the day that the book drifted out of space into my hands it was read through at a sitting and laid down with a sigh. The sigh was an expression at once of extreme satisfaction and of regret that the story was not longer. In this charming book there is concealed the gist of many sermons. Could it be placed in the hands of every engaged couple, of all the young married folk, of the people generally, poorer and richer, striving, thriving, aspiring and attaining, who compose this nation, its motive and message, understood and received, would uplift us to a vantage ground and a higher plane than any to which we have as yet attained. Mother, by Kathleen Norris, is a human document. The story is unpretentious and, if I may coin a word, is singularly homey. Reading it one says to herself, "Yes, this is true. I have seen it, I have been in a situation like this, or I have been a spectator." This dear story-teller is describing precisely situations and conditions that we meet in daily life, in city and country, wherever people live and love and struggle.

The stigma of reluctant motherhood has been somewhat unjustly attached to the modern woman. There is fully as much reluctant fatherhood, and it is only fair to mother, wherever we find her, to say that she accepts every drop of her cup, the bitter and the sweet, and counts the cost of her destiny, entering upon her period of sacrifice and her hour of coronation with open eyes. There are, of course, those who prefer the solitude of a childless home, or the limitation of a family to the single child or the two or three, for reasons that seem good to themselves. The onus of this, when parenthood is not valued as it should be, does not lie alone upon wife or alone upon husband. To do her justice, woman, once awakened by true love, possesses the mother heart.

It would not be fair to this little book to outline its story. I do not believe in revealing the secret of a book to those who have before them the pleasure of reading it. I have heard too many times the exclamation, "Don't tell me what happens. If you do you will spoil the story." This much I will say: that the mother in the story dominates it from the first to the last page. She is strong, feminine, serene and sincere. You can run to her with your troubles if you are a child, and she will comfort you. If she is your neighbor, you will ask her for advice. She sees the funny in things. She is capable of wrath on occasion, but it is the swift lightning that purifies the atmosphere. This mother is the mother we adore in our memory if we have lost her, and cherish with the greatest tenderness if she is still with us. She is the right kind of wife for a hard-working man who faces the stern realities of a day when success is not always to the deserving. She is the mother who has not been afraid to meet the needs day by day of the large family, who trusts in God with serene faith and has time to be helpful to her friends. The necessity for economizing does not daunt her courage, and she utters no weak complaints. There are young people in the book, the kind of young people with whom we are best acquainted. There is a lovely young girl who stands, as many girls do, on the threshold of life, dissatisfied, restless, and out of heart with the present situation. She needs vision and, in due time, it comes to her. A little thread of sentiment runs through the story and in the end contributes to the perfection of its weaving.

The story shifts from a home of plain living into one of considerable splendor. Here again I reveal no secret, but you who read will bear me out in the statement that we derive a certain amount of reflected luxury from reading about the privileges of our multi-millionaires. The woman who lives in a cabin has much enjoyment in reading about another woman who lives in a palace. If one small cake of violet soap is an indulgence for which a woman of refinement saves up her pence, there is a curious complacency that creeps over the mind when she thinks about, or reads about, the mistress of a mansion who buys violet soap by the dozen boxes, and has bath-rooms that shine with porcelain and silver.

I have said enough to let my friends know that I envy them the pleasure they will have in the possession of Kathleen Norris's story. I may add that it is one of the rare books that one loves to own, likes to lend and buys to give away. It will bear reading more than once.

. . .

Joy Cometh in the Morning

READING the story of life as it is told from week to week in letters from friends who never shall know one another face to face, but who often meet in this Corner, the impression deepens that sorrow does not kill. "Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Not long ago a mother told how she had been standing at the water's edge, powerless to help, and had seen her only son, a splendid fellow just entering his early manhood, drown before her eyes. Others were saved; her boy was lost. Yet, reading her brave words, came the conviction that the bitter cup that she had drained had been sweetened by resignation. After the first onslaught of grief, she realized with vivid understanding that her dear one had been suddenly called to higher service, that great honor had been put upon him and that in the presence of the angels of God he was living and doing the Father's will. Through this mother's letter there rang a note of victory, the victory of faith. The picture of her boy showed a face strong, candid and manly. It must be unspeakably hard to go on the way without him, but the mother and sister feel that they shall meet him again, and they can endure the loneliness as they think of the everlasting home. With them the word is

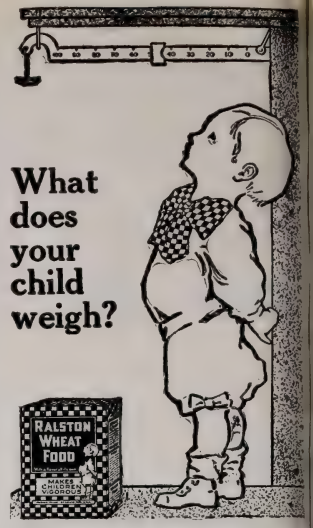
One more day's work for Jesus,
One less of life for me.
But heaven is nearer and Christ is dearer
Than yesterday to me.

. . .

A Voice from the Kitchen

THE woman who employs help in her housekeeping often complains of unskilled and untrained service. She affirms with truth that high wages do not insure an adequate return, that the cook is wasteful, the house-maid

Continued on next page



It is very important to keep the weight of your children up to standard while they are growing. It is the time when strong constitutions are built. Children need good substantial food—the kind that will stick to the ribs.

Ralston Wheat Food

contains the very nourishing elements that build flesh, bone and muscle. Pure, ground, whole wheat with all the nutriment left in. Has the natural flavor and color of the whole wheat.

Ralston is not factory cooked, but fresh cooked, every morning, in your own kitchen, and brought to your table tempting and delicious. Get a package of Ralston today, for your children's sake. You will like it, too.

Ralston is most economical—one cup makes a breakfast for six; 8 cups in a package.

Purina Whole Wheat Flour
makes delicious, nourishing bread, muffins, rolls, etc. Try it, too.

Ralston Purina Company St. Louis, Mo.

Send Us Your Old Carpet
We Will Make
New Rugs

By our improved method of weaving, we make beautiful rugs totally different from any other rugs woven from old carpets. Read our guarantee. Ours is the oldest and largest factory of its kind in America. Established 38 years.

Rugs, 75c and Up

Beautiful designs to your taste—Plain, Fancy, Oriental—fit for any parlor. Every rug guaranteed to wear ten years. Grand Prizes at three World's Fairs.

We Pay Freight

Your old carpets are worth money no matter how badly worn; don't throw them away.

FREE Write today for book of designs—in colors, prices and full information.

OLSON RUG CO., Dept. 25 40 Laflin St., Chicago

Pozzoni's Complexion POWDER

The Greatest Beautifier of Them All

Producing a smooth, velvety complexion, bringing out the natural tones of the skin. Its absolute beauty, almost impalpable fineness and softness makes Pozzoni's Complexion Powder cooling, refreshing and beautifying to the most delicate skin without injury. It is the only complexion powder that really clings—the only one put up in a wooden box, which retains all its delicate perfume until entirely used up.

5 Colors—Flesh, Special Pink, Cream, White, Brunette.

50c—EVERYWHERE—50c

Chiclets
REALLY DELIGHTFUL
The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

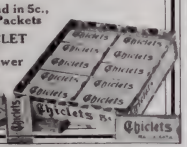
The singer's tones are more dulcet, the speaker's voice more clear, when Chiclets are used to ease and refresh the mouth and throat. The refinement of chewing gum for people of refinement. It's the peppermint — the true mint.

Look for the Bird Cards in the packages. You can secure a beautiful Bird Album free.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores

5c. the Ounce and in 5c., 10c. and 25c. Packets

SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY
Metropolitan Tower
New York



Pens that have elasticity—make either a fine or a coarse stroke—and don't stay spread—retain perfect writing points after long, hard use.

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

Steel, tempering, grinding—they do it.

Sample card of 12 different styles with 2 good penholders sent for 10 cents.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO., 349 Broadway, N.Y.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" COLLARS CUFFS AND BOSOMS

ARNOLD KENNELL ROBBINS VAN ZANDT TYSON

Of Fine Cloth Starch-Finished, Can Be Worn Both Sides

Price at stores, 25 cents for box of ten. Sample box by mail, 20 cents, or single collar, 6 cents in U. S. stamps. Be sure to name size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO. Dept. T1, Boston, Mass.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

Continued from preceding page

dilatory and the waitress perfunctory in the work they undertake. There is unfortunately a general shrinking from household work on the part of intelligent American young women. They prefer the greater independence of employment in offices, shops and factories. They explain that specified hours, routine duties and evenings that are their own are more attractive than the ordinary life of a maid in a family where, though she work from sun to sun, her work never seems to be really finished. There are employers who fail to understand that the woman in the kitchen ought not to toil from early morning until late evening without time to sit down and rest. There are those who are rigid in exacting of the maid continual waiting on the door, continual running up and down stairs, and readiness to perform all sorts of little offices that were certainly not mentioned in the original agreement. "Do write something in behalf of hired help," writes one of our readers who is earning her livelihood in this honorable calling. "The lady with whom I live is a sincere Christian. She goes to church and prayer-meeting and does a great deal of good, but she is never willing to let me fold my hands for a single half hour, and I am strictly held to my afternoons out, never having an extra hour in the evening."

If this employer could but take another view of her Christian opportunity she might brighten the life of her maid, and bind her fast by closer sympathy. It often happens that there is a very loose contract between employer and employed in domestic work, and of all contracts none are less satisfactory than those which are not clearly stated.

When a maid is engaged, the mistress should as far as possible indicate what is expected of her, and she should not take offense if the maid on her part requires certain privileges. In the old days in the South soon after the Civil War, the Northern mistress confronted the leisurely and good natured colored servant. The former was sometimes surprised by the philosophy of the latter. One placid New England gentlewoman, having for several weeks borne with the tardy progress of her laundry work, ventured upon remonstrance. To her Aunt Hannah, a queenly woman, brown of tint and regal of bearing, she said quietly, "Won't you tell me, Auntie, how it comes to pass that you begin my little washing on Monday morning, and never bring me the last of the ironing until late on Saturday night?" Aunt Hannah smiled a slow, genial, mirthful smile, and in honeyed accents said, "If I should finish that ironing by Wednesday, you'd find about twenty extra things for me to do before Saturday. There isn't any need to hurry that I can see."

The establishment of a friendly sympathetic relation in the home between maid and mistress, and adherence on both sides to the terms of a contract, would settle agreeably a situation that is too often trying.

. . .

The Etiquette of Calls

ALTHOUGH calling, as has already been said on this page in another connection, is at present somewhat out of fashion, it is so convenient and obvious a social custom that its return may safely be predicted. The exigencies of business often compel a family to remove from a familiar home town to a distant locality. A letter from a correspondent outlines her hesitation in rather graphic terms as to the use of her visiting cards. "Where we formerly lived," she says, "it was usual to exchange cards when making calls upon friends, and in a first call upon a married friend I would leave one of my own and two of my husband's cards. In the village where I now reside the people are extremely kind and seem disposed to be friendly. Nearly every one has called, but in not a single instance has any one left a card. It looks very much as though visiting cards had not penetrated this neighborhood. My perplexity is this: In returning my calls shall I do as I would have done at home, or shall I simply leave my cards in my bureau drawer and send in my name, if it be necessary to tell who I am?"

As visiting cards are merely bits of engraved pasteboard intended to serve one's convenience, and as they have not been in this case left by callers, the really polite and courteous thing must be to omit them altogether. One must be careful never, even by implication, to hurt the feelings of any one who might perhaps be sensitive. There may be among these new friends women whose acquaintance will be very much worth while, although they are not accustomed to the little frills of fashion.

. . .

The Child's World

THE child's world is bounded by the walls of the home. To the little child, father and mother are potentates, and no king or queen has greater authority to utter a final word than parents have in the hearing of the child. How then can it be explained that little children are intractable, disobedient and obstinate? In nearly every instance of infantile rebellion parents have only themselves to blame. They have the little one under their hand from the hour of earliest consciousness, and gentle authority, never intermitted and always loving, would make the child's world what it ought to be, a place of fullest sunshine. "Train up a child in the way he should go" signifies study of the child, sympathy with its joys and its griefs, and understanding of its inexperience.

. . .

In the Purchase of Books

THE book-lover is not satisfied with reading a book once. A good book will bear reading several times. A book borrowed from a library must be returned in due course. It has already made its way to many homes, and the pages have been turned by many hands. Just as the thrifty person would not like to be condemned to borrow furniture, dishes and kitchen utensils, the home economist should not be contented until the nucleus of a library has been formed. In the purchase of books adhere to the homely motto, "Be sure you are right; then go ahead." Is the book one that you will care to keep? Is it the work of an author who has something to say? Has it a message, or does it command respect? Lay aside a weekly sum for the purchase of books, and if possible once a month add a volume to your library.

Called Higher

Beynard W. Yost, of Lancaster, Pa., passed away March 21, 1911.

Mrs. Emma Allen (74) died in her home in Chicago, February 13, 1911.

Mr. W. H. Thomas (71) passed away at Harrisburg, Pa., April 10, 1911.

Jeanette Adair Walter (24) was summoned to her heavenly home, December 9, 1910.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Stephens (73) died March 30, 1911, at her residence at Vankleet Hill, Canada.

Harvey E. Herr (22) died August 10, 1910, and Mrs. Sabina S. Herr (74), January 19, 1911, at Annville, Pa.

Philip Manhart (87) died July, 1910. He was a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family ever since the publication was founded.

Mrs. Eliza Ball (84), of North Brookfield, N. Y., passed away March 30, 1911. She had long been a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family.

Mrs. R. W. Chapman died in her 72d year in July last at Plainview, Minn., where she was active in church work and is much mourned by a host of friends.

Lewis W. Sayles (73), of Lawtey, Fla., passed away May 30, 1911, after a lingering illness. He was a great admirer of this paper, to which he had subscribed for many years.

Dry Frying with Crisco

IN Crisco, the new cooking product, foods fry so quickly that they are always dry and flaky. Crisco heats to such a high point that you can cook foods in it in less than half the time usually required. Potatoes fry in Crisco in four and one-half minutes, instead of ten. They fry so quickly that a crust forms instantly and prevents absorption so that they are crisp and deliciously dry. They are absolutely digestible, wholly different from potatoes soaked in ordinary fats.

Purely Vegetable

CRISCO, the new product for frying, for shortening and for general cooking, is purely vegetable and should be used for cooking where you now use fats of animal origin.

In Crisco, Fish Balls Fry in One Minute

There is absolutely no animal matter in it. It is exquisitely clean and pure in origin and manufacture. It is put up in immaculate packages protected from dust and store odors. As soon as you see Crisco, you will be impressed with its purity. It is a delicious cream white, pleasing and appetizing in appearance.

Notice its Delicate Aroma

CRISCO has the fresh, pleasant odor of a vegetable product. Its use is not attended by the slightest odor in the kitchen, nor do Crisco fried foods or pastries have any suggestion of the offensive odor or flavor which accompanies the use of cottonseed oil or lard compounds. Test it in hot biscuits, Open a Crisco biscuit when it is very hot and notice the delightful biscuit aroma.

Purchase a package of Crisco today.

Packages 25c, 50, and $1.00 except in the Far West

On request, we shall mail a fully illustrated booklet, showing many other advantages of Crisco.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Dept. S, Cincinnati, Ohio.

With Carter White Lead and any good tinting colors, an experienced painter will produce any shade or tint you want, will spread a brushful on a board that you may see just how it will look, and if necessary, change it until it exactly suits your ideas.

More than this—some lumber is more absorbent than others; old paint is never in the same condition on the sunny side of a house as in the shade; atmospheric conditions also affect the life of paint. All these things are considered by the experienced painter, and he will mix his Carter White Lead paint to suit the condition of any surface.

CARTER
Strictly Pure
White Lead
"The Lead with the Spread"

is the pure white lead of our forefathers, only whiter, finer and more perfectly made by an improved, modern process. Pure Carter White Lead and linseed oil paint does not crack nor peel, but wears gradually, as paint should, and after years of service is ready for repainting without burning or scraping.

Plan now to paint right. Begin by sending for our book "Pure Paint." It is a text-book on house painting and includes a beautiful set of color plates showing houses attractively and tastefully painted. FREE to property owners, architects and painters.

Carter White Lead Company
12096 S. Peoria St., Chicago, Ill.
Factories: Chicago and Omaha

FOR SEWING LEATHER
The Speedy Stitcher sews a lock stitch like a machine. It mends harness, shoes, or in fact anything. The latest, the best—it beats anything for the money. Retails for $1.00. Guaranteed to give satisfaction. Special price on sample to agents. Our wholesale prices lowest ever offered; over 300 per cent. profit. We manufacture our own goods, can sell the best Awl for the least money. It sells on sight. Send at once for catalog and sample. Don't delay.
G. M. PERRY, 75 Kilby Street, WORCESTER, MASS.

WHEN one Toilet Paper has a greater sale than any other two brands, it means that particular toilet paper has distinctive virtues.

Sani-Tissue
"Soft and Clothlike"

has a greater sale than any other two brands we sell, and it is entirely different from any other Toilet Paper. Treated with Canada Balsam, it is soft, clothlike and strong. Its sanitary parchment wrapping immediately recommends it as insurance against irritating dust and grit.

Three Rolls for 25c.

Ask your dealer or
SCOTT PAPER COMPANY
662 GLENWOOD AVE., PHILADELPHIA
Makers of "Scot-tissue" Towels, 5c. "Waldorf" Toilet Paper and other HygienicPaper Products

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 132

of a moral life, and Sidney had led it on a very high level, but he himself told Hermosa afterwards that there was as much difference between his life now and before, as if he had really been living the life of a desperate sinner. So much more resplendent and towering is the spiritual than the moral definition of Being.

But if he did not grasp all the meaning of his new life there were certain factors in it that were clear enough to him even that morning, and they grew more clear every hour. His spiritual vision seemed to affect all his relations to others, even to Pax Marston. He did not know, even now, exactly what his own real feeling towards her was. He had told her father he loved her. And he had been honest at the time. But did he really and truly love her as one should love a woman who was to be his wife? What did he know of Pax Marston's religious convictions? Absolutely nothing. What was there in her best nature that would respond now to his own vision of a God to love and serve? He was unable to say. What would be her feeling if he were to write her now and tell her that he was another man from the one she had met and known? What would she say if she knew that the entire world in which she and her people had moved all their lives was so changed to Sidney that he had lost his respect for it, and was beginning to ask himself how he could make the stupendous change of a life occupation which had become anti-Christian, hostile to every new and fresh definition he was gaining of Christian discipleship?

And at this point he was irresistibly driven in his questioning up to that indomitable figure in the penitentiary. His father! His ambition! The new warship! This monster killer, around which Brander Cushing's prayers revolved!

How about all that! Could he go to his father and deliberately say, "Father, I have had a religious experience which has raised serious questions in my mind about the entire subject of war and war material. I do not believe I can make you understand, but as I look at it now the whole thing in which we are engaged seems horrible. It is all in absolute contradiction to the teachings of Jesus, who has become my Master. Father, do not misunderstand me. I do not, of course, mean that we can repudiate a sacred contract. We must make the Columbia the most perfect fighting machine afloat. But it ought to be the last we shall ever undertake. I know that your ambition is centered in this ship. I know you have said you daily pray for war in order to give the ship a practical test. But oh, father, can I make you understand how terrible it all seems to me now, how utterly impossible for a Christian disciple to entertain?"

Well, could he face his father with a speech like that? The father who had given his very life for his son? Could he pretend, in the face of a sacrifice like that, that his new religious convictions were higher and better? Could he break his father's heart now by withdrawing his enthusiastic support from a lifelong ambition which burned so fiercely in that heroic heart and around which the father had poured an unstinted passion divided only by the affection he lavished on his only son!

Or, was there an alternative? Might he not pretend to be the same as of old? Why say anything to undeceive his father? Why not keep still and let the truth of his new life appear in time, but not at once? Why not spare his father the shock of this disclosure and the bitter disappointment he would inevitably suffer if it were revealed to him in all its intensity?

He went over all this with deep earnestness. I do not think, indeed, I am sure, he was not unhappy or morbid over it in any way. There was a peace of God in his soul, which was the finest, most joyful thing he had ever felt. That was indeed his best proof of the new and happy life he had begun. While he could not escape the questions about his father and how at last he ought to answer them, he was not anxious about it. And at the close of that eventful day, after he had offered his nightly prayer for blessing on his father, he sank into a sleep so refreshing and blessed that it seemed to him when he awoke as if the angels of paradise had been there.

During the days that followed, he worked as usual at the shipyard. Unexpected problems came up that week. In the first place, there was a serious accident to one of the traveling cranes. It was of such a nature that it would require several weeks to repair the damage. In the second place, there had been delay on the part of a supply company to furnish necessary fittings, and this delay would embarrass the work on the ship in that department.

But the most serious thing that confronted Sidney at the most important crisis in his life was the rumor that greeted him the second day that week, of a threatened strike. The moment it came to him he called in Stuart, the yard superintendent.

"This is serious news, Stuart. I hope it isn't true."

Stuart shrugged his big shoulders.

"I'm afraid it is, though. It's been brewing all winter."

"Has it anything to do with my father or me? Don't hesitate to say so if it has."

"No. Nothing to do with it. Purely sympathetic strike to stand by the men at Farrar's Casting Works. Three hundred of them went out yesterday. The balance probably to-day. We shall get some word before the end of the week. Maybe sooner."

Sidney sat in the office confronting Stuart thoughtfully.

"I wish father was here."

He said it so quietly and naturally that Stuart was deeply touched. He sat silent, looking at Sidney sympathetically.

"Is there anything we can do, Stuart?"

"Not a thing. We're as helpless as babies. If your father was here he couldn't do a thing. If the men go out it will be on a general order, and you will be notified."

That very afternoon, Sidney, sitting in the office, was advised of a delegation from the casting rooms who wished an interview. At once he understood that matters had come to a head.

The delegation came in, fronted by MacKenzie, foreman of the department. He was somewhat embarrassed, but after a moment stated quite bluntly the situation at Farrar's mills and gave notice of the general order from the officers in charge, ordering withdrawal of all the men in the casting rooms of Cushing's shipyard.

Sidney was very quiet and simply said,

"When are the men going out?"

"To-morrow or next day."

"You say there is no dissatisfaction over your own scale?"

"No, sir. It's all right."

"Do you have any idea when the difficulties at Farrar's will be settled?"

"I have not."

"If you were in my place, would you hire men to take your places after you go out?"

MacKenzie was dumbfounded at the simple question. Finally he managed to say,

"I'm not in your place."

"Will there be trouble if we try to get in new men?"

"I can't say."

"How many men have you in the casting rooms?"

"Eight hundred and fifty."

Sidney looked very thoughtfully at

Continued on next page

Glue Down That Started Veneer and Save

1. A good chair from untimely death
2. Clothing from being torn
3. Your reputation for good housekeeping

Honestly now, isn't that result well worth the time it will take and the dime you will pay for a bottle of

LE PAGE'S GLUE

Look at that spreader—it works the glue into cracks and holes, lays it on thin and even, never gets gummed up as a brush does. It's the new idea in glue.

Again, our new air-tight cap keeps the glue from drying up. Use a little, put the cap on, and it will keep ready to use again a year from today. No bad smell, no waste, no mussiness.

Get Two 10 Cent Bottles Today
(One for the office, one for the home)

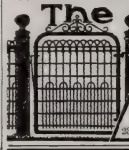
Send for free booklet, "Glueism"—It will reward you for reading it.

RUSSIA CEMENT CO.
We manufacture Glues (hard or liquid) in bulk for all industrial purposes.
73 Essex Avenue, Gloucester, Mass.

Sold also in tubes from which you apply the glue direct. Ideal adhesive for desk and office use.

Library Slips with every Bottle and Tube.

The IDEAL FENCE



Republic Ornamental Fence combines beauty and utility. Never sags or bulges, many beautiful patterns. Easily put up. Also full line High Carbon, tubular steel Farm Gates. Secure Free Catalog.
Republic Fence & Gate Co.,
235 E. 31st North Chicago, Ill.

May We Send You This Book FREE?

"Why Man of Today Is Only 50% Efficient"

This book, written by a well-known physician, is a most interesting treatise on a subject of great importance: that of keeping up to "concert pitch" and securing that 100% of efficiency so necessary to meet successfully the business or social requirements of the present age.

You will learn something about yourself that you never knew before by reading this book, which will be forwarded without cost if you send your request to Dept. 162B.

CHAS. A. TYRRELL, M.D.
134 West 65th Street, New York
CANADIAN OFFICE
275 College Street, Toronto, Ont.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

im. MacKenzie had been in the shipard ever since Sidney could remember. "I'm sorry for this, of course, MacKenzie. We are under contract to get ut the Columbia by the end of the hree-year limit. The delays have aleady put us back seriously. Your ction will cripple the entire work. I hall do all in my power to seek a aceful and Christian adjustment of he difficulty. But of course I have no nfluence with Farrar's Casting Works. don't know as there is anything more can say just now, only to express my eep regret that your action comes at ust this time."

MacKenzie turned to go out but topped at the door. All the men topped in the corridor to listen.

"I don't mind saying, Mr. Sidney, hat I'm sorry this has come up right ow. We've no quarrel with you or he yard. But orders are orders."

Sidney smiled sadly but made no anwer and the men slowly went away.

That night, Sidney, as he sat in the ibrary, after several hours' conferace at the shipyard offices with his uperintendent, decided to go up to the enitentiary and counsel with Brander Cushing over the situation. He did ot feel able to cope with it alone. The superintendents themselves had een divided as to the best course of ction. Several had asserted with more r less emphasis that it was impossible o find eight hundred and fifty skilled men for the casting rooms.

Others just as vigorously declared hat the men could be found, and that he company ought to get them and ay no attention to the walkout.

Sidney longed to see his father. At he same time he confronted the hought of meeting him with this rouble. He knew what his father would have said to MacKenzie. He would have moved heaven and earth to ill the places of the men who had walked out. At three different times n the history of the Cushing yard big trikes had occurred. Cushing had ought them all. Once he had called n the State militia and Dockville had been an armed camp. There had been ome lives lost, an immense amount of suffering among women and babies, an enforced idleness lasting over six months and finally a compromise which both sides might just as well have made at the beginning.

With his mind more or less busied with all this new and perplexing situation, Sidney was in a condition of remarkable tranquillity. What had come into his life? What was the meaning of this joyful peace? It was nothing but his full and unquestioning acceptance of God's promise, his willingness to take the Master at his word when he said, "In the world ye have tribulation. But be of good cheer: I have overcome the world."

To be continued

Bread Upon the Waters

A READER of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Yonkers, N. Y., sends this incident, which shows that "bread cast upon the waters" returns with interest. In the eighties, a matron, a poor widow, in St. Mary's Episcopal School in East Forty-second Street, New York, was visited one cold morning by a small beggar of about five years, who carried a little pail for food. When questioned by the kind matron he said his sister was at the door. There she was, a forlorn, ragged creature of twelve years, with an empty basket. Both pail and basket were filled and they were told to call mornings for the left-overs from the table. A visit was made to their home, and there lay an intoxicated mother on a bed of rags and straw, in a desolate room. The children were removed to Five Points Mission. In later years it was learned that the poor girl, Lillie Brinkerhoof, was sent as a missionary to foreign lands. The boy was put in a good home and is doing well.

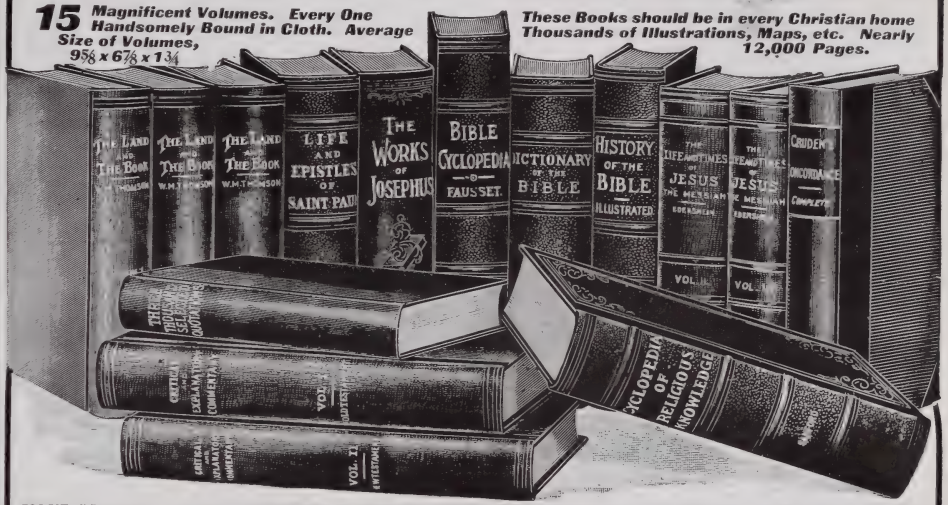
These Matchless Bible Study Books

Sunday School Teachers, Bible Students, Superintendents! You need these wonderful books. However useful your weekly or monthly lesson helps may be, this Bible study library is a daily necessity, a permanent and unequaled cyclopedia of Bible fact, ready to answer your questions at any time. Satisfaction Unconditionally Guaranteed.

$15 Former Price $56.00

15 Magnificent Volumes. Every One Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Average Size of Volumes, 9⅝ x 6⅞ x 1¾

These Books should be in every Christian home Thousands of Illustrations, Maps, etc. Nearly 12,000 Pages.



The Land and The Book
The Land and The Book
The Land and The Book
Life and Epistles of Saint Paul
The Works of Josephus
Bible Cyclopedia
Fausset
Dictionary of the Bible
History of the Bible Illustrated
The Life Times of Jesus the Messiah
The Temptation of Jesus the Messiah
Cruden's Concordance
Critical Explanatory Commentary
Vol. II
Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge

YOUR LIBRARY IS NOT COMPLETE WITHOUT THESE INDISPENSABLE STANDARD REFERENCE BOOKS

Gilbert's Three Thousand Selected Quotations
Burning words of brilliant writers from the literature of all ages, with complete index of authors and subjects. 681 pages. Former price, $2.00.

Smith's Dictionary of the Bible
An indispensable aid to Ministers, Teachers, Families, Sunday-School Superintendents, and Bible readers generally. 1,024 pages, finely illustrated. Former price, $4.50.

Cruden's Complete Concordance
Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture, and next to the Bible, no volume is of greater value to the Bible Student than Cruden's Concordance. 756 pages. Former price, $1.50.

Conybeare & Howson's Life and Epistles of St. Paul
There is no work that will compare with this in giving a life-size picture of the great apostle and the work which he did. 1,014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc. Formerly sold for $4.50.

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Bible Commentary (2 Vols.)
A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testaments. Consists of notes that are concise, learned, and easily understood, that elucidate the difficult passages of Scripture. 1,380 pages. Former price, $9.00.

Kitto's Illustrated History of the Bible
No modern writer has done more to clothe with a fresh and living interest the main personages and incidents in Bible History than John Kitto in this magnificent work. Over 100,000 copies have been sold. 735 double-column pages, 220 illustrations. Former price, $4.50.

For the earnest seeker after truth, knowledge and efficiency, there is no book (excepting the Bible) or any combination of books that approaches this set in usefulness or actual value for the money.

Fausset's Critical and Expository Bible Cyclopedia
This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred articles, and makes a complete and perfect Bible Cyclopedia. 760 3-column pages, 600 illustrations. Former price, $5.00.

Edersheim's Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah
Gives a full account of the society, life and development—intellectual and religious—in Palestine to serve as a frame and background for the picture of Christ. A life of the Saviour which is critical as well as Biblical. Two volumes, 1,524 pages. Former price, $6.00.

Josephus' Complete Works
In this great work are contained the History and Antiquities of the Jews; Destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; Dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac. Nearly 1,000 pages. Former price, $4.00.

Thomson's The Land and the Book (3 Vols.)
The modern Holy Land as illuminating the ancient and the Bible. An invaluable and charming classic, by a great missionary forty-five years in Syria. Three volumes, averaging 664 pages each, beautifully printed and bound; 6 maps, over 100 fine full-page wood cuts, besides several hundred in the text. Former price, $12.00.

Sanford's Concise Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge
A storehouse of information regarding Church History, Bible History, Names, Places, Customs, Doctrines, Creeds, Denominations, The Early Church, The Story of the Reformation, the various Young People's Societies, Theologians, Scholars, Cathedrals, Churches, etc. 985 pages, beautifully illustrated. Former price, $3.50.

Monthly Payment Prices		Cash Prices
Complete Set, 15 Vols.,	$17.00	15 Vols.,	$15.00
Choice of 12 "	15.00	12 "	12.50
Choice of 10 "	14.00	10 "	11.50
Choice of 8 "	12.00	8 "	9.50
Choice of 6 "	10.00	6 "	8.00
Choice of 4 "	8.00	4 "	6.00
Choice of 2 "	4.00	2 "	3.50

HOW TO ORDER On the Monthly Payment Plan we require an advance of $2.00 with order and promise to pay $1.00 monthly until payments are completed. Books forwarded on receipt of cash price or first installment of $2.00. Customers pay freight or express charges. Those at remote points or in foreign countries desiring us to prepay will send 30 cents per volume to cover cost of postage or express. Safe delivery guaranteed to any station in the country or to any mail point in the world. We will take back books that are not satisfactory in ten days after examination and return money, deducting only the return transportation charges. As to our reliability we refer you to any commercial agency. Established 1866.

Money cheerfully refunded if books are not entirely satisfactory

S. S. SCRANTON CO., 103 Trumbull St., Hartford, Conn.

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN

Can be learned quickly, easily and pleasantly, at spare moments, in your own home. You hear the living voice of a native professor pronounce each word and phrase. In a surprisingly short time you can speak a new language by the

LANGUAGE-PHONE METHOD
combined with
Rosenthal's Practical Linguistry

Send for Booklet and Testimonials
THE LANGUAGE - PHONE METHOD
362 Metropolis Bldg., B'way & 16th St., New York

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Original and unequalled. Wood or tin rollers. "Improved" requires no tacks. Inventor's signature on genuine:

Stewart Hartshorn

AGENTS GIVE STROPPER FREE

$9.80 A DAY

Give this $3 Automatic Stropper Free with every sale to introduce our new goods. New selling plan that gets the orders. Sells in home or office, town or country. Write for terms and free outfit, while the proposition is brand new. Thomas Mfg. Co., 8324 Wayne St., Dayton, O.

LAW STUDY AT HOME

Graduate correspondence students most successful at bar examination. Write today for proof and our free 112-page catalog. We make your home a university. Leading home-study law course in America. Our own modern text—prepared by deans and professors from the big law colleges—Harvard, Chicago, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Stanford and others. Very low cost and easy terms. Also business law. We guarantee to coach free a graduate failing to pass any bar examination.
LA SALLE EXTENSION UNIVERSITY, Box 2492, Chicago, Ill.

Monarch Light Touch TYPEWRITERS

$3. rental for one month
$15. rental for six months

Sold on EASY PAYMENT plan
Send for Literature and address of nearest office
Executive Offices: 300 Broadway, New York

1912 ATCO MOTORCYCLES
REBUILT USED AUTOMOBILES
ON EASY PAYMENTS

Shipped to any address in the U. S. on Long-time Liberal Credit Terms. Big Bargain Catalog No. 82 Sent Free

1912 ATCO MOTOR BOATS

AutoTradingCo., Inc. Pittsburg, Pa.

$225 to $375

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE $1,000

In the festal affairs of boys and girls, as for those of men and women, there is always occasion for the serving of

Welch's
The National Drink
Grape Juice

A case of WELCH'S in the house means that you are prepared for any social occasion. Welch grape punch, Welch grape sherbet—any of the many delightful drinks and dainty desserts made with WELCH'S—can be produced in a few moments.

WELCH'S is, when you open the bottle, the very juice that was in the grapes when they left the vines. It is as free from alcohol. Its quality and flavor have not changed. We took nothing out of it—we put nothing in to change its taste, color or keeping quality.

Make a Welch Grape Punch
(Unfermented)

Take juice of three lemons and one orange; small cup of sugar; one pint of WELCH'S; one quart plain or charged water. Serve very cold. Add sliced fruits, if in punch bowl.

Do more than ask for "grape juice"—ask for Welch's—and get it.

Write today for our free booklet of Welch Grape Juice recipes—it solves many a problem of what beverage for dessert to have.

If unable to get Welch's of your dealer we will send a trial dozen pints for $3, express prepaid east of Omaha. Four-ounce bottle by mail, 10 cents.

The Welch Grape Juice Company
Westfield, N.Y.

THE SAVING OF BILLY

Continued from page 131

"I jings," he said again—it was his most violent swear-word—as he ran his bony fingers through his already disheveled locks, "I wish I knew whether Strout versus Anderson comes up this morning. Guess I'll have to go over and see, and perhaps I'll meet him somewhere."

He got up, put on his tall hat, after arranging several papers behind the sweatband, and started on. He did not ask any one in the building about Billy. They probably had heard, for they all knew too much about him already. He met several friends as he strode down the stairs, out on the street and diagonally across the square. If any of the several friends he met on the way knew anything to the detriment of William H. Herndon, they were too wise to go tittle-tattling to Abraham Lincoln about him. Walking, in an elaborately casual manner, around the court-house with a furtive eye on the gratings of the lock-up, he almost collided with Billy, under the convoy of an officer.

"Bless my soul, Billy, where have you been? What are you doing?" The constable retired a short distance, but not too far to hear everthing that passed between the partners, and made an ostentatious survey of the cornice of the building and the tops of the surrounding trees. Herndon looked down and did not answer.

"What's the matter now?" Mr. Lincoln repeated.

"Nothing," returned the junior partner. "Er—that is—nothing much. Several of us were around at Hogan's again last night and—and—well, he has just been telling me that some of the fellows broke up the place. I got a postponement this morning and we've been over to see him. He claims a thousand dollars damages. It's ridiculous! I believe he broke that mirror himself. I'm sure I didn't do anything, Mr. Lincoln. I'm always quiet and peaceable when I'm—when I'm—not myself."

Mr. Lincoln laughed. "Yes, if you're ever peaceable it's when you're not yourself, Billy. Who was with you?"

Herndon's eyes shifted uneasily. He was willing to put the blame on other shoulders, but when it came to telling whose shoulders—that was quite another matter. "They're trying to get bail now," he said evasively.

"Why didn't you come right to me, Billy, as you generally do?"

"Well—I—I—didn't suppose you were home."

"That's it. You thought I was away, and wouldn't find out. Do you think you're treating me square, Billy?"

Herndon remained silent, pushing a piece of gravel about with his foot.

"What are we going to do, Billy?" asked Lincoln in an agony of tenderness, "after all your promises? This can't go on forever. There must be an end. It means ruin for us both. I can't stand it any longer. You're breaking my heart, Billy. Be a man, can't you? You're a splendid fellow, but for this one thing. That's what makes it so hard. O, Billy, Billy!"

Herndon, deeply moved, began to stammer.

"No, Billy, don't make any more promises—nor excuses. I can excuse everything—but not keeping your word with me. I can't stand that."

"Well, Mr. Lincoln, what can I do then?"

"Oh, I don't know, Billy. I don't know!" The tall partner's great angular hands were clutching each other, his deep gray eyes were swimming. "If some one would only knock that Hogan and his whole kit and caboodle to Halifax there might be some hope for us—or if you could only brace up and be a man! I reckon that's what you'll have to do, Billy."

There was a pause. Mr. Lincoln soon regained his presence of mind.

"Billy," he asked suddenly, "when does Strout versus Anderson come up? I looked everywhere for the trial list."

Herndon spoke quickly. "Really, I don't remember, but if Moseley, there," pointing to the constable, "will go around with me I'll look it up on the calendar for you. I'm sure it's not down for to-day."

"No, Billy, I don't think it would look quite right for a member of the firm of Lincoln & Herndon to go in there in custody—"

Herndon winced. "Of course it wouldn't, Mr. Lincoln. I'm sorry, though, to put you to all that trouble."

"But what about getting me into all this trouble, Billy?"

Herndon writhed. "I don't know, Mr. Lincoln. I reckon you'd better give me up. I deserve to sweat for it. Never mind Hogan. Don't go near him. He's mad and won't listen to reason. Those other fellows can't raise anything, so he blames it all on me. He demands a thousand dollars. He thinks you'll raise it for me. I didn't do the damage. I know I didn't. His whole place wasn't worth it either. It's blackmail, that's what it is, rank blackmail!"

"Well, Billy, I'll try it on. I won't call there this time. Still, I don't want you to spend another night in that old calaboose. I'll see what can be done. Here, Moseley, you take him into that vacant room in the court-house, while I see what I can do for my partn—my friend. I'll make it right with you."

Moseley said he'd do all he could for Mr. Lincoln.

"Cheer up, Billy, we'll have you out of this in three shakes of a lamb's tail. I'm going first to see if our case is reached. If it is, Strout'll be on hand, I know. Perhaps we can get it continued on the ground that we are both engaged in another very important case."

Billy winced again. The "old man" was rubbing it in. What if Mr. Lincoln should take him at his word and let him stay in jail after all? But he went along with Moseley, giving him to understand that his partner was sure to arrange a settlement.

Mr. Strout was waiting in the court-room, nervous enough, but afraid to go out to look for his missing counsel lest the case should be called in his absence. Fortunately the opposing lawyer was obliged to ask a continuance, as his client had been unable to be present. This left Mr. Lincoln free to look out for his erring partner. He owned no real estate in Springfield, as the home on Eighth Street was in his wife's name, so he could not go bail for Billy. Instead of looking for some one else to sign a bond on several former occasions, he had taken the trouble to do what he often advised others to do—settle out of court. He knew Hogan would be more exorbitant in his demands than ever if he went to see him in his shattered saloon. He resolved not to go near the man as Billy had advised. Hogan was doubtless well aware that no one was actually holden but the men who had done the damage—and the other offenders were good-for-nothing fellows. It might be necessary to wait a day or two for Hogan to come around; yet he could not endure the thought of letting Billy pass another night—a whole, long, sober night—in that lockup. He tried to think of some way out, besides asking a friend to go on Billy's bond or bearding Hogan in his den.

There was business enough to attend to, but Lawyer Lincoln could not put his mind to it. His partner's plight haunted him. He was as uneasy as a fish out of water. Although Billy had told him to let matters take their course, he knew very well that he could not do that. The man who was so tender-hearted that he rushed to the

Continued on next page

"Wear-Ever"
Aluminum Utensils

are well made.

Aluminum rivets with broad heads, which will not pull out, firmly clinch handle to utensil.

The outside polished surface is the same piece of metal as the inside, which is hardened by electricity to prevent discoloration by water containing alkali or iron.

"Wear-Ever" utensils are easy to clean because of the electric finish and because they have no seams or cracks in which food may collect. Food burned to a char does not injure them.

If not obtainable at your dealer's, fill in and mail the coupon below, enclosing 15 two-cent stamps (Canadian stamps accepted), and we'll send you, prepaid, the 1-quart saucepan pictured.

Write for booklet, "The Wear-Ever Kitchen"

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL CO
Dept. 34, New Kensington, Pa.
or NORTHERN ALUMINUM CO., Ltd., Toronto, Ontario
(Distributing Agents for Canada)

Please send me, prepaid, sample 1-quart "Wear-Ever" Saucepan, for which I enclose 15 two-cent stamps (30c), money to be refunded if I'm not satisfied.

Name.....

Address.....

Dealer's Name.....

BIG MONEY IN ONIONS

A ready market and big prices are waiting for you if you grow our exceptionally productive Northern grown varieties. This trial order for one pkt. each of our 3 leaders: Red Globe Wethersfield, Minn. White Globe & Yellow Danvers, also our new 1912 Seed and Nursery book.

10c

Farmer Seed & Nursery Co.,
507 Fourth Ave., Faribault, Minn.

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS

BY ONE MAN. It's KING OF THE WOODS. Saves money and backache. Send for FREE catalog No. 89, showing low price and testimonials from thousands. First order gets agency.
Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 161 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS

The Only Stropper that Strops any Razor Diagonally
Guaranteed for Life

Brandt's Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.
C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. B'dw'y, N.Y.

For Developing and Printing You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE prints.
H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

At 30,000,000 Meals Daily!

That is an estimate, Madam, based on the number of packages of Shaker Salt we sell.

Think how much better people must like this salt to buy it in such amounts.

The famous hotels, restaurants, etc., seldom serve any other kind. Neither will you, once you have tried it, for it never clogs or sticks—no matter the weather.

Always Flows Freely

Shaker Salt is made in a plant where we take from salt, daily, more than five tons of impurities.

It comes to you clean in a perfect package, with a handy spout for filling salt shakers.

You are missing the best salt unless you use "Shaker." Won't you try it and see?

Shaker Salt

Ask your dealer today. 10c at most good grocers.

Ask also about Diamond Crystal Cooking Salt—flaked—the new snow-like salt for kitchen use.

Diamond Crystal Salt Company
St. Clair, Mich.

(66)

Your Baby

Should be Kept Warm with Soft "Non-Nettle" FLANNELS

Ordinary flannels are apt to cause irritation and suffering that baffles mother and doctor. "Non-Nettle White Flannels" are the cleanest, softest, smoothest, finest, best wearing, best washing flannels made. 25c to $1.00 a yd. We sell direct to mothers. Beware of substitutes and imitations. "Non-Nettle" is stamped every half yard on selvage. We do not sell to dealers.

SEND FOR FREE SAMPLE CASE and receive samples of Flannels, Antiseptic Diaper, Rubber Sheeting, complete lines of Baby White Goods, Dimities, Long Cloth, Etc. Also illustrated catalogue showing 50 styles of White Embroidered Flannels, Complete Infants' Outfits, Separate Garments, Rubber Goods, Baskets and hundreds of needful articles for expectant mothers and the new baby. All free. No advertising on wrapper.

For 25 cents we will include a complete set of Modern Paper Patterns for baby's first wardrobe that would cost $1.50 if bought separately. Write at once or save this advertisement.

THE LAMSON BROS. CO., 341 Summit St., Toledo, Ohio

Advance Spring Styles in Ladies Neckwear

No. 120. Irish Crochet Lace Collar, daintily trimmed, hand-made, postpaid, 85c.

No. 119. Irish Crochet Bow, hand-made, postpaid, 45c.

We are Importers of the Latest Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Laces and Handkerchiefs. Also Knit Underwear and Hosiery.

We sell you Direct at about half usual retail prices. Write for new free Illustrated Spring Catalog.

C. M. Reynolds & Co., Dept. A, 156 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

THE SAVING OF BILLY

Continued from preceding page

rescue of a squealing pig stuck in the mud—in spite of the jeers of his companions—was not the man to desert his partner in his hour of need.

Lincoln got up and walked back and forth in the dingy little office. The air seemed to suffocate him. He went out into the hall and walked up and down there. This gave him no relief. He came back, seized his hat, and hurried down and out into the open square to get his breath. Unable to think of anything better, he walked over to the courthouse to see if the boy was comfortable. Billy was nine years younger, and he was always a boy to Mr. Lincoln. Perhaps by this time Billy had thought of some way out. Yes, he was there, guarded by the faithful Moseley. The room was hot and close and Billy was drowsy. No help in that quarter. He learned, however, that Billy's two partners in distress had failed to suggest any responsible party foolish enough to go bail for either of them. They were not disturbed in the least, for they were both snoozing comfortably in their cell, in the innocent confidence that their legal companion's kind-hearted partner would come to their relief as before.

The dilemma was becoming painful. No one seemed disposed to help him. He began to weaken and started off in the direction of the saloon, but when he came to the street he could not bring himself to turn down toward it. He kept on aimlessly along that side of the square. "This won't do," he said to himself. "I must do something." In lieu of anything better, he kept on walking, faster and faster, around the square, until the attention of several storekeepers was attracted by his giant strides and his long coat-tails flapping behind. Two men, who had heard of Billy's escapade the night before, winked knowingly. On his third round, Mr. Lincoln had almost reached the street of the saloon when a man dodged out of his way. It was Hogan.

"Excuse me," said the tall lawyer, "I didn't see you."

"Misther Linkin, was ye comin' to see me?"

"Coming to see you? What do you mean? I'm not in the habit of calling on you, am I?"

"No, Misther Linkin, that ye're not. But yer parthner — he comes affen enough to make up."

"I know he does, Hogan. Entirely too often. I hear he was there again last night, and a lot of your fellows smashed things generally."

"Misther Herndin he t'rowed a bottle first an' bruck the big lookin'-glass behint the barr. He started all the throuble."

"No, excuse me — the man who started the trouble's name was Hogan—Patrick Hogan—when he sold rum—"

"Whisky it was, sorr—whisky."

"Now, Mr. Hogan, you know well enough what I mean. There's got to be a stop to this whole business. Complaints are coming in from your neighbors. You know you came near losing your license a year ago. Next thing you know the court will order your place closed for disturbing the peace. Besides being disorderly, it is known that you are harboring thieves and criminals there. You deserve to have everything smashed. I'm going to enter my complaint against you this very day. I have suffered too much by you, and I'm sick of it."

"O Misther Linkin, just let me tell you, Misther Herndit—"

"Mr. Herndon tells me he did not do you the least harm last night. He's always quiet when he's drunk. You know that yourself, Hogan. Others know it and I know it now. Yet I have paid damages, again and again, for what some miserable scoundrel has done. You always made me believe it was Mr. Herndon. He says for me not to go near you this time, because you're only blackmailing me. I'm going to complain against you now. My back's up, and it'll go hard with you, Hogan. You have taken advantage of me for the last time."

"For hivin's sake, Misther Linkin, don't talk the loike o' that. Just hilp me out the once, an' give me another thrile and I'll niver sell yer parthner another dhrap."

"It's too late now, Hogan. The only trial you'll get will be over there"—pointing to the courthouse—"for keeping a disorderly place, for disturbing the peace, and perhaps for blackmail."

Hogan was terribly scared. He dropped on his knees and seized the skirts of Mr. Lincoln's coat. "For God's sake, Misther Linkin, hilp me, I niver knowed the danger. Be a frind to me the once an' I'll t'row up the business—I'll lave town—I'll—"

"Will you, Hogan? How much do you need to get away from Springfield? I don't mean how much damage they did last night, nor how much your business is worth."

"A thousand dollars wouldn't—"

"There, I don't care anything about that. Think, man, you're in danger not only of losing your license, but you're liable for grave misdemeanors which may mean a long imprisonment, besides hiring a lawyer, and all that. Nothing could ever put you back where you were—you have gone too far. How much do you need to get out of town within twenty-four hours? Speak quick, for I can't stop here talking. I'm in a hurry."

Hogan was ghastly white and all ashake. Mr. Lincoln pitied the man from the bottom of his heart, but he did not show it. At last the saloonkeeper spoke:

"Misther Linkin, I'll do it for two honderd an' fifty dollars!"

The very amount to his credit at Clarke's. That's what it's for—that's it!" said Mr. Lincoln under his breath. "It'll be the saving of Billy."

With a great hope breaking out over his anxious face, Mr. Lincoln lifted the astonished saloonkeeper . from the ground.

"Now, Mr. Hogan, let's see if we understand each other. If I put into your hands two hundred and fifty dollars of good money you will withdraw —take back—your complaint against Mr. Herndon and all those fellows, so they can go free, and you will pack up and get out of this town by this time to-morrow?"

"Yis, sorr, Misther Linkin, sorr, I'll do that same."

"Well, I'll do it, Hogan. I'll do it—and I'll do all I can to help you besides. There isn't a minute to lose. You go right over to the justice of the peace—the man where you made your complaint—and tell him you'll take it all back, and I'll meet you there with the money."

Mr. Lincoln, seeing Hogan start off on a run, turned and strode away in the direction of Mr. Clarke's office, murmuring as he went,

"Thank God, there's hope yet for Billy. Maybe we can help Hogan into a better business and save him, too. Perhaps it was wrong for me not to give Billy any say about the Clarke commission. If he'd been there in my place, this morning, his half would have been two-fifty. The money's his, and—it'll be the salvation of the boy. Poor old Billy!"

A Member of the Family

I am not surprised at any effort of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to benefit or give pleasure; so the gift of its 1912 Almanac—every page a mine of valuable information—is just one more reason why we, the members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family owe a form of thanks that can only be expressed in "works." I am a subscriber for 1912. I show the paper to friends; all attention to its contents, its elevated tone, its freedom from bias and sensational matter, and its world-wide benevolences, and offering a marvelous amount of value at a very low price. I have promised myself to do all in my power to have some part in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S charities in 1912.

J. H. O.

Los Altos, Calif.

"My Girls' School Dresses

—what a problem they were until I learned the magic of Diamond Dyes. Why, it used to cost hundreds of dollars a year to keep them looking well. But no longer! I have discovered that Diamond Dyes gives new life and beauty to worn or faded clothes. And so my daughters' wardrobes are more beautiful than ever before—and at less than one-half my former expense."

(Signed) MRS. WILFRED KNIGHT,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Practical women everywhere are saving money every day, and dressing better every day with

Diamond Dyes

With them you can make your curtains, portieres, and rugs fresh and new again, and you can use your laces and trimmings over and over again.

There are two classes of Diamond Dyes—one for Wool or Silk, the other for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods. Diamond Dyes for Wool or Silk now come in Blue envelopes. And, as heretofore, those for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods are in White envelopes.

Here's the Truth About Dyes for Home Use

Our experience of over thirty years has proven that no one dye will successfully color every fabric.

There are two classes of fabrics—animal fibre fabrics and vegetable fibre fabrics:

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are vegetable fibre fabrics. "Union" or "Mixed" goods are 60% to 80% Cotton — so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics.

Vegetable fibres require one class of dye, and animal fibres another and radically different class of dye. As proof—we call attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods use one class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton goods use an entirely different class of dye.

Do Not Be Deceived

For these reasons we manufacture one class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, and another class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Wool or Silk, so that you may obtain the very best results on EVERY fabric.

REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods.

AND REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Wool or Silk, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Wool or Silk.

Diamond Dyes are sold at the uniform price of 10c. per package.

Valuable Books and Samples Free

Send us your dealer's name and address—tell us whether or not he sells Diamond Dyes. We will then send you that famous book of helps, the Diamond Dye Annual, a copy of the Direction Book, and 36 samples of Dyed Cloth—Free.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO., BURLINGTON, VT.

A Great „Queen"

Horse Story

"KATE and QUEEN"

By Prof. Jesse Beery

King of Horse Trainers

Equals the famous "Black Beauty" in human interest--surpasses it in practicability. "Kate" a victim of poor handling is vividly contrasted with "Queen" who was more fortunate. You sympathize with one--rejoice with the other--even as you sigh for the slum waif and laugh with the child of fortune.

Prof. Beery has skillfully woven into this intensely interesting and true story, many valuable suggestions for handling horses--a result of a lifetime's experience.

Special Offer to Horsemen

Prof. Beery desires that every horse owner, trainer, breeder--everyone interested in horses--should read this great story. To make it possible, for a short time he offers every interested horseman a copy, worth $1.00, for the remarkably low price of

25c Postpaid

If you have even a passing interest in horses--if you own, train or breed them, you will gather from it a fund of knowledge worth many times the small price. Send for a copy today. Enclose stamps or coin.

FREE With each book we send free a beautiful colored picture of Queen--oil painting effect--suitable for framing. Order today. Address

PROF. JESSE BEERY

Box 505 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

15 95 AND UPWARD

AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. The bowl is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1184 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

Paint Sample Book Free

If you intend to paint anything this season, whether your house, barn, fence or buildings, or if you need paint for your floor, or for the interior wood work of your home, or if you need paint or varnish for any purpose whatever, before you buy, write us and say "Send me your special paint color sample book," and by return mail we will send you our great paint book which contains over one hundred sample colors of paints and varnishes for every purpose. It shows over sixty color samples of our famous high-grade ready mixed

House Paint at 83c a Gal.

over seventy color samples of our very high grade fence, roof and

Barn Paint at 43c a Gal.

shingle stain at 40c a gallon, varnish stain at $1.25 a gallon, household enamels at $1.45 a gallon, wagon and implement paint at $1.30 a gallon, carriage paint at $1.50 a gallon, floor paint at 90c a gallon, calcimine at 4 1-2c a pound, and points and varnishes for all kinds of work at very low prices.

Guaranteed 5 Years

We guarantee our mixed paints not to crack or peel during 5 years of service. (If it should we will furnish new paint free) and a gallon will positively cover at least 250 square feet of surface with two coats. Don't delay, but sit down right now and write for our great paint book, and see the beautiful colors and marvelously low prices, and read our wonderfully liberal 5 year guarantee which protects you absolutely.

Write for Sample Book

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 150-162 W. Madison St. Chicago

LOW PRICES for this handsome FENCE

100 other styles. Many cheaper than wood—all better. For Lawns, Churches, Parks, etc. Write for Pattern Book and special offer.

THE WARD FENCE CO., Box 904 DECATUR, IND.

FANCY POTOMAC ROE HERRING

Half barrels, $3.50; 20 lb. pails, $1.50

Producer's Sales Agency, 8 W. Conway St., Baltimore, Md

Modern Poultry Keeping

By C. S. GREENE

MODERN methods of poultry keeping require modern equipment, such as incubators, brooders, bone-cutters, feed hoppers, drinking fountains, etc., which are not necessarily expensive, as they soon pay for themselves either in increased product or decreased labor. Any person who tries to keep poultry as our forefathers did will soon find that it does not pay.

To produce eggs at a profit during the season of high prices, which extends from November to March, requires a combination of all the necessary conditions, such as good stock well bred from a laying strain, proper feed regularly supplied, and intelligent management all the way through until the finished product is placed upon the market. A hen has been properly likened to a steam engine, since all parts must work in perfect harmony, and the neglect of any of the essential points required in caring for a flock of hens may cause failure, just as surely as the omission of a certain valve or wheel on an engine will prevent its running. There are other features, however, that must be taken into consideration with poultry, which do not have to be considered with inanimate objects. Intelligence; natural timidity and extreme force of habit, which every animal and bird possesses to a greater or less degree, are some of the characteristics which must be successfully handled before we can say that our fowls are properly fed and cared for. Here is where a person's natural aptitude for the business counts for the most, and it is in this respect that women often excel men. Fowls should never be scared; one person should always do the feeding.

The proper feed depends upon the breed, age and condition of the fowls. A suitable ration for Leghorn pullets might be entirely too fattening for Plymouth Rock hens. There are, however, a few principles in feeding that may be applied to all classes of layers. The first is cleanliness. The houses must be kept clean, the birds free from vermin, and clean litter several inches deep on the floor. All whole grain should be scattered in this litter to keep the fowls busy. There is no profit in idle hens. No warm mash should be fed before eleven A.M., and then only about three-fourths as much as the birds could eat. A dry mash may be kept by the birds all the time, or only during the afternoon, as conditions require. The dry mash is usually fed in self-feeding hoppers, while the whole grain may be scattered by hand in deep litter on the floor, or by automatic feeders, thereby saving labor.

Many different formulas are used for the dry mash and grain mixtures, but here are two good ones: Dry mash: 2 pounds bran, 2 pounds ground oats, 2 pounds middlings, 1 pound corn meal, 1½ pounds meat scrap, 1 pound cut alfalfa, ½ pound oil meal.

Whole and cracked grain: 2 pounds cracked corn, 2 pounds wheat, one pound oats, one pound buckwheat.

If fowls are inclined to become over fat, the hoppers containing the dry mash should be closed during the forenoon of each day. It must be remembered in feeding that there is no best ration for all conditions, as each one must be changed occasionally to suit changing conditions, and that success depends to a large extent upon the good judgment of the person doing the feeding. In addition to these mixtures grit, crushed oyster shells and fresh clean water must be within easy access. A good dust box, with road dust and ashes is also indispensable.

The best feed and care, however, will not as a rule produce winter eggs at a profit without good early hatched pullets, which can be started to lay in September and October. Old hens, which molt in the fall, usually require several months in which to recuperate, so they are unable to produce eggs in paying quantities before late winter.

Farm Journal Knows That Foster Knows What He Is Talking About

Foster runs the famous Rancocas Poultry Farm. He is the Egg King. Marketed over eleven hundred thousand eggs last year. Cleaned up nearly $20,000 profit on them.

Feeding a Rancocas Unit

Foster has written a book which tells how he does it. Traces his career in the egg business from the earliest start. He made mistakes at first and dropped some money. But he profited by his failures and learned what not to do. Then he succeeded—big. By reading of Foster's mistakes you can avoid them. By studying his successful methods you can profitably apply them.

It is an amazing book that Foster has written. The best guide to successful poultry farming ever condensed between covers. Foster knows what he is talking about, and we know that Foster knows. Proved it to our entire satisfaction before we published THE MILLION EGG FARM (Foster's Book) for passing along to FARM JOURNAL subscribers. Farm Journal deals only with proved facts. That's just one reason why it's different from some farm papers.

Farm Journal has distributed many thousand copies of THE MILLION EGG FARM. Numbers of successful experiences of those who have followed the directions in this book have been reported to us—some very remarkable indeed. This absolute proof that Foster's methods can be successfully applied by others makes us all the more anxious to put Foster's Book into the hands of every poultry owner—whether he has a few hens or several thousand.

For it is Farm Journal's business to assist the poultryman and the farmer—to forward his prosperity by expert advice through its own columns and through the publication of helpful literature.

Farm Journal is, first of all, practical. It is edited by farmers. It is pithy. Its information is crisply condensed and meaty. It is cheerful. One of its favorite mottoes is "A Grin is Better than a Groan." It is entertaining—bright, humorous, HUMAN—and clean as a hound's tooth. In every way it is different—unlike any other paper. It would rather quit business than be commonplace.

For all these reasons Farm Journal is eagerly welcomed by upwards of four million readers every month. You need it for yourself and for your family. You can have

FARM JOURNAL every Month for four years together with THE MILLION EGG FARM Book, both for $1.00

No better investment was ever offered you. If you don't decide that the book alone is worth the price you can return it and we will stop the paper. Take advantage of this combination offer to-day. Write, or use coupon.

Cut Out and Send This Coupon To-day

If you order promptly, we will send, absolutely free, "Poor Richard Revived"—our splendid new Almanac for 1912.

FARM JOURNAL
184 N. Clifton St., Phila., Pa.

FARM JOURNAL, 184 N. Clifton St., Phila., Pa.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed is my dollar, for which send me your book, "THE MILLION EGG FARM"—and put my name and address on your paid-in-advance subscription list to get FARM JOURNAL for four years.

Name_____

Post Office _____

R. F. D._____ State_____

If in time, send Almanac.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

F. M., Wellsboro, Pa. How could Paul be a Roman and also be a Jew?

Roman citizenship was bought and sold at high prices in the reign of Claudius. Paul, born a Jew, also inherited the rights of a Roman citizen at his birth, either by the purchase of citizenship by some ancestor or as a reward granted to his father or grandfather for services to the state. The rights of citizenship, freedom to be considered equal to Romans, was sometimes granted to whole provinces and cities, and frequently to families. In the latter case, it was transmitted from father to son in the direct line. Your other question has been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG recently.

Mrs. F. L., Quinter, Kan. When the captives (the Jews) prayed, were their faces toward the East or was it in the direction of Jerusalem? Is there any passage found in the Bible where the people faced the East when praying?

In Jerusalem, the Jews always turned their faces toward the "holy hill" of the temple while praying (see Dan. 6: 10; II. Chron. 6: 34). The Samaritans, on the contrary, faced Mt. Gerizim. In the court of the temple, the Jews in prayer faced the temple itself (see I. Kings 8: 38) to the Holy of Holies (see Ps. 5: 8). Daniel, while praying in exile, opened his window toward Jerusalem (see Dan. 6: 10). Modern Jews in Europe and America customarily face the East in prayer. It was a custom among the early Christians to face the East, but that has long been discontinued. Mohammedans face in the direction of Mecca.

M. V. B. P., Salem, Mass. In Goldsmith's Rome, Vol. II, p. 157, may be read: "In the eighteenth year of Tiberius' reign, Christ was crucified. . . . Shortly after Christ's death, Pilate wrote to Tiberius an account of His passion, resurrection and miracles, upon which the emperor made a report of the whole to the Senate, desiring that Christ might be accounted a God by the Romans." What was Goldsmith's authority?

Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Eusebius, Chrysostom and others have written that Pilate made an official report to Tiberius of the trial and condemnation of Jesus. This is quite probable, but the book known as Acta Pilati (the "Acts of Pilate"), which is still extant, is not regarded as genuine. Goldsmith had doubtless read the available material on the subject.

J. C. F., Boulder, Colo. 1. Please explain the 30th and 31st verses of the 13th chapter of Mark. 2. Also the 5th verse of the 3d chapter of John.

1. Whether it meant that the whole would be fulfilled during the life of the existing generation or that that generation would see the beginning of the fulfilment of the prediction is uncertain. Many hold that the whole was fulfilled in the destruction accomplished by Titus; others, that the prediction was accomplished in the complete dispersion under Adrian. Verse 31 is the strongest possible expression of the divine authority. 2. The symbol of water was the initiatory ordinance; the baptism of the Spirit was the work of the Holy Ghost. The two combined in the same clause indicated a thorough spiritual justification. See Ezek. 36: 25-27.

J. M. A., Cleveland, O. Explain II. Cor. 6: 14.

This may have a wide interpretation. "Unequally yoked," means bound together with one who is alien in spirit. In early Israelitish times, marriages with heathen were forbidden; so in Christian times, unions of believers and infidels, or unbelievers in any form, were to be avoided. Righteousness and wickedness cannot pull in the same harness, and as our first duty is to God, we should put away from us all avoidable contact that would hinder its performance.

Reader, Forrest, Ill. Is there any Scripture bearing out a statement which I have recently heard that before the Flood angels came down to the earth, became sinful and married, bringing into the world a race of bad people?

The special passage to which reference is made is Gen. 6: 1-4, where, in reference to the increasing wickedness of antediluvian times, it is said: "The sons of God (beni elohim) saw the daughters of men," etc. The Jewish interpreters say these "sons of God" were princes and nobles and the "daughters of men" were women of humble birth. This view, however, is rejected by the best commentators, who hold that "the sons of God" were the Sethites, who had maintained in some measure the filial relationship to God, and who now intermarried with the Cainites, who had been spiritually disowned on account of their godlessness and unbelief. All the evidence leads to the conclusion that the whole arraignment of wickedness upon the earth related to beings of flesh and blood (see Gen. 6: 3) and not to supernatural beings, who, we are elsewhere told distinctly, have no distinction of sex and never marry (see Luke 20: 35, 36). In this view, which seems to be the correct one, the appellation "sons of God" refers to men's moral and in no sense to their physical state. There are many passages elsewhere that bear out this belief. (See Acts 17: 28; Ex. 4: 22, 23; Deut. 14: 1; Hosea 11: 1, etc.)

H. W. S., Keymar, Md. Please explain John 13: 8 and 14.

Christ here was teaching a lesson of humility. Peter had protested against the Lord washing his (Peter's) feet, but the Master, in his reply (see Mark 10: 45), convinced the ardent disciple, who made no further objection. Further, Jesus (John 13: 10) drew the distinction between the simple and hospitable office of feet-washing, customary in the East (which, in itself, had no spiritual significance), and the complete spiritual cleansing of those whose sins had been forgiven and who were regenerate.

M. E. L., Edinburgh, Ill. Please explain (1) I. Peter 3: 19, 20. (2) Luke 14: 26. (3) Matt. 11: 11, 12.

1. This passage has recently been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG. 2. Jesus is here asserting his claim to our supreme loyalty and affection. He tells us that we must be prepared for sacrifice and trial, if we would be his true followers, and that not even those we hold nearest and dearest should stand between us and our duty. "Hate," which is used in Mark, conveys a wrong impression, which is corrected in Matthew, where the sense is made clear that we must love Christ more than all else. 3. See answer in recent issue.

T. S. E., Auburn, Mass. 1. Is there an account in the Bible of an attempt to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem previous to the visit of Nehemiah, and if so did it take place before or after the visit of Ezra? 2. If Ezra had been at Jerusalem as a reformer twelve or thirteen years before Nehemiah's visit, how could he find the Jews both temporally and morally in such a deplorable condition?

1. Ezra 4: 11-24 refers to an attempt to rebuild the walls, but this passage evidently belongs in another part of the whole narrative contained in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah. It is not possible to tell just when the attempt referred to was made, except that it was in the first part of the reign of Artaxerxes, before the

Continued on next page

LADIES! Get this neat, dressy shoe that will feel comfortable from the moment your foot rests in it. Comfort is built into the

Unlined, Vici Kid
PILLOW SHOE

Soft, neat, durable—made in Goodyear welt Turn Styles. Price includes O'SULLIVAN RUBBER HEELS. You can order by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded. Write for free catalog and self measurement blank.

his Shoe
Turn Style
$3.25
ostpaid in U.S.

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3 Boston, Mass.

DON'T PAY TWO PRICES—Save $18.00 to $22.00 on

HOOSIER RANGES AND HEATERS

Why not buy the best when you can buy them at wholesale, un-regarded Factory Prices? THIRTY DAYS FREE TRIAL BEFORE YOU BUY. Our new improvements absolutely surpass anything ever produced. Let us send you POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR FREE CATALOG AND PRICES.

Hoosier Steel Stoves

HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY 164 State St. Marion, Ind.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Sent to your home—express prepaid

Sizes and Prices
9 x 6 ft.	$3.50
9 x 7½ ft.	4.00
9 x 9 ft.	4.50
9 x 10 ft.	5.00
9 x 12 ft.	5.50
9 x 15 ft.	6.50

Beautiful new all-over rug patterns. Made in all-seamless fast color Brussels, guaranteed to wear. Woven in one piece, reversible. Straight from the makers and sold direct at one-fifth retail prices. Money refunded if not satisfactory

Send for New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors—Free

ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 691 Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia

WAGON SENSE

Don't break your back and kill your horses with a high wheel wagon. For comfort's sake get an

Electric Handy Wagon

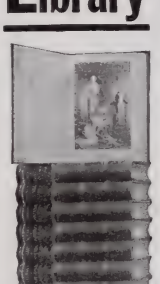
It will save you time and money. A set of Electric Steel Wheels will make your old wagon new at small cost. Write for catalogue. It is free.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., Box 122 Quincy, Ill.

Nero at the Circus

Nero! The very sound of the name pictures tyranny and cruelty. Born of a murderess and schooled in crime by murderers, the life of this man has stood thru all ages as the climax of cruelty and crime. How the Christian Martyrs were persecuted and tortured by the tyrant, how he recklessly dealed all precedent and created tortures and crimes unheard of before, and how his selfish, childish weakness, at last brought him to a coward's grave, is all told vividly and masterfully in the Library of Universal History. The illustration of the tyrant at the Circus is only one of the hundreds which embellish this great work.

Library of Universal History



Shipped FREE

The most wonderful book offer ever made in the history of the publishing business. A positive free shipment on this superb library. Write us for full details. Easiest monthly payments. An unparalled offer caused by the failure of a big publisher. We are not allowed to quote the low price at which we are offering this superb library because it would injure future sales. But we will dispose of the few sets—all bright and new—which have fallen into our hands at an unheard of figure. Send the free coupon for full details. We can quote our price only in direct letter.

PanamaCanal Map FREE

If you send in the Free coupon today, we will send you in addition to the sample pages, a handsome Art Picture of President Taft and a full, complete and comprehensive map of the Panama Canal, showing dams, locks, cuts, etc., etc.

15 Superb Volumes de Luxe

The Library of Universal History tells the story of the human race from the earliest dawn of history to the present day in such vivid, compelling fashion that your attention is riveted and held more strongly than by the most powerful novel. The descriptive powers displayed are wonderful. You live with the Pyramid Builders in far off Egypt. All the glory that was Greece, and the grandeur that was Rome, are spread before you. You can know the great men and the warriors of all ages, the colossal and world figures of all time, as you know the rulers and statesmen of today. Mail the Free Coupon now. Do not delay.

FREE COUPON

An Offer Never Approached Before

The most astounding record breaking offer ever made in the history of the publishing business. The Library of Universal History is the history that has been adopted by Universities, Colleges and preparatory schools and is now in more than 250,000 homes. In this history there are 5,000 pages of solid reading matter—700 full page maps and illustrations—more pages of reading—more full page maps and illustrations than are found in any other history. Send free coupon and get our astonishing offer.

American Underwriters Corporation, 175 N. State St. Department 2492 Chicago, Ill.

With the distinct understanding that I am not buying anything, or ordering anything, you may send me positively free, the map of the Panama Canal, the Territorial maps of the United States, photo-gravures of President Taft, etc., all free and prepaid. You may send me also sample pages of the Library of Universal History and quote me the Underwriters sacrifice price.

Send This Free Christian Herald Coupon today and get sample pages of this most remarkable work. Send free coupon now. In addition to the sample pages we will also send you the canal map and the art picture of President Taft. All free and prepaid. Send free coupon NOW—TODAY. Don't delay.

American Underwriters Corporation
175 N. State St. Dept. 2492 Chicago, Ill.

Name_____
Address_____
Occupation_____
216
Christian Herald

LADY WANTED

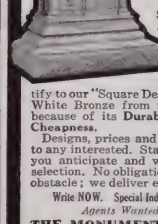
To introduce Dress Goods, Hdkfs, and Petticoats. Make $10.00 to $30.00 weekly. Best line—lowest prices—sold through agents only. No money required. New spring patterns now ready. Samples and easefree. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3B, Binghamton, N.Y.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

SEND $2.50 and your photograph, and I will send you, prepaid, a beautiful, enlarged, portrait reproduction, size 16x20 inches, in crayon, water color or sepia. Absolute satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.
A. W. GAGE, PORTRAIT PAINTER, 15 West St., Utica, N.Y.

MONUMENTS



INCLUDING ALL THE PYRAMIDS

We have sold over $190,000 worth of White Bronze Memorials through CHRISTIAN HERALD advertising.

Our thousands of customers will testify to our "Square Deal" and will recommend White Bronze from their own experience, because of its Durability, Artistic Beauty, Cheapness.

Designs, prices and full information Free to any interested. State about what expense you anticipate and we will send a special selection. No obligation to buy. Distance no obstacle; we deliver everywhere.

Write NOW. Special Inducements for Spring Work.
Agents Wanted. Liberal Pay.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
355-F Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

SILKS Direct from the Mill

Save at least ⅓ on fine silks direct from our looms. A new wash silk for Petticoats, Waists, Dresses, Negligees, Men's Shirts, Pajamas. Will wash and iron perfectly. Large samples free. Also send 10c (stamps or coin) for full line dress silk samples.
LIVE AGENTS WANTED
Please state if agency is desired.
AUBURN SILK MILL
Dept. C Auburn, N. Y.

PHONOGRAPH AND PIANO MUSIC

Save from 50 to 65 per cent. by using our circulating libraries of cylinder records and player piano music-rolls. How many and what kind have you?
REGENTS CORPORATION
Dept. "E," University City, St. Louis, Mo.

Lenox Guaranteed Goods Not Sold at Stores

A DOLLAR BILL will bring to your door, all charges prepaid, a "LENOX" Combination Box, containing the biggest kind of surprises in merchandise values.

$1.00

FOR THE WOMAN:
2 pairs guaranteed lisle elastic garter welt "LENOX" HOSE with spliced heels and toes, SEAMLESS on top of toes,—Black and Tan. Value $0.75
2 exquisite Swiss ribbed "LENOX" UNDERVESTS with elaborate imported hand crochet pattern tops and dainty ribbon effects, . . . Value 1.00
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Retail Value $1.75

FOR THE MAN:
3 pairs guaranteed soft light "LENOX" HOSE, with Linen toe and heel, Choice black, tan, navy, gray, . . . Value $1.00
A beautiful "Lenox" all silk reversible tie of the latest pattern, to match, . Value 0.50
One pair stout silkweb garters carrying the usual "LENOX" guarantee, . . Value 0.25
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Retail Value $1.75

Above items sold with the distinct understanding that money is refunded, if you are not entirely satisfied—you to be sole judge in the matter.

When ordering do not forget to state color and sizes desired.

Please remember that the "LENOX" line IS NOT SOLD AT STORES but can only be purchased from us direct or through our accredited agents. This protects you against substitution.

We refer to any bank or commercial agency in N. Y. City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Clerk 3, 5 W. 31st St., New York
We need some good Agents—men and women.

WATER

The most important point to consider in building a new home in a Rural District, where municipal Water Supply cannot be secured is to know what type of Water Works Equipment to install; this also applies to the old house. This is easy for the home Builder who will submit his proposition to our Engineering Department, who will work out the problem, so that a plant can be installed to meet the requirements in the most simplified and economical manner.

We install five distinct types of Water Works Equipment for the Rural Home—for hand or any class of power—therefore you secure the benefit of our vast experience over other concerns having but one type of System to offer

If you are interested, write for our Water Works Book "XC," which shows the different types and how they can be installed

THE BALTIMORE COMPANY
Engineers and Manufacturers
BALTIMORE, MD.

Buy Furniture from the Factory

—pay cash and save ½—we can save you the jobbers' and retailers' profits—also the time-payment losses. See our Catalogue before you buy furniture

Handsome Guaranteed Rocker $4.95

Rocker exactly as here illustrated—seat is deep and roomy, 20½ inches square and built of best oil tempered steel springs. Back is 27 inches high from seat. Entire rocker, inside and out, covered with best Boston Leather. A good $10 value—order one to-day—our price - - $4.95

Satisfaction guaranteed—we'll pay your money back and freight both ways if you're not satisfied.

CASH CATALOGUE—FREE

Hundreds of other great furniture bargains listed in our Catalogue—write for it today—we'll send it free.

PHILLIPS BROS. & WEIL
Dept. E. - - 819 W. 63d St., Chicago

LABLACHE
FACE POWDER

Winter, Women and Beauty

Wind and cold touch only to enhance the loveliness guarded by LABLACHE. It freshens the skin, softening away the wrinkles and conferring a youthful daintiness of complexion. Used by beautiful and refined women the world over.

Refuse substitutes.
They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream. 50c. a box of druggists or by mail. Send 10 cts. for a sample box.

BEN. LEVY CO.,
French Perfumers
Dept. 22,125 Kingston Street, BOSTON, MASS.

Grace Morrissey

Copyright 1911.

EARN FROM $21 TO $50 PER WEEK

LEARN ABOUT OUR FREE COURSE IN SHOW CARD AND SIGN WRITING

A Great Opportunity!

We are offering, for a limited time, a complete course in show card and sign writing to those purchasing a trial assortment of our

"Litholia" Ready-to-Use Colors

This is a great opportunity for ambitious persons, either sex, to increase their earning capacity. Good show card writers in demand at $21 to $50 weekly salary or in business for yourself. Our show card course is not a book of alphabets. It's a complete course in lettering compiled by an expert New York show card artist for us. "Litholia" is the only liquid water paint ever manufactured. "Litholia" is pigment colors, used the same as cake, distemper or tube colors, but far superior to either. "Litholia" lasts longer, always ready. Nothing to equal "Litholia" for the show card writer, the artist, or the interior decorator. Don't miss this offer!

LITHOLIA CO. COLOR CO.,
247 West 125th Street, New York

BEACON LAMP BURNER FREE

Two hundred satisfied users

Incandescent. 100 Candle Power. Burns common coal oil. Gives better light than gas, electricity or any ordinary lamp at one-tenth the cost with the cost. Fits your old lamp Unequaled for fine sewing or reading

COSTS ONLY ONE CENT FOR SIX HOURS

We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer new customers. Take advantage of our Special Offer to secure a Beacon Burner FREE. Write today. Agents Wanted. HOME SUPPLY COMPANY, 324 Home Building, Kansas City, Mo.

YOU CAN MAKE $30 PER WEEK

as agents, selling the wonderful SAMADO FOLDING BAG—2 Bags in one. Unfolds from purse into handbag or shopping bag. Greatest seller ever known. Big profits. Retails at $1.50. Sells on sight. Write for terms. A. S. Diamond & Bro. 35 W. 21st St. N.Y.C.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Continued from preceding page

arrival of Nehemiah at Jerusalem. 2. The unfortunate condition of the people when Nehemiah arrived appears to have been in temporal rather than spiritual matters. They were poverty-stricken and exposed to the depredations of outsiders. Neh. 13 describes a moral relapse which took place during Nehemiah's temporary absence from Jerusalem. Such sudden backsliding in a city's morals are by no means uncommon, either in history, or in present times; this relapse, however, was evidently much more limited than that which confronted Ezra on his first appearance at Jerusalem (Ezra. 9 and 10).

C. K., Riverton, Neb. Please explain Matt. 12: 43-46.

See the same illustration in Luke 11: 24-26. This is a case in which, though the man had been convicted of sin and had put it out of his heart, he had not taken in Christ, and consequently was an open prey when the wicked one returned with reinforcements. It teaches us the lesson that self-righteousness is no defense against the assaults of temptation; that of ourselves we can do nothing and that if we would win in the battle we must take Christ into our hearts and lives. "He that is not with me is against me."

C. D. H., Andover, O. Where does Christ give permission to eat pork, etc.? Does not that commandment of God stand to-day as it always did?

In Matt. 15: 11 and Mark 7: 15 and 18, Jesus indicated that the ceremonial distinctions between clean and unclean meats had come to an end. The American Revised Version gives this interpretation to the last part of Mark 7: 19. The most direct permission, however, to put an end to the old Mosaic restrictions on meats was the message to Peter found in Acts 10: 9-16. When Peter relates his vision and the experiences which followed it to the first church council (Acts 15), the decision was definitely made that the requirements of the Jewish ceremonial law would not be placed upon the Gentile Christians.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. C. McP., Chaumont, N. Y. It is found in Rev. 22: 16.

Mrs. S. C., Nicholasville, Ky. See answer to P. A. G., Kenna, N. M., in THE MAIL-BAG of January 31, about the Sabbath.

Mrs. Pauline Russell, 111 River Avenue, San Antonio, Texas, would like some reader to send her a copy of the poem on "Damon and Pythias."

H. T., Brooklyn, N. Y. Any or all of our readers are welcome to take part in the Bible Question Series by sending in answers to the questions. The first list of Bible questions appeared in our issue of January 17.

R. V. G., Judsonia, Ark. The paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG concerning Jesus' brethren bears no such construction as you have apparently placed upon it. The divine birth is accepted as a fundamental doctrine of all Christians.

Jennie C., Metuchen, N. J. 1. Ham, one of the sons of Noah, was the progenitor of the negro race (see Gen. 9: 18-27). 2. The name of Cain's wife is nowhere mentioned in the Bible. Traditions are preserved in one of which she is called Azura, in another Save, but these are not seriously regarded by scholars.

Elizabeth, Altoona, Pa. See answers to W. W., Philadelphia, in MAIL-BAG of April 5, and to Mrs. M. E. S., Pittsburg, Pa., July 5, both in 1911, and both dealing with recognition of friends in heaven.

Any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who may know of the whereabouts of Stephen W. Dottarar, who was last heard from when he resided at Salem, O., will confer a favor by communicating with M. J. Baumgardner, 519 Bighorn, Alliance, Neb.

Alice M. Brooks, Golden City, Mo., would be pleased to receive from any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD information relative to Solomon Augustus Brooks (attorney, New York, 1850-1885) or any of his descendants.

Canadian Reader. The article you mention has produced precisely the result we aimed at, judging from your letter. It has shown the attitude of the person in question towards the Peace Movement—an attitude with which, of course, we have not the slightest sympathy.

Mrs. J. B. D., Galt, Ont. 1. The story you mention about Luther is one of many canards circulated by the enemies of Protestantism to defame his memory. It is utterly untrue. 2. The author you have in mind is probably James Allen, who wrote As a Man Thinketh.

J. M. M., Pittsville, Mo. 1. In any good Biblical encyclopedia (preferably McClintock & Strong's) you will find an account of the Great Pyramid. Many books have been written on the subject and many views advanced to show its emblematical significance. 2. Abraham was born in "Ur of the Chaldees" about B.C. 2164.

J. R., Wiota, Ia. Luther died at Eisleben about 4 A.M., February 18, 1546, surrounded by friends, including his two sons, Justus and Jonas, his host and the Count and Countess of Mansfeld. With his last breath, he affirmed his assurance in the truth of the Christian doctrines he had taught. His remains were interred in front of the pulpit in the Castle Church in Wittenberg. The stories you mention were circulated by Catholics and are absolute fabrications.

A. G. J., Marshall, Mo. 1. Polygamy and slavery were both evils apparently inseparable from primitive conditions of society. 2. Long before Israel was a nation, there were races which had attained a certain degree of civilization, with laws for the regulation of civic, social and commercial affairs. One of the very oldest codes is that of Hammurabi (2207 B.C.) of Babylonia—the earliest code known to history—which shows an early civilization and a lofty sense of justice hardly equaled. Fragments of laws anterior to Hammurabi's code have been found.

Couldn't Stop to Eat

I have received the premium—The Women of the Bible—and have read it through. It was so interesting I could scarcely stop to eat. It is a fine description of the Bible women; some good, some bad, but that is true of the women of to-day. The Almanac, too, is grand and instructive. Many thanks for them.
Shellsburg, Ia. MRS. MARTHA JOHNSON.

He Remembered the Bread Line

The snowfall Tuesday, November 14, touched my heart, and reminded me of a year ago when I stood in the Bowery Mission Bread Line, cold and famished. Now that I am converted and working in Gary, I thought I would spare one dollar out of my wages to help the good work along. JOSEPH LALOR.
Gary, Ind.

What a Subscriber Discovers in a Publisher's Office

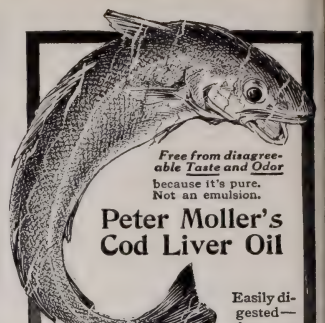
Continued from page 125

enabled to make for you a bigger paper. Just look at these figures a moment: In 1910 you had 43 pages and 32 lines more reading matter than in 1909. In the year 1911 you had 109 pages more of reading matter than in the year 1909. That means that with the increased advertising in 1911, your CHRISTIAN HERALD came to you with more than two whole pages each week extra reading matter in excess of what you had in 1909. That is your weekly dividend on our advertisements."

"Please! Please! Mr. Publisher, don't tell me any more now. Here I am getting a direct, generous benefit from your advertisements; the great work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is made possible, and in a sense kept alive by them; and the paper itself made strong and prosperous as one of the greatest influences for good in this nation, and I actually wanted to weaken and destroy it all by my ill-advised criticism. Well, I've learned something new about team work in making such a great paper as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Come to think of it, I'm glad you do put advertising columns and reading columns on the same page sometimes. Hereafter I shall look on them as yokefellows in the same good work, each pulling their share of the load. I shall certainly watch the advertisements with as great interest as the reading matter from now on, and shall patronize our advertisers in preference to all others."

"Well, that's mighty fine. Now won't you come out to lunch with me and look over this advance copy of next week's HERALD just from the pressroom?"

"Thank you, I'll be delighted. I'm anxious to see if you've made another gain in advertising. I hope you have."



Free from disagreeable Taste and Odor
because it's pure.
Not an emulsion.

Peter Moller's Cod Liver Oil

Easily digested—does not "stick to the tongue" does not "repeat." Bottled by Peter Moller in his own factory at the Norway fisheries.

Sold by druggists everywhere—never in bulk—sold only in flat oval bottles bearing the name of

Schieffelin & Co., New York Sole Agents

Vapo Cresolene
(ESTABLISHED 1879)

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

A simple, safe and effective treatment avoiding drugs. Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Croup at once.
It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.
The air rendered strongly antiseptic, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.
Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.
Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by All Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggists or from us, 10c in stamps.

The Vapo-Cresolene Co., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

HOME INSTRUCTION

We want to advertise and introduce our home study music lessons into all parts of America, and will give you absolutely free instruction if you will simply recommend the International Institute to your friends after you learn to play. We successfully teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, 'Cello and Sight Singing.

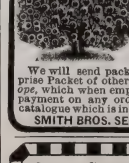
You may not know one note from another; yet, by our wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction.

Our lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. If you accept our free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and necessary sheet music.

We have successfully taught others and we can successfully teach you. Write to-day for our FREE booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC
98 Fifth Avenue, Dept. 341, New York

TOMATO FIGS

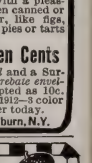


A beautiful and valuable novelty much used for making figs. Plant grows in bush form, literally covered with fruit. The skin and flesh are a rich golden yellow, solid, thick-meated, with a pleasant flavor. When canned or dried in sugar, like figs, make excellent pies or tarts for winter use.

For Only Ten Cents

We will send packet Tomato Fig Seed and a Surprise Packet of other new seed in a 10c. rebate envelope, which when emptied, will be accepted as 10c. payment on any order for seeds in our 1912—3 color catalogue which is included FREE. Order today.
SMITH BROS. SEED CO., Box 637, Auburn, N.Y.

Corns Permanent relief is secured only by removing roots and all. A-Corn Salve does that easily, quickly and safely, and costs only 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia



THE FAITHFUL WITNESS*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

BEHOLD John standing before a multitude of excitable Jews, easily roused to passion, and plainly, almost personally, pointing out their sins and urging them to repentance. See him, when the Pharisees of his audience congratulate themselves that his denunciations of sin are not for such righteous men as they are, looking them squarely in the eye and inquiring: "O generation of vipers (they expected, rather, this greeting: "O models of righteousness"), who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" Then, seeing their inward confidence in their ancestors' piety instead of their own, he adds, pointing to the pebbles at his feet: "Say not ye, We have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you, God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. And now also the ax is laid unto the roots of the trees (family trees in this case); therefore every tree that beareth not good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." It was as if he had said: "The dispensation has come when ancestral names will no longer be sufficient; there will now be a looking at the root, the heart itself, to see if it is sound, and among the branches for fruit. The new Gardener will say of every tree that has nothing but leaves, 'Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?'"

It has been said that the symbol of John, as suggested by this passage, should be an ax. Bravely did he swing the gleaming ax of condemnation in the forest of hypocrisy, corruption and indifference, "making straight in the desert a highway for our God."

"Cry Aloud and Spare Not"

There was a singular law among the Lacedæmonians that no one should tell his neighbor any ill news. He must be left to find it out in process of time. Not even in case of impending danger and probable distress should any message of unpleasant or painful tidings be directly announced to the person above all others most deeply involved.

God's law, on the contrary, bids us "Cry aloud and spare not" in telling men of their sins and the results that will follow. It takes a courage deeper than the soldier's to do this work faithfully as preachers, parents, teachers and friends; to speak the whole truth when it is unwelcome and uncomplimentary to those that hear it.

We see in the history of John the Baptist the picture of a faithful witness. The first quality in a good witness is that he should understand the subject, or be thoroughly acquainted with the person about whom he is to testify. "Are you acquainted with the prisoner?" is the lawyer's first question. John had the necessary knowledge of Jesus. It has been said by a writer on the life of Christ that "John saw only the sterner elements of the Messiah's character; only a mighty King, who was to baptize with the Holy Spirit and with fire, and stand with his fan in his hand to thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat into his garner, while the chaff was burned with unquenchable fire." This author thinks that John failed to see the elements of tenderness in Christ's nature, which led him to preach his very first sermon from the text: "He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted." But there is one expression in the preaching of John that, like a flash of intensest light, seems to reveal the depth and thoroughness of his insight into the spirit and mission of Christ. As Jesus approached him at the very beginning of his ministry he cried out, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!"

John himself, as has been suggested, was no "lamb." He was rather the Shepherd's dog, but he recognized a serene spirit and a different mission in Him who was at once the Shepherd and the "Lamb of God." This expression could have had but one meaning to John and to his disciples and to the Jews about them. Each one of them had gone again and again to the temple altars carrying a spotless lamb, whose typical blood was to wash away their sins and point them forward to a coming sacrifice. They had often seen the scapegoat on whose head had been placed their sins taking them away into a wilderness uninhabited. When John said, "Behold the Lamb of God," he must have realized, and the people around him also in some degree, that this Christ was to be the great Sacrifice and Scapegoat they had expected, through whose blood their sins were to be forgiven and taken away. He must have had, by prophetic foresight, Peter's point of observation when he said, "Ye know that ye are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." His eye was thrown forward as he spake of "the sins of the whole world," even to the multitude of Christians in our own day, who sing "My sins are washed away in the blood of the Lamb."

John's Vision

He must have seen not only the Lamb slain on Calvary, but also the "throne on which was a Lamb as it had been slain," with the four and twenty elders and the countless throng bowing before him with ascriptions of "glory and honor and praise to him that sitteth on the throne and to the Lamb for ever and ever." John could not have cried to his audience that day, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," unless, in some degree, he had beheld these scenes that were yet before him.

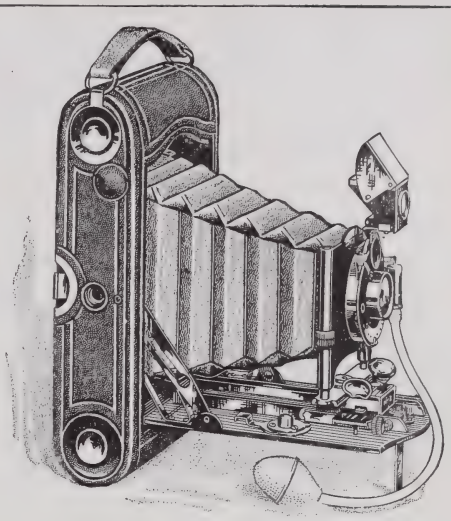
John was fitted to be a successful witness, for he saw Christ not only in his glory as a King, and in his might as a "Refiner and Purifier," but especially because he saw him as a bleeding Saviour for himself and the world; because he beheld him in that deepest expression of his nature and mission, the Lamb of the cross and the throne. Men cannot be good witnesses for Christ if they simply admire him as "the model man." They must see him as a personal Saviour and a Redeemer for the world. Beyond the beautiful form of Christ as he went about doing good, they must be able to see him as the Lamb of Calvary.

The Good Witness

Another quality of the good witness which John displayed was self-forgetfulness. His message seemed to fill him so thoroughly that he cared little for food or raiment, wearing rough camel's hair, and feeding on the locusts and wild honey of the desert, so that many, thinking he lived without eating, called him "devil-possessed." It was his message that "possessed" him. In it he lived and moved and had his being. When all Judea had gone out to hear him, the Pharisees, as the supervisors of spiritual things, thought it necessary to investigate this new religious phenomenon, and they sent a committee to question him. Their interview with him has been called the first examination of a young man for a license to preach. They said, "Who art thou?" Knowing that the expectation of the Messiah was uppermost in their hearts, he at once disavowed any false honor and said, "I am not the Christ."

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for February 18, 1912. The Ministry of John the Baptist. Mark 1:18; Luke 3:1-20. GOLDEN TEXT: "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Matt. 3:2.



There's a profit side as well as a pleasure side in the use of a

KODAK

ON THE FARM.

Pictures of stock that you have to sell, pictures showing the development of animals at a certain age, of crops at a certain stage of growth, of buildings, and of ditches and fences and roads—all these can be used to advantage in systematizing and making your farm profitable.

Pictures of your family and friends, pictures of the places you visit and the things you and your family are interested in—these will add to the pleasure of home life for all the household.

And you can make such pictures.

The operation of a Kodak requires no technical knowledge. The little book that accompanies each camera tells how to take the pictures, how to develop the negatives and how to make the prints, all in a simple way that the beginner can easily understand. And by the Kodak system there's no dark-room for any part of the work.

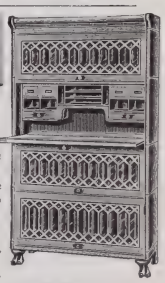
Ask your dealer or write us for illustrated Kodak catalogue—free by mail.

EASTMAN KODAK CO., 433 State St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

GUNN SECTIONAL BOOK CASES

Write for our "Book of Designs"

beautifully illustrated in colors showing our Sanitary Clawfoot Mission and Standard Bookcases, and how you will save money by placing them in your home.



The handsome designs, the rich finish, the removable non-binding doors, the absence of disfiguring iron bands, make them far better than the old-fashioned kind.

Our prices are lower than others

and high quality is guaranteed. Sold by dealers or direct. Address Dept. C. H.

Gunn Furniture Company, 57 Victoria St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium
For the Scientific and Effective Treatment of CANCER
Without Resorting to Surgical Procedure

The only private institution of magnitude in the United States for the exclusive treatment of Cancer and other malignant and benign new growths. Conducted by a physician of standing. Established thirty-two years.
For complete information address
Berkshire Hills Sanatorium, North Adams, Massachusetts

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, $3 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 114 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Lily of the Valley

Everybody loves Lily of the Valley. By far the most delicately beautiful of all flowers. They are perfectly hardy, easily grown and require no attention after once setting out. They grow and multiply year after year. The roots have usually been rather expensive, but we now offer choice, large, well-grown roots.

20 for 25 cents

100 for $1.00, 1,000 for $8.00, charges prepaid, with full directions for growing. They are nice to plant beside porches, in borders, among shrubbery, in shady nooks and in cemeteries. They produce an abundance of lovely, pure white, bell-shaped flowers, which are deliciously fragrant. Large, descriptive catalog of all kinds of plants, seeds and bulbs mailed free. Ask for it.

IOWA SEED COMPANY
Dept. 9 Des Moines, Iowa.

The perfect lawn requires the right grass seed

For average lawns, shady spots, golf courses, pastures, parks, for each purpose there is one best mixture of grass seeds. If you follow the Michell catalog you can make no mistake.

On the White House Grounds at Washington, at all recent National and International Expositions (Philadelphia, Buffalo, Jamestown and Portland, Oregon) in the best known public parks are extensively sown because of their superiority.

Michell's Grass Seeds

$1.00 brings to your door, prepaid, our Introductory Package of Michell's Evergreen Lawn Seed—the ideal mixture for general purposes—and our Special Bulletin, "How to Make a Lawn." Package contains one-fifth of a bushel—enough for the average lawn.

Our 1912 Catalog

is chock full of facts on the distinctive grass, flower and vegetable seeds that will best repay your planting effort. Sent FREE on request.

HENRY F. MICHELL CO.
516 Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A BARGAIN COLLECTION OF PANSIES

Five full size packages, marvelous and striking varieties. Gigantic in size, richest, most novel and unique colorings for ONLY 10c and the handsomest Seed and Plant Guide ever issued. Hundreds of illustrations, many in colors, true to nature. Mention this paper. Send today. Don't wait.

FREE PANSY BOOKLET HOW TO GROW BIG PANSIES

GREAT NORTHERN SEED CO.
2352 Rose St. Rockford, Illinois

Plant GREEN'S TREES, SHRUBS, PLANTS and VINES

For over thirty-three years people with discriminating tastes have been relying on Green to offer suggestions for pretty lawns and gardens through his annual catalog.

Reasons for Buying of Green

His trees, plants, vines and shrubs are of high quality and true to name. You save half of your money by buying direct of Green. Green's products are northern grown, hardy, and free from scale. Green has a national reputation for fair dealing.

Send for GREEN'S 1912 CATALOG. If you send now, at once, you will also get Green's Book—"Thirty Years with Fruits and Flowers"—FREE.

Established 66 years. Capital $100,000

GREEN'S NURSERY CO., Box 18, Rochester, N.Y.

Wonderful Fall Bearing Strawberries These new berries are a great success. They bear fruit every fall as well as spring, three crops in two years. They have yielded as high as 10,000 qts. to acre in Aug., Sept. and Oct. of first year, with us. We cannot get enough fruit to supply demand. I know of nothing quite so profitable. We are also headquarters for Plum Farmer, Idaho and Royal Purple Raspberries, Wm. Blackberry, Early Ozark Strawberry, Hastings Potato. Catalogue of all kinds of Berry Plants free. Address

I. J. Farmer, Box 255, Pulaski, N.Y.

ROSES of NEW CASTLE

is an exquisitely illustrated book of 86 pages, printed in natural colors. Gives lifetime experience on rose culture. Describes wonderful Hoosier roses—world's best for home planting. Also full line of hardy plants and shrubs of all kinds. Your name on postcard brings book FREE. Be sure to write today.

HELLER BROS. CO., Rose Specialists, Box 220 New Castle, Ind.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

"What then? Art thou Elijah?" "I am not." "Art thou that prophet of whom Moses spake?" "No." "Who art thou, that we may give an answer to them that sent us? What sayest thou of thyself?" "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, as saith the prophet Esaias."

"The Voice"

In the reports of conventions, we often see the words, "A voice," with the quotation of some remark from some unknown person. John the Baptist was content to have his words reported down the ages as the utterance of "a voice." He had the spirit that led Joseph to say, when Pharaoh praised him for interpreting his dreams: "It is not in me; God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace." John might have said "Yes" in the figurative and prophetic sense when they said, "Art thou Elijah?" for he was the spiritual Elijah that was to come; but he was not eager for honor. To be neither Christ nor Elias, nor that prophet, made him of little account to the Pharisees; but he was content to be simply "the voice" that should utter the message of Christ's heart. Enough for him if he could be the star that should lead men to Christ and then be forgotten—"the star that hid itself within the golden beams" of the uprisen Sun of Righteousness.

As the sweetest bird-notes the world hears are those of the nightingale that fills the dark hours with melody when the bird is itself unseen, so John only desired to send his "voice" into men's hearts while he himself was unnoticed. Through the wilderness, intensely earnest, self-forgetful, "the voice" was only heard and felt. Every witness should be such a "burning and shining light" glowing and flashing with a message that fills the soul, and yet so hidden as to be only "a voice" for Christ, satisfied to say,

Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

Shortly after the visit of Moody and Sankey to Glasgow, a little boy passed through the streets of that city one evening singing, "There is a fountain filled with blood." A Christian policeman joined in the song, and at length asked the boy if he understood it. "Oh, yes," he said, "I know it in my heart, and it is very precious." A few days afterward some one incidentally said to the policeman, "Do you know that a woman standing where we are was awakened the other evening by hearing a hymn sung by a policeman and a boy?" That story of the policeman and the boy should encourage every one to be a "voice" for Christ, even if unable to preach, or even to speak in public.

The picture we have given of John as a faithful witness, a picture we should all make our own, is embodied in decayed sculpture at Melrose Abbey. Above the beautiful stone foliage of the south door is a niche in which an image of Christ formerly stood, and beneath it there is still seen a half-length figure of John the Baptist, looking reverently upward to the Master above him, and drawing all other eyes to the same place and away from himself. Under it is written "Ecce Filius Dei"—Behold the Son of God. Under it might also be written, "The faithful witness," for when our gaze is so fixed upon Christ that we draw other eyes toward him and from ourselves we bear the truest testimony.

Exceeds Expectations

I received the Red Letter Bible safely and it far exceeds my expectations. I can't see how you can afford to send such valuable premiums, for your paper is more than the value of the subscription price. You are doing an immense amount of good and may God bless you and all that receive it.

East Canaan, Conn. IRENE A. COWDREY.

The Howard Watch

The Telephone Operators in New York City handle 180,000 calls every rush hour. They will connect you with any one of 500,000 subscribers in half a minute.

Ask the Exchange Manager how he can handle all these calls, and he will tell you tersely, "By saving the seconds."

"Schedule time" is the keynote of American industry. That means HOWARD time. There's always somebody higher up holding a HOWARD Watch on the job—demanding the HOWARD type of accuracy and punctuality.

The HOWARD is the one watch in the world wholly adapted to modern progress. It has the precise construction and the scientific adjustment.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Jas. Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel at $150, and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350—is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD. The jeweler who can is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post-card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

E. HOWARD WATCH WORKS, Boston, Mass.

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

in all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Soldera Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. AGENTS WANTED
1937 Broadway Dept. S New York QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers Journals.

Patent Obtained or Fee Returned

CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Att'ys
Established 16 Years
925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

SHOPPING by mail—at the Priscilla Shop means not only better prices—but better garments—more daintily made—more artistically trimmed.

Prisca Garments

for children and misses are designed and made under the personal direction of a woman who knows and appreciates the needs of particular mothers. They are made with exquisite taste and infinite care. The materials are exceptionally fine—Ginghams, Madras, Percales, etc., and the workmanship is as painstaking and exact as though you had it done in your own home.

All sizes—Girls 2 to 14

Sold only by mail direct from the factory at factory prices — Most remarkable prices you ever saw.

Write today for the PRISCA STYLE BOOK full of suggestions for school and dress wear.

THE PRISCILLA SHOP, 313 Buhl Blk., DETROIT, MICH.

Dessert Book Free

"What shall we have for dessert?"—is answered over a hundred times in the illustrated Knox recipe book, "Dainty Desserts for Dainty People." It also contains many recipes for candies, salads, jellies, ices, etc.

This Book Sent Free
for your grocer's name and address. If he doesn't sell Knox Gelatine send his name and 2-cent stamp for pint sample.

KNOX Pure, Plain Sparkling GELATINE
255 Knox Avenue, Johnstown, N. Y.

An Unexcelled Use For Idle Money 5%

WITHOUT speculation, and without tying up your idle money inconveniently, this company offers an opportunity for you to earn fair profits until you need your money for other purposes. We are paying 5% per annum—have done so for 19 years—and since this is compounded semi-annually for remitted by check if desired) the earnings are often larger than the 6% simple interest you can get on a mortgage. And you can withdraw your money at any time upon short notice.

Assets Over $2,500,000
Under Supervision of N.Y. Banking Dept.

This company has been established eighteen years and has patrons in every quarter of the globe.

Write us for information. We probably have a patron in your locality to whom we can refer you.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., N.Y.

AGENTS 100% Profit

Hundreds are coining money selling Novelty Knives. Many styles and sizes. Transparent handles, decorated with secret society emblems, photos, address, etc. Hundreds of designs to choose from. Easy sellers. Big profits. D. Wilson, one of our hustlers reports:

ONE MONTH'S PROFIT $260

C. E. Warner, another live one, made $80.00 in 8 days, working in the noon hour only. We want more like them. Why not you? No experience needed. We teach you how. Exclusive territory. Free samples to successful Agents. Catalog and terms on request. Don't wait—Write quick—Today.

Novelty Cutlery Co., 262 Bar St., Canton, O

CHALLENGE Brand WATERPROOF COLLARS & CUFFS

A perfect substitute for linen cuffs and collars. Linen styles. Linen fit. Linen appearance and no laundry bills. At Dealers—Style Book FREE on Request. The Arlington Co., 725 Broadway, New York

EASTER COMBINATION
10 BEAUTIFUL POST CARDS Mailed for 10c
6 Extra Quality Mailed for 10c
2 Easter Letters Printed on Superior Paper with Envelope to Match. Mailed for 10 Cts.
Three 10-cent Packages Mailed for 25 Cents.
A Special Assortment of 100 Easter Post Cards mailed for 60 Cents
MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Farm Poultry and Lawn. 26-inch Hog Fence 15c. 47-inch Farm Fence 23 1-2c. Catalogue free.
COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47 Winchester, Indiana.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth. Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.
B. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

6% NET

For 35 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 570 and Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors.
PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans

FEED SOUR MILK
And Increase Your Egg Yield 25%
Government Station Results—All about it in Free Pamphlet.
Address Box 102J, Brown's Mills, N. J.

WE PAY $80 A MONTH SALARY
and furnish rig and all expenses to introduce our guaranteed stock and poultry powders; money-back guarantee; outfit free; now plan; steady work. Address SIGLER CO., X 562, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS

SEWING MACHINE 50c PER WEEK. Easy payments to reliable people on a low price. Write for my offer. FRED BIFFAR, 180 W. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. Offer No.

EARN MONEY IN SPARE TIME
The National Dress Goods Co., New York, needs a competent responsible woman to represent them in each locality. Pleasant, permanent work. Free outfit, good pay. Write today for full particulars. National Dress Goods Company, Dept. 7, No. 250 West Broadway, New York.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER.
YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning.
Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 395 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

Good Work Accomplished

THE long-heralded and welcome message to the Peace Circles and to Peace advocates everywhere is this: The Peace treaties between Great Britain and France and the United States will be ratified, and the earnest prayers of the vast majority of people in the nations which the treaties concern will thus be answered.

While the treaties, providing for the submission to an impartial tribunal of all international questions susceptible of adjudication, will not absolutely insure peace forever between these countries, their ratification is of supreme consequence, marking one of the greatest steps in international welfare that has ever been taken; if indeed they are not among the highest achievements of civilization, standing, as they do, as forerunners of similar treaties among all nations.

Henceforth a great responsibility rests upon us who have won the day—the responsibility of practical service in the cause of Peace. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles already have accomplished much in the interest of the ratification of the Peace Treaties. Now, push forward we must, and with might and main sustain and spread the principles and doctrines of the faith we have proclaimed. The glory of the revelation of the light of Peace shining out upon the world has by no means spent her store, for "The Lord hath yet more light and truth to break forth from his holy Word."

The outlook is very bright and our work is clearly set out before us. The old world, with its warfare and bloodshed, is shrinking. The new world, with its sense of racial unity and of the interdependence of nations, its greater sense of moral fitness, is at hand. And each citizen of the new Republic should add his mite of good will to the splendid transition of worlds. For no one liveth unto himself, and who can tell how far our smallest effort may reach?

Once again we extend an earnest plea to all who are willing to co-operate with us in our inspiring work of organizing Peace Circles throughout the United States, for the purpose of teaching simple and practical ways and means of applying the principles of Peace to our everyday life and experience.

Organization leaflets, with plans and programs for successful Peace Circle meetings and delightful social evenings, will be forwarded to any address on request.

Program for Fortnight Ending February 21

After the usual preliminaries, Roll Call, Officers' Reports, Reading of Minutes, and Printed Matter from Headquarters, the topics for discussion shall be:

1. Prospecting for Peace.
2. A Nation's Real Enemies—What Are They?
3. Ways and Means of Exploiting the Great Subject in a Practical Way.

Answered Prayers

Mrs. L., Newark, N. J. "God has answered my prayer."

E. C., Vinton, O. "We thank God for many answered prayers."

L. M., San Diego, Calif. "I wish to acknowledge answer to prayer."

R. P. L., Byrdton, Va. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer."

P. Z. D., Benton Harbor, Mich. "God has granted an answer to my prayer."

M. G. A., Winon, S. D. "God has heard and answered my prayer personally."

M. E., Chicago, Ill. "God answered my prayers for a very dear friend."

L. M. H., Texas. "I prayed to God to save my father and others, and he saved them."

L. H., Rifle, Colo. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer in continuing my health for a certain length of time."

Mrs. F. E. K., Pa. "God has answered several prayers for me. I have great faith in prayer."

W. T., Clinton, Ont., Can. "A prayer for restoration to health was granted, and I wish to make known my answer to prayer."

ÆTNA-IZED?

NEW 3 IN 1 POLICY
LIFE—ACCIDENT—HEALTH
For $17.00 a Year
YOU CAN BE ÆTNA-IZED

Against loss of life from any cause in the sum of $250
(Payable immediately upon filing Official Death Certificate.)
Against death by Ordinary Accident for - - - $1,250
Against death by Travel or Burning Building Accident for $2,250
The last two amounts increase in five years to $1,750 and $3,250
Against loss of time from Sickness - - - $5.00 weekly
Against Loss of Time { Ordinary accidents, - $5.00 weekly; Travel accidents, - $10.00 weekly

You must be in good health; under fifty years of age, and your occupation must put you in class "Preferred" as occupations are classified by Accident Companies.

We cannot tell you in this Advertisement about Special Payments for Loss of Hand, Foot or Eye; Both Hands, Feet or Eyes; Fees for Surgical Operations; Hospital Expenses; Payments for Partial as well as Total Loss of Time with payments every eight weeks, or payments of fixed amounts in advance of recovery for certain stated injuries by which this insurance protects your income.

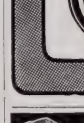
Send us the coupon and let our Agent tell you the rest.

Whether you insure for One Thousand or Fifty Thousand the cost is proportionately the same.

PROTECT YOUR INCOME.

ÆTNA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
ACCIDENT AND LIABILITY DEPARTMENT HARTFORD, CONN.
Send me information about your NEW 3 IN 1 POLICY
Name_____
Address_____
Age____ Occupation_____

I SELL TREES & SEEDS THAT GROW



I want you to send for my 1912 Catalogue—just issued. Every page—108 of them—filled with special offers in price and quality. Be sure to get my free

Nursery and Seed Book

10c Offer!
1 5c pkt. mixed colors Petunias
1 10c pkt. extra fine mixed pansies
1 10c pkt. giant single pinks.
1 5c pkt. finest mixed poppies.
30 cents worth for 10 cents postpaid

written with my 26 years experience—for buying Vegetable, Flower, Grass and Farm Seed, Upland grown Alfalfa, Clover and Field Grass Seed, Seed Potatoes, Corn and Grain, Fruit and Forest Trees, Small Fruits and Flowering shrubs. Freight paid on $10 tree orders. All Seeds Nebraska Standard. None better.

German Nurseries and Seed House
Box 37, Beatrice, Nebr.
CARL SONDEREGGER, President

MAKE YOUR GARDEN YIELD ITS LIMIT

Plant thoroughbred seeds. Thoroughbred seeds do not happen. They result from long and intelligent breeding. They produce big crops of the best vegetables. Use Ferry's.

For sale everywhere.
1912 SEED ANNUAL FREE ON REQUEST
D. M. FERRY & CO., Detroit, Mich.

FERRY'S SEEDS

STRAWBERRY PLANTS
Any quantity; 120 acres, 103 varieties. Also full line other small fruit plants and shrubbery. Lowest prices for quality stock, true to name. Write today for FREE catalog.
W. F. ALLEN,
23 Market Street, Salisbury, Md.

MAKE MONEY RAISING POULTRY

Easy—Fascinating. Poultry always in demand. Get Ready Now. $10 Starts You. The Advance, 100 egg incubator and 100 chick brooder, value $12, both prepaid $10. We've started hundreds with this outfit. Order today or write for full description how to start, etc.
ADVANCE MFG. CO. Box 67, Greenville, Ohio.

EVERYTHING for the GARDEN

is the title of our 1912 catalogue—the most beautiful and complete horticultural publication of the day—really a book of 204 pages, 5 colored plates and over 800 photo engravings, showing actual results without exaggeration. It is a mine of information of everything in Gardening either for pleasure or profit and embodies the results of over sixty-four years of practical experience.

To give this catalogue the largest possible distribution we make the following liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts As Cash

To everyone who will state where this advertisement was seen and who encloses Ten Cents we will mail the catalogue

And also Send Free of Charge
Our Famous 50 Cent "HENDERSON" COLLECTION OF SEEDS
containing one package each of Ponderosa Tomato, Big Boston Lettuce, Scarlet Globe Radish, Henderson's Invincible Asters, Mammoth Butterfly Pansies and Giant Spencer Sweet Peas, in a coupon envelope which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order amounting to $1.00 and upward.

In addition, all ordering from this advertisement will receive a copy of our new Garden Guide and Record. This is a hand book of general garden information, planting tables, cooking receipts, cultural directions, etc., etc., and in all is one of the most necessary and valuable of our many publications

PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK CITY

THE CARELESS GROCER

Blundered, and Great Good Came of it.

A careless grocer left the wrong package at a Michigan home one day and thereby brought a great blessing to the household.

"Two years ago I was a sufferer from stomach trouble, so acute that the effort to digest ordinary food gave me great pain, and brought on a condition of such extreme nervousness that I could not be left alone. I thought I should certainly become insane. I was so reduced in flesh that I was little better than a living skeleton. The doctors failed to give me relief and I despaired of recovery.

"One day our groceryman left a package of Grape-Nuts food by mistake, so I tried some for dinner. I was surprised to find that it satisfied my appetite and gave me no distress whatever. The next meal I ate of it again, and to be brief, I have lived for the past year almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. It has proved to be a most healthful and appetizing food, perfectly adapted to the requirements of my system.

"Grape-Nuts is not only easily digested and assimilated, but I find that since I have been using it I am able to eat anything else my appetite fancies, without trouble from indigestion. The stomach trouble and nervousness have left me, I have regained my plumpness and my views of life are no longer despondent and gloomy.

"Other members of my family, especially my husband, (whose old enemy, the 'heart-burn,' has been vanquished) have also derived great benefit from the use of Grape-Nuts food and we think no morning meal complete without it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

made low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

ACHFELDT'S PERFECTION Toe Spring Patented

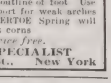
TELL ME YOUR FOOT TROUBLES.—My Perfection Toe Spring will remove the cause of your BUNION OR ENLARGED JOINT and straighten your toes. Worn at night, with auxiliary appliance for day use. Sent on approval. Money refunded if not as represented. Send outline of foot. Use my Improved German Silver Arch Support for weak arches and Flat-Foot." Achfeldt's HAMMERTOE Spring will straighten your small toes and prevent corns

Full particulars and advice free.

M. ACHFELDT, FOOT SPECIALIST
Room 110, 163 West 23d St., New York

I Was Deaf 25 Years
NOW I HEAR WHISPERS

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them; they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.



Medicated Ear Drum Pat. Nov. 3, 1908

Artificial Ear Drum Company
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
G P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

AGENTS Make $30 per Wk. This AWL sews a lock stitch like a machine. Best thing ever made for repairing Harness, Shoes, etc. A dozen exclusive features. Demand is immense. Sales astounding. Roy Sage writes: "Red'd Awl today, sold 5 in 15 min." L. Perrine says: "Sold 9 on way home with sample." Lowest price, biggest profit, greatest value, quick sales. Drop everything and write for sample and instructions. ANCHOR MFG. CO. Dept. 834 DAYTON, O.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY AND SQUABS

Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 36, Des Moines, Iowa

"No" and "Yes"

IT IS a common saying, intimating small intellectual ability, that certain persons "do not know enough to say yes and no in the right places." Never was a more mistaken idea. The rarest faculty of the human mind is said by philosophers to be judgment; and only the very best judgment can sometimes tell a man when properly to say "yes" or "no."

Henry B. Wright calls indecision "the sleeping sickness of the soul." We should give time and thought to our convictions, form them solidly and then adhere to them. This is where those "wholesale resolves," sometimes condemned by really conscientious people as "too radical," find their best use. The man who has firmly decided to take no alcoholic beverage whatever, is in a far easier place than is the man who thinks total abstinence "narrow" and "drastic," and in his desire to be "broad," yet "moderate," is forever having to decide whether this or that liquid is too strong or not; and whether he has had all he ought to take, or not. The man who has said to himself, "I will not use tobacco in any form," does not have to discriminate continually between pipes, cigars and cigarettes. It saves an enormous amount of mental friction to make a strong "blanket" resolution of this sort, to say nothing of saving money, setting an example, avoiding nicotine and alcoholic poison, and preserving a higher degree of personal cleanliness than otherwise.

"A will," says William James in his Psychology, "is an aggregate of tendencies to act in a firm and prompt and definite way upon all the principal emergencies of life."

There is nothing like it—this will, so formed that it can decide on its "yes" and "no" quickly and definitely. We all recognize the power of the man or woman who possesses it.

One of the men upon whom his friends could always count was Daniel. Mr. Moody said that he could imagine men saying to Daniel, "Look here, young man, you are puritanical. Bear in mind that you are not now in Jerusalem; you are in Babylon. You are not a Jewish prince; you are a captive; and if the king hears about your refusing to eat the same kind of meat that he eats, or to drink the same kind of wine that he drinks, your head will soon roll from off your shoulders." But Daniel's piety was one of depth and decision. Not once did he hesitate. He could not say "yes" to proposals which were against his religion—but with him, as with all others who live up to their convictions of right, willing to suffer or die for them if necessary, it was well in the end.

The knight to whom the vision of the Grail should be granted was pictured by Tennyson as one who would never falter. He must be pure of heart, brave and strong of hand; but, above all, he must be steadfast; not lured from his quest by "wandering fires." A holy nun had seen the Grail, "rosered, with beatings in it, as if alive," so that she knew the Holy Cup, which because of earth's sinfulness had been caught up to heaven, had come to earth again. She plaits with her long hair "a strong sword-belt" and binds it upon the stainless Galahad, and then the vision of the Grail is granted to the knights at a banquet, in thunder and "a beam of light seven times more clear than day"; and Galahad, Lancelot and many others of Arthur's pure knights swear to rest not until they find that Holy Cup. Only to Galahad was the reward granted, for he was true and steadfast, never faltering. This legend is a parable; for to the man who decides for the right, never halting between two opinions; never, like the Laodicean church, "neither cold nor hot," come the grandest revelations of God's love.

[*] Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, February 18. TEXT: Ps. 57: 1-11.

Compo-Board

The Modern Wall Lining

Makes Comfortable Homes

COMPO-BOARD is far superior to lath and plaster or any other wall lining.

It is built with five layers of the best air-tight composition obtainable. The inside core consists of narrow strips of thoroughly seasoned lumber. Both sides of this are coated with air-tight cement, the outside of which is then faced with a specially prepared moisture proof paper.

It is then subjected to a very heavy pressure and intense heat, making a straight sheet one quarter inch thick, which has the resisting qualities of a 12-inch solid plaster wall.

It is non-porous. Cold, heat and moisture can't get through it. It won't warp. Keeps the cold out and the heat in—and is damp proof. Saves on coal bills.

COMPO-BOARD is easily and quickly put up, either on the studding of a new building or over the old plaster, without any mess. When the job is complete, you have a surface as smooth as plaster—a surface that can be papered or stencilled or painted in water or oil color. You can decorate easier than plaster, either with or without panels. Lasts much longer than plaster and is more healthful and sanitary.

SEND FOR SAMPLE AND BOOKLET

See what COMPO-BOARD is, and learn in how many ways you can use it about the house as well as for a wall lining. Sold by dealers in most every town in strips 4 feet wide, and any even length from one to eighteen feet. Write today.

NORTHWESTERN COMPO-BOARD CO., 4305 Lyndale Avenue, N. MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

$1.50 STENCIL OUTFIT 50c

MAKE MONEY! BEAUTIFY YOUR HOME!

To introduce our new line we send this new Stencil Outfit, 15 cut stencils, 3 tubes, stencil Oil colors, 6 stencil holders, brush, New catalog and instructions. All in strong box for 50c

THE BELL CO., 1288 Washington Ave., Desk B, N. Y. City

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

Healthful for bed chamber, bath and sick-room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric. Line with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail, 25c a pair. Parker pays postage. Catalogue free. Look for Parker's name in every pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

We Are Proud of Our Christian Herald Boys

The Brightest and Happiest Home Boys in Every State and Province

This is HOWARD G. HARRIS, of Ventnor City, N. J.
He Has a Splendid Record

Two Pony Contests are now on. The boy who does the best work this month gets one of them. New boys are given a Free start in business and are entered at once in the Pony Contest. Other prizes too.

Simply Sign this Coupon

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

30 Days' Free Trial 365 Days' Test 3 Years To Pay

We Save You $128 to $222

Take Your Own Time To Pay

No Interest—No Collectors

Let us send this artistic piano to you at our expense. We pay the freight. You pay nothing down. Try it for 30 days. If we cannot satisfy you with the piano, we will pay the freight for its return. Take 3 years time to pay if satisfied.

Send No Money

Reed & Sons PIANOS

At the World's Columbian Exposition they won the highest award medal. We offer you direct-from-factory-to-home wholesale prices on Reed & Sons Pianos, giving you the highest artistic quality at a price much lower than your dealer would charge you for a cheap, inferior instrument.

Big Book Free

Clip coupon below. It will secure for you our Special Proposition and Prices; all in handsomest colored illustrated catalog sent free. A 2c stamp will save you dealer's profit.

REED & SONS PIANO BOOK

REED & SONS PIANO MFG. CO. Dept. I 36 Cor. Jackson Blvd. and Wabash Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Send me your Big Free Book and Piano Offers.

Fill In Coupon Today.

Name.....

Street.....R. F. D.....

Town.....County.....State.....

Capital and Resources $1,750,000

ROYAL LEATHER ROCKER

5000 Other Bargains

Full Spring Seat and Back—Covered in Best Royal Leather $3.85

Look at the picture; doesn't this Rocker look inviting with its high, broad, shapely back and deep roomy spring seat! It's made to last forever, and its wide arms, supported by six neatly turned smooth spindles, and massive frontcarved posts, give it the exclusiveness and style that cannot be had in any other rocker. Frame thoroughly seasoned oak, high golden and gloss finish. Best quality Black Royal Leather; workmanship first-class. Price but $3.85 makes it the biggest bargain ever offered. We can afford such values because we own our own timber lands, saw mills, factories and salesrooms. Money back if it is not worth double. Send for our large FREE cash catalogue of Furniture, Rugs, Curtains, etc. Learn at once how much cheaper and better you can buy for cash direct from the manufacturers. We save you all extra profits. Write NOW; better still, enclose $3.85 for this comfortable rocker. Order by number 670. Address (31-1)

BIG CATALOG FREE

Lincoln-Leonard & Co., 5842 W. 37th Street, Chicago

DOUBLE-ROLL ASSORTMENT

5¢ UP WALL PAPER

Write today for our big free book of wall paper samples and see the handsomest assortment in the world of wall paper for all rooms, for all purposes. Our wall paper is strong, durable, rich and beautiful, daintily blended into exquisite patterns of gold and colors most pleasing to the eye. We show all the stylish papers and latest novelties for 1912 from beautiful floral paper at 5c a double roll of 16 yards, up to the richest embossed varnished gold at 25c a double roll of 16 yards. Our line is now on in any quantity from a roll up are lower than dealers buy their papers at in car-load lots. We form you buy paper anywhere, of anyone, write us first and say "Send me your big free book of wall paper samples" and see our beautiful paper, wonderfully low prices, satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded terms and our

Great Free Premium Offer whereby you get a lot of valuable articles free as a present with orders. Also the book contains easily understood directions for paper-ing walls, making paste and hanging wall paper. With these instructions you can hang paper as good as an expert wall paper hanger can.

Go Into the Wall Paper Business Make lots of money. No experience necessary. Every house-owner will buy paper of you. We furnish outfits and instruct and advise you free; paper hangers, painters please write.

JOHN M. SMYTH MOSE CO. 150-162 W. Madison St. Chicago

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 25c for one size you need.

DR. LYONS 2201 Locust St. St. Louis, Mo.

The Call to Service*

THE sainted George Muller early decided that it was wrong for him to demand money for his services. He was equally opposed to the renting of pews, a system which, he said, gave to the man "with a ring on his finger" the best seat, and to the poorer brother the footstool. From the very first of his preaching, he depended solely upon prayer for his living and for the support of his various charities. His only desire was to serve his fellowmen. As for himself and his family, he trusted them wholly to the providence of God.

Surely since apostolic days no faith has been so well rewarded. When he died in 1898, he had received and disbursed $7,500,000, the bulk of it upon the great orphanage at Bristol, his best beloved enterprise, in which 10,000 orphans had been cared for up to that time. In addition to this work, he had distributed nearly 2,000,000 Bibles and Testaments; aided many missionaries; conducted useful Bible schools; made many evangelistic journeys; and circulated more than 100,000,000 religious books and tracts. Never, probably, was such effective work done by any one man. At the time of Mr. Muller's death, $3,000 a week was required to maintain his orphanage. Often a mealtime would be close at hand, and yet there would be no food in the larder, but it always came. The story of his faith and its fruition reads like that of a Scripture miracle, and yet we are told that there are no miracles now.

He had been educated for the Lutheran ministry by his worldly-minded father, not in order to do good in that station, but "so that he might have an easy and comfortable living from the state." The boy led an idle and dissolute life, but all at once he was converted, and then it became his one aim, not "to live at ease in Zion," but to see how much good he could do for the Master. Probably no man ever worked harder or more steadily. His soul, his mind, his body, were dedicated wholly to the strenuous service of God.

In Carl Hilty's wonderful essay upon work, he deplores the laziness of the natural man, which is all too apt to lure him along "the line of least resistance." The fourth commandment, he insisted, lays no more stress upon the keeping of the Sabbath than, in its very first sentence, it lays upon work. "Six days shalt thou labor"; and yet we see all around us men and women, especially the children of wealth, who do not work, simply because they do not need to. Probably there is no test of character greater than the possession of riches. Our Lord had much to say upon this point. The peril is no new one.

A frequent excuse of rich men and women for not going to work in one of the many departments where unpaid service is so much needed, is that they are "not clever enough." It is true that unless one is brought up and trained to "business habits," one is apt to bungle in taking up any sort of work. But faithful effort will soon mend such deficiencies, so that, even if one may not have the ability to lead, one may still do service in the ranks.

Some of the noblest lines of the poets, and some of the grandest flights of eloquence among the great orators and prose writers, have been inspired by the splendor of work. Browning, Matthew Arnold and Tennyson, to say nothing of our own poets; Addison, Johnson, Carlyle, Ruskin and many other of our great prose writers have left us stirring appeals to labor.

And ever, "God First" must be our motto. Some one has written a set of verses with this refrain, and they hang as a monitor in many a home. Serve and ever serve, but let it always be in the name of the Lord.

* Epworth League Topic for Sunday, February 18. TEXTS: Amos 6: 1-6; Matt. 15: 29-31.

BEST OF ALL ALMANACS

We want to thank you for The Christian Herald Almanac. We think it is the finest thing in the line of Almanacs that we have seen in years. We do prize it highly.

Walton, N. Y. MRS. JAMES SCOTT.

This is a picture of my big confectionery store in Springfield, Ohio.

The money I earned, selling Popcorn Crispettes—a new, delicious confection—enabled me to establish it

My Popcorn Crispette Machine made me a rich man. Any other man who goes at it as I did can make a lot of money. I am just a common, everyday sort of a fellow. No reason why I should do any better than you.

Write me today. I'll tell you how I built my big business. I'll tell you just how I went about it—how you can do the same

If you follow instructions you should make more money this fall and winter than you ever dreamed of. Somewhere in your town there is a small store—a half-store, a little nook or even a store window—where you can set up your machine and make money. You can start at home if you wish.

POPCORN CRISPETTES BUILT THIS BIG BUSINESS FOR ME

I stand ready to help other men to make good; men who have business hopes; who are anxious to make lots of money.

Every Time You Take in a Nickel You Make Almost Four Cents Profit

You'll have a good thing all to yourself. I furnish a secret formula for making Crispettes; it's different from anything else. So you escape competition. People buy and buy and buy Popcorn Crispettes because of the taste. They're so different—so tasty and tempting, folks want more and more of them.

In my literature I tell you all about them, about men who have made big money with the machine, and the men tell you how they did it. It's very interesting reading.

Making money isn't nearly as hard as it seems. Half of success is in making the start—the other half is nerve, judgment and a good proposition. I have the proposition—you have the courage—nerve—judgment. Put the three together now and make money as I did. At least investigate. Look into the proposition. Get my story and the story of other men who are making money with a Long Popcorn Crispette Machine. Write today

W. Z. LONG, 460 High Street, Springfield, Ohio

MEINECKE'S METAL HOT WATER BOTTLE AND FOOT AND BED WARMER

KEEPS HOT ALL NIGHT COMFORTABLE LASTS A LIFE TIME

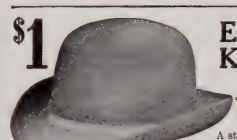
Holds boiling water. Never leaks. Has unlosable stopper, easy filling funnel; flannel cover. Stays hot all night. Better than a rubber bag. Has many more uses. Adopted by hundreds of hospitals, and recommended by doctors and nurses.

Price $4.00 Delivered

Write to-day for YOUR COPY of our FREE BOOK OF THE SICK-ROOM tells you all about this wonderful bottle. Also about our guaranteed $2.00 rubber hot water bag, and many other home and sick-room specialties which you ought to know about. Valuable in health. Invaluable in sickness.

MEINECKE & CO., Sick-Room Supplies 52 Park Place, New York

$1 English Knock-about Hat



A stylish serviceable hat. Genuine Fur Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Can be shaped into Alpine or Telescope. Silk trimmings. Colors: Black, Steel Grey, Brown. Actual value $2.00. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1.00. State size and color wanted. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

We ship on approval without a cent deposit, freight prepaid. DON'T PAY A CENT if you are not satisfied after using the bicycle 10 days.

DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our latest art catalogs illustrating every kind of bicycle, and learn of our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers.

ONE CENT is all it will cost you to write a postal and everything will be sent you free postpaid by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do not wait, write is now.

TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries at half usual prices.

Mead Cycle Co. Dept. M71 Chicago

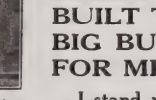
FREE Murray Catalog

Biggest Vehicle Catalog ever Published. 251 illustrations, full descriptions of 138 vehicles and 74 harness designs.

$30 saved on this up-to-date buggy is an example of how Murray saves you ¼ to ½. Shipped direct from factory, 4 weeks' road trial, 2 years' guarantee. Don't think of buying till you have seen this catalog. Write for it today.

The Wilber H. Murray Mfg. Co. 623 5th Av. Cincinnati, O.

WASH BY AIR The New Way



No wear, no tear, no beating. Daintiest articles washed without injury. Tub of clothes washed in 5 to 10 minutes. A child can operate. Well made; will not rust. Lighter than a washboard. Instantaneously attachable to any metal tub or wash boiler. No screws to tighten. Order from this ad. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send for circular. Agents wanted.

$2.50 Prepaid

Rapid Vacuum Washer Co. 75 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

VIRGINIA APPLE ORCHARDS Pay Big Profits

$50. to $100 Per Month Days a 10-acre APPLE ORCHARD tract in "The Beautiful" Shenandoah Valley of Virginia." Other farm and fruit lands $15.00 per acre and up. Best climate, water, neighbors, churches and markets. Send for "Southern Homeseeker," maps, rates, etc.

Address F. H. LaBaume, Agr'l Agt., Norfolk & Western Ry., Box 309Z Roanoke, Va.

YOU CAN DIG 40 FOOT WELLS quickly through any Earth with our Guaranteed Well Boring Outfit. Nothing else like it. Cheapest and Best method known. Price $10.00 Delivered.

Send 2c stamp for our big circular.

STANDARD EARTH AUGER CO. 1128-38 Newport Ave., Chicago, U.S.A.

SAVE-THE-HORSE TRADE MARK REG'T.

OUR LATEST "Save-The-Horse Book"—Is our 16 Years Experience Treating 25,364 Horses. Ringbone—Spavin—and ALL—Shoulder, Knee, Ankle, Hoof and Tendons. With Mistakes left out. DISCOVERIES PUT IN. It is a Mind Settler; Tells How to Beat for Spavin—Where and What To Do For A Lame Horse.—COVERS 58 FORMS OF LAMENESS—ILLUSTRATED.

WE Originated the Plan of—Treating Horses by Mail—Under Signed Contract to Return Money if Remedy Fails. Our Charges Are moderate. But first write describing your case, and we will send out—BOOK—Sample Contract, Letters from Business Men The World Over, on Every Kind of Case and Advice—ALL FREE to Horse Owners and Managers—Only.—PUT HORSE TO WORK and CURE HIM NOW. Write! AND STOP THE LOSS. Address—TROY CHEMICAL CO., 39 Commercial Ave., Binghamton, N. Y.

Sturgeon Bay, Wis., November 3, 1911.—My best friend and neighbor used Save-The-Horse on two spavins and cured both. Seeing Mr. Wiegand cure two spavins I decided to write you, etc.—S. Watrous, R. No. 2. B-8-25

Druggists everywhere sell Save-The-Horse with contract or sent by us Express prepaid.

Copyright, 1913, by The Bauer Chemical Co.

Signing their Declaration of Confidence in Sanatogen

FAMOUS men and women of many lands, of many occupations in the strenuous life of the modern world—and fifteen thousand practising physicians—have written words of golden praise for that greatest of food-tonics—Sanatogen.

These remarkably enthusiastic endorsements by men and women of thought and action, and by scientists of eminence in a conservative profession, recognize the splendid efficiency of Sanatogen as a tonic food, as a re-creative builder of nerve strength, as sustaining nourishment for impoverished conditions of the human system.

Sanatogen reaches sources of energy that have been exhausted, and feeds them with its highly assimilable, constructive elements—feeds without reaction as in the case of drugs, the cells and tissues that have been dangerously drained of their necessary support. Sanatogen is the pre-eminent restorer—a scientific combination of elements that answer the hunger of debilitated nerves.

The wide success of Sanatogen as a natural, elemental food to brain and body, has inspired a striking and very unusual manifestation of confidence on the part of scientists and laymen alike—men who have seen and experienced its upbuilding power—men who know what it will do. Their confidence is an assurance to you.

His Excellency Prof. Dr. Von Leyden
Director First Medical Clinic, Berlin University, writes:

"I have gladly and frequently prescribed Sanatogen in cases of delicate patients, in my clinical as well as in private practice and am extremely satisfied with the results."

The Right Reverend The Bishop of Rochester, Eng., states:

"Sanatogen has been taken by a lady staying in his house, who finds it most satisfactory and has now been ordered it by her medical man."

Prof. C. A. Ewald
of Berlin University, Doctor honoris causa University of Maryland, states in his contribution on "Typhus abdominalis":

"I can say that I have used Sanatogen in a great number of cases (that is, in those disturbances of metabolism which were mainly of a nervous or neurasthenic origin), and have obtained excellent results."

Sir Gilbert Parker, M. P.
The eminent novelist statesman, writes from London:

"Sanatogen is to my mind a true food-tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy and giving fresh vigor to the overworked body and mind."

The Right Reverend The Bishop of Chichester, Eng., writes:

"I have found Sanatogen most beneficial as well as pleasant."

John Burroughs
The well-known naturalist and author writes:

"I am sure that I have been greatly benefited by Sanatogen. My [illegible] per cent better than it found me. It has done my mind and body good."

Hall Caine
The distinguished writer

"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a food-tonic and [illegible] on occasion benefited me."

The Rev. T. S. Childs, D.D. of Chicago, writes:

"Last Spring I had a long and severe attack of grippe; the [illegible] seventy seventh year. I [illegible] the change of my climate [illegible] an English gentleman [illegible] Sanatogen. I have [illegible] large ones with marked results. In the first place there has not been [illegible] Then, whatever the cause, I find myself in such renewed health that I have accepted a call to another charge and [illegible] himself—am as able to preach [illegible] been in my life. I am a convert to Sanatogen."

This Remarkable Book FREE

We ask you earnestly to get acquainted with Sanatogen. Investigate our claims first if you like and we are only too glad to have you do so. Ask your doctor about it, and in any case write at once for our book, "Our Nerves of Tomorrow," written in an absorbingly interesting style, beautifully illustrated and containing facts and information of vital interest to you. This book also contains evidence of the value of Sanatogen which is as remarkable as it is conclusive.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes, $1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Get Sanatogen from your druggist—if not obtainable from him, sent upon receipt of price.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO., EVERETT BUILDING, FOURTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

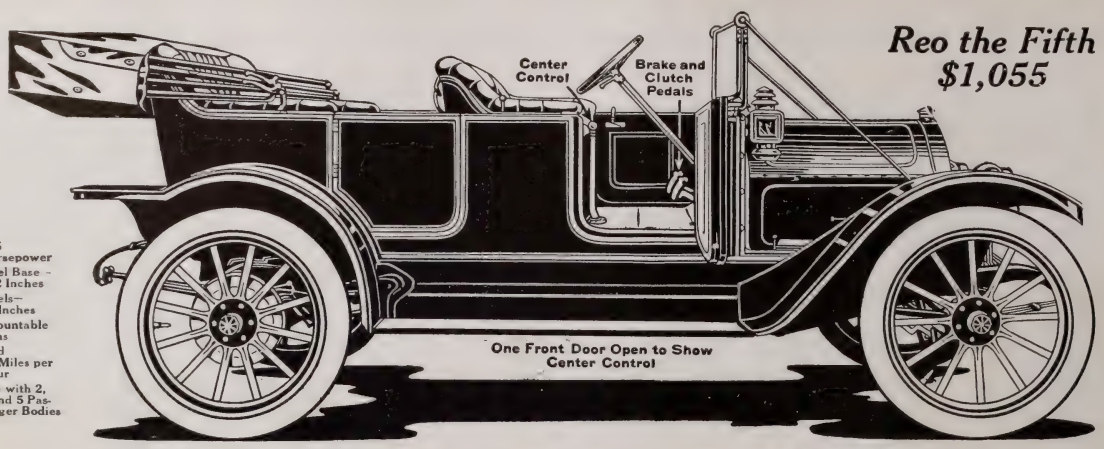
NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 14, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 7. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Copyright, Photographische Gesellschaft

"Over Snowfields Waste and Pathless"
From a Painting by J. Farquharson

By permission of the Berlin Photographic Co., New York



Reo the Fifth
$1,055

30-35 Horsepower
Wheel Base—112 Inches
Wheels—34 Inches
Demountable Rims
Speed 45 Miles per Hour
Made with 2, 4 and 5 Passenger Bodies

Top and windshield not included in price. We equip this car with mohair top, side curtains and slip-cover, windshield, gas tank and speedometer—all for $100 extra. Self-starter, if wanted, $25 extra.

The Car That Marks My Limit

By R. E. Olds, Designer

I have no quarrel with men who ask more for their cars—none with men who ask less. I have only to say that, after 25 years—after creating 24 models and building tens of thousands of cars—here's the best I know. I call it My Farewell Car.

I claim for this car no great innovation. The time is past for that.

Thousands of good men, for two decades, have worked at perfecting cars. No man can ever go much further than the best these men have done.

I believe that Reo the Fifth, in every feature, shows the utmost these men have accomplished. It represents, in addition, the best I have learned through 25 years of continuous striving. So it comes, I believe, pretty close to finality.

It shows what can be done by modern facilities, by boundless experience, by honesty of purpose, by the genius for taking pains. And that is all that any car at any price can offer.

The Lessons of 25 Years

Where this car excels lies in what I have learned in 25 years of car building.

I've been learning longer than others. I have learned faster than others, because I had more cars out.

That's my chief advantage.

What some think right, I know to be wrong. What some think sufficient, I know to be reckless.

Myriads of cars used by myriads of owners have taught me every possible weakness. They have shown the need of big margins of safety, for exactness, for careful inspection, for laboratory tests.

I Go to Extremes

For every part I know the best steel alloy. To make sure that I get it, I analyze all my steel.

I built a crushing machine of 50 tons' capacity just to test my gears.

My axles have twice the needed strength. My bearings are Timken Roller and Hyatt High Duty.

My carburetor is doubly heated, and adapted to low-grade gasoline. That makes the commonest troubles impossible.

I carry tests and inspections, throughout the construction, to what men call extremes. Those 25 years taught me the need for precautions.

They also have taught me that men love beautiful cars. My bodies are finished with 17 coats. My lamps are enameled—my engine nickel trimmed.

The upholstering is deep, and of hair-filled genuine leather. The wheel base is long, the wheels are large, the car is over-tired. I avoid all the petty economies.

New Center Control

The gear shifting is done by that center "cane handle." It moves only three inches in each of four directions to change to every speed and reverse.

There are no side levers. Both of the brakes, also the clutch, are operated by the foot pedals. The doors are free from obstructions.

The driver may sit—as he should sit—on the left hand side, close to the cars which he passes. With the old lever controls this was impossible, save in electric cars.

Price, $1,055 the Only Sensation

My greatest achievement, in my estimation, is the price on this new car. No other car begins to compete with it.

This is due to automatic machinery—to enormous production—to making all parts in one factory. It is due to building only one chassis in all this great plant. It is due to small selling cost, and to a very small profit.

But this price is not fixed. This initial price of $1,055 is the minimum. It is based on to-day's low cost for materials. It is figured on a doubled output, due to this new creation.

If costs advance our price must advance. But we shall keep it this low just as long as is possible. That is better, we think, than fixing the price for six months in advance, and leaving big margin to do it.

My Supreme Effort

Reo the Fifth marks my limit. Better materials are impossible, better workmanship out of the question. Better features or devices, if they exist, are still unknown to me.

More care or skill or quality is beyond my capability. At twice the price I could build no better car. If others can, they are better men than I.

Ask for Catalog

Ask for our catalog, showing the various bodies and stating all the facts. We will tell you then where to see the car.

Reo the Fifth, my finest creation, will interest every motor car lover. Ask for the book to-day. Address

R. M. Owen & Co., General Sales Agents for Reo Motor Car Co., Lansing, Mich.

Canadian Factory, St. Catharines, Ontario

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 14, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Riding Easy in Fair Weather

Copyright, Clarke & Muller

Two Submarines Laid Up for Repairs in the Brooklyn Navy Yard

Preparing to Launch a Torpedo

Copyright, Clarke & Muller

Watch-Dogs of the Sea

Perils of Life Aboard Uncle Sam's Torpedo Destroyers and Submarines

TWO lives lost. More than two hundred men injured. A dozen battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats and destroyers damaged; and a repair bill of $250,000 for the Navy Department to pay. All this sounds as if it might be the summing up of the result of a great modern battle, and so it was, though no guns were fired and no human enemy was engaged.

During the week which followed the great January storm along the Atlantic coast there limped into Hampton Roads several of our largest cruisers and battleships, bringing with them the disabled little greyhounds of the sea, the Roe, the McCall, and the Paulding. These little ships, which had on their trial runs proved their capability of developing as high a speed as any vessel afloat, though badly battered and short of the oil fuel which they use, came in triumphant over a storm such as even their own officers had hardly imagined they could brave. The Paulding is the fastest of these boats, for on her trial trip over the Rockland course in August, 1910, she made her fastest mile at the rate of 33.94 knots. The Roe stands next, having in her four hours' run at top speed averaged 31.43 knots. Except that some of these torpedo boats have three funnels and some only two they are all very similar in appearance, being about 296 feet long, 27 feet beam, and drawing about eleven feet of water. Each one carrid a crew of eighty men. Although they are constructed to stand being heeled over to a greater extent than almost any other type of vessel in the world, they rise only a few feet out of the water and were never calculated to withstand very rough weather.

It is very doubtful if the log of any naval vessel of the world contains records equal to those of the Roe. Lieutenant-Commander C. H. Woodward has since stated that he never expected to bring his ship through the immense waves. The indicator on the bridge, which was at times the only part of the vessel out of water, showed that the little ship rolled ninety degrees, being at times clear over on her beam ends. Just at the time when the commanders of the little squadron estimated that the gale was at its height and blowing practically ninety miles an hour the Roe's steering gear gave way, and she dropped into the trough of the sea. This little vessel's masts are fifty-two feet high from the water line and although it has been stated that the highest wave yet recorded upon the Atlantic Ocean was not over thirty feet in height, Commander Woodward's estimate that the waves of the recent storm overtopped his masts by several feet have been borne out by the officers not only of the smaller ships but even of the battleship Delaware. That the little fellows did not suffer alone is shown by the fact that the Delaware—that great floating arsenal—came into port after the storm with her decks swept absolutely clean.

The Battered Paulding and Roe After the Storm

It will take $30,000 to replace the lifeboats, steam launch and other deck paraphernalia that were swept overboard by a gigantic wave.

There were a number of peculiar incidents in the Roe's fight for her life in the great storm. Because of the accident to her steering gear and the impossibility of making repairs, while the ship was breaking all records for rolling and pitching, she lay in the trough of the seas and rolled absolutely at the mercy of the waves for many hours. During most of this time the men were in their bunks holding on. One of the petty officers of the boat, losing his grip when for a moment the starboard side of the ship became the roof of the forecastle, dropped directly across the room into the bunk of one of the other men. Though neither was seriously injured both were pretty badly shaken up.

When it became possible to repair the steering gear, Commander Woodward feared to turn the battered prow of the Roe against the oncoming combers, lest she should be swamped, so an old trick was resorted to. A bag of oily waste was lowered over the bow, and as soon as the oil commenced to spread, the Roe was able to get her stern to the wind and seas and run for safety.

Though the Paulding's tussle was not so strenuous as the Roe's, Lieutenant Doyle, her commander, had troubles enough of his own. He managed to keep his bow to the seas, and did not dare to turn and run before them. After he had reached Norfolk, Lieutenant Doyle jokingly remarked that it was the first time that he had ever attempted to anchor in 1,800 feet of water with 110 fathoms of chain. Just after a great wave had crashed aboard and carried away a whaleboat and dory, the double lashings of the port anchor gave way and it went over the bow, carrying its chain out to the very end. To the surprise of all on board the chain held fast and for a few moments no one knew exactly what the results would be, but it turned out to be a very satisfactory accident, as the weight of the chain and anchor steadied the ship and stopped the pounding.

The McCall escaped with the least damage of any of the torpedo boats. Her commander was able to run before the high seas and make Bermuda safely, though his fuel was exhausted when he arrived there. The Terry, another of the torpedo boats, lost her lifeboats and refrigerators; her bulkheads were badly dented, and, like all her sister ships, her funnels were twisted and bow damaged by the great seas.

The only vessels in the navy smaller than the torpedo boats are the submarines, and it was largely good fortune that they too were not battered by the storm. If they had not been undergoing their regular overhauling they would doubtless have been out for the maneuvers and a great naval tragedy would have occurred, for they could never have lived through the terrible storm.

Sunday School Methods Discussed

R. DOUGLAS FRASER
Vice-President

D. M. SMITH
Treasurer

MRS. J. WOODBRIDGE BARNES

HENRY H. MEYER, D.D.
Secretary

W. R. FUNK, D.D.
President

AT THE very heart of all things pertaining to the Sunday School were those privileged to attend the meetings of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations held in Toronto, Canada, January 23-25, when editors, publishers and secretaries, representing twenty-six denominations, met to discuss measures looking toward better Sunday Schools, with improved courses of study and more effective methods of teaching.

Through the courtesy of the authorities of St. James Cathedral, the commodious parish house of St. James was placed at the disposal of the Council. The Council divided itself into sections representing the editorial, educational, publication and extension work of the several denominations. Papers were read by the Rev. William Walter Smith, D.D., of New York, presenting plans of Sunday School instruction in the Protestant Episcopal Church; and by the Rev. Frank Johnson, editor of the Sunday School Chronicle, London, outlining the Sunday School situation in Great Britain. The educational section, Rev. Benjamin S. Winchester, D.D., of the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, Boston, chairman, came to an agreement for the investigation of Bible study in preparatory schools, colleges and seminaries, with a view to helping the men and women studying there to educational leadership in the church, also with reference to the present existing foundations, such as the Carnegie, Rockefeller and Sage Foundations, which have no place in their plan for religious education or allied subjects; and favoring the establishing of summer schools for Sunday School leadership in various parts of the country.

Only one address was contributed by a woman—Mrs. J. Woodbridge Barnes of New York, who spoke on the best ways of solving the problems arising from the introduction of the graded lessons.

An entire evening was devoted to the general theme of the correlation of the home and the Sunday School. Rev. Alexander Macgillivray of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, presented the Bible side of home religious training. The psychological side was emphasized by the Rev. Milton S. Littlefield of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"It is clearly evident," said Dr. Henry H. Meyer, secretary of the Council, "that the general Sunday School movement has outgrown or is rapidly outgrowing its machinery for lesson making. The present state of unrest and uncertainty with regard to the general Sunday School situation may be regarded as an evidence of vitality and growth, rather than an occasion for serious concern regarding the ultimate outcome. With the sense of denominational individualism, there has come a new appreciation of interdenominational dependence in our effort to cope with the multiplied obstacles which to-day retard the progress of evangelical faith and fellowship. In Christian education lies the hope of North America. In united effort and co-operation lies our strength. To every enemy of our common faith we must present a united front. To every obstacle to evangelical faith we must oppose a thorough Christian training, with systematic Bible and religious instruction in the home, in the church school and in the Christian college. And where our lines are far flung on the frontier, or intersect in the crowded parishes of our great cities, there we must cease to duplicate our machinery and our effort, raising at every point the standard of efficiency and of service."

The resolutions adopted look forward to the time when the denominations will prepare their own Sunday School lessons. The Council "reaffirms its declaration that to the denominations belongs the sole authority to determine the form and content of lesson courses for denominational Sunday Schools." It further "affirms the right of any denomination, or group of denominations, to accept, reject or revise for its own use any interdenominational lesson courses, or to create for itself lesson courses independent of the Council or other organizations." A committee of eleven was appointed "to consider the principles and methods according to which courses of study for the Sunday School should be constructed and provided for the use of the denominations."

M. K. H.

TWO FAMOUS FOREIGNERS

Sir John Kirk

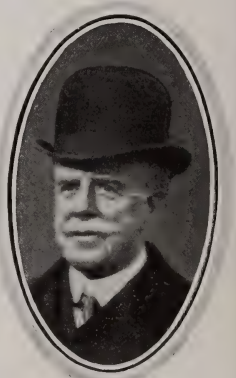
FEW visitors to this country in recent years have a wider circle of friends in both continents than Sir John Kirk, the friend of London's cripple children. At an age when most boys are scarcely interested in such things, John Kirk, a schoolboy and a poor man's son living in the south of London, had already started on the career which has proved a most remarkable one.

Like many great enterprises, the beginnings were surprisingly simple. For years his work went quietly on, practically unnoticed by any save the cripples themselves. In 1907, the late King Edward VII, having heard from many sources stories of the Ragged School Union, summoned Mr. Kirk, its founder, to an audience in Buckingham Palace. He walked all the way from their humble home in Henrietta Street to the palace, where immediately he became quite dazed at the many impressive preliminaries to what he supposed was to be the simple bestowal of a gift from the "King's Charities."

It was a trying moment when a high official conducted plain frock-coated John Kirk into the royal presence. Not until then did he realize what the significance of it all was. At the command "to kneel," he knelt down in the only way he knew, and folded his hands in an attitude of prayer. Almost at the same instant the clap of a sword fell upon his shoulder, and the voice of the King, saying, "Arise, Sir John Kirk!" brought all of his courage back. His good work had found him out; he had been knighted on account of it. Amid congratulations and blessings invoked upon his work, he was shown to a carriage that awaited him at the gate. The story is related by friends how he walked the last stage of the homeward journey, knocked at his own door and when his wife answered his call he addressed her, much to her amazement, as "Lady Kirk." Explanations were in order, and when the happy surprise was ended, the heartiest of congratulations came from the lips of the noble woman who had been his true comrade and helper in all his struggles and who was made the "proudest wife in all London" from the fact that the King had laid the sword of knighthood upon John Kirk's broad shoulders that day.

WIDESPREAD grief has been felt over the sudden death in Egypt of the Duke of Fife, King George's brother-in-law. The event has marred the felicitations attendant upon the return of their Majesties from India; the home-coming of the sovereign and his queen are gloomy rather than joyous.

The Duke, with his family, was traveling toward Khartoum, where he was to have attended the dedication of a cathedral erected as a memorial to the late General Gordon. The vessel Delhi, on which the ducal party was proceeding to Egypt, was wrecked off the coast of Morocco, and the passengers were subjected to dangerous and discomforting exposure. No lives were lost in the wreck, but among those who suffered from the exposure was the Duke himself, who contracted a severe cold which later developed into pneumonia. His was another "death in the desert." Instead of helping to honor his friend, he met death near where he had perished.



The Late Duke of Fife

In 1889 the late Duke, then the Earl of Fife, married Queen Victoria's daughter, the Princess Louise, receiving on the same day his rank as a duke. Beside the title Earl of Fife, he already possessed those of Viscount MacDuff, Baron Banco, and Baron Skene. The Duke was sixty-three years of age at the time of his death, and had always been honored and beloved by the people. The London Times, on the occasion of his marriage to the Princess, said of him: "In character and repute he is blameless, exemplary and well esteemed of all men." He was a large and handsome man, the true soldier and gentleman. In the year 1876 he visited America. He was known during this journey as Viscount MacDuff, in which character he was heir of the gallant MacDuff who slew the guilty Macbeth. The Duke was a wealthy man, owning many estates in the United Kingdom, and being also a member of the London banking house of Sir Samuel Scott. From 1874 to 1879 he sat in the lower house of Parliament as Liberal member for the counties of Elgin and Nairn. From 1879 to 1885 he sat as Lord Skene, in the House of Lords. It is interesting to note that the late Duke was for many years a total abstainer from intoxicants, and that he prohibited the sale of liquor on his Scottish estates.

China Orphans' Plea Answered

The Christian Herald's Appeal in Their Behalf Finds Quick Response

OUR plea in behalf of the Famine Orphans at the various missions is already meeting with most encouraging responses. Friends of missionary work in China all over this country are sending in their gifts, with their prayers that they may be made a means of blessing to the orphan waifs.

Miss A. T., New York City, sends $1 "to feed a child for two weeks." F. W., Northampton, Mass., also sends $1 for the little orphans "from two friends in Northampton, who have just been reading the little book called Moon-Flower. "A Christian Friend" in Export, Pa., sends $5 for the support of the unfortunate orphans, adding, "and I also pray that God will bless and save them and the missionaries who are caring for them." J. E. T., Newark, N. J., sends $10 "for helping along the work." C. H. R., Brooklyn, N. Y., sends $1 and says, "I wish it were more, but the dear Lord knows all about it." Mrs. C. A. G., Warren, N. H., encloses $5 "with my prayer for the little ones, and I hope this may be the means of leading some to trust and obey the blessed Saviour." M. B. G., Kingston, N. Y., sends $1, with the hope that it will be "a little help—a raindrop." Mrs. F. C. O., Raymondsville, Texas, encloses $1 which "our little son Gillett has saved." A. A. M., Ilse, Cal., encloses $1 for the orphans, and adds, "may God bless you and your good work." J. B. G., Wilton, Me., sends a silver half dollar and says: "When I was a child, my parents let me cut my teeth on this fifty-cent piece. It has done service in three generations. Now, I wish to put it to some better use, so I send it to you for the Chinese orphans." A. B. McB., Pittsburg, Pa., encloses $1.40, the gift of a Sabbath School class of small boys in Sewickley, Pa., U. P. Church at an entertainment given to help the poor children in China.

That the cause of the orphan waifs is one that awakens sympathy in the breasts of many readers is made evident from the feeling expressed in their letters. Rosa S., Ackland, O., sends 50 cents "to help in the good work of saving the poor little orphan children. May God richly bless it." A Friend in Middletown, N. Y., who does not wish her name to appear, sends a gift of $20. Z. A. N., Bridgeport, N. S., sends $5 and a list of interested friends. Mrs. S. B., Normal, Ill., sends $10, and adds, "I wish it were $10,000. This, as well as my previous gift ($2), was prompted by reading Little Moon-Flower. Send some more copies so that I may give them to friends."

Two Little Chinese Famine Orphans

Nearly 2,000 Like These Are Pleading for Support in Christian Orphanages. Will You Help Them?

Missionaries Write of the Suffering

Chairman Webster of the Orphan Committee at Chinkiang has forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD letters from a number of missionaries at the various orphanages in which the present needs of the work among the famine waifs in their care are strongly urged. An idea of the perils that beset the missionary workers is given in the following extract from a letter sent by Miss Anna Elmers, superintendent of the orphanage at Antung.

It is two weeks since word came to me at the orphanage in Antungku, that I would have to leave my work for a time, it not being considered safe in interior stations for foreigners on account of revolution and famine. The missionaries in our district, one after another, had left some time before for the open ports, leaving two of us alone, and our nearest neighbors (foreigners) several days' journey away, and between them and us a road made unsafe by robber bands and the two contending armies. These, our fellow missionaries had pleaded with us to leave, but we felt we ought to cast in our lot with the children, until two of our men missionaries two weeks ago arrived, having been sent from headquarters to take us away. This was a severe shock to us, but a severer shock was in store for us when, at the same time, a message came that the number of orphans would have to be reduced.

Beset by Perils on Every Hand

Antung district has had famines in 1907, 1909, 1910, 1911, and this year is worse than any before, for the reason that the population has grown more destitute each succeeding year, and now even those who had a little left from other years are in awful suffering. Many of the people north of us have formed into bands, and rob wherever and whatever they can, so that there is no safety for the poor villagers, so much so, that the mandarins had to give permission to the villagers to kill any one whom they found robbing, the mandarin himself asking for volunteers to help to protect the city. Daily almost, there are executions of robbers in the city. Two days before we left, seven were executed, and their heads hung for three days on the city gates as a warning to the people. The country is in an awful condition. The few relatives which the children have are famine sufferers, and are mostly on the road as beggars. Several of the children who have widowed mothers, I have sent to them, for the time of our absence, giving them the next quarter's remittance, and in this way helping to keep those mothers alive through part of the famine. The rest of the children are left in the orphanage in charge of Chinese Christian helpers. You will remember that we had one hundred children in the orphanage supported by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund until this last quarter, when the number was reduced to ninety-eight on account of the death of two. Last winter we had daily appeals asking us to save children who had been left on the street, and we had to send them away unheeded; but some of them would not be sent away, and came again day after day, so that, weary of them, we had to take them in, so that there were fifteen children in addition to the number which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD supports. All through the summer and autumn the same appeals, to which we had to turn a deaf ear, till one day, the 21st of November, after days of pleading, one little boy of about five years came. His mother had died months before, his father, an opium smoker, had left him on the street, and gone, no one knows where. This baby had sat these months on doorsteps day and night, so that even the hearts of the heathen in the city were touched, and they had given him something to eat; but fearing that the cold weather would soon kill him, they made a last appeal for him and another boy, so that in desperation, I told them to bring them. One little fellow was already too far gone; a few more hours and he was beyond suffering; but this boy of five could still be saved and was added to our household.

Some of the missionaries write that terrified natives flock to the missions, bringing with them their children and valuables for protection. Some even climbed over the mission walls and pleaded to be allowed to remain. It was a trying time. Bands of marauders were plundering the country round about; bullets could be heard whistling through the air by day and night; fires raged and alarming noises were heard at intervals. There was little sleep in the missions, for no one knew what new peril an hour might bring forth. Occasionally regular soldiers would fight the brigands and many would fall on both sides. Notwithstanding these dangers, there were missionaries who flatly refused to leave their posts. They knew that to do so would have been to leave to certain death many of the orphans under their care.

A MISSIONARY'S PLEA

I TRUST the readers of The Christian Herald will respond to your appeal generously," writes Missionary J. E. Shoemaker of Compassion Orphanage, Ningpo, China (now on furlough in this country). "I am sure that every one who has kept in touch with the splendid work done by your paper in behalf of the world's needy ones, cannot but be very thankful that you were moved to undertake a kind of work that sets forth to the world one of the most unanswerable arguments to prove the disinterested benevolence of the Christian religion."

The Famine Orphan Fund

The following contributions for our China Famine Orphan Fund have been received up to date:

E. O. Tryon	$2.00
Miss A. Taylor	1.00
Mr. Samuel M. Engle	2.00
Miss F. Wetmore	1.00
Mrs. M. T. Andrews	1.00
Mr. William N. Hamilton	5.00
Mary E. Horton	2.00
J. D. Williams	2.00
Mrs. Lippold	1.00
Mary R. Walker	1.00
Mr. John E. Parvely	10.00
Mrs. I. J. Steanne	2.00
Mrs. Amanda Smith	1.00
Mrs. George Gruetzmacher	1.00
Mrs. E. M. Buck	5.00
E. E. Hafenrichter	10.00
Mrs. George Watson	1.00
Mrs. E. J. MacArthur and Mrs. Mary E. McCormick	2.00
Mrs. C. O. Graves	5.00
Sarah E. Rosedale	10.00
Mary B. Gillespie	1.00
Cecil G. Osborn	1.00
Mrs. J. A. Goodnow	5.00
Mrs. L. H. Gietzen	1.50
Mrs. C. B. Randall	2.00
Anna A. Mains	1.00
C. H. R., Brooklyn, N. Y.	1.00
Reader, White Cottage, O.	2.00
I. H. N., Lanark, Ills.	10.00
Two Readers, Peterboro, Ont., Can.	2.00
No Name, Philadelphia, Pa.	2.00
No Name, Ypsilanti, Mich.	1.00
No Name, Oakland, Calif.	1.00
Rose Strickland	.50
Nancy Hall	1.00
A Friend, Middletown, N. Y.	20.00
Z. A. N., Bridgeport, N. S.	5.00
Mrs. S. Baldridge	10.00
Ed Anderson	2.00

All contributions should be addressed: "CHINA FAMINE ORPHAN FUND, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York."

A FARQUHARSON SHEEP PORTRAIT

AMONG the reproductions of the works of modern artists from which many of our recent covers have been taken, few are more interesting than our present subject. The artist, Mr. Joseph Farquharson, A.R.A., is a Scotchman, who has spent his life among the bleak moors and downs of his beloved country, devoting his time and talent to the painting of what have recently come to be known as "The Farquharson Sheep Portraits."

Though he has for years exhibited at the Royal Acadamy and the Royal Institute in London and at the Liverpool Art Gallery, no living animal painter was ever hurried so peremptorily, or so unexpectedly, into fame. His pictures are among the much-talked-of canvases in London to-day, and while Joseph Farquharson has practically only just been discovered, through his most recent painting, "The Good Shepherd," shown at the latest exhibition of the Royal Academy, he is well over seventy years old, and as full of vigor and ambition as a boy. The picture, "Over Snowfields Waste and Pathless," is simple enough in subject. A few sheep wander drowsily along a trackless river bank; leafless trees that cast strong shadows in the moonlight fill the right foreground, while a distant group of buildings and haycocks faintly touched by the light of the moon shining clear and full for a moment in a lowering sky add much to the depth and interest of the picture; but the loneliness of the sheep that seem to wander aimlessly over the canvas, the rare luminosity and the convincing quality that it is all a true story are the touches of genius which mark it "a little masterpiece."

English critics have frequently compared Mr. Farquharson's art work with the work of Sir Edwin Henry Landseer, whose paintings are as popular in London to-day as they were fifty years ago. While the famous animal painter was far more versatile in his selection of animal subjects and perhaps a braver draughtsman than is Mr. Farquharson, one would look in vain among the familiar pictures of Sir Edwin Landseer for anything approaching either the poetic quality or depth of feeling revealed in the present picture.

A SERMON

By

Rev. A. B. Simpson, D.D.*

RADIANT LIVES

TEXT: "They looked to him and were radiant." Ps. 34: 5

ALL NATURE is eloquent of God. It is the earliest volume of Divine revelation and still full of illustrations of the more precious volume of his inspired Word.

Perhaps there is no more striking illustration in all nature of our text and of the spiritual forces it expresses than the latest discovery of modern science, the wonderful substance called radium. At the late meeting of the British Association Sir William Ramsey made radium the special theme of his annual address and called attention to some of its wonderful properties. The most remarkable thing about radium is that it radiates, that is, it gives out rather than receives radiant energy. Surely it reminds us that the glory of the Christ life is unselfishness and service. The radium rays are sent forth at a velocity of over forty thousand miles a second, so that a single ray could go almost twice round the earth in a second. We wonder if our prayers and activities go as swiftly to the perishing heathen of distant lands.

The Radiant Firmament

The heat given out by radium is more than three million times greater than the most powerful oxygen blow pipe. A ton of radium, if so large a quantity could ever be obtained, would have an energy equal to one and a half million tons of coal, which would carry an Atlantic liner for thirty years. It takes more than thirty centuries for a single grain of radium to exhaust itself, so that it practically is almost endless in its radiant energy. What a wonderful realization this gives us of the higher forces of the spiritual world! If God can work so mightily in the coarser elements of matter, how much greater the possibilities of his grace and power through the Holy Spirit!

And yet this wonderful substance comes from the dark caves of earth and is crystallized from pitchblende, something like the common tar which we tread beneath our feet on the asphalt pavements. What a parable of the grace that can pick us up out of the dust and make us radiant with light and life and power which yet shall be brighter than ten thousand suns!

There are two kinds of radiant bodies, namely, those that shine by their own light and those that reflect borrowed light from a luminous body. We never can be luminous bodies, but must always shine with reflected light. This is the thought expressed in our beautiful text: "They looked unto him and were radiant." Their light all came from him and came only when their faces were turned toward his light. When our earth turns away from the sun it is night, but when it turns its face toward the orb of day and looks unto him it is radiant with the morning. This thought is finely expressed in the figure which the apostle gives us in the third chapter of II. Corinthians, "We, reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Are we thus looking to him and reflecting his radiance until like Moses our faces shall shine with the reflection of his glory?

Reflected Radiance

But the apostle himself gives us a still finer figure in the next chapter; not merely the reflected light, but the light shining from within the illuminated soul. "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Here the figure is not merely reflected light, but internal light, radiating through every avenue of expression and manifestation in a human life. It is the cathedral window which is dark and dead from the outside and gives no sign of its beautiful tints and tracings until the lamps are lighted within and then sheds forth all its manifold glory and all its artistic figures. How we have sometimes seen the light of love, or better still, the light of heaven shine forth from a human countenance when the lamps of the heart were aglow, when the first touch of the joy of salvation had come or when perhaps the vision of celestial glory was opening before the departing spirit.

They who have seen that look in death
No more need fear to die.

When the Lord Jesus comes to dwell within the consecrated heart the illumination which he brings is represented by the same vivid figure. "I will manifest myself unto him," he says, and the original word for manifest means, "I will shine forth with a glory like the sun." Christ wants not merely to be reflected from our outward conduct but from our inmost spirit. The ancient temple of the sun in the land of the sun-worship was a temple of glass. It was not polished stone or transplendent gold; but it was transparent glass through which the sun himself might enter at every point and shine forth with his own native radiance. Have we thus received the light that shone out of darkness to shine in our hearts? And are we radiant through his indwelling and outshining life?

Radium gives out six different kinds of energy, which the scientists designate by the first six letters of the alphabet, a to f. Shall we see if we cannot find a parallel to this in the various ways in which we can shine for the Lord?

The Spiritual Light

1. The Light of Truth. Christ came to reveal new spiritual light to this lost world. What a wonderful revelation he has given to us of God, of righteousness, of sin, of salvation, of duty and of the dark and uncertain future upon which he has brought "life and immortality to light through the Gospel"! How dark this world would be to-day if he had not come! But are we reflecting this light to others? Have we a message like him and from him to our generation? Are our lives speaking for God, for righteousness and for eternal hope? Are we making him known and real to our fellow men and are our lives radiant with testimony, service and blessing to our age and our race? God has sent each one of us to be a living epistle, known and read of all men, and as one has well said, "Our life is either a Bible or a libel."

2. The Light of Purity. Christ's moral witness to the world was even more important than his message of truth. He first lived his Gospel before he attempted to give it to others. The mightiest thing in his career was his inexorable righteousness. By it he conquered Satan and won salvation for his people. If the devil could only have overcome him in the wilderness and for one brief moment tempted him to do wrong and step aside from the path of lowly obedience to which he had consecrated himself, his mission would have immediately failed and our justification been impossible. We are accepted before God through the perfect righteousness which he achieved. How wonderful his purity! It was not a hard, cold, dead Pharisaism, but a radiant goodness. It won the admiration and the testimony of his worst enemies, and even the disciple that betrayed him, the judge that condemned him and the malefactor that hung by his side on the cross gave their last witness to his beautiful and blameless life. And so if the Christ is living in us we will reflect his divine holiness and his heavenly purity, and it will speak to men as he spoke, condemning the world, convicting of sin and making men hungry for the righteousness of God.

They tell of a teacher who among the children of the slums instead of preaching to them about clean faces and tidy garments, will sometimes bring a lily into the midst of the dirty crowd and as they gaze upon its spotless whiteness they instinctively look upon their stained garments and unwashed hands. And one by one, it is said, they will sometimes steal away and come back with as much whiteness and cleanliness as their wretched homes can supply. That radiant flower is a silent messenger of purity. Shall we let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven?

The "Light of the World"

3. The Light of Moral Loveliness. It is possible to be righteous and yet rigid, rugged and even rude. Of such a man the apostle says that no one would die for him. But for the good man, that is, the man with moral charm, some would even dare to die. Christ's purity had this heavenly charm. It was not the righteousness of the Pharisee or the ascetic, but it was as human as it was divine. Even when a child it was said of him that he had favor with God and men. His graciousness attracted at once the sinner and the little child. To those that know him as the spiritual Christ he is "the chief among ten thousand and the altogether lovely." No human art has ever succeeded in perfectly expressing the sweetness of his face and form, and yet Hoffman's head of Christ has so far approximated to the heavenly ideal that many of us have stopped to gaze upon it until it seemed to speak to our inmost souls.

How Joy Illumines

4. The Light of Joy. It is said that Jesus never smiled. Perhaps he had none of the superficial gayety of shallower natures, but his was always a life of peace and joy. "Be of good cheer," was his constant message. "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you and that your joy might be full." Even in the dark hour when the cross was just before him he forgot his own trials and his message was, "Let not your hearts be troubled." He has come to save us from sorrow as well as sin. The world needs the light of our victorious joy. If we can do nothing else for him let us at least rejoice evermore and manifest to our fellow men the peace of God that passeth all understanding and defies all misunderstanding.

5. The Light of Patience. It is when trial, temptation and danger overwhelm us that the joy of the Lord bears its noblest testimony for Christ. It was in the hour and power of darkness and amid the scorn and cruelty of his enemies that the Lamb of God won the supreme triumph of his life and death and taught us how through his grace his love in us may still "suffer long and be kind," and still "believe all things, hope all things, endure all things." This is the only world in which we can ever glorify Christ by suffering. Shall we glorify him in the fires and shine like the radiant stars most brightly when all around is dark?

The Mightiest Radiance of All

6. The Light of Love. Nothing illumines a human face like the light of love. Nothing sheds a sweeter radiance over life than unselfish love. What sweeter memory lives in the recollection of the great majority of men and women than the quiet, tender face and self-sacrificing life of some sweet mother who lived out her life in the children of her affection? The pages of human history are irradiated by examples of patriotic love that counted honor and fatherland dearer even than life. It was love that glorified and vivified the life and ministry of the Lord Jesus. Even Napoleon confessed that in this respect there was no glory like the glory of Christ. "Our empires," he said, "are founded upon fear but Christ's upon love, and to-day there are millions who would die for him." In our Christian lives the mightiest moving force and the brightest radiance must come from love; the love that can stoop to the lowest depths of unworthiness, misery and need; the love that can reach to the farthest breadths of human relationship; the love that can bless its enemies and return good for evil like the Master in the supreme triumph of the garden and the cross.

Beloved, how far is our love reaching and our light shining?

Anvil Sparks

..A HABIT cannot live on neglect.

..AN EMPTY mind is never a contented one.

..IT IS hard to have faith in one who has no faith.

..SAY your prayers, and put them on record by deeds.

..NO ONE ever escapes danger by running away from duty.

..WORDS with a sting in them seldom awaken people to a sense of duty.

..A LITTLE learning is a dangerous thing; but none at all is more dangerous still.

..A WEAK nature goes down equally before great good fortune and great misfortune.

* Dr. Simpson is the founder and head of the Christian Alliance (interdenominational).

WHO PLANTS A SEED

WHO plants a seed in the waiting soil,
He plants in faith sincere
That God who blessed old Adam's toil
Will make the blade appear;
That rain will fall to melt the clod,
As from the first decreed—
His heart believes in a living God,
Who plants a seed.

Who plants a seed, whate'er it be,
Or rye, or corn, or wheat,
Plants hope that of its increase he
Will reap the grain and eat;
That God who bade the sun to stand
And wait at Joshua's need,
Will send the sunshine on the land—
Who plants a seed.

Who plants a seed in the morning bright,
Or under the blazing noon,
Plants help for the weak in the ceaseless fight
And a prayer for the coming soon
Of the days when plenty will bless the poor,
And the sons of Mammon's breed
Will find no longer their calling sure—
Who plants a seed.

Green grow and tall, O rustling corn!
And green, O wheat and rye!
Blessing of God on the harvest morn
Under a smiling sky!
The promise holds in every clime
For every race and creed,
To him who toils a reaping time—
Who plants a seed.

Rozobel, N. C. JOHN E. TYLER.

Redeeming a Mining Camp

IN a mining camp far from civilization and free from all that tends to make better, the writer was a witness to the following incident. More than seven hundred men held high carnival in this camp. Gambling, fighting and drunkenness were popular amusements every day in the week, until something happened. One lovely Sabbath morning a man suggested the organization of a Bible class. Well! It was organized, and men who for months had been losing sight of everything like self-respect and wholesome living, entered into the spirit of the thing and came forward with a rush to enrol. Trunks, grips, coat pockets, etc., were ransacked for Bibles and there were soon in evidence some two hundred and forty-three, with more to come as events later proved. These rough men in outward appearance and actions looked at the Bibles and thought of loving mothers, devoted wives and others dear to them, far back in their homes, East, North and South. The effect was wonderful. Seated on rocks, logs and anything available, the class was called to order. The man who had put the question (God always has a man ready upon every occasion to do these things) rose to offer prayer, and the very trees, rocks and earth seemed to echo the inspiration and peace. Other men came into the circle as he prayed, and when the meeting was over, two hundred and eighty men wrote their names in a book that had been hastily provided. There were men from all parts of the Union in that class, led by a man from Rochester, N. Y., who kept the good work going for months until more than five hundred men had taken a hand. Later on women came, children came, churches came and to-day wealth, culture and all that goes to make life worth while have come to that camp. There are men in all parts of the United States who can substantiate this incident if they happen to read this account of it.

PHILIP FALL.

The Greatest Gift

SIR JAMES SIMPSON, the eminent physician and scientist, was once asked what was the greatest discovery he had ever made. Sir James replied: "That I am a sinner and that Christ is my Saviour."

An Ideal Almanac

I desire to acknowledge the receipt of The Christian Herald Almanac, which I think the most valuable and instructive publication of its kind I ever saw compiled in so convenient a form. Please accept my grateful thanks for it, and also for the fine and useful book, The Pilgrim Ship, which has been much admired by all my friends and acquaintances.

Philadelphia, Pa. ELBRIDGE G. STOUT.

"Darkness Be Over Me"

BY EUGENE THWING

SAY—conductor, d'ye min' 'f I sing a little?"

"Well, I s'pose it'll depend something upon what kind of songs you sing."

The conductor was anxious to take the course that would be likeliest to avoid trouble. It was late, and the car was filled with ladies and gentlemen going home from some evening affair. One poor fellow in soiled clothing had clambered in and propped himself up in a corner. He seemed out of place, but wholly unconscious of it. His drunkenness had reached the stage where the desire to sing was uncontrollable, and a carload of strangers would do for an audience as well as any other.

"I'll give 'em the lates', an'—say, how'd this do?" and he began somewhat boisterously, but brokenly, one of the popular songs of the day.

The passengers in the car edged away, and tried not to notice the fellow in the hope that he would soon be quiet; but he tried one song after another with maudlin insistence upon being heard. His voice revealed the sweetness and range of a trained singer to whom, ordinarily, it would be a pleasure to listen. At length he appeared to notice the aversion with which he was regarded, and stopped abruptly.

"Don't seem to like my singin'," he remarked. "Maybe them songs ain't good enough. Try again, eh? Sure, I know your kind." In a moment he began once more:

Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee—

The passengers in the car stirred uneasily, as though about to protest against such a desecration.

E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me—

Thrilling unconsciously with the majesty of the hymn, the man's voice swelled more richly and steadily, and no one smiled. Even the unspoken protest seemed to disappear. The passengers were plainly becoming interested, and the singer noticed the change as he began another verse.

Though like a wanderer,

The man's voice faltered an instant on the last word.

The sun—gone—down,

The song came more slowly, and the voice was sinking lower—

Darkness be over—me—

The last word was almost a sob, as the singer's head drooped forward, and he shrank, silent, into his corner. Tears glistened in many eyes. A lady at the other end of the car began to cry quietly behind her program.

. . .

IN THE car was one man whose heart went out in pity and desire to his brother there in darkness. He saw at once that a sense of sin and wretchedness had suddenly swept over the man; that, perhaps for the first time, he realized his lost condition, and that now, at this very moment, was the time to save him, before his heart grew hard again. Only yesterday, at a revival meeting for men, this church member, who now stood looking at the huddling figure of his unhappy brother, had joined in singing the male chorus, "Throw out the life-line." He had sung the words, "There is a brother whom some one must save," and again, "See! he is sinking . . . Sinking in anguish, where you've never been . . . Why do you tarry? . . . Oh, hasten to-day!" A fleeting thought had come to him of questioning whether the call was for him. Where could he be needed to throw out the life-line to a brother, sinking in anguish? It was so easy to sing such things, and so unlikely that they applied to him in real life. Yet here was the very brother, here within his reach, sinking—in darkness—in anguish; and he, himself, able in an instant to lay hold of the life-line and throw it out with a saving hail.

. . .

REGARDLESS of the other passengers looking on, heedful only of the desperate, instant need of the man before him, thrilling with eagerness to save him before it be too late, he made a place for himself on the seat beside the man, now almost sobered by his revulsion of feeling. He put his arm affectionately around the other's shoulders and spoke quietly into his ear.

"It's dark just now, brother, but I know where it's light; I'm going to take you there with me."

The man looked up surprised and rebellious, and tried to draw away, but the other went on, "It's all right; I'm your friend; I'm going to help you; it will be a real pleasure; I know just what you want; come."

He had glanced out of the car, and now motioned to the conductor to stop. His home was close at hand. As he rose, he lifted the man from his corner by firm but gentle persuasion, and before there was time for much resistance they were off the car. By this time the man apparently had made up his mind to go anywhere with the stranger who was promising him help. Something had taken away his resistance. Perhaps it was the gentle strength and confidence of the stranger; perhaps it was his own sense of need. The life-line was beginning to tug.

. . .

INTO his warm, quiet sitting-room, the good man brought his brother-in-need, and there he loved him. The hours passed unheeded. Some time, it doesn't matter when, they rose to their feet together, and their faces shone. Darkness was over the wanderer no more. The sun had risen again in his soul. His face was flooded with its light. He——

Oh, if this were only true! It seems so cruel to tell the truth, but it must be told. The crowded car was there; the singer was there; the church member was there. It all happened, just as I have said—yet not all. The unhappy man sang "Nearer, my God, to thee"; he sang "Darkness be over me," and the song broke as his head sank upon his sobbing breast, and he huddled in confusion in his corner. The church member looked at him with emotion and earnest promptings to go to his relief. He knew that a brother was "sinking in anguish" and that now was the time for him to "throw out the life-line." He stood there with desire and compassion, even as you or I might have stood. But he did not make a place by the man's side on the seat. He did not take him to his home. He did not lead him out of the darkness into the light. He did not love him enough. Oh, he did not; but suppose he had. Even as you or I?

OUTSIDE

I STOOD in the village street
At the edge of night.
Damp grass hid the sound of my feet.
A beam of light
Streamed from a half-closed blind,
Like a rosy finger
Beckoning warm and kind,
And bade me linger.

Bee-balm and lavender made
Scent in the gloom.
I peered through the lilacs' shade
Into the room.
Mother and child, half asleep
In the curve of her arm,
Watching the firelight leap
Ruddy and warm.

The dew fell like tears from the eaves,
And the lilac bush gray
Rustled its heart-shaped leaves
And waved me away.
My roof is the empty dome
Of a darkening sky.
Warm little human home,
Good-by!

MARGARET ARMSTRONG.

A Japanese on Missionaries

THE following is an extract from an address by Baron Kanda, the head of the Higher Commercial School in Tokyo, at a reception and dinner given in honor of Mr. Russell and Hamilton Holt of New York:

"Let me in this connection pay a humble tribute to that noble band of American missionaries and teachers who have consecrated their lives to the cause of the moral and intellectual elevation of our people—that noble band headed by the late lamented Dr. Hepburn, who with the crown of over four-score years and ten, but with a still brighter one of his immortal work left in the hearts of his pupils here, has recently gone to his well-earned rest. He has left behind him not a few pupils who have since risen to posts of great importance in the life of new Japan, among whom I may point with pride to my honored friend, the president of the Bank of Japan (Baron Takahashi) present to-night. But there are many Hepburns, Verbecks, Browns, and Williamses, the lasting influence of whose labors it is impossible to overestimate. And I am glad to say that this noble band is constantly recruited, and is ever swelling, whose influence is deeply stamped upon the rising generation and will be felt indirectly through generations to come."

A Chinese Girl's Memory

ON SEPTEMBER 25, Tsui Fuk Ki, a promising young teacher in the Women's Training School at Wuchow, South China, passed away. She was the only daughter of one of the Chinese preachers engaged by the Christian and Missionary Alliance in Kwongsi.

Fuk Ki was exceptionally bright, and manifested great diligence and delight in her studies. Years ago, she had memorized all the New Testament, and she seldom got less than one hundred per cent. in her examinations. No girl or boy in the schools was her equal. She was modest and unselfish to a degree; always willing and ready to help when needed.

She was but nineteen years old and had been teaching three years. While attending to her work she found time to study the higher branches. The past few years she had been president of the girls' Christian Endeavor Society in the school. She was also actively engaged in church and Sunday School work.

During vacation last summer, she left her home to nurse a sick colleague. Shortly afterward she was taken sick with typhoid-malaria, from which she died. She was universally beloved and was a most exemplary Christian.

All Better Than Expected

I thank you most heartily for the lovely premiums, the two books and the very useful Almanac. All of them are better than we expected. In our home THE CHRISTIAN HERALD comes next to the Bible. We couldn't do without it. We pray for God's richest blessings on your work. MRS. M. E. LYNCH.

Bakersfield, Calif.

The Rock-Dwellers of Worcestershire

BY A. W. CUTLER

ENGLAND is a land of quaint nooks and corners, of historical edifices and time-worn curiosities. But that in these strenuous days she should have people who live in rocks is surely something closely akin to news. Yet it is a fact.

Years ago I had heard that near the village of Kinver in Worcestershire there were a number of these strange dwellings, but I must confess to having been somewhat skeptical. I determined, however, to make investigations if ever I happened to be in that section of the "old country."

Recently the opportunity presented itself, and it was in an exceedingly curious and expectant frame of mind that I arrived one morning at Kinver, and inquired of a villager as to the whereabouts of these houses of nature. The direction indicated led to one of the wildest spots I have ever seen. Before me spread a vast expanse of rugged country, partly covered with heather and bracken, partly with closely cropped grass. Here and there stood a solitary tree. Up one great sweeping slope straggled a hedge, which I had been told to follow. This hedge suddenly terminated at what looked like a tin sentry box, but had evidently been a shepherd's retreat in times of storm. I stood upon an eminence from which I could look over the surrounding country. There lay the little village of Kinver, and—yes, there in the valley below I beheld a rock of colossal proportions which was evidently inhabited.

A hasty scramble down the almost precipitous hillside soon brought me to this queer domicile. In front of a cottage adjoining the rock was an old-fashioned bucket well, and near by a swing hung temptingly from the horizontal limb of a tree. My approach had been witnessed by a woman working in a little garden below the rock, who now came toward me with an expectant expression on her face, for the wall of her cottage bore the sign "Teas provided," and she doubtless saw in me a prospective customer. I ordered a frugal repast, and while it was being prepared, I inspected the rock more closely. It appeared to cover a tract of ground perhaps two hundred yards round at the base. The rock was about forty feet in height. There was grass on the top and a lone tree, which waved about in the breeze like a natural flagpole, a fitting finish to this extraordinary dwelling.

At the farthest end of the rock was an oblong opening about the size of a large door. It proved to be the entrance to the quaintest of stables. Cavities in the rock walls, like doorless cupboards, had been utilized for bridle, harness, and other things incident to a stable. The floor and ceiling, the latter some eight feet high, were solid unhewn rock. In the rear of the stable was a pig-pen, apparently a natural formation in the rock, where two corpulent porkers grunted contentedly.

The principal resident of the stable, a piebald pony, was grazing leisurely in a paddock near the garden. It struck me that a photograph of the little fellow, standing in the threshold of his unique shelter, would make an attractive picture, so I went to find somebody to bring him in for me. An old man sitting by the fireside cheerfully consented to do this, and incidentally remarked that the stable was the smallest in England.

After the photograph had been taken I tried to find out something about the rock, but the old fellow could not tell me anything very definite, except that members of his family had lived there for the past hundred years. I asked him if he lived in the rock house or the cottage adjoining, and he replied that in the summer months his two sons slept in the "rock bedroom," which they found cool and comfortable, but that in the winter they all lived in the cottage. I gladly accepted his offer to show me the rock bedrom. There were two rooms, the first used merely as a storeroom, from the rear of which a narrow passageway in the solid rock, led to the bedroom. Never do I expect to see an odder sleeping apartment. The room was about ten feet square, and the rough, uneven walls were literally covered with names and initials, carved and scratched in the rock. A huge wooden bedstead practically monopolized the chamber. Against the wall opposite the entrance stood a time-worn old bench, and at one end of the room the rock had been cut through and a tiny window fitted in.

THE WOMAN AND BOY OF HOLY AUSTIN ROCK

THE LITTLE COURTYARD OF VALE'S ROCK

THE PIEBALD PONY AT HIS STABLE DOOR

THE ROCK-HEWN RESIDENCE NINE HUNDRED YEARS OLD

Lunch over, I went around to the other side of the rock. Here was another dwelling much more interesting than the one I had just left. The rock rose sheer above the entrance for fully thirty feet.

This dwelling had four rock-bound rooms, all scrupulously neat and clean. It was occupied by an elderly woman, a young girl, and a four-year-old boy—a strange trio indeed—an impression which was confirmed when, subsequently, I discovered that they were not related, the girl being simply a friend, while the boy had been adopted when quite a baby. There was a strong atmosphere of mystery about this old lady. An unmistakable air of refinement in her voice and manner spoke of better days. The good soul was far more friendly and talkative than her neighbors around the corner. She volunteered the information that the rock was called the Holy Austin Rock, on account of its having been the abode in the fifteenth century of Augustinian monks, and that recent scientific investigations had proved it to be the oldest inhabited rock dwelling in England, the first occupancy dating back nine hundred years. My hostess informed me that there were two other rocks in the vicinity. One of these, known as Nanny's Rock, was uninhabited, but years ago had been the resort of a daring band of highwaymen. The other, Vale's Rock, was situated about a mile and a half away, and was inhabited by two women, aunt and niece.

Greatly interested, I inquired the location of these rocks, and promptly set out to explore them.

Presently the path began to descend, and in the distance I observed a wood of pine trees. About the middle of this wood was an irregular mass of rock, which turned out to be Nanny's Rock, a series of caves leading one into the other. There were no doorways or windows, and perhaps it had never been used except as a temporary hiding-place for outlaws or tramps. I passed through this wood and out into the open country beyond without seeing any other signs of rock houses. I was beginning to feel that I had gone astray when a sudden turn brought me into full view of Vale's Rock, situated halfway up another hillside, off which it abutted like a seacoast headland. This rock was surmounted by a flagpole and appeared to be about one hundred and fifty feet high. Two brick chimneys showed up against the cliff, marking the section used as a residence. A short, steep climb finally landed me in a tiny yard in front of the entrance. The rock here was exceedingly rough and jagged, making a striking frame for the window which was built into it on either side of the doorway. A tap on the door was answered by a plain-looking country girl. Over her shoulder peered a woman of indeterminate age, busily engaged in knitting a stocking. They received me civilly, though with some diffidence, being apparently wholly unaccustomed to strangers.

I was admitted into the kitchen, the coziest little kitchen I have ever been in. Two cats dozed in true domestic bliss on the white-chalked hearth by the open fireplace, on either side of which an easy chair invited repose. A number of dark oak shelves, laden with crockery, filled a conspicuous corner. In the center of the kitchen stood a small round table; an ancient mahogany screen warded off the drafts from the door, and the whole place was as spick and span as a new pin. There was but one other room, apart from the kitchen, which I did not see.

Long association with these remarkable curiosities had apparently robbed them of their novelty. Not one of these people appeared to think there was anything abnormal about their dwellings or themselves, but rather evinced surprise at the interest they had awakened. But an existence so absolutely at variance with that of the average individual, accustomed to the constant rush and turmoil of modern life, could hardly be imagined.

The Master of Nature's Changelings

IN THE very front rank of those men who are doing great things to-day for the well-being of the race, marches Luther Burbank, the Plant Wizard of Santa Rosa, California. Greater than the greatest warrior, whose purpose is destruction, this man multiplies life in its most beautiful and useful forms. He is making two blades of grass to grow where none grew before, and he is literally causing the desert to blossom as a garden of Allah. Burbank is the darling of Mother Nature; his head is ever on her breast; he knows the rhythmic beating of her heart, and she looks down and whispers to him the secrets of plant life in its myriad forms. "Take this dwarf and make it sturdy; touch this weed and make it beautiful; supplant this fetid odor with the perfume of Araby the Blest. See how I accomplish the work in the long processes of centuries; but here is the magic wand that will work the wonder in a day."

Celtic mythology is full of stories of fairies who stole beautiful infants and left in their places hideous and deformed elves. The Plant Wizard knows that Nature has her repulsive elves, as well as her beauties on whom all her wealth of devotion seems to have been lavished; ignoring the latter, the Wizard turns his attention to the elves, touches them with the magic wand, and lo! the weedy Cinderella of the by way is transformed into a joy forever, or becomes an added blessing to man's growing needs.

Copyright, 1907, Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

Mr. Burbank in the Midst of His Brilliant-Hued Dahlias at One of the Conservatories

The secret of Nature's magic wand is breeding and selection, which man has been doing for generations to improve his farm-stock, but a something to which he gave but little thought until Luther Burbank demonstrated that the same great law dominates life from the lowest cell form to that perfect and complex work, man. The Wizard knows the genealogy, and so the relationship of plants; he takes two varieties of the same family, as the potato and tomato, weds them, and the product is the pomato—a vegetable partaking of the nature of each parent but unlike either and better than both. He knows that a dead seed will not germinate and that an unhealthy seed cannot produce a healthy offspring, and he is teaching this great truth to our farmers, too many of whom have no ambition to look up and climb out to God's sunlight.

The Wizard has not discovered this, for the knowledge is old and greatly unheeded, that all life-forms, for full development and fruition, need a healthy ancestry, sunlight, air, environment and proper food. But the seed is the base, the foundation of healthful life, without which all else is naught.

To work out his wonderful designs, his recreations, the Plant Wizard needs time, but not so much as change through Nature's unaided efforts requires. For forty years and more he has been at work, and he feels repaid when a decade of patient effort has brought him to the desired blossom, fruit or foliage. We can in a way appreciate, if we cannot understand this patience, when we learn that to produce a desired lily he spent six years and experimented on five hundred thousand plants. Nor are all his efforts successful; the wand fails at times and disappointment follows, but the worker is never wearied, never downcast. He says: "My method was wrong; I will try again," and try he does, till success crowns the long effort.

Forty years ago the Wizard began by improving the white potato, and to-day that tuber is known by the name of its discoverer in every land where the potato is grown. He has added new glories to the flower garden, and in his rainbow grass he has given new chromatic glories to the fields; but with all his love for the beautiful, the Wizard is eminently practical, and so ever keeps in mind the direct benefit to the human race.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD recently received a letter from Mr. E. H. McEwen, a reader in Hollisterville, Pa., in which the writer says:

"Perhaps it would interest your readers to know that there is a blackberry that grows wild which has no thorns. Three years ago Professor J. B. S. Norton, W. R. Ballard of the Maryland Agricultural College, and myself tramped through the mountains of western North Carolina and found plenty of thornless blackberries growing wild upon the mountains."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD forwarded this information to Mr. Burbank, who replied as follows:

"I have heard of thornless blackberries of certain species having been discovered in North Carolina and along the Eastern coast, but unfortunately the berries were not of any use for food. I have also grown so-called, but not by any means thornless, ones forty years ago.

"Electricity was also known for thousands of years, but it was worthless until developed. Steam was also useless as an aid in performing the labor of mankind until some one made it useful. It is the same with the thornless blackberry. It is now productive, delicious to eat, large and in every way valuable for food, and absolutely smooth like the twig of an apple tree.

There are seedless apples in existence to-day, but none of them are of any commercial value. There was once a so-called stoneless plum, but it was not larger than a large bean and was not fit for human food. The bush was an ill-shaped thorny one and the fruit absolutely useless. Now there are, growing on my farms, splendid prunes and plums which are stoneless. Nature gives us a hint and it is man's business to carry out the work to produce results. LUTHER BURBANK."

The Wizard is still in the prime of his intellectual life. He is hourly growing closer to his beloved Mother Nature; he is daily becoming more expert in the use of the magic wand, and so we hopefully wait for and wonder what his next discovery will be.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—IT WAS INTIMATED, DURING a recent discussion in the Italian Chamber, that the government would expend the accumulated surplus of the last twelve years, amounting to $71,425,000, in meeting the extraordinary expenses caused by the war with Turkey and in carrying out various reforms already voted by Parliament.

—THE CAUSE OF PEACE was materially strengthened on January 29 by the signing in Washington, D. C., of a general arbitration treaty between the Argentine Republic and the United States of Colombia. It was signed by Romulo S. Naon for Argentina and General Pedro Nel Aspina for Colombia, ministers from those countries to the United States. As neither country had a diplomatic representative in the capital of the other, the treaty was signed here. The United States took no part in the negotiations. Practically every question involving sovereign rights in international disputes, except those which may conflict with provisions of the constitution of either country, may be settled by arbitration under this treaty. A court consisting of a representative of each country and a neutral third person mutually agreed upon will constitute a permanent adjudicating body.

—CLARENCE S. DARROW, the union labor attorney, was on January 29 indicted for bribery and corruption of jurors by the Los Angeles County Grand Jury, which for four weeks had been investigating allegations of bribery in connection with the trial jury in the McNamara dynamite case. Two indictments were returned, containing four counts. Two of the counts charge Darrow with the bribery and attempted corruption of Robert Bain, the first juror sworn to try James B. McNamara, now serving a life term in San Quentin prison. The remaining counts allege the bribery and corruption of George N. Lockwood. Bert Franklin, a detective, who is alleged actually to have passed the bribe money to Bain and Lockwood, is accused of the same offenses in informations filed some time ago in the Superior Court. Franklin's trial has been set for February 27. The maximum penalty that could be imposed on Darrow for conviction on all counts is thirty years' imprisonment and fines aggregating $10,000. He is under $20,000 bail.

—CONGRESS AS WELL AS the country at large received a great surprise when twenty-one Insurgent Republicans joined the Democrats in the final vote on the Underwood metal tariff bill, which was passed late in January without amendment by a vote of 210 to 109. Three Democrats from Colorado, who frankly declared that their constituents would not stand for the reductions on lead carried in the bill, went over to the Republicans. The action of the "irreconcilable" insurgents was something of a blow to the standpat leaders, who, in the hope of reuniting the Republican Party, emphasized the fact that the Tariff Board has not yet reported on metals and denounced the Underwood bill as an avowed "revenue only" measure.

—ANOTHER OF THOSE attempts at mob justice for which some sections of our country are becoming only too notorious took place in Hamilton, Ga., recently, when a mob of one hundred men broke into the Harris County jail, overpowered the jailer, and took four negroes, three men and one woman, out and hanged them to trees one mile from town. The bodies were riddled with bullets. It is estimated that three hundred shots were fired. The negroes had been arrested, charged with the murder of a well-to-do farmer, who was killed on a Sunday night as he sat in his home, a shot being fired from the outside. The negroes, who were employed by the murdered man, were Belle Hathaway, John Moore, Eugene Haming and "Dusty" Crutchfield. Sheriff Hadley, uncle of the murdered farmer, did not believe there would be a lynching and was in Columbus.

—CALBRAITH P. RODGERS, the aviator, has determined never to make an aerial flight on Sunday. A delegation from the First Congregational Church of Pasadena called upon him, requesting that he plan to finish his recent flight from the Atlantic to the Pacific on some other day than Sunday. Meanwhile the churches of the city were praying for him. The aviator carried out his plan, however, and met with the worst fall of his career. While in the hospital recovering from his bruises he wrote Dr. Fox, the pastor who had headed the petitioning delegation: "I am through flying on Sunday. All my falls have been on Sunday. This last time many people tried to prevent the flight. Many of them offered prayer to keep me from going up. I believe that when a thing is so important that it calls for prayer it's time something was done. I'll not fly on Sunday again."

AN AGREEABLE SURPRISE

The Christian Herald Almanac is certainly quite an agreeable surprise. It contains much useful information which will be of great benefit to all THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, as well as others who may be fortunate enough to have access to its pages. I want to compliment you on its concise, neat arrangement, from beginning to end, and to say that personally I can see no room for criticism of this, your first effort in publishing an almanac. In fact, I consider it the very best all-round almanac I have ever seen, and predict for you many expressions of thanks from your subscribers. GEORGE W. HALL.
Denver, Colo.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

What is Greatness?

A CURIOUS newspaper error occurred the other day, when the Philadelphia papers set afloat the news that "Forty Immortals" had been named by the National Institute of Arts and Letters. The news was promptly wafted to New York and appeared in the morning papers there, with entire or abridged lists of the fortunate men. The following day a paper which had not printed the news announced that as news it was exceedingly stale, because the appointments had been made long ago, and the list itself could be found in a widely circulated almanac. As a matter of fact there are forty-seven names. Three vacancies remain in the total membership of fifty.

This American Academy of Arts and Letters is an inner circle of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, which has a membership of 250. The first seven members of the Academy were named by the Institute in 1904. They were William Dean Howells, Augustus Saint Gaudens, Edmund Clarence Stedman, John LaFarge, Samuel L. Clemens, John Hay and Edward MacDowell. The number was later increased to 30, and in 1908 to 50. The name of Theodore Roosevelt is included, also that of Woodrow Wilson. The requirement for election is "notable achievement in art, music, or literature."

The French Academy, after which the American has been somewhat modeled, was founded in 1635 by Cardinal Richelieu, but lapsed for many years, and was reorganized in 1816. It consists of forty members, elected for life. England has her Royal Academy of artists; America, the National Academy of Design. The Hall of Fame, of New York University, includes only names of men and women who have been dead at least ten years at the time their names are chosen. There are to be 150 names on the tablets of this colonnade, the number to be completed by the year 2,000 A.D.

About the time of the recent annual meeting of the National Institute and American Academy Dr. Frank Crane attempted the interesting and impossible task of publishing the names of the twenty greatest men in the history of the world. These lists are always instructive, but of course never final. All that one can do is to express his own personal estimate. Dr. Crane's list differs strikingly, for instance, from that compiled by Mr. Andrew Carnegie. Even the consensus of opinion expressed by vote of many expert and prominent persons is far from infallibility.

The best definition of greatness was given by Jesus of Nazareth, the founder of the world's new civilization: "Whosoever would be first among you shall be servant of all." His conception is coming to be accepted as the real test; to be great is to be useful. Here is a sort of greatness all may achieve. The road of self-sacrifice and kindly service is open to all. On it every humble wayfarer may have the intimate, affectionate comradeship of the world's One Great Man. And he has promised to make each friend of his with whom he walks, in some real and definite way, like himself.

The New Era in China

DAYBREAK is at hand in China—the dawn of political liberty, the harbinger, let us hope, of better times for the old empire, whose people have so long been patient under oppression. Having exhausted every expedient to retain control of the government, the Manchus have admitted failure and resolved on the abdication of the throne. This was decided at a conference on January 30 between the Empress Dowager and the princes, at which the terms of the republicans were finally accepted. According to a message from Tientsin, the edict of abdication has been signed, but the court will remain at Peking until March, to allay public excitement and to give time to quell the insubordination of the Manchu garrison, which bitterly opposes the royal backdown. Under the terms accepted, the imperial family and the princes will receive pensions aggregating $2,000,000 yearly and will retain their titles (save that of the emperor). This is conceded to save the dignity of the throne and to make the ordeal of the transference of power less severe than if the ruling house were driven into exile. Yuan Shi Kai, who has handled the situation with statesman-like adroitness, has approved all the arrangements in the interests of national peace. He will assist in establishing a stable government, but he has no ambition to become the president of the new republic.

The restoration of tranquillity throughout the vast empire will be no easy task. Bands of robbers infest the country and are holding many of the wealthy Chinese for ransom. It will require all the energy and determination of Yuan and the co-operation of both Manchus and Chinese to suppress violence and halt the wave of crime which has followed in the wake of civil war. In many of the provinces multitudes have been reduced to starvation, and these will be the special object of the foreign relief movement which is now under way in this country and elsewhere. Our readers will here have an opportunity for service in a special field, by assisting the missionaries, who are sheltering the orphan children of the last famine and hundreds of waifs who have become a charge upon them during the present winter. Let us reach out generous hands of help to them in this time of trial. China's cause is the common cause of humanity and we cannot ignore it.

Express Extortions and Postal Blindness

OUR Postal Department is a remarkable institution. Only a few days ago, it entered a vigorous protest against the custom, followed by certain small-fry concerns, of sending circulars and loose advertising sheets, folded in newspapers, through the mail. The Department has a keen eye for petty offenders, but it is stupidly blind to the doings of the big poachers who appropriate its legitimate revenues by wholesale. In the course of the investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington, it was stated by former Attorney-General Simpson of Minnesota that he had examined the rates charged by one of the leading express companies in that State, and found that the concern was paying 55 per cent. of its gross earnings to the Western railroads. The profits of the railroads on express business were 61 per cent., while those of a single express company were 41 per cent. If these rates approximately represent anything like the profits on express business throughout the country, the demand of the shippers of a 30 per cent. reduction on present rates would seem entirely reasonable. Every State in the Union suffers from overcharging and double-end charging. In seventeen years, the percentage of increase in the rates of the railroads from the express business has been larger than from any other source—the ratio of increase per unit of population being: express 105.80, freight 68.06, passengers 51.06, mail 24.50. Merchants' associations in New York, Chicago and other cities are uniting on a general reduction. It would be difficult to produce a better argument than these facts constitute for the incorporation of the express business with the Post Office, under government control. When it is realized that a single express company does a money order business of $352,000,000 annually, and that the number of its transactions realize a total of 67,000,000 yearly, the average citizen is struck with anything but admiration for the business acumen of a department which thus far has shown no appreciation of this vast source of revenue lying easily within its reach.

A Federal Bureau for Children

AN IMPORTANT step was taken in the progress of the movement for the protection of child life when the Senate passed, on January 31, a bill creating a "Children's Bureau" in the Federal Department of Commerce and Labor. A similar bill is now pending in the House of Representatives. While the first and chief item of the new Bureau's work will be the conducting of investigations and tabulation of statistics concerning child labor, its activities will not be limited to this phase of child welfare work. There has been considerable discussion as to the most appropriate departmental connection for the new work, some of the leaders of the child-welfare movement, among them the National Congress of Mothers, having contended that its proper place was with the Commissioner of Education under the Department of the Interior. Whatever final arrangement of details may be made the passage of the bill by the Senate is undeniably a noteworthy victory for reform. Society is realizing that of all its assets children are the greatest. The care of the child is becoming almost the watchword of morals. We are learning that a consideration of the child's best interests is the proper rule for the settlement of many moral questions.

Senator LaFollette's Breakdown

THE breakdown of Senator LaFollette, during his speech at the Periodical Publishers' Association dinner in Philadelphia, marks the first tragic incident of the Presidential campaign. Those who heard him speak were impressed with the conviction that the Wisconsin Senator was laboring under a great strain, mental and physical. The little man of iron had wasted his energies in endeavoring to carry out a schedule so strenuous that few candidates would have undertaken it. Utterly exhausted in mind and body, he was in no condition to make "the speech of his life," which he had designed to do in Philadelphia. His general demeanor, his nervous irritability, his frequent repetitions and tedious recapitulations, and his amazing outburst against the press were all so unlike the LaFollette who had spoken so brilliantly and effectively elsewhere, that they seemed rather the struggles of a sick man bordering on hysteria. His audience could feel only sympathy for the speaker in his breakdown.

The Wisconsin Senator has been a picturesque figure in public life for many years. Able, earnest, forceful, persistent, and with a vigor of expression such as few public speakers can use with equal effectiveness, he was regarded as a man of the highest possibilities. He has many warm friends who would regret his elimination from public affairs even for a single season. His condition entitles him to general sympathy, altogether irrespective of politics. Even those who differ with him, now join in the general expression of feeling for one who has been suddenly overtaken by disaster in the midst of an active and honorable career.

General Notes

—FOLLOWING the deaths of a young Syrian millworker and a Lithuanian woman as direct results of the rioting attendant upon the great strike at Lawrence, Mass., John J. Ettor, the strike leader, and his chief henchman were on January 30 arrested by the State police charged with being accessory to the murders. After the arrest of the leader the rioting was less violent, though the strikers declared they would not return to work till the accused men were liberated.

—EDWIN HAWLEY, one of the great constructive railway magnates and financiers, died at his home in New York, February 1. Mr. Hawley was born in moderate circumstances in Chatham, N. Y., sixty-three years ago. His first railroad job was as a four-dollar-a-week clerk, and from that position he had worked steadily upward till he controlled more than ten thousand miles of railway, representing about a half dozen well known lines, and was director in forty-one corporations. He was a railroad builder rather than a stock manipulator. He obtained control of railroads that seemed to have outlived their usefulness, and by his ability as an organizer he restored them to a paying basis, paved the way for development in many parts of the country and gained millions for himself.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, February 14, 1912

	PAGE
"Over Snowfields Waste and Pathless" . . . . From a Painting by J. Farquharson	Cover
Watch-Dogs of the Sea (Illustrated)	151
Sunday School Methods Discussed (Illustrated) . .	152
Two Famous Foreigners (Portraits)	152
China Orphans' Plea Answered (Illustrated) . . .	153
Radiant Lives. Sermon By Rev. A. B. Simpson, D.D.	154
"Darkness Be Over Me." By Eugene Thwing . .	155
The Rock-Dwellers of Worcestershire (Illustrated) . By A. W. Cutler	156
The Master of Nature's Changelings (Illustrated) .	157
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	158
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	159
Our Mail-Bag (Illustrated)	160
Emileen (Illus). By Annie Hamilton Donnell	161, 162, 163
A Skyscraper for San Francisco (Illustrated) . .	163
A Delightful "At Home"	164
Talks for the Home Circle. By Margaret E. Sangster	165
Aim and Scope of the Garden. By Ida D. Bennett .	166
Brander Cushing's Ambition . . . . . By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	168, 169, 170
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	171, 172
Safe Investments	173
Home Missionaries. Christian Endeavor Topic . .	174
The Courage of Truth. Epworth League Topic . .	175

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

King George a Mighty Hunter

KING-EMPEROR GEORGE had a magnificent big-game hunt in Nepal during his stay in the jungle from the 17th till the 28th of December, when he left for Calcutta. His ost, the Maharajah of Nepal, accompanied him on is hunting trips. Six hundred elephants were emloyed in the excursions to transport the hunters nd to drive the game toward the shooting box. The wild beasts, hemmed in by the constantly narrowing circle of elephants, could not escape, and the ing was perched high up on the back of one of the elephants where no harm could possibly come to him. Still he is said to be a mighty hunter. His majesty shot three tigers and three rhinoceroses the first day, and of the thirty-nine tigers killed his bag was twenty-four, which only goes to show how deferential the other hunters must have been. His gun brought down more than a dozen rhinos and several bears. It is said that at one time he killed a tiger with his right barrel and turning killed a bear with his left. King George is counted one of the three best shots in England, and there was a newspaper story which had it that in 1904, when he was Prince of Wales, he "brought down 2,190 head of game in seven hours," but as this would be at the rate of over five shots a minute with no misses he must either have used a machine gun or else, alas! it is another one of those untrue stories of great men. King George has handled a gun since he was eight years old, when his granduncle, the Duke of Cambridge, taught him to shoot. Whatever else the king may do, he will never find any difficulty in leading his subjects in the matter of sport. In the earliest history of the world reference is made to a man who was celebrated in the chase.

And he was a mighty hunter before the Lord; wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord. (Gen. 10: 9.)

Guinea Pig Rescued

A guinea pig that had been kept in a wire cage in the medical offices of the Equitable Life Assurance Society on the third floor of the building, was taken out of the ruins caused by fire. The little creature did not have a hair singed nor did it show any signs of damage after its burial and fast of sixteen days in the wreck. It was a long, cold and dreary wait in the ice-encrusted laboratory. When Dr. Wolf, its master, found it it began to squeal and express signs of supreme delight. When released it ran over to the feed box under the sink and ate ravenously and long. Billions of dollars were in the vaults in the ruins underneath, precious human lives were sacrificed, among them one of the truest and bravest men the city ever had, Assistant Fire Chief Walsh; and yet here is this little guinea pig that is spared. Life is more than this earthly span. There must be some other world where balances will be adjusted, where the fittest will survive. If the rescued guinea-pig could have spoken with a human tongue it would have said:

We went through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place. (Ps. 66: 12.)

Blasphemous Fanaticism

There is a society of Moravians in Lodz, Russian Poland, containing a band of fanatical women. Either because he resembled the accepted pictures of Christ, or because he was singularly exemplary, a man by the name of Kowalski was adopted as their "Saviour." They were so sure that he was the Christ that they insisted that he allow them to crucify him, that in his resurrection the people might be convinced of the divine authority of their sect. Whatever the man may have pretended to be to his disciples or worshipers, or others, he drew the line on the cross and nails and spear, and concluded that the sacrifice instead of furnishing an evidence of his Messiahship might result in a permanent corpse; and so he vigorously protested. But thirty of these women, feeling sure he would rise again, stormed his house and were putting their plans of crucifixion into execution when the police came upon the scene just in time to prevent the murder. There are some kinds of fanaticism that are annoying but not dangerous; but the kind that crazed the company at Lodz was blasphemous and demoniacal. Christ makes special reference to such pretenders:

Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many. (Matt. 24: 4, 5.)

Labor War in Lawrence

It was to be hoped that the strike riots at Lawrence, Mass., would have been amicably settled by this time. But the situation has become more intense. Street cars are smashed and property is destroyed. The latest clash between the strikers and those acting as their substitutes and the police and military resulted in the death of two persons and the wounding of others. Governor Foss, though firm in his determination to furnish protection to the mill owners in operation, recently proposed the following compromise: "I request all workers to go back and resume their places in the mills for a period of thirty days, pending the efforts which I shall make to get all the differences adjusted. In view of the fact that no notice was given to the mill operatives of a proposed reduction in wages when the change of hours went into effect on January 1, I request all mill operators to give fifty-six hours' pay for fifty-four hours' work during that period without discrimination. I believe the differences are such as to be easily adjusted if carefully discussed during the next thirty days, and I promise you my best efforts to bring all questions in dispute to a settlement satisfactory to all parties." The two weeks of terrible cold weather and idleness have been hard on the workingmen, and there must be suffering among the thousands of the wage earners if the war shall continue. It cannot be that the mill-owners can do anything but lose money The situation, however, at present is very grave. If the Governor shall be successful in his overtures he may realize the beauty of his mission as described by the Master:

Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. (Matt. 5: 9.)

Reward After Nineteen Years

On August 23, 1893, at three o'clock in the morning. the schooner Lottie B., of St. John, N. B., in charge of Captain McCarom, went aground on the rocks south of Thatcher's Island. Soon after the schooner struck, the captain and one of the crew put out in a rowboat to Rockport for a towboat to haul the vessel off. Elliott C. Hadley, who was first assistant keeper of the lighthouse at Baker's Island, and A. C. Whitten, the second assistant, were on duty attending the lights when the wreck occurred, and seeing the rough sea rolling over the vessel, and knowing there were persons aboard, launched their small dory and hurried to the rescue. In a fearful battle with the storm they succeeded in saving all on board. In recognition of the heroism of these men the Canadian Government voted each a beautiful silver watch with appropriate sentiment engraved upon it. By a rule of the United States Government the men were not allowed to receive the gifts. The Senate recently passed an act permitting these presents to be given. Whitten has gone to his reward and his widow received the watch in place of her husband, and Hadley, who is living, accepted his. A certain amount of red tape is necessary, but too much of it is a hindrance. Sometimes it binds certain benevolent institutions so tightly as to check rather than unseal the fountains of mercy and love. Nineteen years was a long time for the present of a sister country to reach two of our heroes. The foot of justice is sometimes slow, but it is sure of its destination, and its road stretches out far beyond the paths that end with the tomb. Many of the rewards of virtue will be found in the other life. The tendency in this life, however, is for virtue to secure a reward, and vice to suffer a penalty. Boaz expresses the thought beautifully:

King George's Elephant Train Fording a River En Route to the Jungle Hunting-Grounds

Photos Copyright American Press

King George Firing at a Charging Rhinoceros

The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust. (Ruth 2: 12.)

Judge Commends Sunday School

It would be hard to find a stronger tribute to the value of the Sunday School as a deterrent of crime than in the statement of a Brooklyn judge. In sentencing George H. Latt, a young man of nineteen, to a term in Elmira for burglary, Judge Fawcett said: "Of all the undesirable professions that of burglary is the worst. No matter how good a burglar you may be, you will be caught and sent to prison sooner or later. I have seen your friends who wished to speak to me about you, and I find that all attempts to have you go to Sunday School have failed. In the five years I have been sitting on this bench I have had two thousand seven hundred boys before me for sentence, and not one of them was an attendant of a Sunday School. Had you gone there I am sure you would not be before me to-day." Every pastor and Sunday School officer and teacher should take notice of this testimony of Judge Fawcett and give it wide publicity, and every boy, including the larger ones, should renew his loyalty to this indispensable department of the work of the church. The Sunday School and church are to make good men and women and citizens in this world, as well as to prepare the soul for the services and enjoyment of another life. Let those who are discouraged at the slow progress of the church look at the glorious work of the Sunday School as a civilizer and savior. Let them read again the testimony of a most credible witness to the value of the Sunday School to save from sin and ruin. The judge verified the truth of the good Book:

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it. (Prov. 22: 6.)

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

A. S. A., Woonsocket, R. I. 1. Are those unfortunate murdered victims lost, because they are given no time before death for repentance, while their murderers ascend to heaven or salvation, having had ample time for repentance and in which to make peace with God? 2. Do parents in heaven mourn over their children who die unrepentant?

1. Any answer to this question would be mere conjecture. God alone is the judge of the hearts of men. We can safely trust not only in his justice, but in his infinite goodness and mercy. 2. Several passages in Scripture clearly point to the conclusion that our loved ones who have gone before us may be concerned about our spiritual condition here. Paul speaks of the "cloud of witnesses," who are watching our struggle. (Heb. 12: 1.) See also Rev. 6: 9, 10. There is nothing about mourning, however. The concern is not mingled with sorrow, though it may find expression in rejoicing (Luke 15: 10).

Enquirer, Redlands, Calif. Please explain James 5: 15.

Healing through prayer and anointing was a gift specially conferred upon the early apostolic church, and which some churches hold to have been transmitted to the present time. It should be noted that the writer does not say that the oil will save; it is merely a symbol. The healing here mentioned in the first clause of the verse is of the body; the second clause implies that the prayer of faith for one who has sinned will bring forgiveness. The same connection of sin and sickness is employed in Isa. 33: 24; Matt. 9: 2-5, and John 5: 14. See also Ps. 103: 3. The application is found in the next verse, which speaks of repentant confession. The oldest versions of this passage read, "Therefore, confess your faults one to another," showing that it must be a precedent condition. This does not justify what is known as the confessional, however, in the sense in which it is employed in the Church of Rome. There, all confessions must be made to the priests. Confession, in the apostolic sense, may be made to any one who is godly and who can pray. It is to be an open confession and not one whispered into the ear of a priest.

Mrs. C. M. H., Saville, Pa. What color should a burial robe be?

A man is usually dressed in his best suit. Dress-suit fronts are to be obtained from undertakers, if desired. Young girls are usually dressed in white. Older women may be dressed in black, white or gray. Children generally in white.

Mrs. J. B. H., Chesterville, Ont., Can. Please explain Heb. 7: 3.

The reference to Melchisedec's ancestry here is one that many find confusing. "Without father, without mother, without descent," etc., means that his genealogy is obscure and unknown and that history contains no record of his birth, achievements or end of life. Yet he was made like unto the Son of God in his typical priesthood. Melchisedec, the patriarch-priest, was the highest and enduring representative of the Abrahamic covenant. So great was Melchisedec and so strongly did his mysterious personality lay hold of the mind of the early Christian Church that Origen pronounced him an angel, while others thought him Shem, the son of Noah, or Enoch, or the incarnation of the Divine Word.

J. J. B., Ladd, O. 1. Who are the witnesses spoken of in Heb. 12: 1? 2. In I. John 5: 8, does the water spoken of mean water baptism? 3. Please explain I. John 4: 2, 3.

1. The image employed here is that of a race in the arena, the surrounding "witnesses" corresponding to those spectators who watch the competitors for the prize in a worldly contest (see Phil. 3: 14). But the writer is describing a spiritual contest watched by a cloud of spiritual witnesses who themselves, while on earth, have been through a similar struggle, and the knowledge of whose presence as spectators of our battle should increase our earnestness, our faith and our determination. 2. The water of baptism is obviously referred to in verse 8. It is a circumstance noted by commentators that these passages, in their present form, are not to be found in the earliest manuscripts and portions of them at least were first written as marginalia to complete the sense of the text, and not adopted into the text until the eighth century. 3. In this chapter the apostle was discussing tests of false prophets. Verses two and three give a plain rule for such a test. However holy our teachers may seem, they are not to be accepted without our testing. In II. John 7, he further speaks of spiritual deceivers and their ways. Even at that early date, there were false and misleading teachers, against whom it was necessary to warn the believers lest they should be led aside into error.

G. N. B., Angola, Ind. Please explain James 2: 10.

It is on the principle (maintained by the Jewish rabbis) that the law is one seamless garment and if you rend a part you destroy the integrity and perfection of the whole. It is as though one discord spoiled an entire harmony, one broken link ruined the chain. The law is a whole, and by breaking any part you break its wholeness, though you may not have broken the whole law. God requires perfect, not partial, obedience, and we are not to choose parts of the law to keep and parts that we may break.

J. C. A., Lambton's Mills, Ont. Was there a dispute between the United States and France during the last century, which was settled by arbitration, and who was the American representative at the court provided?

This question was referred to Mr. William H. Short, secretary of the New York Peace Society, who replies as follows: "A convention was signed January 15, 1880, by Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State, on the part of the United States, and by M. Outrey, the French minister at Washington, on the part of France, "for the adjustment of the claims of French citizens against the United States, growing out of the Civil War in the United States; and of the citizens of the United States against France arising during the 'late war between France and Mexico' and the Franco-German war and the insurrection of the communes." The commission was to consist of three members: one to be appointed by the United States, one by France and the third by the Emperor of Brazil. Mr. Asa O. Aldis was duly appointed to represent the United States, M. L. de Geofroy to represent France (afterwards succeeded by M. A. A. Lefaivre), and the Baron de Arinos was appointed by the Emperor of Brazil to serve as president of the commission. The commission convened at the Department of State in Washington on December 1, 1880, and continued its sessions until March 31, 1884, at which date it completed its labors. The final award provided that the United States should pay to the government of France $625,566.35 and the government of France should pay the United States $2,731.82, these sums to be used for paying the several awards made by the commission to the citizens of the respective governments."

S. R., Hertford, N. C. Will you kindly tell what St. Valentine's Day signifies?

Long ago it was the custom in England, Scotland and some parts of France for young unmarried people to meet on the eve of St. Valentine's Day, February 14, and put their names on small bits of paper, which were thrown into a receptacle of some sort and drawn out one by one. Each person became the "valentine" of the person of the opposite sex who had drawn his or her name. This custom seems to be related to a similar practise among the early Romans, connected with the Lupercalia, a feast celebrated in February. As this custom was abandoned among the English the practise grew of sending love missives on that day. The wretched habit of sending insulting caricatures and messages is a modern innovation entirely out of keeping with the spirit of the day. The connection of the merry festivities of this day with St. Valentine may be purely accidental. There were a number of St. Valentines, one of them, a presbyter of the early church, being martyred on February 14, 370 or 371, A.D. This date has been made sacred to his memory, and thus his name has been connected with the festivities occurring then.

Mrs. H. A. M., El Portal, Calif. The question has been asked me by a friend, "What has become of the souls of the heathen who have died without the knowledge of the true God? Were they and are they lost, who have had no chance of knowing anything of this 'Gospel of the Kingdom'?"

Were we able to answer such questions, we would be wise indeed. The greatest minds in religion and philosophy have discussed the fate of the unevangelized heathen. Justin Martyr and Clement held that they were called justified and saved by their philosophy and their virtuous lives under natural law. Zwingle contended that the heathen who had never been evangelized would be forgiven through the merits of Christ, although they had never heard of him. Christ himself said (Matt. 11: 20-24) that the wicked but ignorant people of ancient Sodom and Gomorrah (who lived long before the Gospel age) would be more tolerantly dealt with than those who had heard the Gospel and rejected it. Paul (Rom. 2: 14, 26, 27) shows that those not having either the law or the Gospel "may be a law unto themselves." We cannot therefore assert that the heathen who died in ignorance of Christ are beyond the reach of the Divine mercy, although we may not know in what form that mercy may be extended. In every age and every land God had his witnesses in the person of good men and women, whose upright lives, even under natural law, were a blessing to those around them. Who shall say that such are not acceptable to him? (See Acts 10: 35.) The whole question of heathen salvation is one concerning which no one has a right to dogmatize. It should be left in God's hands.

M. F., Decatur, Ia. I am a professing Christian and I hope a true believer, yet the thought of the hereafter is always with me. Do I do wrong in encouraging this thought? It is not that I do not trust; yet I find the thought an ever-present dread and an apprehension.

You should pray for more faith and keep the fact constantly in mind that He who has promised cannot lie. Professor David Smith expresses this attitude very clearly and convincingly. He says: "If we were truly Christian, we would be less concerned about this question of the hereafter, for we would have a larger and braver trust in God. There is nothing more calming than recognition of the fact that it is not God that damns, but sin. God is our Saviour, and his thoughts towards every creature of his hand are thoughts of good, and not of evil. If any perish, it is in spite of him. He is the Father of us all; and when I think what has been shown us of his heart by his eternal Son, our Brother and Lord, Jesus Christ, I am not afraid of anything that he may do, and I am well content to leave my future in his hands. He will do for every child of his undying affection the best that love can devise. Why should we fret or fear? God knows, and he is our Father."

Breakneck Mt. Storm King Mt.

Diagram of the Great Water Tunnel Under the Hudson River

WHEN, on January 30, Mayor Gaynor of New York City pressed a button sending the electric current to fire a blast that demolished an eighteen-foot wall of granite under the bed of the Hudson River, between Breakneck Mountain on the east bank and Storm King on the west, New York felt that it was one step nearer the possession of an adequate water supply and that one of the greatest of engineering feats had been accomplished. That New York may no longer hear the hated warnings of a water famine when her midsummer need is worst, the city is building in the Catskill Mountains, ninety miles away, a lake some twelve by five miles in size, to be called the Ashokan Reservoir. From this immense reservoir eighty odd miles of tunnel will carry the needed water to the city. It is in connection with this wonderful tunnel that the "syphon"—as it is called—was built under the bed of the Hudson. Vertical shafts were sunk 1,100 feet on each side of the river and from their bases the excavation of the transverse section was carried on. After the final wall of rock was down, it was announced that the floor levels of the two bores had met within a fraction of an inch and that the side lines of the walls were but three-sixteenths of an inch apart. In a little speech, which the mayor made to the assembled engineers and guests at a point under the bed of the river, nearly midway between the two great shafts, he said: "After I was elected, but before I took office, a delegation headed by an engineer of repute waited on me. They declared it to be a demonstrated fact that no aqueduct could be built under the Hudson and that, therefore, no Catskill water could be obtained for New York. I told them that if we could not get it under the river we would get it over. We are here to-day to see the tunnel under the river completed. It is one of the greatest feats in history. Frontinus is the historian of the Roman waterworks, and ours also will have its historians. The cross sections of this aqueduct are seventeen feet. The largest of any Roman aqueduct, so far as I remember, were five by three feet. I say that for the benefit of those who are always contending that past ages were better than the present."

Miscellaneous

Reader, Butler, Pa. See the restoration of the Jews discussed in THE MAIL-BAG of January 10.

Reader, Wooster, O. You will find the hymn "Nearer, my God, to thee," in almost all church hymnals.

S. R. D., Minnesota. History gives the correct version of his death, which is an undisputable fact.

T. T. G., Lawrence, Kan. Your argument is sophistical. No defense or justification of suicide can be found in the Bible.

H. N., Pontotoc, Miss. The passages you mention, referring to (1) the right of women to speak or their duty to keep silence in the churches, and (2) the possibility of living without sin, have been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG in recent issues.

Mr. J. B. G., Wilton, Me., sends this letter with a coin inclosed: "When I was a child, my parents let me cut my teeth on a fifty-cent piece. It has now done service in three generations. Now I wish to put it to some better use, so I send it to you for the Chinese orphans. I know it is not worth the full fifty cents, as it has a hole in it, but it is worth something. I wish it could be as many dollars as it is cents." His gift will be added to our China Famine Orphan Fund, and will help to supply food and shelter for one of the seven hundred little waifs who are unprovided for.

C. J. Z., Canby, Calif. 1. The number 144,000 is symbolical and represents the body of the faithful who shall resist the seductions of Antichrist. See Rev. 7: 14; 14: 1; 14: 3, in which the same number is repeated. Twelve is the number of the tribes of Israel, and appropriate to the church; and this, multiplied by itself, symbolizes stability and completeness, which is again multiplied a thousandfold. Throughout Revelation all the numbers are accepted as symbolical. 2. Pork was unclean under the Mosaic law. 3. Works of necessity and mercy are justifiable on the Lord's Day. If it is necessary that you yourself should eat, it is equally necessary that your horses and cattle should do so.

EMILEEN

A STORY BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL

EMILEEN stole another glance across-aisle at the Boy. The Boy was looking at her. He had a friendly smile and little white irregular teeth like blocks of white houses, some three-story and some just two. Emileen noticed one little white house only one story high, but probably that house would grow! She smiled to herself at the funny thought and the Boy thought she was smiling back at him. He sat up straighter and looked back and forth from the empty chair beside him to Emileen. She had distinctly the sense of being invited.

Mother was asleep again with her eyes wide open; it was a kind of sleep, Emileen thought, but there could be no pleasant dreams connected with it, for Mother's open eyes were full of a listless dreariness. And Emileen had expected she and Mother would have such a beautiful, beautiful time!

"Come on over." The Boy across the aisle had said it distinctly. Did one have to wait for more of an invitation than that? Emileen, with another hasty glance at Mother, slipped down and across.

"What made you come so quick?" laughed the Boy, the little blocks of white houses all in view. "I never saw such a quick person!"

"Why didn't you come across to my house?" flashed Emileen.

"You never invited me!"

They were already acquainted. The lurch of the train around a curve jolted them together amicably. It was then that Emileen noticed the little crutch beside the Boy; the discovery startled her.

"Oh!" she breathed.

"'Twarn't either!" The Boy's voice was hot with a cruel mortification that had the effect of being always just below his little surface ready to prick through. "'Twarn't either why I wanted you to come, 'stead o' my going! Huh! Once I walked a mile! I guess if you could see me walk—" But he did not get up to show her. Whether by his help or not, the little crutch clattered to the floor and mercifully hid itself.

It was Emily who started in again after a brief and uncomfortable silence. There were two color spots on the soft white of Emileen's cheeks.

"What is your name? Mine's Emileen Worth—Emileen for long! Honest-true, it's Emily!"

"Honest-true, mine is Stephen Griffith Renney—for long. I haven't any silly pet name."

"I prefer to be called Emileen," she affirmed stoutly. "My father named me that."

"Well, my father called me Stephen-Griffith, but he won't any longer."

"Oh, I'm sorry."

"He ain't either dead! He's just as alive as yours is, but he's going to stop being my father."

Emileen's startled gaze rested upon the Boy's calm face. What was this unheard-of thing he was saying? He was keeping right on saying unheard-of things:

"That's why me and my mother are riding on this train. What are you and your mother here for?" He leaned over suddenly and whispered a word in Emileen's ear: "You aren't going to that place, are you? Because if you are—You are? Then you needn't think your father will call you silly pet names much longer." The Boy's laugh was elfish and shrill; he seemed to be curiously gleeful that Emily was going where he was.

"He will, too—he'll always call me Emileen."

"Not if he stops being your father, will he? Well—and he's going to stop, isn't he? Of course he is!"

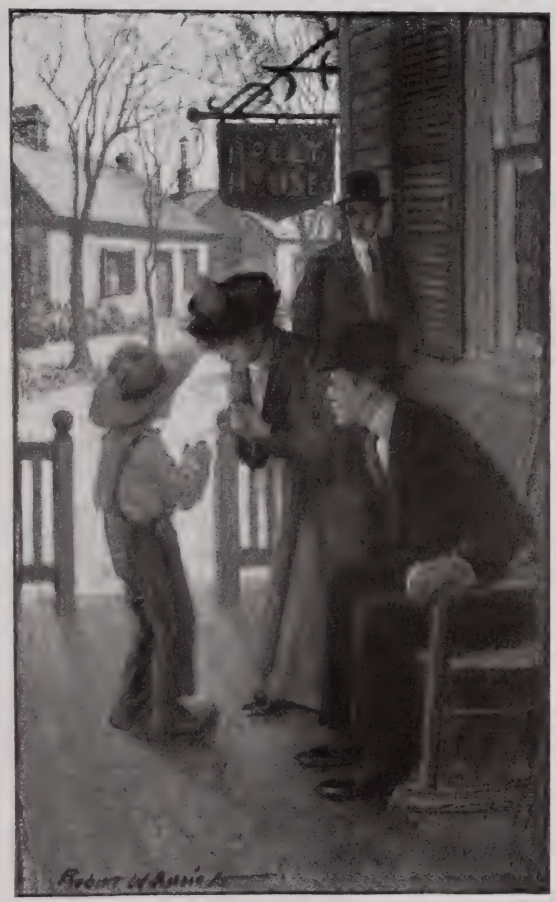
"He can't stop," Emileen cried, divided between pain and wrath. "Mother and I are married to him."

"Huh! So's me and my mother married to my father, but we aren't going to stay married any longer. We've got sick of it. That's why we're going to—" He got no further, for Emileen was on her feet. Her face was red with the blood that boiled in her little veins. Horror sat behind the wide little windows of her eyes.

"I'm going back to my mother," she enunciated clearly. "You needn't tell me—I don't care why you're going to anywhere!"

"You wait!" The Boy clutched at her sleeve. He was taking his turn now at childish wrath. "Don't you dass to go a step till I get through talking! You needn't go and be impolite. You 'n' your mother are going to get one, too, aren't you? Well—"

"Get one—what?" demanded Emileen, breathlessly. But the word when it came meant nothing tangible to her that the groping little fingers of her mind could clutch at. It was a mystery word that only succeeded in some strange, uncanny way in frightening her. She had never conceived of so dreadful-sounding a word, but her soul rose in revolt at any personal application in it. The mystery-word had nothing to do with her and Mother—they were not going to get one!



"'Be you her paw and maw?' he demanded. . . . 'Because if you be, come along o' me'"

"You must be a stupidy," went on the Boy with a sharp little face of scorn—the Boy himself had an appearance of awful wisdom—"not to know what you were going for! I found out fast enough—didn't anybody have to tell me!"

"There don't anybody have to tell me," Emileen returned slowly; slowness was imperative, for a tumult of sobs fought in her throat to get ahead of words. "I never invited anybody to tell me. I'm going back to my mother. I'm sorry I came." The sentences came, difficult and short. "I don't like to hear you talk. We're not going to get one either! I don't care what it is! If you wasn't lame I'd hate you!"

Back in her chair across the aisle she curled into a heap and set about the task of untangling her thoughts. It seemed a hopeless task; she wished Father were here to help her. Father—oh, it was about him! The tangles were Father-tangles. She and Mother were going farther and farther away from him every minute—why were they going away from Father? Was it on some terrible errand, as the Boy had hinted? Could Fathers ever stop being fathers?

Emileen slowly turned her chair till she could see Mother plainly. Mother smiled at her and went on sleeping with wide-open eyes. The smile did not comfort Emileen.

Was it possible Father could stop calling her Emileen?

Things came back to her in the shape of little pricking memories. They were Father memories. Of how she had found him sitting on the edge of her bed sometimes when she woke up suddenly. Of how she had never found Father and Mother both there—only one of them at one time and the other at another time—of how they had seemed to love her separately. Emileen had always, in some way-in place in her, understood that Mother was not to know of the time Father sat on the bed. She had instinctively refrained from telling Father about the Mother times. She knew suddenly, now, this minute, that she had loved Father and Mother separately.

Could Mothers and their little girls ever unmarry Fathers?

Once she had asked Mother where they were going and would Father come, too, on holidays? What if she asked Mother again now? If she said: "Why didn't we bring Father?" She looked again at Mother, lying back in her chair, and Mother smiled again.

Emileen had a curious, sad little sense of the machineriness of the smile, as if Mother pressed a button to make it come. What did that word the Boy had said mean? What were he and his mother going to the place ahead to get and she and her mother not going to get?

They were not! They were not! They would not get one, even if it were offered right straight to them—on a gold plate! They would not take anything that Father could not have too.

Could Fathers ever stop being Fathers?

Emileen was beginning at the beginning again. She had been round the dreary, weary circle. The apple the Boy had plucked for her from the Tree of Knowledge she found hard and green; she could never put it back on the tree. It would ripen in her hands.

Could Mothers and Emileens stop staying married to Fathers?

"Mother!" Emileen advanced a timid hand to the fold of soft silk nearest her. It required two tugs. "Mother, let's get out."

"What is it, Emily? What did you say?"

"Let's get out right now."

"Out? Out where? Do you mean off the train?" Mother was distinctly doing her best to be interested.

"Yes, I mean! Let's go back to Father—don't you want to, Mother?" The child's eager face was full of her own wanting. But Mother's face—

"Emily!" It was a sharp little cry of protest. Then it seemed that Mother marshaled her forces of self-restraint. She achieved a smile for Emileen. "You are bored, dear, so soon?" she said. "With such a lot to look at out of the window! Why don't you count things? —telegraph poles, cows, houses? I used to, way up to hundreds."

Emileen's gaze wandered sidewise to the window. "What'll I do when I get a hundred cows?" she questioned idly. "I shan't see 'em all at once."

"Then why don't you—why don't you go over and talk to that little boy. You could play Who Counts Most Things. When I was little—"

"I've been over. We didn't count anything, though." Emileen's slight little body shuddered, but Mother was not noticing slight little bodies. She was already drifting back into her waking slumber.

"I'll go again," Emileen decided suddenly. She would ask the Boy to say that word once more—perhaps she would ask him to spell it. Spelling things helped quite a lot. She would ask the Boy what it meant. He seemed to Emileen to be a

Continued on next page

There is Real Beauty in Spring's New Styles

TO BE stylish is to be beautiful this Spring, because Spring's new styles are truly beautiful.

And who would not wish to be at once both beautiful and stylish?

The possibilities of stylishness and personal attractiveness has been summed up in the new "NATIONAL" Style Book. Every new fashion in every kind of apparel is beautifully pictured for you.

So to know what is new and desirable, to learn what among Spring's new fashions is most suitable and becoming for you---you need only to secure the free copy of the "NATIONAL" Style Book we are holding for you.

We are Holding One "NATIONAL" Style Book For You

Above we picture one of a thousand new styles your "NATIONAL" Style Book shows. But from cover to cover it is filled with beauty---filled with the new fashions in every kind of apparel. It shows:

Waists	$ .98 to 6.98
Skirts	1.49 to 9.98
Lingerie and Wash Dresses	2.98 to 15.98
Silk Dresses	7.98 to 17.98
Ready-Made Suits	10.98 to 17.98
Petticoats	.59 to 5.98
Lingerie and Wash Dresses for Misses and Small Women	2.98 to 8.98
Silk Dresses for Misses and Small Women	7.98 to 11.98
Coats for Misses and Small Women	7.98 to 10.98
Suits for Misses and Small Women	9.98 to 15.98
Junior Dresses and Coats	1.98 to 9.98
Children's Dresses and Coats	1.25 to 4.98
Infants' Wear	.35 to 3.49
Boys' and Young Men's Clothing	1.49 to 16.98

MADE-TO-MEASURE

Tailored Suits
$12.50 to $30.00

Samples of materials used are sent gladly, but only when asked for, and they are well worth asking for

Be sure to Write for this Book Today

200 Pages of Newest Fashions

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and expressage on all our goods to any part of the world. Every "NATIONAL" Garment has the "NATIONAL" Guarantee Tag attached. This tag says that you may return any garment not satisfactory to you and we will refund your money and pay express charges both ways.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,
218 West 24th St., New York City

EMILEEN

Continued from preceding page

very wise boy. When she was perfectly sure exactly what it meant—she would find out what it meant, anyway.

The lure of the Forbidden Tree drew her strongly. The tiny nibble she had taken of her apple, though green, had whetted the appetite of the woman-child.

"Huh, I knew you'd come back!" caroled the man-child. His peaked little face was sharp with knowledge of things. He longed to impart it.

At the end of the lesson Emileen crept back, a strangely stricken little creature. She had the sense of walking a long way back.

The Boy had been a good teacher. Emileen, listening—biting feverishly into her hard little apple—had found out what the Word meant. She knew now exactly. She knew many dreary truths hitherto hidden from her. Emileen was no longer a fair-souled little innocent. Her lesson had explained marryings and unmarryings; Fathers who stopped being Fathers; —what it was she and Mother, the Boy and his mother, were going to the place ahead to get. She could no longer inwardly storm: "We're not! We're not!" for they were going to get one.

The train plunged on over its shining rails, getting nearer to the Place Ahead. Emileen seemed to look far, far behind, down the shining path they had come, and to see Father sitting on the edge of her little abandoned bed—a quite alone, abandoned Father. She looked at Mother with a sad, unchildish tentativeness, as though in some little scale in her soul she were balancing Mother and Father. It was hard to consider them in this new and dual way—the two of them together in one thought. It was harder yet to make decisions when the little soul-scale of her love evenly balanced, Father in one side, Mother in the other; there was no tipping either way of Emileen's balance. But Father—they had left Father—

. . .

To the man who was left came flashing down the wires a startling message: "Emileen missing come at once will wait here have started search."

Without loss of an instant Maurice Worth went to his wife; she was still that, thank God. He found her at the little way-place from which she had sent the dispatch. He found her a white and piteous wife.

"Mary!"

"Maurice! I had to have you!"

"Tell me about Emileen—have you found her?" But he knew she had not. He caught at her hands and shook them in an anguish of entreaty. "Quick! Tell everything, Mary!"

It was but little to tell. The child had been there one moment, and not there the next.

"It seemed one moment," Mary Worth sobbed. It was a tearless, terrible sobbing.

"We stopped at a junction." She named it hurriedly. "She must have got off there, but I—Maurice, I wasn't looking!" I made them stop at this place as soon as I knew. I've come back here nights to wait for you. We've tried so hard, Maurice!" She could not bear the awful sternness of his white face. At its sudden breaking up she uttered a cry. Tenderness —an old, sweet kind that she knew—swept over his face.

"Don't be frightened—we'll hunt together. I could always find things, Mary," he said with a sad little smile. The mother's heart bounded with its leap of relief, but the heart of the wife lay, a heavy thing, in her breast, for she had caught a glimpse of a beautiful lost treasure.

He questioned her intently and she told her paltry little story without stint of pride. They went over the dreary details one by one, searching for the child's motives and hidden little thoughts. This precious thing they had both lost brought them momentarily together again; Emileen, in her blind little way, had achieved at least that.

"She was going back to you, Maurice; I feel certain she was. She—oh, I shall have to tell you! She wanted me to get off the train and go back. She asked me to." For a space of instants man and woman were both silent, not meeting each other's eyes. Then the woman went on breathlessly, as if, in that silent space, she had run far. "There was a little boy, too—across from us. She went over and talked to him—Maurice, I sent her to keep her from talking to me." The woman was determinedly honest, although it was plain that she winced. "Maurice, that little boy told her—things, I know he must have told her! He had a dreadful mother—she told me where she was going—I was so crazy with fear I had to talk to some one—he was a dreadful little boy—Maurice, I'm sure he told her—Emileen had found out." In painful jerks the poor mother brought out the disjointed sentences; it was as though each came bleeding from her lips.

"Don't, Mary!" he cried. He could not bear the humble face of her. He was not used to a humble face.

"I must! I must tell everything that could help us find her." "Us"—their eyes flew together at sound of the little word; it seemed pregnant with significance, the two little letters of it magic letters. They had so long been "I" — "you" — separate beings without magic.

"The dreadful mother and little boy were going—were going with Emileen and me, Maurice," she said slowly, "to the same place. The children talked —I am sure now that Emileen found out. She got off to go back to you. But why can't we find her?"

"We will find her—you and I, Mary. It needed us both."

But it was only after weary and heartrending searching. The child's slim little body appeared to have slipped through some crevice in the world's ken; no one seemed to have seen a lone little Emileen. Again and again they began at the junction where she must have got off the train and followed up hopeless, unpromising "clues." There were no promising, hopeful ones.

Agents hunted for them far and wide, supplementing their own frantic efforts. Days went by. They forgot everything but Emileen—there was only Emileen in their world, and she was not there. They were to each other but Emileen's mother—Emileen's father. As such they clung to each other, drawing upon one another's strength and depleting courage.

"She is so little, Maurice! She is afraid of the dark—you know how we used to hear the sobbing and go up and sit on her little bed—"

He knew—he knew.

"And feel for her little cowardly hand in the dark—it used to be trembling when we found it! You know, Maurice—"

He had felt for it—he knew. The cowardly little hand!

"Maurice, do you—do you ever hear her? Since she went, I mean—making a little sobby noise?"

"I hear her now," he cried. The sight of his awful man grief tore her heart; she had a little moment of forgetting Emileen and remembering him. She longed, with a gnawing pain of longing, for her old privilege of comforting him. But now—not now.

. . .

It was a ragged, clear-eyed youngster who brought them both comfort—a little woods creature, blinking at the wonders of the open. He appeared at the hotel where they were making their temporary headquarters; some one had directed him there.

"Be you her paw and maw?" he demanded with the brevity of one in

Continued on next page

COMPETENT DRESSMAKERS

Make Money

Any capable young woman can be fitted to command a good position and salary as a fashionable modiste, or to conduct a business of her own, with a good income, in her own town or elsewhere at a less cost of time and money than for any other profession open to women by the

COLLEGE OF PARISIAN DRESSMAKING COURSE
TAUGHT BY MAIL AT HOME

Let us tell you how easily and thoroughly you can learn to design, draft, cut, fit and make Tailored Suits, Ladies' and Children's Garments, if you wish for a money-making career. Terms easy, including College diploma.

Write Today for Particulars

COLLEGE OF PARISIAN DRESSMAKING,
Dept. K-2, Mears Bldg., Scranton, Pa.

Stockings— 30 Days' Free Trial

Blankets were supplied the cowboys, as far back as 1800, so processed as to prevent the penetration of the Indian Arrow. Soldiers' uniforms have been processed to stop bullets.

Now comes "Processed Hosiery"— The New Stocking which resists the wear of the foot easily and permanently. The "dual process" makes it "The Stocking of Durability, Comfort and Art," and permits us to sell it on thirty days' free trial and guarantee it for one year.

Postcard brings "The Book of Stockings" describing our styles, the "dual process" and giving the one year guarantee. Order from it by our "Style Numbers" silk, silk lisle, wool or cotton, on thirty days' free trial and thus test at our risk and expense the results of The New Hosiery—"Processed Hosiery."
Sold by mail only.

THE STOCKING STORE
399 Broadway, New York City

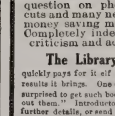
Idle Money Can Earn 5% With Safety

INSTEAD of risking their idle money in speculation, or tying it up for long terms, careful investors in every quarter of the globe place their funds with this company. They can withdraw upon short notice at any time, and are protected by mortgages on the best class of New York and suburban real estate, the strongest security. This company has paid 5% on deposits for nineteen years; this is compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, quarterly or semi-annually, as preferred. Deposits received personally or by mail; the possibility of loss or pass-book is prevented by our mail-certificate plan. Write for booklet.

Assets $2,500,000

Under New York Banking Dept. Supervision.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Building,
Broadway and 42d St., New York



A handsome four volume reference library. Answers every question on photography. Gives valuable short cuts and many new formulae. Describes time and money saving methods. Tells how to get results. Completely indexed, classified. One year's expert criticism and advice free with each set.

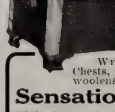
The Library of Amateur Photography quickly pays for it of its material saved, to say nothing of improved results it brings. One owner says—"The books are a wonder. I am surprised to get such books for the money. Couldn't afford to do without them." Introductory sets specially low priced. Write at once for further details, or send $2 and we will send books, charges prepaid, for inspection. Balance, easy terms. (2A)

American Photo Text Book Co., 1325 Adams Ave., Scranton, Pa.

BETTER PICTURES AT HALF THE COST

It's Moth-Proof



Sent on 15 Days' Free Trial

Write for beautiful book on Red Cedar Chests, free. How to save your furs and woolens from moths, mice, damp and dust.

Sensational Direct Offer

Wholesale quotation from factory, free trial, freight prepaid. All particulars sent with book illustrating historic beauty of Piedmont Southern Red Cedar Chests. All free. Write today.

Piedmont Red Cedar Chest Co., Dept. 78, Statesville, N.C.

Factory Prices

Cash or Credit

Why pay the retail price when you can buy your Stove or Furnace straight from the old reliable Kalamazoo Stove Company who Guarantee every stove, give you 400 different styles to choose from and save you $5.00 to $40.00 on the dealer's price?

30 Days FREE TEST

and 360 Days Approval—the only sure-satisfaction way to buy. Money back and freight paid both ways if stove fails to please after this long test.

Factory Price Book

400 Stoves

Get This FREE Book of FACTORY PRICES. You can buy so close you'll get a bigger, better stove than you planned at far less than you expected to spend. Every stove shipped same day order is received. Send for the Factory Price Book, No. 103.

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You" And Gas Stoves Too

SAVE OIL MONEY

Buy the 50c Half Pint Household Size 3-in-One Oil. You'll get just as much oil as if you bought 8 of the 10c size. Why not be economical? 3-in-One keeps indefinitely—never turns rancid. 1000 uses in every home or office.

3-in-One is the best lubricant for locks, clocks, sewing machines, talking machines, guns, reels, etc

Best preparation for cleaning and polishing furniture. Prevents rust on metal surfaces, indoors and out. Library Slip with every bottle.

FREE Write for generous sample. Try 3-in-One at our expense.

3 in One

3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
42 C.H. Broadway, New York

Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, Blankets

FROM THE MILL — 33⅓ % SAVED

Buy from the manufacturers and save dealers' profits. 25,000 satisfied customers. Well-known Regal Rugs, 6x9, reversible, all-wool finish, $3.75. Brussels Rugs, 9x12, greatest value known, $3.60. Splendid grade Brussels Rug, 9x12, $8.75. Famous Invincible Velvets, 9x12, $16. Standard Axminsters, 9x12, $16 up. Best quality Lace Curtains, 45c per pair and up. Tapestry Curtains, Wilton Rugs, Linoleum and Furniture at mill and factory prices. Write to-day for our New Illustrated Catalog, No. 18, showing designs in actual colors. SENT FREE.

UNITED MILLS MFG. CO., 1430-32 JASPER ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA

WE PAY FREIGHT

HOW TO GET BETTER LIGHT From KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Recent test by Prof. Rogers, Lewis Institute, Chicago, and Prof. Mckergow, McGill University Montreal on leading oil burning lamps show the Aladdin Mantle Lamp is the most economical and gives over twice as much light as the Rayo and other lamps tested. It is odorless, safe, clean, noiseless. Better light than gas or electric. Every Aladdin Lamp fully guaranteed and protected by patents in nearly every country on earth. Our burners fit your old lamps. To introduce the Aladdin, we will give in each neighborhood. Send postal with name and address, ask for cat-alogue M. AGENTS Balled over 1000 on money back guarantee, not one returned. Broner sold 3000 in 15 days. Ask for liberal agency proposition. Sample lamp furnished.

ONE LAMP or BURNER FREE

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 104 Aladdin Building, Chicago, Ill.

This Jacket Keeps You Warm, In All Weather

Closely woven; won't easily snag. Just the garment for automobilists and for men who work out of doors in cold weather. Comfortable, durable.

PARKER'S Arctic Jackets

Registered in U.S. Patent Office

Made of a closely woven, knitted fabric, lined with thick cozy wool fleece. Snap fasteners. Riveted pockets. Ask your dealer or send postpaid on receipt of $2.75.

JOHN H. PARKER CO., Dept. C
25 James Street, Malden, Mass.

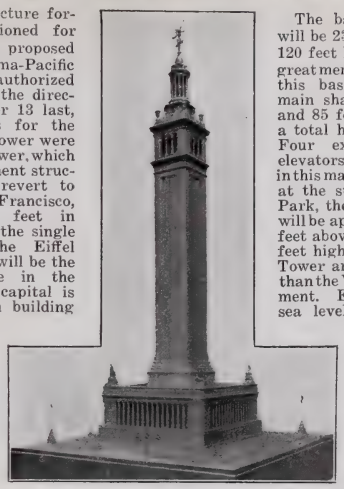
Does Your Granite Dish or Hot Water Bag Leak? Don't Throw it Away

MENDETS

Mend all leaks instantly in graniteware, hot water bags, tin, copper, cooking utensils, etc. No heat, solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them. Binds any surface, smooth. Sample box, 10c. Complete box, assorted sizes, 25c, postpaid. Wonderful opportunity for live agents. Write today. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 122 Amsterdam, N.Y.

A Skyscraper for San Francisco

THE first structure formally sanctioned for erection on the proposed site of the Panama-Pacific Exposition was authorized at a meeting of the directors on December 13 last, when the plans for the great memorial tower were endorsed. This tower, which is to be a permanent structure that will revert to the city of San Francisco, is to be 850 feet in height and, with the single exception of the Eiffel Tower in Paris, will be the tallest structure in the world. Private capital is to be utilized in building the tower, which will cost not less than $1,500,000 and will be one of the main architectural features of the exposition. In all probability it will be erected at the summit of Lincoln Park, although the site has not been chosen. It will be of steel frame construction with outer walls of marble or terra cotta. Some of the most eminent engineers of the country have passed upon the practicability of the plans and furnished estimates of cost.



The Proposed Panama-Pacific Tower

The base of the tower will be 232 feet square and 120 feet high, containing a great memorial hall. From this base will arise the main shaft, 730 feet high and 85 feet square, giving a total height of 850 feet. Four express passenger elevators will be enclosed in this main shaft. If erected at the summit of Lincoln Park, the top of the tower will be approximately 1,300 feet above sea level, or 316 feet higher than the Eiffel Tower and 745 feet higher than the Washington monument. Even if erected at sea level, the tower will overtop any structure in the world except the Eiffel Tower. It is intended to utilize the tower for a meteorological observatory and wireless station and to install a powerful light, which, under favorable conditions of weather, will be visible 100 miles out at sea. The base of the tower will be surmounted by four groups of statuary and will be surrounded by a frieze depicting the development of the North American continent.

EMILEEN

Continued from preceding page

great haste. "Because if you be, come along o' me, an' if you bain't, I gotter go an' find 'em. I'm in a hurry."

"Yes, yes," they cried. Anything to hold him. He seemed a quaint spirit-creature but come to torture them with hopeless hopes. They were only dreaming him there before them.

"Whoo—oo!" A sound like a wood-bird note. "I'm glad you be! I've wore my feet offer me, trompin'! Come along—Maw got her. We be'n dosin' her, pore little skite! Maw's a power for dosin'. But the little skite'd 'a' died if she hadn't come up ag'inst our cabin—be'n out two nights runnin'. Come on!"

He was footsore and weak, but tramped on before them splendidly. It developed as they eagerly prodded him that he himself had "been out" two nights, but made little of the fact. He had traveled many miles in his search for the Little Skite's Paw and Maw, but had evidently entertained no thought of giving up.

"Maw said to keep right on. There weren't nobody but me to send. 'You ask everybody you see if they've not lost a little tyke,' she says to me, an' I be'n askin' ever since. I follered the wood-road out to the Clearin' an' jes' kind o' kep' on an' on. Then somebody said to come here an' find you." So he had found them, and the end of their search was in sight at last.

Emileen—a spent and fevered little "tyke"—had been, it seemed, "out o' her head," and unable to give them any assistance as to her identity. The good mother woman of the woods had not dared, in her genuine alarm, to wait for the child's brain to clear. She had sent the boy on his wild little hunt with the simple faith of her kind. He would bring the Little Tyke's folks back with him.

He brought them. Maurice Worth had hired a conveyance to take them all as far as possible into the woods; a doctor went with them. It was a journey of sweet, clean odors, of the sense of elemental innocence in the soul of life—in the crowded silent woods and their shy denizens. Mingled joy and anxiety strove in the Father's and Mother's breasts, but they rode side by side in a sort of soft ecstasy. It was as if they rode not to little Emileen alone, but to something else restored with her to them.

A matter of a few days later the three of them sat arow in the big chairs of a Pullman. Emileen's pale little face was joyous; she sat between the other two as if to prevent another running-away.

"I had to walk," she had been explaining for the hundredth time, "because I went an' didn't take my purse! But I didn't suppose I'd walk right into a woods an' go an' get lost! You'd 'a' called me Stupidy, Father. You may now if you want to."

"Stupidy," he called her, "Little Stupidy!" But his deep voice made it a beautiful tender name.

"Now you can, Mother," Emileen trilled. Suddenly she sat up straight in her chair, her eyes on the outer world beyond her window. Emileen caught familiar landmarks; the train was drawing into a big friendly trainshed. She was acquainted with this place.

"Why, we're going the other way! We've turned around, Mother!" Emileen exclaimed. She turned back to the inside landscape. Her eager glance went from dear face to dear face. She was suddenly aware of beautiful things—that she was loving Father and Mother together; that Father had not stopped being Father; that they were all going home.

"Nothing has stopped," thought Emileen in the happy corner of her little soul. But she could not know that something had begun again.

"BEST AND COMPLETEST OF ITS KIND"

I am just in receipt, through my daughter, of a copy of The Christian Herald Almanac. A glance so favorably impressed me that I went entirely through it before laying it down. I think it is the completest and most useful of its kind I have ever seen in so small a compass. I congratulate you on your ability to condense so much of valuable matter in so small a compass.

H. P. DAVIDSON.

Northwestern Military Academy, Highland Park, Ill.

Write for Book 144 Pages and Samples Free

Know the facts before you buy a mattress—or you may get a mattress of mere "claims" instead of life-long comfort. This difference means much to health, therefore write at once for our big book telling all about mattresses.

OSTERMOOR

The Mattress that is Built—not Stuffed $15.

is built of 4000 layers of downy cotton, interwoven by a patented process. Sanitary, lump-proof—record of half a century of service in America's best homes. Read what users say—in the book. Write for it now, and by all means don't buy until you know the Ostermoor.

Mattress 4 ft. 6 in. wide by 6 ft. 3 in. long, weighing 45 lbs., shipped express prepaid, on 30 nights' free trial, same day we get your order. Money back if you want it.

OSTERMOOR & COMPANY
115 Elizabeth Street, New York
Canadian Agency: Alaska Feather & Down Co., Ltd., Montreal

"I Don't Dread Sweeping Day Any More since I have a

CYCLONE VACUUM CLEANER

It works so easy and does such good work—even the children want to help."

It is so powerful that it gets all the dirt even from underneath the rugs and carpets, and is ideal for cleaning draperies, furniture, etc.

The Cyclone works with a natural swaying of the body—you don't get tired using it.

$10 will bring a Cyclone to your home and then $5 a month until you have paid $30. Or $25 with your order pays for it in full, delivered, and guaranteed to please.

Let us tell YOU more about it.

CHAS. W. EMERY, 2034 No. 13th Street, Philadelphia

Paper your rooms at ⅓ usual cost

Buy your wall paper at factory prices and hang it yourself. Our free instruction book tells how any man or woman can easily do this, and have bright, attractively papered rooms at very small cost.

Send to-day for free instructions and new Spring sample book showing many beautiful and artistic designs.

Penn Wall-Paper Mills, Dept. 15, Philadelphia

CHALLENGE Brand WATERPROOF COLLARS & CUFFS

REAL MONEY SAVERS

Entirely different from the ordinary waterproof collar in style and appearance. You can't tell them from linen. Collars 25c—Cuffs 50c. At dealer's—Style Book Free.

The Arlington Co.
Established 1883. 725 Broadway, N.Y.

NULITE PORTABLE PARLOR LAMP

The cheapest, best and most beautiful light obtainable for town or country. Makes and burns its own gas; 300 C.P., 5 hours for one cent. Can be used anywhere with amazing results. Low in price. Thoroughly reliable. Many new and exclusive features. Best proposition of the year for agents. Write today for full details.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
413 South Clinton Street, Chicago

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make of Typewriter. Our "Factory Rebuilt" Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branch stores in leading cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

BUY DIRECT, INGERSOLL'S BEST

MIXED PAINTS

At WHOLESALE PRICES, Delivered FREE, for Houses, Barns, Roofs, all colors, and SAVE Dealers' profits. In use 66 years. Officially Endorsed by the Grange. Low prices will surprise you. Write for Samples.

O. W. INGERSOLL, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

A Delightful "At Home"

DOUBTLESS any one who has a heart either to keep or to give away will welcome an invitation to a Love Feast. And a more delightful "at home" can scarcely be imagined, either for an afternoon or evening, for the party may be as formal or informal as you like.

First choose your guests, then select from the ranks of the world's best lovers those whom you would like to entertain. The list for your choosing is almost endless. A delightful assemblage is Romeo and Juliet, Darby and Joan, Cinderella and the Prince, Jack and Jill, Robert Burns and Highland Mary, Paul and Virginia, Dante and Beatrice, Robin Hood and Maid Marian.

Decorate the invitations with hearts and love-knots and let them read:

The pleasure of your company is requested on St. Valentine's Evening. Please come in the character of Cinderella. You will meet the Prince at the party.

The hour may be indicated by the face of a clock drawn on a heart with hands pointing to the appointed hour. Likewise an invitation must be sent to Juliet, who is promised she will meet Romeo, and so on through the list. The party will be vastly more entertaining if the guests assume as nearly as possible the characters they impersonate. The decorations should be hearts and bright ribbons, and the lights, to be thoroughly romantic, must be waxen candles. Heart-shaped ices and sandwiches can be easily made at home by slicing bread and ordinary brick ice cream with a heart-shaped cookie cutter. A little stew of chicken hearts makes a comical entrée and fruit salad, angel cake, sunshine drops and kisses are simple suggestions to add to the menu.

Forfeits

IT SHOULD be understood that a forfeit must be paid by one speaking upon any other subject than love. If several times during the party lovers change places while the ladies remain seated, there will be no end of a jolly time. If old Joan, for instance, must listen to the fervent and foolish outpourings of Romeo's romantic love, while Jill listens awkwardly to the stately measures of Dante's undying devotion, or Jack pours his vinegar and brown paper woes into sentimental Juliet's ear, the results are irresistibly funny.

Some Delightful Tableaux

IMPROMPTU tableaux may easily follow the "feast." The material at hand is rich and the subjects manifold. "The Proposal," for instance: Pierrot in pantomimic declaration to Highland Mary. "The Rejected Lover": Cinderella turning away from plain Bobbie Burns. "'Twixt Love and Riches": Maid Marian undecided between Cinderella's Prince and Robin Hood; and so on and on, including, of course, tableaux of the real lovers in characteristic positions.

Our Friends, the Birds

EVERY boy and girl with a home and a tree should at this season be doing something special for the birds. It is so easy, and the happy results from a little thoughtfulness are so great.

The birds have not all flown South by any means, And they are like human beings in that they will adapt themselves to circumstances. Remember, the birds will not come if there are cats about. Scatter a little hayseed from the floor of the barn on the bare ground about the yard. Hang some small bits of suet or beef or pork trimmings on the branches of the farthest trees at first. Birds that you never suspected were near will sooner or later surely come and find it. Day by day move the food a little nearer the house, until some bright, glistening winter morning you will have the joyous reward of a flock of lovely, fearless birds feeding at your windows.

Many Will Come

GET things in readiness for the time when myriads of the little feathered folk will be migrating from the South. I remember one season at home we were able to keep around and about the orchard forty-two varieties of birds. We began in the middle of February inviting them to come; we tied small wisps of straw and some horses' hair mixed with silk threads and bits of cotton and lint on the branches of several trees and bushes, we put up a bird-house or two and set drinking-cups and bathtubs here and there. Rough flower-pot saucers with broad edges for the birds to perch on are best to hold the water. A slippery bath will surely frighten a bird away from it. We did not play boisterously in the orchard that spring, nor were the boys allowed to throw stones or use their sling-shots there. And the pet cats, I remember, Shublebabit and Belinda, were sent away on visits. It was a wonderful time in our girlhood at home, that season of the birds in the orchard. I wish that such a beautiful experience might be in the life of every girl. It is so well worth the little extra trouble that it takes.

Birds are not only interesting because they are trustful and beautiful, but they are very useful as well. If you plan to have a flower garden you cannot well afford to do without the birds, for they will destroy many harmful worms and insects and will keep your plants in good condition.

Little People's Corner

REFLECTION

THE little birds are singing
Above their speckled eggs,
The daddy longlegs talks about
His children's lovely legs;

The red cow thinks her little calf
The best that there can be,
And my papa and my mamma
Are very proud of me!

And yet I might have been a bird,
And slept within a nest,
Or been a daddy longlegs
With scarcely any chest;

Or been a little calf or pig,
And grown to beef or ham;
I'm very, very, very glad
That I am what I am!

FRED E. WEATHERLY.

Good-Night

The day is gently sinking to a close;
Fainter and yet more faint the sunlight glows:
Where thou art present darkness cannot be:
Midnight is glorious noon,
O Lord, with thee.

Lovingly and faithfully,

Aunt Ruth

Cozy Corner

Is This

WORTH FIGHTING FOR?

HAVE you ever run across a case where the law steps between a mother and her children?

Many States have such laws. One of the worst of them dates back to the time of Charles the Second. In Tennessee, right now, in this Year of Our Lord 1912, the statutes say that a father can by will leave an unborn child to somebody other than the mother. Somebody, perhaps, who is not even friendly with the mother. A similar law was until lately on the statute-books of South Carolina.

Laws that, in one form or another, allow a father to deprive a mother of her just rights in the children exist in a majority of the States in the Union.

In thirty-two States the father has a paramount legal right to the child, and the mother only a subordinate right, and in many cases, if a widow, she may in specific instances have no rights at all.

THE DELINEATOR

has had a draft made to form the basis of a new law which should be made applicable to every State in the Union. It is short, simple, and direct, but it includes the best points of every law bearing on the subject. By this, mothers everywhere share exactly identical rights in the child with the fathers.

How does this hit you? Does it strike you as worth while?

Does it move you to feel like working, hoping, praying, and even fighting to have this principle embodied in the laws of every State that needs it. If your heart prompts you to do something for the mothers who have suffered for generations under inadequate or unjust laws, get THE DELINEATOR for March and read every word that William Hard has written under the heading

"WITH ALL MY WORLDLY GOODS"

Then do what you can toward interesting your family, your friends, your neighbors, your county, and your State. Get THE DELINEATOR while the impulse is still fresh. GET IT NOW.

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY
NEW YORK

THE NEW CHINA

By Margaret E. Sangster

...D God, whom all the hosts of heaven with eager speed obey,
...God, with whom a thousand years are as a fleeting day,
...sendest us another dawn, the gates of morning lift
...smiting flash of lightning and with rolling thunder drift,
...ancient idols totter, and the age-long slumber breaks,
...while, by pangs of travail rent, a nation
new-born wakes.

...rist, who once in Galilee came walking
o'er the wave,
...rong to still the tumult, be swift to rule and save.
...ith the man who leads the van, be with the hearts that cry,
...rony and weariness, for help from thee,
Most High.
...th thy banner of the Cross, O gracious
Prince of Peace,
...hina's teeming millions find from wo and war surcease.

Let not the Christian peoples fall like wolves upon their prey,
Forbid the shame that in thy name may Mammon plot this day.
May clouds of prayer like incense rise unto the throne above,
May many a contrite sacrifice be blest in thy great love.
Let deepest darkness flee before the cleansing light divine.
O Sun that hath no setting, make haste, arise and shine.

Forgive us for our little faith, O Man of Nazareth,
Forgive us for our feeble doubts, O Lord of life and death.
The glory floods the firmament, the earth is all aflame,
The army of the living God is marching in thy name.
The midnight wanes, the morning comes, the shadows flee away,
A new-born nation rises in the splendid East this day.

TALKS FOR THE HOME CIRCLE

The Expense of Courtship

ONE reason why young men on salary hold themselves back from courtship and are timid about showing attention of a ...eous kind to a girl they especially ...oire, is that courtship has become ...e and more an affair of alarming ...ense. A student in the sophomore ...ls in college whose father can give ...i only a small allowance, a salesman ...n department store or a wage-earner ...r the foot of the commercial ladder, ...not afford flowers and a carriage ...r other adjuncts, considered obliga... upon their escorts by many girls. ...f youth invites a girl to attend an ...door function, to skate with him or ...o on a sleighride, he must pay for ...per for herself and her chaperon. ...the time he has exhausted a ten ...ar bill, he has probably spent more ...n the earnings of a week or the sum ...father can afford to give him. A ...treet young man, being honest, ...s himself from temptation by ...ing aloof alike from courtship and ...n the society in which well-to-do ...s may be met. Possibly he be... ...es, if brilliant and quick at repar... ...a sort of social parasite, a ...fessional diner-out, who drifts into ...selfishness of celibacy before he ...ws where he is going.

...oung women have it in their power ...change the situation. Street cars ...convenient conveyances and should ...n be used instead of carriages, and ...en roses are worth more than their ...ght in gold, they should be spar... ...ly pressed into the service of the ...r who has little cash.

The Boy and the Latch-Key

SPARTAN notions of discipline for the restraint of boys are advocated ...asionally by stern parents who ...ow a backward glance of regret at ...methods of the eighteenth cen... ...y. The fact is that home disci... ...e, if neglected in infancy and early ...ldhood, will utterly fail if enforced ...the summary method of the police... ...n's club when boys are in their ...ns. While children are in the ...sery, habits of obedience may be ...med without harshness by the ...tchfulness of father and mother. ...parents wait until their children are ...ost grown before teaching them to ...t honorable, truthful and trustwor... ...y, they have themselves to blame for ...wrong-doing of their offspring.

"What happened to that tree?" ...nebody said, looking at a crooked ...d misshapen tree. "Somebody ...pped on it when it was little," was ...r answer. "As the twig is bent the ...e inclines," is everlastingly true.

The tiny chap of three or four ...rns much by imitation and may ...sily be taught good manners and ...od morals. At fourteen the boy is ...e product of that which he was at ...ir. At eighteen he fulfils the ...omise of eight. As for the relation ...ween a boy in his teens and his ...ther, it should be fraternal. In conversation recently with a man of middle age who conducts large affairs, allusion was made to his trio of noble sons. "They are straight and clean," said the father. "When they were boys at school I tried to set them a wholesome example, and concerning several forms of indulgence common among worthy people, I told them they might do whatever they saw me do."

The caption at the beginning of this bit of talk refers to the latch-key. What about the boy's evenings? Must it be invariably necessary that father and mother who like to go early to rest must sit up to let the boy in when he comes home a half hour later than ten? If the home be in a town where doors must be kept locked, must the boy always ring before he is admitted? Why not bring the boy up into such manliness that he may be trusted with a latch-key?

"Village Life in America"

SEVERAL years ago the readers of this page were much interested in the story told them of a remarkable diary begun by a little girl of Canandaigua, N. Y., in 1852, and carried on without a break until 1872. The diary was extraordinary in its beautiful simplicity and its description of a charming childhood in a Christian home, a beautiful girlhood in an eventful period of national history, and in iridescent gleams of humor flashing like sunbeams on every page. The writer of this diary has for years been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and her little book privately printed has been appreciated by all who have had the satisfaction of reading it.

Recently it has been published in London by Messrs. Fisher Unwin & Company under the title of Village Life in America. The personages mentioned in the diary are classified, and the volume is charmingly illustrated, while two introductions are supplied by friends who are honored in assuming responsibility for a book that has few equals in its appeal to all that is good and noble. When this diary was written the author's name was Caroline Cowles Richards. She has long been Mrs. E. C. Clarke, of Naples, N. Y.

The Child's First Teeth

THE greatest care should be given to the preservation of the child's first teeth. No small boy or girl should ever cry with toothache. Vigilant attention will arrest decay, and the first symptoms should be the occasion of a visit to the dentist. For the sake of the permanent teeth the earlier ones should be retained in the mouth by filling if cavities appear. Too many sweets, too much candy, and too little wholesome porridge are the causes of pain to the child and premature decay of the teeth. As the permanent teeth should serve their owners for a lifetime, it is wisdom unadulterated to take the best possible care of what are called the milk teeth.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Order These Charming "Standard" Dresses. You'll Be Very Well Pleased.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or Your Money Promptly Refunded

2471. Becomingly styled dress of good, washable gingham, in blue, lavender or black checks. Bodice with four Gibson pleats, banded in Cossack effect and is neatly finished with buttons. Closes in back. A practical dress, unusually pretty and of good, serviceable quality. Sizes 34 to 44 bust. Misses, 14 to 18 years. Postage, 25c. Special.. $1.25

2474. Charmingly designed dress with deep Peasant yoke and flounce of good Zephyr Gingham, in blue, pink or lavender stripes. The fine all-over Swiss embroidery is set in and contrasts beautifully, the pipings and buttons being most effectively applied. The fashionable Peplum waist is formed of Val laces, and the Dutch collar and cuffs are finished to match. A remarkably becoming dress tastefully patterned, the trimmings adding to the daintiness and style. It's a good, serviceable quality too, and really unusual value. Sizes 34 to 44 bust. Misses, 14 to 18 years. Postage, 25c. Price..... $3.98

2473. Cleverly designed dress with becoming Peasant bodice of fine all-over Swiss embroidery. The graceful fitting Empire skirt of fine white Pique is finished with a pleated panel back. Pretty sailor collar and cuffs of Pique to match. Hooks in front. Smoked pearl buttons and the nobby black silk tie contrasts beautifully with the white materials. Sizes 34 to 44 bust. $2.98

2457 White cotton voile is most fashionable now, and is cleverly used in this handsome dress. Beautifully trimmed with Cluny and deep, exquisitely worked black embroidery, with stylish fringe covering prettily a flounce of black voile. Tiny buttons and black trimmings produce a wonderfully effective contrast. Carefully tucked, the stylish hip tuckings providing correct fit and graceful fullness. A tastefully trimmed, distinctive model of dainty, splendid $6.50 quality. Sizes 34 to 44 bust. Misses, 14 to 18 years. Postage 25c. Special..... $5.98

FREE

Write TODAY for your Free Copy of the "Standard" Bulletin

It's Full of Beautiful New Styles and Really Wonderful Values. Send for It NOW. It's FREE.

Standard MAIL ORDER Co. 244 West 17th St. New York, N. Y.

ELLWANGER & BARRY

A Most Valuable Booklet Free to Rose Lovers

Authoritative. Concise. Treats of best varieties for garden, lawn and conservs. Describes our robust, free-blooming, beautiful, true-to-name roses—which will bloom same season planted—old favorites and newest tested varieties. Write for it.

ELLWANGER & BARRY
Mount Hope Nurseries, Box 49, Rochester, N.Y.

12 ROSES Guaranteed to Bloom $1

All on their own roots—guaranteed to grow and bloom—delivered free. Vigorous, healthy bushes, prolific bloomers. All colors, from purest white to fiery red.

Conard & Jones Roses

When ordering ask for New Rose Book, with 4 choice color plates, list of world's best roses, Rose Lover's Calendar, "How to Grow Roses," and our New Free Delivery Offer.

Rose Specialists—50 years' experience.

THE CONARD & JONES CO., Box 140, West Grove, Pa.

SEND ME 10 CENTS

If you will send me the addresses of two of your flower-loving friends, I will send you my bargain collection of Spencer Sweet Peas, Giant Orchids, flowering type, Nasturtiums, dwarf chameleon mixed, Regal Show Panaies, Asters, finest mixed; also 30 seeds of the

GIANT MARGUERITE CARNATION

which blooms in 4 months from sowing; also Free, "Flower Culture" and my descriptive 1912 catalog containing 48 pages. Write today, enclosing 10 cents. MISS C. H. LIPPINCOTT, Pioneer Seedswoman, Dept. 38, HUDSON, WIS. (1 hour's ride from Minneapolis)

Hatches With One Gallon Oil

—and requires only one filling of lamp. Superior to old style machines. Thermometer always in sight. Eggs turn without removing. Regulated automatically. Guaranteed to please.

X-RAY INCUBATOR

—cleanest incubator ever invented. No smoke, smell—easiest to operate. Write for Free Book No. 73.

X-Ray Incubator Co.
Wayne, - - - Neb.

Freight Prepaid

EASTER COMBINATION

10 BEAUTIFUL 6 Extra Quality POST CARDS Mailed for 10c
2 Easter Letters Mailed for 10c

Printed on Superior Paper with Envelope to Match. Mailed for 10 Cts.

Three 10-cent Packages Mailed for 25 Cents.

A Special Assortment of 100 Easter Post Cards mailed for 60 Cents
MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 Bicycle. Write for special offer.

We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL and prepay freight on every bicycle.

FACTORY PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalogs and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer. Tires, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, half prices.

HEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. M 71, Chicago, Ill

You Can Weigh Exactly what You Should Weigh

You can be Strong—Vigorous—full of life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can have a Clear Skin.

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 49,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

NO DRUGS NO MEDICINES

My pupils simply comply with Nature's laws.

What My Pupils say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion; it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 216 pounds, this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not well skilled either. I feel so young and strong, no backaches, or sluggish liver, and I can breathe now. It is surpassing how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 50 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so restful! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses, and my eyesight is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly, and contains other information of vital interest to women. Every woman is welcome to it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I'd like to tell you about it.

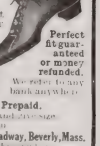
Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Miss Cocroft is the best authority in America upon the regaining of woman's health and figure thro Natural, Scientific means.

COMFORT and EASE FOR TENDER FEET

For every woman who will wear WHITCOMB'S "FLEXSOLE" SHOES. The most comfortable shoe for women ever made. Soft, flexible, perfect-fitting and handsome. Very durable. No tacks. No Lining to wrinkle and hold moisture. No seams.



Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded.

We refer to any bank anywhere.

Mrs. Iowa woman writes: "First leather shoe I have been able to wear in 20 years."

A Pennsylvania woman writes: "I received foot aids for a friend. My feet are cured entirely."

Prices:
LACE, $3.00
BUTTON, $3.25
OXFORDS, $2.50 Prepaid.

Can be bent double.

Send outline of foot and size you usually wear.

Eastern Shoe Co., 55 Broadway, Beverly, Mass.

Agents Wanted Everywhere. Special Inducements.

APPLIED ART PAYS

Study Applied Art at home. Personal Correspondence System. More than 12 yrs. successful teaching. Eminent Instructors. PRACTICAL RESULTS GUARANTEED

Our students in demand by leading employers of artists. Applied Art Courses in COMMERCIAL DRAWING, ILLUSTRATING, TEACHERS NORMAL, FASHION, LETTERING & DESIGN, CARTOONING, PHOTO RETOUCHING, ARCHITECTURAL PERSPECTIVE, &c. Endorsed by highest authorities.

Residence Finishing School for Advanced Students. Artists' outfits furnished enrolled students

SCHOOL OF APPLIED ART. Year Book free.

535 Applied Art Bldg., Battle Creek, Mich.

Aim and Scope of the Garden

BY IDA D. BENNETT

IT MAY seem a quite superfluous question to ask of the woman who loves a garden "What she wants of a garden?" the answer being so irrefutably "Flowers." But the word flowers opens up so wide a vista of garden possibilities that one may well pause and consider down just what one of the many alluring pathways to the desired goal our footsteps shall tread. For the amateur to attempt them all or any considerable number of them is apt to spell disappointment in the end; at least the early days and months of gardening will be sadly hampered by too ambitious an attempt at gardening, although the initial efforts may be so wisely planned as to cover, in time, the whole field of out-of-door gardening.

The garden whose aim shall be the furnishing of an abundance of cut flowers will be quite a different affair from, and quite subordinate to, the garden which one plans to fraternize and live with, enjoying the flowers as they bloom and lade the air with their fragrance through all the changing seasons of the year.

Probably the garden of old-fashioned, hardy flowers offers the greatest possibilities for happiness of any form of gardening, and fortunately, it is one of the most easily and satisfactorily acquired. It has the great advantage of growing insensibly from month to month and year to year. By the simple process of multiplication and division, with the minimum of labor and expense, the small garden of a few square feet may in the course of a few years assume the dignified extent of rods and acres. It is only necessary in planning the permanent hardy garden to allow for this expansion and not place the garden in a position where it is so bounded and hedged in as to make future development impossible.

Of quite equal importance with the future growth or present extent of the garden will be the question of its care, for nothing is more futile than undertaking anything for which the time of strength must prove inadequate. If one loves a garden and undertakes it for its own sake, one should have quite clear ideas as to the amount of time one will be able to devote to it, or of how much one will be willing to delegate to others, or how available sufficiently skilled labor will prove, for I can assure the woman who loves a garden that the employment of unskilled labor is heartrending at times —so much destruction is sure to follow in its wake.

Then one must take into consideration the winter aspect of the garden—whether it is to be merely a place of summer beauty, or attractive the year round, for it is quite possible to have beauty in one's garden throughout the year if one will plant freely of such plants as are conspicuous with bright berries or haws in winter—as the Rugosa Roses, Barberries and the like, or use freely the large class of shrubs conspicuous for their lovely bark in winter, as certain of the willows, some native Spiræa and the like.

Again there are some flower lovers who are fond of much variety in flowers, preferring to grow quantities of one sort one year and something quite different another; for this class of gardeners the garden of annuals offers the greatest range of choice and entails no considerable expense or loss in changing from one variety of flowers to another, as would be the case with perennials or shrubbery. Another point in favor of the annual garden is this: No calculation for the growth of the garden is entailed, as the same beds may be used over and over again for an infinite variety of flowers. This is, probably, the most practical form of gardening for the temporary home and with a judicious use of bedding plants and summer-blooming bulbs can be made to furnish flowers galore for the entire summer.

Answered Prayers

H. A. R., Winterset, Ia. "I want to thank the Lord for hearing and answering my prayers."

Mrs. R. K., Charles City, Ia. "I wish to publicly acknowledge that God has answered my prayer."

A. B., Chicago, Ill. "I prayed to the Lord to convert my brother. He has made a stand for Christ."

L. E. H., Ohio. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer for loved ones; also for myself."

Mrs. S. E. L., Westmoreland, Kan. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to my prayer in regard to our sick baby."

Mrs. S. H. J., Johnson, Wash. "My husband was very sick. I took it to the Lord in prayer, and he restored him."

M. F. G., Philadelphia, Pa. "Though given up by a doctor, God restored me to health and answered my prayer."

J. S., Flanda. "I want to acknowledge an answer to prayer for my wandering boy. He has come home."

Mrs. D. W. W., Middlefield, O. "I wish to acknowledge that the Lord restored a dear friend through prayer."

S. L. W., Grafton, Vt. "God has answered my prayer and delivered me from a great trouble, after thirteen years of constant prayer."

Answered prayers are also acknowledged by: E. K. S., Ipswich, Mass.; Mrs. J. W., Baldwin, Kan.; E. M. H., Newburyport, Mass.; Mrs. L. J. H., Prospect, Va.; N. L. P., Braymer, Mo.; Constant Reader, Rockwood, Pa.; M. C., Rixby, Idaho; L. M. Y., Cambridge, O.; Old Subscriber, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. M. W., Hillsboro, O.; Mrs. E. I. E., Oakland, Mich.; Mrs. M. E., Sacramento, Calif.; V. P., Bridgeburg, Ont., Can.; Mrs. W. S. W., Custer City, Okla.; I. F. R., Big Springs, Texas; A Reader, Mississippi; Mrs. M. V. R., St. Johnsburg, Vt.; M. F. R., Harrisonburg, Va.; C. D., Coriscana, Texas; Mrs. M. D. B., Sparta, Wis.; Mrs. Z. T. L., Harrisburg, Ill.; Mrs. J. L. R., Shelby, N. C.; M. T. W., Mason City, Ia.; Mrs. A. H. A., New York; Mrs. E. F. R., East Orange, N. J.; M. C. D., Bellingham, Wash.; Mrs. T. C. H., Ormond, Fla.

Called Higher

Mr. B. F. Gatton (73), of Jennings, N. C., passed to his reward after a long life of good works. He was a great lover of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. Eliza Jan Cochran died in her home in Tennessee on December 28, 1910, in her ninety-first year. She fell peacefully asleep as she sat reading her Bible.

Mr. James Mosher, for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, died at his home in Portchester, N. Y., February 5, 1911, in his seventy-third year.

Mrs. Charles Mundinger died February 26, 1911, at Dolgeville, N. Y. She was a subscriber to this publication for many years and a faithful follower of Christ.

A loving friend and constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Margaret Jane Becker, passed to her heavenly home February 2, 1911, in her seventy-ninth year.

A. L. Hawkins (83) died February 7, 1911, in Tulsa, Okla. He was for nineteen years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and "thought it the best paper in the world."

James D. Carlisle (81) died in Pittsburg, Pa., July 5, 1911. He was a faithful reader and supporter of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years and an active church worker.

Mrs. Cora A. Harris, of Matteawan, N. Y., passed away on April 4, 1911, aged forty-seven years. She was for a number of years a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family.

Mrs. Abigail C. Johnson (91) passed away November, 1910, at her home in Ohio. She had been a devoted subscriber to this paper for thirty years. Her whole life was spent in the work of her Master.

Mrs. Elmira Randall departed from this life March 22, 1911, in Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Randall had been a sufferer for nearly twenty years, through which she kept a divine faith to the last. She had been for twenty-nine years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Mary E. Horton Francisco died in her home in Todd County, Minn., March 20, 1911. Had she lived four months longer she would have celebrated her one hundredth birthday. She retained her mental faculties to the end, and was for years a devoted reader of this paper.

15.95 AND UPWARD AMERICAN SEPARATOR

THIS OFFER IS NO CATCH. It is a solid proposition to send, on trial, fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running separator for $15.95. Skims hot or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Designed especially for small dairies, hotels and private families. Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. The bowl is a sanitary marvel, easily cleaned. Gears thoroughly protected. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small, write us and obtain our handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO. Box 1184 BAINBRIDGE, N.Y.

GREGORY'S SEEDS

Here is a big offer of choicest seeds—10 packages worth 90 Cents—postpaid. 25c coin or stamps

1 pkg. Aster, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture,	10c.
1 pkg. Pansy, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture,	15c.
1 pkg. Coreopsis, Gregory's Special Fancy Mixture,	5c.
1 pkg. Poppy, Gregory's Fancy Double Mixed Annuals,	10c.
1 pkg. Mignonette, Gregory's Large Flowering, very rich,	10c.
1 pkg. Bachelor Button, Gregory's Finest Mixture	10c.
1 pkg. Petunia, Gregory's Finest Hybrid Mixture,	15c.
1 pkg. Candytuft, Gregory's Finest Mixed,	5c.
1 pkg. Nasturtium, Dwarf, Finest Mixed,	5c.
1 pkg. Sweet Peas, Extra Choice Mixed,	5c.

GREGORY'S HONEST SEEDS

Get our new 1912 catalogue.

J. J. H. GREGORY & SON

109 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Sent to your home—express prepaid

Sizes and Prices
9 x 6 ft.	$3.50
9 x 7½ ft.	4.00
9 x 9 ft.	4.50
9 x 10½ ft.	5.00
9 x 12 ft.	5.50
9 x 15 ft.	6.50

Beautiful new attractive patterns. Made in all colors. Easily cleaned, warranted to wear. Woven in one piece. Reversible. Straight from the makers and sold direct at one-price. Money refunded if not satisfactory

Send for New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors—free

ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 691 Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia

A Step in the Right Direction

Out of the land of hurly-burly babel into the garden of sunshine and blossoms and real living where winter is only a name.

Get the Spirit of the real West—this land of blooms and gladness and promise; know its wonders, its achievements—the joyous future it offers you or any man or woman. It is naturally your land of hope, of health. Right here you live life all over again.

Open-handed, open-hearted folks of the real West say to you—"let's get acquainted." They want to share their enthusiasm with you. No matter whether you're coming out here tomorrow, next year or in 1915 to see the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco and the Panama-California Exposition in San Diego, get acquainted NOW: get thinking now, and thinking right!

A 2c Stamp brings to your reading table immediately a sample copy of "Sunset-The Pacific Monthly" Magazine with its magnificent four-color photographs of Western scenes; a booklet descriptive of the Panama-Pacific Exposition and the Panama-California Exposition in 1915; and any one of our descriptive booklets on either California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico.

For that same 2c stamp the services of the "Sunset-The Pacific Monthly" Information Bureau are yours to command. And you'll be sent a description of the Sunset League, which has no dues, no initiation fees, no obligations of any kind. Could we say more! Will you listen?

"GET ACQUAINTED" COUPON

SUNSET-THE PACIFIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE INFORMATION BUREAU, San Francisco, Cal.

Gentlemen—Enclosed find 2c stamp. Please send, fully prepaid, Exposition booklets, marked copy of Sunset The Pacific Monthly Magazine, and booklet about without any further obligation on my part.

Name

Street

City or town State F-3

No-Rim-Cut Tires Proved Average Oversize, 16.7%

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires are advertised as "10% oversize." And we claim that this oversize adds 25% to the tire mileage.

The actual oversize, over five leading makes, was lately found to average 16.7%. Note the table below.

Comparison of Sizes Between Six Leading Makes of Tires

Rated Size	Make	Cubic Cap'ty	No-Rim-Cut O'ersize
30 x 3	1—No-Rim-Cut	489 in.
"	2—.....	402 "	21.5%
"	3—.....	381 "	29.4%
"	4—.....	371 "	31.8%
"	5—.....	383 "	27.5%
"	6—.....	365 "	34.0%
32 x 3½	1—No-Rim-Cut	637 "
"	2—.....	603 "	5.5%
"	3—.....	577 "	10.4%
"	4—.....	536 "	18.8%
"	5—.....	577 "	10.4%
"	6—.....	546 "	16.5%
34 x 4	1—No-Rim-Cut	858 in.
"	2—.....	762 "	12.5%
"	3—.....	760 "	12.7%
"	4—.....	733 "	17.0%
"	5—.....	822 "	4.3%
"	6—.....	794 "	8.0%
36 x 4½	1—No-Rim-Cut	1190 "
"	2—.....	986 "	23.0%
"	3—.....	1064 "	11.8%
"	4—.....	1025 "	16.0%
"	5—.....	1055 "	12.6%
"	6—.....	1080 "	10.3%

Average No-Rim-Cut Oversize, 16.7%

Oversize is not measured by calipers. It is measured by air capacity. Air carries the load.

The figures here show the cubic capacities.

Only three tires in these twenty comparisons came within 10% of our size.

That's because No-Rim-Cut tires have the hookless base. Your removable rim flanges, with these tires, turn outward instead of inward. Thus the tire has an extra flare.

Oversize means over-tired. It means extra carrying capacity without overloading.

It means to save blow-outs—to increase tire mileage—to cut down tire expense.

Yet these over-size tires, which can't rim-cut, cost no more than other standard tires.

That's why they outsell all others.

Adopted This Year by 127 Leading Makers

For the year 1910, 44 leading motor car makers contracted for Goodyear tires.

For the year 1911, 64 makers came to them.

For this year we have contracts from the makers of 127 leading cars.

Last year we sold more automobile tires than in the previous 12 years put together.

The sales in late years have doubled over and over, as users have found the tires out.

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires now far outsell any other tires in existence. Our present capacity is 3,800 tires daily.

Done by Users

This overwhelming demand has been quickly created by the men who have used these tires.

Tens of thousands of users told tens of thousands of others how their tire bills were cut in two.

And last year we sold enough of these tires to completely equip 102,000 cars.

Average Saving, $20 Per Tire

We don't intend to make overclaims regarding these patented tires. The facts alone are sufficient.

With these, as with all tires, the service rendered depends on proper use.

But these tires can't be rim-cut. And statistics show that 23 per cent. of all ruined clincher tires have been rim-cut.

That saving is sure.

It is also a known fact that 10 per cent. oversize, under average conditions, adds 25 per cent. to the tire mileage.

And No-Rim-Cut tires, as shown above, average more than 10 per cent. oversize.

It is safe to say that these two features together, under average conditions, save $20 per tire.

What We Control

We control by patent the only practical way to get rid of the hooked-base tire.

No-Rim-Cut tires are not hooked to the rims. So you simply reverse your removable rim flanges and let them curve outward.

That gives a resting edge which cannot cut the tire, even when run flat.

It gives an extra flare which permits the oversize.

And it doubles the ease of removing the tire when you need to.

But back of these features lies a tire perfected by 13 years of tests.

Year after year, on a tire testing machine, we have compared formulas and fabrics, methods and processes, until the Goodyear tire has been brought close to perfection.

By actually wearing out tires under every road condition, we have learned how to make the most durable tires.

Double-Thick Treads

Now these tires, if wanted, come with double-thick Non-Skid treads.

That means an extra tread of very tough rubber, vulcanized onto the regular.

This extra tread consists of deep-cut, sharp-cut blocks. They present to the road surface countless edges and angels, causing a bulldog grip.

A moment's comparison with other non-skids will show the Goodyear's enormous advantage.

All of these features—each the best of its kind—are found in Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires.

That's why these tires now dominate the field. Every motor car owner who makes a comparison is simply bound to insist on them.

Our new Tire Book is ready. It is filled with facts, based on 13 years of tire making, which every tire user should know. Ask us to mail it to you.

THE NEW GOODYEAR NON-SKID TREAD

Tough
Deep-Cut
Double-Thick

GOODYEAR

No-Rim-Cut Tires

With or Without Non-Skid Treads

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, AKRON, OHIO

Branches and Agencies in 103 Principal Cities

We Make All Kinds of Rubber Tires, Tire Accessories and Repair Outfits

Main Canadian Office, Toronto, Ont. Canadian Factory, Bowmanville, Ont.

(514)

It's You!

Pneu Form

(THE PNEUMATIC DRESS FORM)

TAKES your place at wearisome fittings, at home or at your dressmaker's. Reproduces YOU or any one with looking-glass fidelity. Simple inflate the Form inside the proper waist lining. Adjustable to any height for draping skirts.

Write for Fashion Book "P-1"

"What To Wear And How To Make It." When in New York be sure to call and see practical demonstration.

Pneu Form Company

557 Fifth Ave., near 46th St., New York

STOP DARNING!

NEW HOSIERY FREE

If after wearing six pairs of "Arrow" Guaranteed Hosiery for Six Months ther show holes in heel or toe, return and receive New Ones Free!

Actual Value for $1.50 — $1

6 Pairs of Women's Seamless Lisle Hosiery, reinforced in heels, toes and soles with Pure Irish Linen Thread. Black or Tan. State size. $1 only. Sent prepaid.

Extra fine quality Full Fashioned Sea Island Cotton 6 pairs $1.50. Out sizes extra large legs 6 Pairs $1.75. Men's Hose, same prices. Choice black, tan, navy, gray. Send a postal card today for our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue. Its FREE. Latest Fifth Avenue creations in womens knit and muslin underwear, silk gloves, hosiery and the hit of the season, the "Paris-Garter." Prices and quality will surprise you.

AGENTS WANTED bow and Bow-clasp "

Arrow Knit & Silk Works, 207 Ninth Ave., New York

STUDY LAW AT HOME

The Correspondence Course Studied by Famous Men

For 21 years bankers, corporation officials, prominent lawyers, educators, labor leaders, city, state and federal officials, ministers, physicians and army officers have been trained by us. We can do it for you, if you've got the "stuff" in you. Complete courses, backed up by personal help. Graduates practicing in every state. Takes only spare time and little cash. Write for catalogue and "evidence."

SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW

236 American Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

IT COSTS LESS TO GO TO

SWITZERLAND

than to spend a vacation at some American resorts. Let us show you how.

Write for TRAVEL LETTER No. 7 and Hotel Guide. Sent Post Free.

Our American office has been established to give expert travel information. Handsome literature and illustrated booklets without any charge.

Use Our Service and Save Money.

SWISS FEDERAL RAILROAD

241 Fifth Avenue — New York City

R.C.S. 12

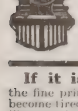
CLASS PINS AND BADGES

For College, School, Society or Lodge.

Descriptive catalog with attractive prices mailed free upon request. Either style of pins here illustrated with any three letters and figures, one or two colors of enamel. STERLING SILVER, 25c each; $2.50 doz. ; SILVERPLATE, 10c each; $1.00 doz.

NHS 13 19

BASTIAN BROS. CO. Dept. 829 ROCHESTER, N. Y.



WANTED—MEN

Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Electric Motormen, Train Porters (colored). Hundreds put to work—$65 to $160 a month. No experience necessary. 500 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for application Blank and Book. State position.

I. Railway C. I., No. 16 Indianapolis, Ind.

If it is hard for you to read the fine print of a magazine—if your eyes easily become tired—send at once for "THE EYE"—a free illustrated booklet that will teach you how to strengthen your eyes and keep them strong.

THE IDEAL CO., Dept. 4, 134 West 65th St., N. Y. City

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

Author of "In His Steps"

CHAPTER XIX

IT WAS late, but one task Sidney set himself before he slept: to take the first train in the morning to see his father. Before he went up there he felt impelled to answer Pax Marston's letter. And that, in spite of the fact that when he searched his heart honestly he could not say to himself that he was convinced as he should be of his feeling. Nevertheless he wrote this letter and posted it on his way to the station in the morning, sending it to the care of Bennett's at Bergen.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your letter was one that I feel I must answer, and yet I am sure it will be difficult for me to write as I should, owing to remarkable events which are happening and to great experiences I am having—so deep and great that they may have much to do with our friendship. Will you understand? I am going to write as frankly and simply as I can, because it is due us both not to deceive ourselves over such a great matter.

I cannot disguise from you or myself that when your father (during my interview with him) declared that he could not entertain the idea of any further acquaintance with you, the world seemed at once to be a hopeless place to me. I will not attempt to conceal from you what has been a fact—that from my first meeting with you at the launching of the Republic my heart was drawn to you; and—your letter gives me excuse for saying that your heart responded to mine. All this I frankly express because I feel so much will depend upon what you will think of the confidence I am now about to repose in you, believing you will understand me, and understand, above all, the reason why I am writing as I do in this unusual manner.

I have, within the last few days, had a deep religious experience, which I know will have a vital influence on all my life. Until I know how this will affect your life I do not dare ask you to consider me as you might if your parents gave their consent and your own convictions harmonized with mine. I am saying this very poorly; it is because I am not able to express my feelings in the best way.

But I can and must say this, in order to be honest with you. My definition of life is not what it once was. The whole thing seems different. There is one verse in the Bible that seems to ring in my ears continually: "Wherefore, if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new."

You will want to know what this means. Among other things, this, which will perhaps affect our relations more than any other: I have a growing horror in my heart and mind of the whole subject of war. It seems to me like the very contradiction of all the Christ spirit that our nation, a Christian nation, should be building just such monsters as the one I, as a builder, am at work on at this moment. The more I think of it, the more I am amazed that, after all these centuries of Jesus Christ, the nations which call themselves Christian are the nations most feverishly eager to build more and bigger navies. My soul recoils from all this, and I am facing the entire question with a prayer in my heart for wisdom and strength; for to-morrow I am going to see my father, and I do not think I can keep from him long, if at all, my feeling in this matter. His passion in life, his ambition, is this growing warship. He daily prays for war to test its vast power. And now that I cannot feel as he does any longer, it raises questions in my mind such as I am raising about the effect this confession will have with you. You have been reared in the atmosphere of war. Your people, your relatives are all connected more or less closely with navy and army circles. The people who are your dearest friends in Washington would no doubt regard any one like me almost as if I were insane, or unbalanced. What do you think of me after reading so far? Pardon me, I cannot help asking it. For we are both old enough to know that if two people are to be happy together the religious tie must be the greatest of all. I dare not risk your happiness or mine on an uncertainty, for I am firmly convinced that a real, permanent, enduring, satisfying love cannot exist between two people if they cannot agree on the essential faith of a religious life.

I suppose your father and mother gave you the real reason why they would not consent to our further acquaintance. If they did not, I am going to; for it will not help matters any to try to keep still about it.

It is because my father is now regarded by the world as a convict. I do not need to say any more about that. I accept the verdict of the world in which your father and mother live and I have no argument to bring against it and I would not make an appeal from it.

But now that there is added to that reason for your parents' hostility to me the fact that I am personally antagonistic to the very thing that makes your father's position possible, of course I know very well what effect it will have on him and your mother. I would not attempt to disguise or conceal my views from them. And what effect my views will have, I know without question.

Have you understood? My heart is hungry. I am going to venture to say this: If after all I have written, if after a full knowledge and acceptance of all that I am and hope to be, you can still feel that your life can be shared with mine, and that mine will satisfy you in the most perfect way, I feel that my heart would go out to you in fullest and truest affection. Pax, I cannot say either more or less. If your answer is such that even father and mother and social verdicts and the prejudice of the world are less than your need of me and mine of you—we are of age; true love is a sacred thing; no one would have the right to separate us; but nothing less than a perfect agreement on the things that make life together permanent and joyous is possible.

With all I have written I must tell you I gleaned from your letter that my father's fate had not changed your thought of me. After all I have been through—the treatment of old friends and the coldness of acquaintances—it was an unspeakable comfort to me to believe that all this had not influenced your feeling or prejudiced your mind against me.

I know I have not written all this as I might have said it to you. If you read this to your mother, as you are at liberty to do, will you express to her my kindest regards. She was very kind to me that first evening I was in Washington. How long ago that all seems!

Your friend,

SIDNEY CUSHING.

Was he fickle? How was it he did not know his own mind better? Was he laying down the law to the girl, making stern terms with her, demanding that she conform to his beliefs and opinions before he would tell her he loved her? Could any woman consent to be wooed in this fashion? After posting the letter these questions assailed him, and he was almost tempted to write another letter. But going over all things, he did not know what he might have said differently; and after all, the main things remained. Pax's father and mother opposed him; that in itself had profound influence over her. And his own change of view, his new vision of life, was a thing he could not deny, and no matter whether it seemed to make him uncertain in his own mind, the fact of his religious upheaval would have to be reckoned with by Pax—and in what way? He did not know.

As he neared the penitentiary the thought of his father gradually swept out of his mind the thought of that fascinating daughter of the admiral seated pensively by the open window overlooking the dancing waters of the beautiful Balholm Bay on the Sogne Fiord.

Here, at least, was a love he was unquestioningly sure of. Oh, with what passion he loved that grim, pale-faced, unbroken figure that shook its fist each morning in the face of God and the universe and defied them to do their worst! This father who had deliberately sacrificed for him all that men count dear! Oh, how he yearned to be to him such a son as no son had ever been since the world began! And yet he was going to him now with a new and added passion—the newly born love of a Redeemer who had said once, "If a man love father or mother more than me he is not worthy of me."

When he went into the warden's office, as his regular habit was when he visited his father, Armstrong was busy with one of the prison officials. When he was at liberty and turned to greet Sidney there was a look on his face so remarkable that Sidney was at once impressed by it.

"You have come to see your father. Wait. I want you to meet him in my office alone."

He showed Sidney into his own private room, and went away without another word. When he came back Brander Cushing he said, "Take all the time you want. No one will disturb you."

Continued on next page

LIFE'S LESSONS

I LEARN as the years roll onward
And I leave the past behind,
That much I counted sorrow
But proves that God is kind;
That many a flower that I'd longed for
Had hidden a thorn of pain,
And many a rugged by-path
Led to fields of ripened grain.

The clouds that cover the sunshine,
They can not banish the sun,
And the earth shines out the brighter
When the weary rain is done.
We must stand in the deepest shadow
To see the clearest light;
And often through wrong's own darkness
Comes the weary strength of right.

The sweetest rest is at even,
After a wearisome day,
When the heavy burden of labor
Has been borne from our hearts away;
And those who have never known sorrow
Can not know the infinite peace
That falls on the troubled spirit
When it sees at last release.

—Selected.

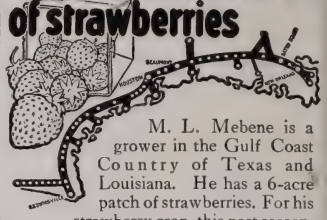
$2300 from 6 Acres of Strawberries



M. L. Mebene is a grower in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. He has a 6-acre patch of strawberries. For his strawberry crop, this past season, he was paid $2300 cash, f.o.b. cars at his home station, Chocolate Bayou, Texas.

This is nothing unusual—and it doesn't tell half the story. Gulf Coast growers get two and sometimes three different crops a year from their land. They are traveling the road to riches at high speed.

Are you doing as well? Don't you think you could manage a few acres in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana. Wouldn't you like to clean up a handsome profit every year and be your own boss while you are doing it?

You can buy a few acres in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana on easy terms and the first crop, if properly cared for, should more than pay for the land.

Better look into this

Investigate! Go down there this fall or winter. See and talk to these growers. Then you will realize the big opportunities open to you. The trip, by the Frisco, will alone be worth the little cost of going. Excursion fares via the Frisco, the first and third Tuesdays of each month, make the trip inexpensive.

The Frisco Lines operate splendid, electric lighted, all steel trains, daily, from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and New Orleans. These trains carry through cars, daily, and on excursion days, through tourist sleeper to the Gulf Coast Country.

3 Splendid Books FREE

One on the Mid-Coast country of Texas, one on the lower irrigated sections of the Rio Grande Valley and one on Louisiana, all beautifully illustrated, showing scenes in actual colors. They describe the country and crops from one end to the other, giving examples of successes and personal statements by men who have gone there and made good. Write for your free copies today, while you think of it.

FRISCO LINES

A. HILTON, General Passenger Agent,

1426 Frisco Building, St. Louis, Mo.

IRON WITHOUT A FIRE

New, easy, pleasant way. Mrs. Larkins, Mich. writes, "Have ironed 6 years with perfect satisfaction." Mrs. Timm, O. says, "Couldn't think of ironing without it."

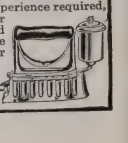
Improved Monitor Sad Iron

Self-Heating. Not Sold in Stores.

Strong, light, handsome—durable. Easy to operate; heat regulated instantly; no dirt—no odor.

WANTED—AGENTS, SALESMEN, MANAGERS.

Big Profits. No experience required. Sells almost on sight. Send for big colored circular, full size and interior view of iron. Exclusive selling rights—no charge for territory.



Monitor Sad Iron Co.

69 Wayne St., Big Prairie, O.

50¢ Worth of Flower SEEDS Given Away

1 Pkt. Sweet Peas, Finest Mixed.
1 Pkt. Star Petunia, Very Striking.
1 Pkt. Asters, McGregor's Mixture.
1 Pkt. Peony Fl'd Poppy, Brilliant.
1 Pkt. Calliopsis, Single and Double.
1 Pkt. Phlox Drummondii, All Colors.
1 Pkt. Portulaca, Always Blooming.
1 Pkt. Mignonette, An Old Favorite.
1 Pkt. Calendula, All Shades.
1 Pkt. Larkspur, Blue, Pink, White.

We will mail on receipt of 10c these 10 pkts. of choice seeds, with full instructions, in 10c rebate envelope, which FREE makes the seeds.....

OUR CATALOGUE IS DIFFERENT

Over 140 Flowers Shown in Colors

The greatest catalogue of the season. Every flower lover should have it. Send 10c to cover cost of packing, postage, etc., and we will send promptly the 10 packets of Seed, the 10c rebate envelope and our Great Special Bargain Catalogue.

The McGREGOR BROS. CO., Box 510 SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

$1.20 Worth of Flower SEEDS

Postpaid For Only 10¢

1 Pkt. Asters, Floral Park Mixture
1 Pkt. Pansies, Extra Giant Mixed
1 Pkt. Carnations, Finest Mixed
1 Pkt. Star Flower, a Novelty
1 Pkt. Mignonette, Sweet Scented
1 Pkt. Alyssum, Carpet of Snow
1 Pkt. Peppy, Double Carnation Fld.
1 Pkt. Candytuft, Sweet Scented
1 Pkt. Petunia, Finest Mixed
1 Pkt. Portulaca, Choicest Mixed
1 Pkt. Summer Cypress (Burn'g Bush)
1 Pkt. Sweet Pea, Large Fld. Mixed

We will send the above 12 packets of First Class flower seeds, our new Illustrated Garden Annual, and a due bill giving you your money back, all for 10c postpaid.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Box 430 FLORAL PARK, N.Y.

ALPINE STRAWBERRIES

Grown from seed, producing berries the first season and bearing continuously thru the summer. No garden complete without a bed of these delicious berries. For 10¢ we will send postpaid a generous packet of the above, also our new 120 page Fruit and Vegetable Growers Guide for 1912. The most complete line of Nursery Stock at wholesale prices.

FARMER SEED & NURSERY CO., 507-4th Ave., Faribault, Minn.

STUDY FARMING BY MAIL

Courses for Farmers and Prospective Farmers — General Farming, Poultry, Vegetables, Fruit, Stock, Dry Farming, Dairying, Flowers for Profit, Bees, etc. A complete agricultural college at home. FACULTY — national experts. Students the world over. Send postal today for free plans to increase your income.

VALUABLE BOOKLET ABSOLUTELY FREE
"How to Make the Farm Pay More"

A way out for city man; more profit for farmer; women with poultry or flowers make good income. Whatever interests you!

American Farmer's School, 152 Laird Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

Don't Start Poultry Keeping

till you have read the Six Free Chapters written by Robert Essex after a Quarter Century Experience in the business. They tell How to Make Money With Poultry; How to Build Low-Cost Poultry Houses. They tell Fanciers, and Women, and Farmers how to START RIGHT, and also tell all about America's Largest Line of Incubators and Brooders. The book is FREE. Write today. Address,

ROBERT ESSEX INCUBATOR COMPANY
225 Henry St., Buffalo, N. Y.

The IDEAL FENCE

Republic Ornamental Fence combines beauty and utility. Never sags or bulges, many handsome patterns. Easily put up. Also full line High Carbon, tubular steel Farm Gates. Send for Free Catalog.

Republic Fence & Gate Co., 225 E. St. North Chicago, Ill.

MAKE THIRTY DOLLARS A WEEK

Sell $1.50 Storm or Auto Veils for a dollar—cost you 50c—twelve colors—72 inches long—18 inches wide—Three each of 12 colors—36 veils prepaid on receipt of $18—sell at $1.50 each. Your profit on the 36 is $18. Write for free exclusive agency plan. Sample veil, any color 50c postpaid (can't duplicate anywhere under $1.50—money refunded unless satisfactory.

QUALITY MFG. CO., 208 Fifth Ave., New York

SMALL FRUITS

I grow Strawberry, Raspberry, Blackberry and other small Fruit Plants, Grape Vines, Shrubbery, Privet, etc. My FREE Catalogue tells the truth about them, and the prices quoted are fair for good stock, true to name. Write me today.

W. F. ALLEN, 23 Market Street, Salisbury, Md.

If it is hard for you to read the fine print of a magazine—if your eyes easily become tired—send at once for "THE EYE" a free illustrated booklet that will teach you how to strengthen your eyes and keep them strong.

THE IDEAL CO., Dept. 4, 134 West 65th St., N. Y. City

Do You STAMMER

Send for my 70-page book with Free Trial Lesson explaining methods for Home Cure. Established 17 years. Reputation world-wide.

G. A. LEWIS, 31 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

He closed the door on father and son and each looked earnestly at the other.

"Father, you have been ill?"

"No. I was never so well in my life."

Silence.

"I had to come up to see you about—about—a new trouble. I grieve to vex you with it, but I need your help. I suppose we have only the regulation time to talk. We must make the most of it."

"You heard what Mr. Armstrong said?"

"Yes. He is a gentleman in every way. You like him, don't you?"

"I love him."

"Love him?"

"Yes, Sid. He has been a brother to me. But tell me what your trouble is."

"The men are going out of the casting room on a sympathetic strike with Farrar's Mills' men. Coming at this time it will greatly embarrass the work. I confess I don't know how to handle the situation, and Stuart and Merrill don't agree about the best course to take."

"Are our men dissatisfied with their scale?"

"No. MacKenzie says they have no quarrel over it. It is a purely sympathetic action."

"Will they fight new men if we try to get them?"

"I'm afraid they will."

Silence.

"Will the men arbitrate?"

"I don't know. You remember, father, Farrar feels—well, you know he feels bitter over our action five years ago when we outbid him on the new type torpedoes. I understand he will not lift his finger to help us now."

"That was all my fault, Sid. We suffer for it now."

Sidney looked at his father in astonishment. Brander Cushing trembled. Sidney went on.

"What would you advise, father?"

"Have you talked with the men?"

"Yes. They say they are obeying orders from those higher. I know they regret going out at this time."

Silence. Brander Cushing's lips were moving. What! What was he saying?

"Father, are you ill? The work here is killing you!"

"No, Sid. I thank God I ever came here."

"You—ever—came—here!"

"Yes."

Brander Cushing had been sitting. He now rose and stretched himself up to his full height and said in a tone of the most exquisite mingling of humility and exultation Sidney had ever heard:

"I thank God I ever came here. For here in this place of my punishment I have found my Redeemer."

"Father!" Sidney cried. He had arisen, his intense astonishment and bewilderment breaking out into the cry that burst from him. It seemed to him that the Master had come into that little room, that the miracle of raising the dead to life was being acted out again, and that he and his father were the dead walking out of the tomb, hand in hand together, never more to part until they walked the blessed fields of that paradise where no blight has ever withered the immortal blossoms planted by the angels of God.

"Yes, Sidney. Thanks to the message brought by Mr. Freeman and Mr. Armstrong, I am a new man in Christ Jesus. Oh, can you understand it, my boy?"

"Understand it? Look at me, father!"

Down Sidney's face the tears rained. He stretched out his arms to his father. Brander Cushing saw that light shining in his son's face. And they embraced each other as if each had welcomed the other home from the world that lies beyond our dreams.

After a while Brander Cushing was saying calmly,

"This was last Sunday. At what time, did you say?"

Sidney told him.

In an awed voice, Brander Cushing said, "Sidney, the light came to us at the same time. What do you hear sounding in your heart every moment?"

"If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature. Old things have passed away. Behold, they are become new."

"It is the same with me. God spoke to us at the same time and in the same way."

They were sitting looking at each other silently now, musing over the great miracle of transformation.

Finally Brander Cushing rose again and said simply:

"I want Armstrong to come in."

Warden Armstrong came into his office and Brander Cushing said with the simple earnestness of a child:

"Sidney, this is the man who led me into the light. He and Freeman. I owe to them more than I can say. Armstrong, my brother, this is the greatest day of my life. My own son—"

In a few words he told Armstrong of Sidney's experience. Armstrong's face beamed. Now Sidney understood the look that had greeted him when he first met him.

"There is another," Brander Cushing said wistfully. "I wonder if we could have Andrew with us a few minutes?"

Armstrong opened the door and beckoned to a figure standing in the outer office, and Andrew Brodig, the anarchist, came in.

Warden Armstrong had seen some strange things during his charge of that penitentiary, but that was perhaps the most remarkable of them all.

Brander Cushing had his arm over Brodig's shoulder as he told Sidney how he and Andrew had met the Master face to face at the same time, and a few minutes after, they were all kneeling in that little room while Warden Armstrong was praying.

Men talk as if the divine and miraculous were vague and far off in this scientific age. Some, even in the church itself, declare that the age of miracles has ceased. Some even say that miracles never happened. But the greatest miracle of all history was being proved there in that little prison office where the warden was praying with a great heart full of thanksgiving that the Spirit of God had shown his power over three men, each different, each distinct in personality, but all three from this time on to be united in a tie of Christian faith which some time will unite all faiths, all classes and all mankind in one universal brotherhood. It is simply what is happening in every age of history. Did not the Master say, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me"?

Before Sidney went back home after that wonderful meeting with his father and Andrew Brodig, he had a heart-to-heart talk about his own change of view. He had been a little fearful about that phase of his convictions. It did not seem possible that his father could go the same length.

"I have come to have a horror of war, father."

"You need not be afraid to tell me. Are not the old things new?"

"Can you feel as I do?"

"It is hard, very hard for me to change my old habits, Sid. But I can truly say the whole thing is different. We must complete the Columbia, of course. But I pray God it may never be used in any war."

Sidney went home with a song of praise singing in his heart all the way. His father had given him the best counsel he could as to the management of the strike. Farrar was hostile. The type of workman employed in the casting room was not numerous. The labor required was of such a kind that inexperienced men would do more damage

Continued on next page

For over 30 years we have supplied Florists and Gardeners with the best Flower Seeds we could import or grow. Each year finds our good stocks better and the best ones cheaper. The quantities we use reduce the cost. You get the rarest and newest from Vaughan's at no more than regular prices.

This Catalogue "Gardening" Illustrated covering the four great departments of Gardening is mailed free. Don't plan your next garden without it. Write to-day.

Vaughan's Seed Store
Chicago 31-33 W. Randolph Street — New York 25 Barclay Street

DOUBLE ROLL 5¢ UP WALL PAPER

Write today for our big free book of wall paper samples and see the handsomest assortment in the world of wall paper for all rooms, for all purposes. Our wall paper is strong, durable, rich and beautiful, daintily blended into exquisite patterns of gold and colors most pleasing to the eye. We show all the staple papers and latest novelties for 1912 from beautiful floral paper at 5¢ a double roll of 16 yards, up to the richest embossed varnished gold at 25c a double roll of 16 yards. Our prices to you in any quantity from a roll up are lower than dealers buy their papers at in car-load lots. Before you buy paper anywhere, of anyone, write us and say "Send me your big free book of wall paper samples" and see our beautiful paper, wonderfully low prices, satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded terms and our

Great Free Premium Offer whereby you get a lot of valuable articles free as a present with orders. Also the book contains easily understood directions for papering walls, making paste and hanging wall paper. With these instructions you can hang paper as good as an expert wall paperer.

Go Into the Wall Paper Business Make lots of money. No experience necessary. Every house owner will buy paper of you. We furnish outfits and instruct and advise you free. Paper hangers, painters please write.

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 150-162 W. Madison St. Chicago

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r, 85 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK on POULTRY

and Almanac for 1912 has 224 pages with many colored plates of fowls true to life. It tells all about chickens, their prices, their care, diseases and remedies. All about Incubators, their prices and their operation. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It's an encyclopedia of chickendom. You need it. Only 15c. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 909, Freeport, Ill.

Baby Chicks Live or Die
As Their Vitality is High or Low
All about it in Free Pamphlet
Address Box 102-J, BROWN'S MILLS, N. J.

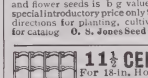
Bird Lovers read Bishop's "Treatise on Birds and Animals." 100 pages of valuable information, profusely illustrated. 15c. postpaid, or 25c. including box of Bishop's Bird Dainties (Luxury and Upbuild for Birds).

BISHOP, The Bird Man, Dept. 10, Baltimore, Md.
"The Bird House with a National Reputation."

Fine Garden For 94c

Cut down cost of living by growing vegetables in yard. This splendid assortment of vegetable and flower seeds is big value at $5.20—our special introductory price only 94c. Complete directions for planting, cultivating and harvesting, free. Write for catalog O. S. Jones Seed Co., Box 733-D, Sioux Falls, S. D.

11½ CENTS A ROD



For 18-in. Hog Fence, 22 3-4c
For 40-in. Farm Fence, 27c
48-in. Poultry Fence. 100 styles and heights. Catalogue free.
KITSELMAN BROS. Box 237 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

Print Your Own

Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $18. Rotary $60. Save money. Big profit printing for others. All easy, rules sent. Write fact—for press catalog. Type cards, paper, &c. THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

and waste more material than the company could afford. But he counseled Sidney against any resort to force to maintain an armed industrial situation.

"It is possible, Sid, that other men will walk out in a short time. It would not surprise me if half or three-fourths of our men go out this winter. If the works close down, you will have to make a new contract with Washington. Pray for wisdom. Don't forget we are acting now under orders from another Master. And don't worry."

CHAPTER XX

EVENTS moved rapidly after Sidney's return to Dockville.

His father's surmise came almost exactly true. Stuart and McLeish differed point blank about the policy to be pursued. Sidney deferred largely to Merrill, an old and experienced superintendent. Merrill was for getting new men to put into the casting room, but for pursuing every peaceful method possible. A few men were secured. They were not molested by the men who had gone out. But a month later over a thousand men struck from the fitters and riveters. At the end of two weeks more, less than 1,500 men were in the yard. And one day two weeks later these all walked out, leaving Cushing's shipyard empty except for the superintendents and office force.

Merrill, Stuart, McLeish and Sidney met in Sidney's room and McLeish said in his dry Scotch manner,

"I believe I will take that personally conducted tour to the Holy Land my minister has been talking about. There will be nothing doing here till the birdies nest again."

"It looks as if we were tied up indefinitely. You'll have to go down to Washington and see the powers that be about our contract. The whole thing is in the air," said Merrill.

But as it happened at this crisis, for the first time in his life Sidney's father was taken ill. It was a fever that put him in the prison hospital and kept him there three months.

Armstrong sent for Sidney and he took up quarters in the prison as a guest of the warden. Night after night Brander Cushing's spirit drew near the shores of that other country and then drew back before the prow touched the landing-place. Night after night Sidney watched, not like a son, but like a mother, over that almost breathless body and prayed (oh, how he prayed!) with heart's yearning for healing mercy.

In that time he came to know Warden Armstrong and love him. The man simply compelled his affection by what he was and did. There was not a hardened, brutalized, desperate, God-forsaken creature in that State prison that Warden Armstrong did not love with all his heart.

When Brander Cushing finally came safely back from that mysterious journey it was five months since the shipyard had been closed. Four thousand men idly tramped the streets of Dockville, jammed its saloons, where they spent the last cent and more, and grew every day more restless, irritable and unreasonable.

Sidney had succeeded through Stuart and Merrill in making some of the necessary arrangements about the ship contract with the government; but there was a part of the business which needed his own presence at Washington, and as soon as he was able to leave his father he planned to go down there.

"Will you see Admiral Marston, Sid?"

"No, father. I don't expect to." Sidney spoke with a sigh.

"I am sorry. Sorry, Sid."

"Miss Marston and her mother are still abroad. I do not know where."

"Do you still think of her, Sid?"

"Yes. I wrote her five months ago I have had no answer."

"It is because of her father and mother?"

"I think so—yes."

"And on my account?"

Silence.

"I am sorry, sorry, Sid. What trouble for multitudes grows out of my sin!"

"No, father!" For the first time since his conversion Sidney felt a pang of real distress. "I cannot bear to hear you speak like that. If Admiral Marston and his wife shut us out on account of—of your being here, I cannot continue to hold the same feeling for Miss Marston. But—I think she does not care any longer."

When Sidney reached home a quantity of mail had accumulated at the house. Most of this was of a business nature, and as he planned to go to Washington the next day, he attended to those letters first. But among his personal letters he noted one with an English postmark and an unfamiliar handwriting. As soon as he could, he opened this and read it. It was written at Portsmouth, England, and was from Mrs. Marston. She wrote:

MY DEAR MR. CUSHING: In your remarkable letter written to my daughter while we were at Balholm you gave her permission to share its contents with me, which she did.

It was, as I have said, a most remarkable letter. And after what may seem to you like an unreasonably long interval I am venturing to answer it myself, but in all I say I voice my daughter's sentiments as my own.

Aside from the facts which before your letter made impossible any thought of a union between our families, the astonishing confession you make about your attitude towards war renders even the slightest hope for you out of the question. We might in time have come to overlook the fact of your father's disgrace, but there would be no hope of reconciling such extreme views as you say you hold with Admiral Marston's position and that of my daughter and myself.

If you have reached the impractical mental and moral condition where you detest war, we have not. I do not hesitate to say frankly that I regard such sentiments as treason to the nation. What would become of us if we had no navy or army? The whole thing is impossible to imagine. If you should come into our family circle with such convictions, what happiness would be possible for any of us?

I trust to your honor as a gentleman (and I know I need not emphasize this) not to pursue your attentions towards my daughter. It will only result in useless suffering for her and all of us.

With all I have written I can truthfully say I have entertained for you a very high regard which I earnestly wish you had not in a great measure removed by the remarkable letter you wrote. Very sincerely yours,

LYDIA MARSTON.

The first feeling Sidney had after reading this letter was anger. After that passed, he experienced a feeling of dull pain. The fact that Pax had not answered his letter but had left it for her mother to do affected him strangely. When he called up her vivacious, kindly manner he was in despair. When he reflected that she had been willing to relegate such a matter to her mother, he was beset with loss of respect for her.

And with all else he realized that after what Mrs. Marston had written, and Pax had not written, his romance was over.

To be concluded

I Can Help You Save ¼ Your Food Bill MY FREE BOOK—125 RECIPES—TELLS HOW

Rapid Fireless Cookers

not only save your meat and grocery bills but half your kitchen work. And a Rapid will cut down 2, 3 and 4 hours of burning gas or coal to a few minutes. Let Me Mail This Recipe Book, Postage Paid. It explains just how you can make the less expensive cuts of meat, the less costly fowl—sweet, juicy, tender and delicious in a Rapid Fireless Cooker. The Rapid is the fastest, latest improved, most saving Fireless Cooker possible to buy.

Easiest to clean, most sanitary. All metal—no pads or cloth lining, beautifully finished case—dust proof top.

It stews, steams, bakes, boils, roasts, fries—cooks everything deliciously all inside the cooker.

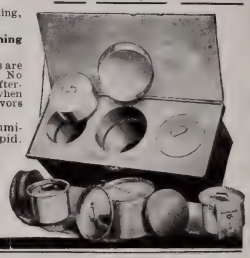
You, Madam Can Buy My Rapid at Lowest Factory Prices

No re-heating necessary. Rapid Radiators are the most scientific made and last forever. No heat or odors in the kitchen. Go out all afternoon, your dinner will be done perfectly when you are ready to take up—all the natural flavors and food goodness kept in.

Complete Outfit Highest Grade Aluminum Cooking Utensils with every Rapid. Write for 125-Recipe Book and special Factory-to-you Prices. Every Rapid Guaranteed. Your Money Paid Back if not satisfactory.

WM. CAMPBELL COMPANY
Dept. B-2 Detroit, Mich.

30 Days Trial



Onions

The largest, best keeping, handsomest Onions are produced from Northern Grown Seeds. Salzer's Seeds are grown in the extreme North, are pedigree stocks, and for purity, vitality and yield are unsurpassed. Catalog tells.

8 MARKET SORTS, 12c.

The following are the three most popular sorts: One large package each White Portugal, Yellow Globe Danvers and Red Wethersfield, to test, 12c.

FOR 16c.

10,000 kernels of splendid Lettuce, Radish, Tomato, Cabbage, Turnip, Onion, Celery, Parsley, Carrot, Melon and Flower Seeds producing bushels of vegetables and flowers for 16c postpaid. Our great Plant and Seed Catalog free for the asking. Write to-day.

John A. Salzer Seed Co., 2505, 8th St., La Crosse, Wis.

They die outdoors!

No mixing
No Spreading—
No Muss—No Trouble
Just crumble up a
Rat Bis-Kit
about the house. Rats will seek it, eat it, die outdoors. Easiest, quickest, cleanest way. Large size 25c. Small size 15c. All druggists or direct prepaid.
THE RAT BISCUIT CO.
2 N. Limestone St.
Springfield, Ohio.

SWEET PEAS

Buckbee's Giant Spencer Orchid Flowered Wavy Petaled Sweet Peas

For 10c I will send 5 separate, full-size packages, which in dainty, harmonious coloring are simply exquisite. My new FREE Book of Buckbee's "Full of Life" Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, 160 pages, 800 illustrations, 28 in colors. Most complete Garden & Farm Guide issued. Big Money Saver. Got a copy. Don't wait. Send for yours today.

H. W. Buckbee, Rockford Seed Farms,
2434 Buckbee St. Rockford, Illinois.

Prize Winning ASTERS

"I took first prize on your Asters." or "Your Asters were the finest I ever saw."—so say scores of my patrons. I want you and your friends to try them. Send a dime and addresses of two flower growers, and I will send you:

1. A full packet of my Exhibition Prize Aster Seed.
2. Coupon good for ten cents on any seed order.
3. My leaflet, "How to Grow Best Asters."
4. My new Illustrated Flower List, with dainty, hand-painted cover design (over 600 kinds—seeds, plants and bulbs).

You will be surprised to see at what a small cost you can have a beautiful flower garden. Write today for my List anyway—it is free—and plan your garden early.

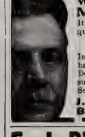
MISS EMMA V. WHITE, Seedswoman. 15th yr.
3012 Aldrich Ave. So. 3024 Minneapolis, Minn.

Cincinnati Iron Fence Co.

FREE CATALOGUE. AGENTS WANTED.

Largest Iron Fence Factory in Ohio.
Address Dep't H for prices. CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Write For Miller's Surprise Offer



It will please you. Lowest price on record for highest quality hatchers. Don't buy any till you hear from Miller

IDEAL

Incubators and brooders are backed by 25 years' success. Don't you want my startling surprise on price and quality? Send postal now.

I. W. MILLER CO.,
Box 179 Freeport, Ill.

PFILE'S 65 Varieties

LAND and Water Fowls. Farm-raised stock, with eggs in season. Send 2c for my valuable illustrated descriptive Poultry Book for 1912. Write Henry Pfile, Box 689 Freeport, Ill.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS

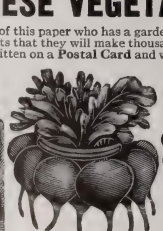
Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 39, Des Moines, Iowa

SEEDS OF ALL THESE VEGETABLES GIVEN AWAY FOR TESTING

Giant Climbing Tomato—Most wonderful tomato we ever knew. Climbs trellises 12 to 20 feet. Fruits often weigh 3 lbs. each, very smooth and solid, few seeds, handsome red color.

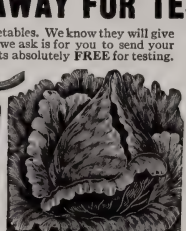
WE want every reader of this paper who has a garden to TEST these 6 splendid new vegetables. We know they will give such wonderful results that they will make thousands of new customers for us, and all we ask is for you to send your address at once plainly written on a Postal Card and we will mail you these 6 sample packets absolutely FREE for testing.

12 Day Lettuce—After once trying this variety you will say it is the quickest grower on record, always very tender, crisp and sweet.



15 Day Radish—A wonder for quick growth. Will produce radishes fit to use in 15 days. Is very crisp and tender, scarlet color.

Fancy Pickles—Here is a cucumber to be proud of. It is a marvel of beauty, grows very quick and just right size for pickling. You should grow this excellent variety.



60 Day Cabbage—Quickest growing cabbage in the world. Heads quick, very solid and splendid quality. Try it and you will say it is a wonder.

Sugar Parsnip—Very best variety for home gardens. Roots large, very smooth, flesh fine-grained and excellent quality

Remember we will send a Sample Packet of all these 6 varieties of SEEDS absolutely FREE to every reader of this paper who has a garden and will test them. Several dollars worth of vegetables can be grown from this lot of seeds. Write your name and address plainly on a Postal Card and it will bring them. Do it today before all the sample lots are taken.

Our 1912 CATALOGUE of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, and Rare Fruits with our Special Bargain List with Color Plates, will be sent FREE with every lot.

Address—MILLS SEED HOUSE, Dept. 21, ROSE HILL, N. Y.

In Temptation

Sunday School Temperance Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IN THE temptation of Jesus three "fiery darts of the adversary" were broken by him on one leaf of Deuteronomy as an impenetrable shield. The first temptation was an appeal to the innocent physical appetite of a hungry man. The devil, who surely did not proclaim himself with horns and hoofs, but came, no doubt, as an angel of light, such as sometimes ministered to Jesus, pointed him to round stones that looked like loaves, and bade him turn them to bread by a selfish and material use of the new miraculous powers that he possessed for high, unselfish purposes. Jesus answered (as Dr. Holland renders his words):

Oh, not by bread alone is manhood nourished
To its supreme estate;
By every word of God have lived and flourished
The good men and the great.

The second temptation bade him make a great spectacle to convince men suddenly of the truths he brought, which he knew must be slowly wrought in men's hearts. The third temptation was that he should miraculously establish an earthly kingdom, such as the Jews expected, using his divine powers to conquer rather than convert the nations. Because Jesus conquered these real temptations, he is sympathetic with all of us when we encounter temptation.

It is indeed as an angel of light that the temptation to drink often comes—as it came, for example, to Daniel's band, when meat and wine that had been sent from idol sacrifices to the king's table were, as a compliment, passed on to the Hebrew princes in the king's school. It seemed discourteous, if not also dangerous, to refuse such an honor. Many men, and even some women in such cases, have violated their conscience, if not their pledge also, by taking the drink. Esau, when hungry, proved too weak to resist the temptation to sacrifice his estate to gratify his appetite, and "found no place for repentance though he sought it diligently with tears." Gideon's ten thousand soldiers, though more courageous than those who were sent home, were found wanting when, with burning thirst after a long march, they came to a pond, where, though the enemy was on the hill just above them and might sweep down on them at any moment, they threw themselves flat on the ground to drink their fill—only three hundred exercising enough "bodily control" and self-mastery to bend only the knee and, with eyes toward the foe, toss a little water to their parched lips "as a dog lappeth."

In both the last-named cases, as in the temptation of Christ, natural appetite was the occasion of the temptation. If we are called to deny even natural appetites when the devil seeks to use them against us, much more should we resist the temptation to indulge at any time so abnormal an appetite as that which craves what is shown by its very name intoxicating drink to be a "toxin," that is, a poison, now shown by science to be harmful even when taken moderately in the mildest and purest wine and beer.

With three texts Jesus protected himself against temptation, and there are three teachings of God's oldest testament of natural law that provide the three strongest defenses against temptations to drink, affording unanswerable reasons why every one should totally abstain from all intoxicating drinks.

I. The Argument of Heredity

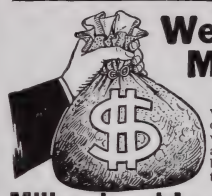
Stronger than the selfish arguments, that closing saloons will lessen taxes

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for February 25, 1912. Quarterly Temperance Lesson on the Baptism and Temptation of Jesus, Mark 1: 9-13; Matt. 4: 1-11. GOLDEN TEXT: "For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Heb. 2:18.

Write for Grand FREE Millwork Catalog on That Coupon!
5,000 Bargains Offered at 50c on the Dollar!

Cut This Out!
GORDON-VAN TINE CO.
2793 Case St., Davenport, Iowa
Please send the FREE BOOKS checked below, to
Name.....
Address.....
Occupation.....
☐ Millwork ☐ Lumber
☐ Roofing ☐ Plan Book
If you wish the PLAN BOOK, enclose 10c for postage and mailing.



We Hand You All the Middlemen's Profits

We will sell you the finest quality of Millwork, Lumber and other Building Material at one-half what dealers ask. In our latest Catalogs we offer over 5,000 wonderful bargains. Our Mill-to-Consumer prices save you all middlemen's profits. Our immense plant is filled with a vast stock of the best building material in America. Our prices save the public more than a million dollars a year.

Millwork and Lumber for Houses, Barns and Outbuildings at Huge Reductions

We own our own mills, warehouses and lumber yards. We pay no tribute to the lumber barons or the sash and door combine. Hence we are able to sell our output at huge reductions in price.

You can save several hundred dollars on the cost of a new house or barn by buying direct from our Grand Free Catalog instead of through retail dealers. In the past five years we have sold Millwork and Lumber for more than one hundred thousand houses.

8-Room House

$857 buys all the Lumber and Millwork for this 8-room house. Plan No. 121.

Bungalow

$938 buys all the Lumber and Millwork for this beautiful bungalow. Plan No. 106.

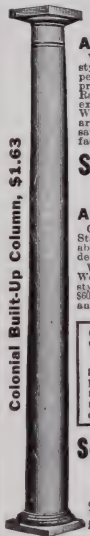
8-Room House

$790 Buys all the Lumber and Millwork for this handsome 8-room house. Plan No. 145.

7-Room House

$1,013 buys all the Lumber and Millwork for this 7-room house. Plan No. 113.

Colonial Built-Up Column, $1.63



Windows
At 50c on the Dollar
We offer a thousand sizes and styles of Windows from 50 to 75 per cent below retail dealers' prices. Plain Rail and Check Rail Windows, Art Windows in exclusive designs, Leaded Glass Windows to match any style of architecture. We guarantee safe delivery, quality and satisfaction.

Stair and Porch Millwork
At 50c on the Dollar
On material for building Stairs and Porches we save you about 50 per cent of the retail dealers' prices.
We carry Stair and Porch Work in a great variety of styles. We can save you from $60 to $125 on a flight of stairs and from $15 to $30 on a porch.

67c for 2-Light Check Rail Window

Vast Stock of Doors
At 50c on the Dollar
We carry a greater variety of styles in Doors than any other concern. Our prices are the lowest. Plain Doors, Fancy Doors, Art Glass Doors—all of highest quality in materials and workmanship.

Millions of Feet of Mouldings
At 50c on the Dollar
Immense stock of finest Mouldings; Corner, Head and Base Blocks, Inside Finish, Flooring, Ceiling, etc., etc., at rock-bottom prices. All bright, new, clean stock—quality guaranteed.

77c for this Strong Door

$5000 Plan Book Free
Over 50 designs for Houses, Cottages, Bungalows, etc., costing from $600 to $5,000. Most practical Plan Book ever issued. Every house shown has actually been built at the figures stated. This beautiful book is free. Send a dime for postage and mailing.

Send Coupon at Top of This Page or Write a Letter or Postal Card
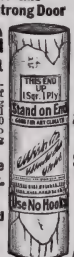
Do it now and by return mail you will receive our Grand Free Catalogs with 5,000 record-breaking bargains. Build, remodel or repair at a saving of 50 per cent. Sign and mail the Coupon.

LUMBER Prices Lowered!
You can save $100 to $300 on every carload of Lumber bought from us. We sell more lumber in a day than most dealers sell in six months.
Grades Guaranteed. Write for FREE LUMBER PRICE LIST; send your lumber bill for Free Estimate.

ROOFING
At 50c on the $1
Genuine Flint-Coated, Waterproof and Fire-Resisting Roofing. Every roll guaranteed 5, 8 or 10 years, according to weight. Roofing Catalog Free.
Price per square of 108 square ft.
93c Quality Guaranteed



8-Room House

$698 buys all the Lumber and Millwork for this 8-room house. Plan No. 100.

Farm Barn

$686 buys all the Lumber and Millwork for this barn. Plan No. 202.

$644 buys all Lumber and Millwork for this 6-room cottage. Plan No. 104.

GORDON-VAN TINE CO., 2793 Case St., Davenport, Iowa

Split Hickory Vehicle
1912 Big FREE BOOK is Ready
Write a postal—Phelps pays the postage to you.

H. C. Phelps Pres.

Phelps 2 Year Guarantee
—Shows You the Biggest Selection of Buggies in America —Saves You Big Money

PHELPS' shows you more styles this year in his big book than ever before. And every buggy price saves you big money—has sold 150,000 farmers. Let him show you in photographs how a good buggy should be made—and what made of. Phelps knows. They're all highest grade—over 125 styles—every kind—auto seat Buggies, Surreys, Runabouts, etc.,—all sold direct to user on 30 Days' Free Road Test—2 Years Guarantee. Don't you want the book? A Postal gets it. H. C. Phelps, Prest.

Split Hickory Vehicles
On 30 Days FREE Road Test

$25 and up. Send a postal—get the Book—let Phelps talk through it to you direct—the way he has sold 150,000 farmers.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. COMPANY Station 236, Columbus, O.
Largest Factory in the World Selling Vehicles Direct.

Paint Sample Book Free

If you intend to paint anything this season, whether your house, barn, fence or out buildings, or if you need paint for your floor, or for the inner wood work of your home, or if you need paint or varnish for any purpose whatever, before you buy, write us and say "Send me your special paint color sample book," and by return mail we will send you our great paint book which contains over one hundred sample colors of paints and varnishes for every purpose. It shows over sixty color samples of our famous high-grade ready mixed

House Paint at 83c a Gal.

over seventy color samples of our very high-grade fence, roof and

Barn Paint at 43c a Gal.

shingle stain at 48c a gallon, varnish stain at $1.28 a gallon, household enamels at $1.45 a gallon, wagon and implement paint at $1.30 a gallon, carriage paint at $1.63 a gallon, floor paint at 99c a gallon, calcimine at 4 1-2c a pound, and paints and varnishes for all kinds of work at very low prices.

Guaranteed 5 Years

We guarantee our mixed paints not to crack or peel during 5 years of service—if it should we will furnish new paint free; and a gallon will positively cover at least 250 square feet of surface with two coats. Don't delay, but sit down right now and write for our great paint book, and see the beautiful colors and marvelously low prices, and read our wonderfully liberal 5-year guarantee which protects you absolutely.

Write for Sample Book

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 150-162 W. Madison St. Chicago

APPLE TREES

We offer to the planter 200,000 Apple trees, 800,000 Peach, 50,000 Pear, 50,000 Plum, 100,000 Cherry, 300,000 Carolina Poplar, and millions of Grape and small fruits. Secure varieties now Pay in spring. Buy from the man who has the goods and save disappointment at planting time. Catalog Free to everybody.
Sheerin's Wholesale Nurseries, Dansville, N.Y.

Let Adler The Piano Man Save You Half

ON AN

ADLER-Southern Piano

Take Your Own Time To Pay

My Original Adler Plan Reduces Cost of Living—Wipes Out All Middlemen—Banishes Competition.

My 30-Day Free Trial, No Money Down Offer is Sweeping the Country Like Wildfire—All Records Broken—Most Successful Nation-Wide Sale of High-Grade Pianos Ever Known.

The fact that the present high cost of living is too high is due to several factors; chief among them is the several added profits of the numerous middlemen who stand between the manufacturer and consumer—and from the high places of the land has at last gone forth the cry—"Get together—manufacturers—consumers! Get together!" I want to say to you that the common-sense way to reduce the high cost of living is not by denying yourself but by skillful buying—buying of such manufacturers as cut out the middlemen and put all these additional profits in YOUR pockets.

My Plan Revolutionizes Piano Selling

I firmly believe that if there were a piano in every home in America we would be better citizens because of the elevating power of music, and because I want to make it possible for every music-loving family to know the real pleasures of piano music, I have originated the wonderful Adler plan of selling pianos, by which every home can enjoy the delights of a pure toned, Adler-Southern Upright of exquisitely handsome design and durable construction.

Send Me Not One Penny

My Adler-Southern Upright Piano, like my Adler Organ, must sell itself after free trial in your home and I cannot afford to have a single dissatisfied customer. If I required money in advance I would seem to be trying to bind you to some kind of agreement. But I do not —I take all the risk.

Every Adler Piano is shipped direct from the great $500,000 Adler Factory to the home at lowest wholesale factory prices. I can save you half your piano money, because the Adler Piano absolutely wipes out all Middlemen and gives you, the User, their profits. The Adler-Southern Upright not only saves you this, but gives you a piano of clear, permanent tone, responsive, elastic action, durability and finish.

Try It A Whole Month Free

Send for my Piano Catalog. Look it over and tell me the style you like best. Let me ship it to your home at my risk. Keep it a month. Play on it. When you are convinced that the Adler-Southern Upright is the best piano you ever saw at any price, pay for it in small convenient amounts—I will not even charge you interest on payments. No salesmen, no collectors. If you are not convinced after 30 days' trial, return piano: I will stand all the freight charges, you will be nothing out.

And this is not all—play on it 365 days—and if not exactly as represented at the end of that time—you get your money back. $500,000 Guarantee Bond good for 25 years.

Adler Stands For A Square Deal

I not only save you much money, but make you a most liberal free trial offer, and give you easiest payment terms, on my Famous Adler-Southern Upright Piano. You have everything in your favor, when dealing with me. Remember, I am the man who made the Adler Organ famous; and my wonderful success with the Adler Organ induced me to apply the same liberal methods in placing my Adler Piano before the music-loving public.

Mail Coupon! You cannot afford to buy a piano until you have seen my plan to save you half your piano money, with your own time to pay. Coupon or a postal will do.

CYRUS L. ADLER, President,
Adler Manufacturing Co. Louisville, Ky.

CYRUS L. ADLER, Pres't., Adler M'f'g. Co.,
3173 W. Chestnut St., Louisville, Ky.

Send me your Free Illustrated Adler Piano Book and Special Offer.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

Adirondack Foot Warmers

for Autoing, Driving and Sitting Outdoors

Insure coziness, warmth, comfort! Make living outdoors in Winter a keen enjoyment. Worn by men and women. Sheep-skin with heavy, warm wool under-sun inches high. State shoe size and and we'll try to be as good as ours or less. Money back if unsatisfactory.

$1.50 PAIR, SENT PREPAID

Illustrated Catalog of Outdoor Outfittings FREE

W. C. LEONARD & CO.
63 Main St. Saranac Lake, N. Y.

GREIDER'S FINE POULTRY

Book and calendar for 1912 contains 200 pages, 72 varieties pure bred, 62 colored plates. Many other illustrations, descriptions. Incubators and brooders. Low prices on all stock eggs. How to raise and make hens lay. Get my plans. They all say it a great—this book—only 15 cents.

B. H. GREIDER, Box 79, Rheems, Pa.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries.

Coiled Spring Fence Co., Box 19 Winchester, Ind.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

and increase legitimate business, or even the proofs of insurance tables that the man who drinks is cutting down the duration of his life, is the proof science is bringing that wine taken by a father or mother may blight the lives of their children. A man may be willing to fly the motto for himself, "A short life and a happy one," and risk both health and property, but not many fathers will be indifferent when shown the overwhelming proofs that intemperate parents have fewer and weaker children than temperate ones.

Professor C. F. Hodge, of Clark University (Physiological Aspects of the Liquor Problem), found that only 17.4 per cent. of the progeny of his alcoholized dogs were able to live, while 90.2 per cent. of the progeny of the non-alcoholized pair were normal. Professor Demme, of Berne, found almost the same proportion of normal and abnormal offspring in the descendants of ten alcoholic families (17 per cent.) and ten temperate families (88.5 per cent.).

Not only the chronic drinker who has injured his constitution by alcohol, but the one who poisons his body cells by temporary indulgence in this race poison, may find himself afterward confronted with the evidence of his unfitness.

II. The Argument of Patriotism

It was an epoch-making event when the German emperor, in his famous speech to the naval cadets, urged his people to join the Good Templars and Blue Cross Societies, both made up of abstainers, not on individualistic but on patriotic grounds, as an essential condition of national efficiency and supremacy. He said, in part:

"The next war and the next naval battle will demand of you sound nerves. Nerve power will decide the victory. Now, the nerves are undermined and endangered from youth up by the use of alcohol. Later, you will have opportunity to see the target ships and the effect of modern projectiles upon vessels, and from this you will be able to form an idea of the conditions in a battle. If you are in one, you will see frightful devastation and a multitude of things happening. Then is the time for steady nerves and a cool head. Victory will lie with the nation that uses the smallest amount of alcohol. That, gentlemen, must be your position. Then through you the troops will be shown an example, and that goes farthest with the men. Therefore, this is what I expect from you: that here in the naval academy or on shipboard, in all comradeship and friendliness, which need not suffer in any way thereby, you watch yourselves and each other in this regard, that you do not count the use of alcohol one of your privileges."

The patriotic argument has almost won the greatest of moral crusades, that of China against opium, where the cry has been, not that opium injures individual health and happiness, and hurts business, and increases crime and poverty and taxes, but rather this: "That China may be strong." The Chinese people have noted the victories of anti-opium Japan over both China and Russia, and they have noted and associated with opium their own weakness, and so are struggling to rid their nation of it. France also has adopted the argument of patriotism in putting up official posters against "alcoholism," a word we ought to substitute for drunkenness, as the chief peril to be avoided. It means, in the words of the poster: "The chronic poisoning which results from the habitual use of alcohol even when the latter would not produce drunkenness."

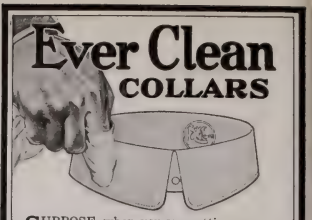
III. The Argument of Race Degeneracy

Great Britain, alarmed by the fact that 80 per cent. of those who offered themselves for the Boer War could not pass the physical examination, adopted the official poster, but with this heading, "Alcoholism and Physical Degeneracy," which suggests that not one race, but the whole human race is in peril of degeneracy through the increasing use of alcohol. It is a new condition that now confronts Europe, in that new methods of manufacture and preservation and transportation have cheapened drinks and carried them everywhere just when the working classes are getting higher wages and shorter hours of labor, and are living to a much larger extent in cities, with social inducements to drink greater than ever before. And these conditions are being rapidly extended to the teeming millions of Africa and Asia and the islands of the sea, where only mild native drinks were in common use until recently.

The first great battle against race degeneracy should be made at the Fourth Brussels Congress on Alcoholism, meeting in 1912 to consider what steps the great commercial nations holding territory in Africa can take to check the natives' increasing use of liquors, which are most injurious alike to morals and missions and legitimate commerce. Not only churches and reform societies, but chambers of commerce everywhere, in protection of honest trade as well as from considerations of humanity, should bring irresistible pressure to bear on this parliament of the world in support of the proposal that all the civilized governments shall by international agreement prohibit the sale of all intoxicants and opium among all the uncivilized and newly civilized races.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER'S VIEW

The Almanac is fine. I never saw anything like it. It is everything in a nutshell. I am an old subscriber, past seventy-three years. I don't know how I could do without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. S. H. CRAUN.
North River, R. I.



Ever Clean COLLARS

SUPPOSE, when you are putting on your collar, something touches it, making a dirty spot. What would you give to be able to wipe it right off clean, instead of having to change to a fresh collar?

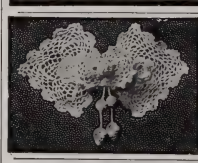
Absolutely the only difference between an Ever Clean Collar and the one you are now wearing, is that you can wipe spots off the Ever Clean. A damp cloth does it.

Just the same as yours in style and finish. Made in Troy, N. Y., and invisibly waterproofed by our new, patented German process. Not a celluloid or rubber imitation collar.

All fashionable styles. Write us size, style and brand you wear, and enclose 25 cents. We'll send you, postpaid, an Ever Clean Collar of the same style.

Price 25 cents a collar.

Ever Clean Collar & Cuff Co.
253-36th Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

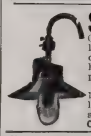


HAND MADE
Crochet Bow
34c in a box

We carry different styles of Bows and Jabots exclusively Hand Made. High Class Hand Made goods sold at machine goods price.

Write for Catalog

YAMA CO.
104 Fifth Ave. N. Y.



SUNLIGHT AT NIGHT

Our new inverted gas burner, 108 candle power light, made of steel enameled green, with white crystal globe, burns 3½ cubic feet of gas per hour. Perfect combustion, never smokes if properly regulated.

Also our Sun-Ray Kerosene Mantle Burners 100 candle power light. One quart of kerosene lasts 16 hours. Money back if not as represented. Particulars free. Simplex Gaslight Co., 25 Park Row, New York City.

The largest number of successful clients is our proof of

Patents that PROTECT

For Facts about Prizes, Rewards, etc., send 8c stamps for our new 128 page book of intense interest to Inventors. R. S. & A. B. Lacey, Dept. 35 Washington, D. C. Estab. 1869

This is HARRY A. CRUMBLING, who has a wonderful record.

A Bright Boy

This is the Pin and a

Certificate of Honor

Every Christian Herald Boy is given a Certificate of Honor and a Handsome Gold and Enamel Pin when he has sold only fifty copies. It is one of the first prizes he gets and all the boys are proud of the honor of the award. Harry is wearing the Gold Pin on the pocket of his coat.

New Boys are given a free start in business, as we supply the capital (fifty cents' worth of magazines).

All you have to do is to sign this coupon and mail it to-day.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

The Safe Investment of Your Money

In considering the investment of your money the very first requirement is the security of the principal. There are other features, of course, but the fundamental security of the investment is foremost. The proper selection of an investment bond which has this primary qualification, requires technical knowledge. Naturally and necessarily the experienced banker, whose constant business it is to investigate bonds of all kinds, is possessed of this technical knowledge.

If you are considering the investment of funds, and will state your requirements in the way of interest return, and maturity, and amount, we will be very glad to suggest securities for your attention.

Write for our Circular S-642

Guaranty Trust Company of New York

28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - 156,000,000

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.

¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.

¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.

¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.

¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.

¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

Write today for the Book

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

CHOICE VIRGINIA FARMS
ALONG THE
Chesapeake & Ohio Ry

Abundant rainfall (4 in. per month) rich soil, mild winters, close Eastern markets. 10 acre farms $275, Write today for booklet "Country Life in Virginia" 144 pages and low excursion rates. Address K. T. CRAWLEY, Industrial Agent, C. & O. Ry. Room 129, Richmond, Virginia

C&O

$15.00 AN ACRE AND UP

SAFE INVESTMENTS

A SAFE investment in a general way may be defined to be one that has ready convertibility with a fixed, certain and permanent rate of return. The safe investment is seldom associated with the speculative element. Its very stability is a taboo to the bulls and bears, who reap their respective harvests as the prices of certain securities rise or fall. The seasoned bond seldom inflates or shrinks, and so the owner of such an asset can at any time estimate its value with as much certainty as he can know the cash to his credit after he has balanced his bank book.

A Constant Temptation

When a man who is getting from 4½ to 5 per cent. on his investment learns that his more venturesome neighbor is realizing 20 per cent. on Western mining stock, he is apt to sit apart and question with himself. If he knows that his neighbor has been drawing these dividends semi-annually for two or three years, the conservative man is apt to censure his own timidity, and the more he thinks it over the more firmly he is convinced that the higher percentage is the only road to fortune. Should the man with the low rate of interest be tempted to sell out and invest in the 20 per cent. mining stock, he will find that it has soared out of his reach, and it may be that he consoles himself with the assurance that if another such chance happens along—and it is astonishing how often chances of equal promise are being presented—he will seize on it at once.

There is a factor known in trade as "the law of averages." It has been ascertained by this that the very high per cents and the very low per cents will average about 4 per cent. The case of the man with the 20 per cent. mining stock is not imaginary. He drew his dividends for three years, then they stopped — stopped permanently. He tried to sell out at the recent high price, and was shocked to find that he could not sell at any price. He had invested one thousand dollars, got back six hundred in so-called dividends, and was out four hundred. The man who had invested in the 4½ per cent. security got his dividends regularly, and his security was of a character that could be converted into the original cash at any moment. The first man was fortunate in his foolishness, for he did get back something; usually such promising investments yield only disappointment and impoverishment. The thieves have the money and are encouraged to seek out other victims with hard-earned cash to invest.

A Banker's Opinion

We recently had a talk with an officer of one of the oldest and strongest banks in New York City, on the subject of small investments. He said in effect: "Only those with an inside knowledge of such things have any idea of the enormous sums lost annually through the credulity of people who have accumulated a little money through much self-denial and the hardest kind of work. Such people have come to me for advice, and I have given it honestly, but in most cases I could see that my visitors were disappointed at the smallness of the returns promised by my plans. In their hunger for higher rates of investment they appeared to lose completely all thought of the safety of the investment. Instead of acting on my advice, many of these people, allured by the promises of some wild-cat scheme attractively presented through alluring printing and enforced by the eloquence of well-dressed professional promoters and sharpers, have drawn out their money from my bank and invested it in ventures like the rubber plantations of Central America, or the stocks of a fabulous gold mine with a high-sounding name. Lost it, you ask? Why, of course they lost it, and in the same way the farmer and the tradesman throughout the country are losing it day by day and month by month to the extent of one hundred millions a year, according to our postal authorities, for the supply of sharpers is kept above the average by the ceaseless supply of suckers. In my twenty-eight years of banking experience, I have known of thousands of men, aye, and of poor women, too, who were defrauded, robbed by these legalized bandits. If any of these people ever got back any considerable part of their original investment, the fact has never come under my notice, and I move about with my eyes open."

The man who has saved up a little money for investment, and that is just the kind of a man we are writing for, should sit down and carefully consider every proposition looking to his giving up his cash, and this applies to the solicitors in his own neighborhood as well as to those who come from afar. It should be kept constantly in mind that capital, in unlimited quantities, and controlled by men trained to business methods, is ever on the lookout for profitable investment, and this does not mean so much large returns as assured and fairly reasonable returns. If to-day some man could launch an enterprise requiring one hundred million dollars and which he could convince these business men would pay six per cent. annually with as much certainty as the United States meets and will continue to meet the 3 per cent. interest on some of its bonds, within one month from the date of his announcement the desired capital would be subscribed for five times over, and the stock would command a high premium. If to-morrow the United States decided on a loan of a thousand million of dollars at 5 per cent., the banks would gobble it up so quickly that not a share would be left for the general public.

The Plausible Agent

Now, when the well-dressed, plausible agent appears—he usually comes from a distant city where his company has its headquarters—and solicits you, after he has induced you to read his fairy-like "literature," to invest in a sure-enough eight or ten per cent. stock or bond, would it not be well to ask him why he has not presented his "proposition" to the great bankers of New York, Chicago, or San Francisco, or any other city he may hail from? If the enterprise which this agent is booming, for a large commission to himself, were nearly as good as he represents it to be, don't you know that instead of having to peddle its shares among farmers and tradesmen of distant States, that capitalists from all the world would be crowding the company's offices with certified checks to be exchanged for stock. But the credulous dupe never gives a thought to such matters until thinking is of no avail.

While United States bonds are regarded as the safest kind of securities, the rate per cent. is so low as to offer no particular inducement to the small investor. It would be a mistake, however, to assume that safety is to be measured by the high or low rate of interest in all cases, particularly when the highest rate is not extravagant. The bonds of nearly all our States are quite as safe as are the bonds of the United States, and the same may be said of the bonds of our great and nearly all our smaller cities, though in the case of the latter it would be well to ascertain the reason for the bond issue, the total indebtedness, and the yearly increase or decrease in the taxable real property. But whether the investment is made in the bonds just mentioned, or in some other form of safe security—and there are very many such—the investor should never make a purchase which he cannot pay for outright, nor invest other than the money which he can afford to set aside for the purpose.

How Brownell Got

what he wanted is an interesting story. We give it more complete in last week's Saturday Evening Post and the Literary Digest.

Brownell uses a Duplex (multiple total Burroughs Adding Machine. The Duplex is different from any other adding machine. It is different from any other of the 86 Burroughs adding machines.

The ordinary adding machine carries a grand total —the only total it can give. The Duplex breaks the totals up into any number of groups of items, giving a total of each item while carrying a grand total of all the groups.

You probably don't know what this means to your work. Brownell didn't. But he says he'd rather know than to have $10,000 in cash and not know.

Let us tell you what it means, without a cent of cost or obligation to you.

Burroughs Adding Machine Co.
210 Burroughs Block, Detroit, Michigan

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

for Large and Small Investors

You can now invest small sums in first-class mortgage bonds. You can have the same advantages which for hundreds of years capitalists alone have enjoyed. Whether you have $10 or $10,000 to invest, you can have the same security and the same returns. Send for our booklet on yielding 5% to 5½%, with the guarantee of this Company and the big 1st class New York and Suburban Real Estate back of them. The safest, surest, most profitable investment for earnings consistent with absolute security.

FIRST MORTGAGE TRUST BONDS

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department

Write for Booklet.

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

LAW STUDY AT HOME

Graduate correspondence students most successful at bar examination. Write today for proof and our free 112 page catalog. We make your home a university. Leading home-study law course in America. Our own modern text—prepared by deans and professors from the big law colleges—Harvard, Chicago, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Stanford and others. Very low cost and easy terms. Also business law. We guarantee to coach free a graduate failing to pass any bar examination.
LA SALLE EXTENSION UNIVERSITY, Box 2492, Chicago, Ill.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES

VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the Mf'rs.—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Nothing excels this simple remedy for Throat Troubles. A prompt relief in Bronchial and Lung Affections. Sixty years' reputation. Sample free. JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services. WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

A TROUBLE MAKER

Coffee Poison Breeds Variety of Ills.

A California woman who didn't know for twenty years what kept her ill, writes to tell how she won back her health by quitting coffee:

"I am 54 years old," she says, "have used coffee all my life and for 20 years suffered from indigestion and insomnia. Life was a burden and a drag to me all the time, and about once a year my ailments got such hold upon me that I was regularly 'sick in bed' for several weeks each time.

"I was reluctant to conclude that coffee was the cause of my trouble, but I am thankful that I found out the truth.

"Then I determined to use Postum exclusively—for a week at first—for I doubted my ability to do without coffee for any length of time. I made the Postum carefully, as directed, and before the week expired had my reward in a perceptible increase in strength and spirits.

"Seeing the good that my short experiment had accomplished, I resolved to continue the use of Postum, cutting out the coffee entirely. This I did for nine months, finding, daily, increased cause for gratification at my steadily improving health. My indigestion gradually left me, my sleep returned, I gained 26 pounds in weight, my color changed from sallow to a fresh, rosy hue and life became a blessing.

"Then I thought I would try coffee again, and did so for a few weeks. The punishment for deserting my good friend, Postum, was a return of my old troubles.

"That taught me wisdom, and I am now and shall be all my life hereafter using Postum exclusively and enjoying the benefits it brings me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Elastic Stockings

From pure gum rubber, woven absolutely to your measure, at the same price you pay for poor-wearing, ready-made goods.

Our Stockings are best that can be made. Write for self-measurement blank, testimonials and FACTS ABOUT VARICOSE VEINS. We furnish all appliances for invalids. Write us your needs

Worcester Elastic Stocking & Truss Co., 58 Front Street, Dept. 9, Worcester, Mass.

LAME PEOPLE

The Perfection Extension Shoe is worn with ready-made shoes. Both feet look alike. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet.

HENRY F. LOTZ, 313—3rd Ave., New York

If it is hard for you to read the fine print of a magazine—if your eyes easily become tired—send at once for "THE EYE" a free illustrated booklet that will teach you how to strengthen your eyes and keep them strong.

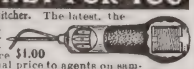
THE IDEAL CO., Dept. 4, 134 West 65th St., N. Y. City

WE TEACH MILLINERY BY MAIL

The Lead helps those who help themselves. Don't be a drone; save money making your own hats or make money making hats for others. Send today for our free book telling how we can aid you to lead a useful life.

National College of Millinery, 1094 Main St. Kansas City, Mo.

BIG MONEY FOR YOU



Selling the Speedy Stitcher. The latest, the best ever invented. Sews like a machine. Mends anything. Retail price $1.00 Guaranteed. Special price to agents on sample. Wholesale prices lowest ever offered, over 200 per cent profit. Send for circular. Don't delay Automatic Awl Co., 75 Gardner Terrace. Worcester, Mass.

TRUSTWORTHY MEN AND WOMEN

Wanted as local representatives of responsible manufacturer. High class merchandise and clean selling methods. $10 to $20 per week guaranteed on easy conditions, with possibility of $2000 and advance. Experience not necessary. MANUFACTURER Box A.M. 276 Philadelphia

EARN MONEY IN SPARE TIME

The National Dress Goods Co., New York, needs a competent, responsible woman to represent them in each locality. Pleasant, permanent work. Free outfit, good pay. Write today for full particulars. National Dress Goods Company, Dept. 7 No. 260 West Broadway, New York.

WE PAY $80 A MONTH SALARY

and furnish rig and all expenses to introduce our guaranteed stock and poultry powders; money-back guarantee; outfit free; new plan; steady work. Address SIGLER CO., X 562, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS

Home Missionaries*

IT SEEMS almost an invidious task to compare with one another the saintly men and women who have laid down their lives for the home missionary cause. But without claiming for any especial one higher honor than is due to many others, it is surely proper to speak of those who have most touched our hearts.

One of the great home missionaries was born in 1838, in Princeton, N. J., and died in 1909, leaving behind him a memory which will live as long as our country. He was William Hobart Hare. His parents were pious Episcopalians, and behind them he had also a rich heritage of heroic blood from Puritan and Quaker sources. He was early dedicated to the service of the Lord. Beginning his preaching near Philadelphia, he was obliged to remove to Minnesota on account of his wife's failing health. Going up to Marquette shortly afterward, he saw many Indians. "They wandered about," he said, "as sheep having no shepherd."

For some years after this experience, he continued in ordinary ministerial work, but the sympathies which had been so powerfully stirred would not be quiet, and in 1872 he was elected missionary bishop of Niobrara, a large tract in Dakota and Nebraska, inhabited by the roving tribes of Poncas and Sioux, or Dakotas. His descriptions of his early visits among these tribes read like fiction, and very sensational fiction at that, the audiences in their paint and feathers, and the Indians outside in their unreclaimed barbarism. One, among the Lower Brulés, rode up beside the bishop's party, and remarked in a reckless manner, as he flourished his pistol, "I want my boy to go to school, but I am an old man. I am wounded all over. I like to fight. When a strange Indian threatens to kill me, I say, 'Kill away. That's what I like.'"

Many of his poor Indians received him with suspicion. One chief said, "All the white men that came before you stole our goods and did evil. How are we to know that you are different?" "Watch and see how we live." said the bishop.

Back and forth over his immense diocese, for years he traveled on horseback, carrying his bedding with him, stopping in dirty huts over night, eating coarse fare, and consorting perforce with the "roustabouts" of the frontier.

After a little, he was able to travel with his own tent and a horse and buggy, but his discomforts were not greatly abated. He did not mind them, for he was gaining the confidence and love of his wild charges. He taught them that they were men of the same sort as himself, that they were all his brothers. The results can well be imagined.

Says his biographer, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, "He possessed a rich gift of practical wisdom," also. Prompt, shrewd, seldom deceived, though never suspicious, kind-hearted to a fault, it is plain that he was well fitted to be the "great apostle to the Sioux."

His work later in banishing easy divorce from South Dakota was wonderful. In 1909, the last year of his life, the mayor and aldermen of Sioux Falls sent him a testimonial upon the thirty-six years of his Western labors, in which they said, "The civilization of our Indians is due more largely to you than to any other man. You have built schools and churches throughout the State and magnificent results have been accomplished." Read his life and see how noble it was.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, February 25. TEXT: Acts 10: 23-35.

Exceed Highest Expectation

The Universal Star Finder came promptly. The Women of the Bible arrived on the 3d inst. and The Christian Herald Almanac came this A.M. Many thanks! These gifts exceed my highest expectations.

May God continue to bless you and make you a great blessing. LYDIA A. FORNEY.
Harrisburg, Pa.

MOTHER

By Kathleen Norris

This Is One of the Great Books of the Year

Kathleen Norris

Its appeal is universal. Now in its fifth edition it is rapidly becoming one of the best sellers in the bookstores at $1.00 a copy. We thought so well of the book that we arranged to have the publishers print a special edition exclusively for CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers. Read the opinions quoted below.

(From the Outlook.)

"It is not easy to put into words the deep feeling that is stirred in response to an apparently simple story called Mother, written by Kathleen Norris. It is so natural that one pauses in reading with oft-repeated reminiscent smiles; so true that tender, remorseful memories keep the tongue silent, though the heart cries out; so sweet and noble that even the callous selfishness of frivolity must be pierced. All this in a perfectly unassuming story of a plain American family, practicing economy of the strictest sort, limited in opportunity, shabby, and happy. The book opens with a scene in a village schoolroom where Margaret, the oldest of a group of seven boys and girls, finds herself discontented, longing for much that she never has had, exclaiming that 'nothing ever happens to us except broken arms, and bills, and boilers bursting, and chicken-pox! It's drudge, drudge, drudge, from morning until night.' Poor, pretty Margaret! We follow her through happy fortune, as she thought, and such as she really enjoyed, but she returns to 'Mother' and home, to learn the beautiful, wonderful lesson which her mother's life of commonplace duties was to teach her. There is not an overstrained moment in the whole happy story. Just the dawning of true appreciation in a daughter's heart of the meaning of her mother's life, and the contrast it presented to that of the delightful woman whose social secretary Margaret has been. Mrs. Carr-Boldt busy! Milliner, manicure, butler, chef, club, card-table, tea-table—these and a thousand things like them filled her day, and they might all be swept away in an hour and leave no one the worse. Read one of the days passed by 'Mother,' the dearly loved, busy, practical mother, and see the difference. If this book, in no sense a moral tract, could be used as a gift book for the holidays, the effect of its common sense and truth would be of permanent value, awakening those who trifle and comforting those who toil for love."

"Both Mrs. Roosevelt and I were profoundly impressed with 'Mother' . . . I am particularly glad to have it."—Theodore Roosevelt.

"You can read it in an hour, but you will not forget it while you live."—Jeannette L. Gilder.

"What a joy it is to come upon a book of this kind—a really great little book."—The Continent.

"A story that gets at the root of things—one which will live long."—Hartford Post.

"A singularly touching and simple tale conveying a great message."—Chicago Tribune.

"A wonderful little book that belongs with the sweetest and best of American fiction."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"One of the finest, truest books of the year."—New York World.

OUR SPECIAL OFFER—We will send the book, Mother, postpaid, as a reward to any subscriber who will induce a friend or neighbor, not now on our list, to subscribe for The Christian Herald for one year, at $1.50.

Or—If you are an old subscriber about to renew, simply send us 50c. in addition to the regular yearly subscription price and we will send the book, Mother, and The Christian Herald to you for one yr. postpaid.

Or—To old subscribers only who have recently renewed their subscriptions, we will send the book, Mother, postpaid, on receipt of 50c.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK

Deformities of the Back

can be greatly benefited or entirely cured by means of the Sheldon Method.

The 17,000 cases we have successfully treated in our experience of over eleven years are absolute proof of this statement. So, no matter how serious your deformity, no matter what treatments you have tried, think of the thousands of sufferers this method has made happy. And, more—we will prove the value of the Sheldon Method in your own case by allowing you to

Use the Sheldon Appliance 30 days at our risk

You take no risk. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer at once. The photograph here shows how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Sheldon Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets. To weakened or deformed spines it brings almost immediate relief even in the most serious cases. You owe it to yourself to investigate it thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for our Free Book today and describe the nature and condition of your trouble as fully as possible so we can give you definite information.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO. 207 14th St., Jamestown, N.Y.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.

Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and list of Inventions Wanted, sent free. VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

THERE IS absolutely no word to express the efficacy of

Scott's Emulsion

in the treatment of

COUGHS, COLDS
BRONCHITIS
CATARRH, GRIPPE
AND RHEUMATISM

ALL DRUGGISTS 11-51

THE SENTINEL

WATCHMAN, watchman, what of the night?"
"O Lord, thy soldiers fight in the dark,
Without moon or stars, of light no spark,
And of many wounds they bear the mark."

"Watchman, watchman, what of the night?"
"O Lord, the sod is trampled and red
With the blood of thy brave soldier-dead.
But a gleam of light glows faint o'erhead."

"Watchman, watchman, what of the night?"
"O Lord, fresh soldiers press to the field;
Sounds anew the clash of shield on shield,
While slowly the lines of the enemy yield."

"Watchman, watchman, what of the night?"
"O Lord, the dawn now whitens the sky;
The shadows of night before it fly,
And thy soldiers lift high their battle-cry."

"Watchman, watchman, what of the dawn?"
"O Lord, the dim dawn has passed away,
Fast driven by the sun of happy day,
And thy soldiers fight in its full ray."

"Watchman, watchman, what of the day?"
"O Lord, thy rule by none is denied;
The peoples of earth in love abide,
While lion and lamb lie side by side."

OLIVE BOOTH GILES.

Among the Workers

—A TWO WEEKS' SERIES of meetings has just closed at Ellenboro, Wis., a preaching point on the Platteville Circuit, resulting in several conversions. The pastor, R. Harold Gee, was assisted by Evangelist F. A. Geisenheimer of Chicago.

—THE BERRY SCHOOL of Mount Berry, Ga., of which Martha Berry is founder and director, celebrated its tenth anniversary on January 25, 1912. The school now has enrolled some 300 students, boys and girls, with nearly as many more on the waiting list.

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN of Fairbury, Ill., are now engaged in a union revival meeting with all the churches of Council Bluffs, Ia. Notwithstanding the continued extreme cold (sometimes 25 below zero) the meetings are crowded and scores are converted.

—THE LATEST CONVENTION held under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement at Reading, Pa., was a powerful illustration of the fact that the movement has not lost its appeal to men. More than 2,000 attended the dinner the first evening, and the day sessions were remarkably well sustained.

—THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL Council of Women held an Anti-Mormon mass meeting in Carnegie Hall, New York City, January 10, for promoting the anti-polygamy amendment. Ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon, of Utah, Hans P. Freece, and other speakers of national reputation delivered addresses.

—UNION EVANGELISTIC services have been held with great success at Pontiac, Ill., by Evangelist Scoville and a company of helpers, under the auspices of the Men and Religion Forward Movement. A tabernacle was built by volunteer help in one day, capable of seating 3,000 persons, and a service was held in it the same evening. As many as four hundred people have come forward for prayers during the meetings.

—THE INSTITUTE AND TRAINING School of the Young Men's Christian Association has recently purchased a block of ground on the south side of Chicago, bounded on the north and south by Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Streets, and on the east and west by Drexel and Ingleside Avenues. It has also secured the initial $50,000 toward a fund intended to be $500,000 for the equipment needed for the work of the school in Chicago and the endowment of its educational work in Chicago and Lake Geneva, Wis.

—ANNA RAE MILLS, a missionary in Taiku, Korea, relates the following incident: "On the Japanese Emperor's birthday all pupils in government schools are required to bow to his picture in some public patriotic exercises. The head officials ordered that private school pupils should not be required to participate if it was contrary to religious principles, but our Taiku local officials ignored that order, and commanded our boys to be present and bow with the rest. Worship of the Emperor as a god is a part of Shintoism, the national religion of Japan, so of course our teachers said our boys could not do it. Then the officials began to abuse them, call them names, etc., and say they had no patriotism or loyalty. 'Oh, yes, we have,' said our teachers, 'only we show it in a different way.' 'How do you show it?' scoffed the officials. 'By praying to our God for the Emperor that he may be wise and good and prosperous,' was the reply. 'All right,' they said, 'come and pray at the public exercises.' They consulted Mr. Adams, who said, 'By all means, go ahead, only make sure they will give you a separate place on the program, lest you get into a box standing with the others, and refusing to bow.' So at the Japanese residency in those big official exercises our boys had a place on the program, all came forward, took off their hats reverently, while the elder stepped forward and prayed our God to bless the Emperor. Wasn't that 'going some,' in these days when so much is said of Japan's growing opposition to missions?"

The Courage of Truth*

DR. GOODELL tells a charming story of the christening of a child. He says: "When I alighted from the automobile which had been sent for me, I entered a very beautiful home where a large company were waiting for me. They were arrayed in richest gowns and wore jewels enough for a king's ransom. The young mother was a dream of beauty. As the father looked at his wife and child, his eyes expressed the devotion of his heart. At last, the service was over. Little groups gathered in congratulation around the parents and the beautiful baby. But neither father nor mother was a member of the church, and as I thought of the temptations which would press upon a child of wealth, I could not bear to think that the little one was not to have a father and mother confessedly given up to Christ and his church."

This faithful pastor seized a chance to speak alone with these worldly parents, read again slowly to them the solemn words with which he had just dedicated their child to God; explained to them the way in which wealth handicapped its children in the spiritual race; and begged them to acknowledge Christ by uniting with his church.

The reward of his noble courage was a request that he would come and talk more with them regarding the matter; and their ultimate conversion. Their home became as a bright and shining light, sanctified to the service of the Lord. And yet if Dr. Goodell had not pressed home their duty, in a way which exercised all his bravery, how different would have been the result!

Fear affects powerfully the whole physical organism. The pores of the skin, the action of the heart, the circulation of the blood, and especially the whole nervous system, are affected. Occasionally a man is rendered somewhat quicker of thought and action by fear; but generally panic and loss of sense result—in the common phrase, a man, under the stress of fear, loses his "presence of mind." If he is exposed to cold or infection, fear makes him a readier victim. To keep cool and unafraid in times of peril is one of the great tasks set before our humanity. The man who achieves it is more likely to succeed than is the coward.

Moral degeneration springs oftenest from fear. Thousands of men have first made the acquaintance of tobacco and of drink, who would never from choice have used them, but who succumbed to the fear of ridicule. Many a woman is suffering from the exactions of fashion and of custom, simply because she has not had the courage to resist them and follow her conscience. A wise writer has said that of all the obligations of life, one of the chiefest is courage.

Some rimester sings that the worst suffering he ever endured was from "troubles which did not arrive." The very word "panic," as Sir John Lubbock reminds us, has come to mean a terror without a cause. Perhaps it is not too much to say that fully half our fears spring from nothing. To a naturally timorous and anxious soul, the expense of will-power needed to overcome fear is very great. A few are too rash and need checking on the side of presumption and over-confidence; but the great mass of mankind may well take to heart Emerson's sage advice:

O friend, never strike sail to a fear!
* * * * * *
He has not learned the lesson of life,
Who does not every day surmount a fear.

* Epworth League Topic for Sunday, February 25. TEXTS: Amos 7: 10-13; Acts 5: 28-32.

An Encyclopedia of Knowledge

Have you not made a mistake in calling it an Almanac? It ought to be called an "Encyclopedia of Knowledge." I am more than pleased with it. And the paper is better every number. I cannot tell which part I like best, it is all good and it's a paper I feel I can't give up, let the price be what it will. Accept thanks for the Almanac, and may God bless you all for your good works. MRS. L. A. TUTTLE.

Bezza, O.

Farming in the Sun-kissed San Joaquin Valley, California, is a business that makes profit twelve months in the year

Are you content to work hard for half a year, even if crops are good, and use your profit in keeping warm the rest of the time?

Is it good business to throw away half of the working year, when every day should pay its own way and leave you a profit? I think you will agree that it is not. Not when you can get a start in California.

There you have a wide choice of crops, and every one of them is a money-getter.

Alfalfa always in demand and as sure as sunshine.

Grapes produce normal yields four years in five, and always make enough to show a bigger return than the best wheatfield you ever had.

Peaches are equally certain.

Apricots make a crop, three years in four, and the profit is such that an off year now and then doesn't matter.

Oranges in the foot-hills bring enormous returns and a failure does not occur once in a decade.

But vineyard and orchard take from three to five years to develop, while alfalfa makes some crop the first year, and thereafter it yields a steady income of from $40 to $100 an acre net. You are certain of getting the first, and the latter figure easily may be reached by reasonable attention to marketing.

You do not have to provide expensive shelter for stock. Forage grows all the time. Net returns on cows, pigs, chickens and bees are almost double, too.

I want to tell you about California, where to-day the farmers are in the field, plowing, planting, cultivating, irrigating or harvesting.

There is plenty to do, and every day you can get something from the place that will bring real money.

Mr. C. L. Seagraves, General Colonization Agent, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 2300 Railway Exchange, Chicago:

Please send me your new San Joaquin Valley book, free.

Name.....

Address.....

It will cost you just 2 cents to investigate—ask for the new San Joaquin Valley book—read it, and then write again, asking any questions that may occur to you.

The Santa Fe has no land to sell. It must get its profit by handling the produce of successful farmers, and it pays me a salary to do all that I can to direct the homeseeker to the place where he will most certainly succeed.

I want to be of service to you.

May I?

STOKES' SEEDS

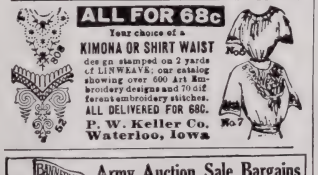
I don't get orders from every catalog I send out, but I do get enough to show the majority of farmers find something of interest in it. That's why I think you'd be glad to get a copy. Why not send me your name and address? Mention the Christian Herald.

Walter P. Stokes, Seedsman
Dept. 40, Philadelphia

AGENTS 100% PROFIT

LITTLE WONDER POCKET TOOL SCISSORS, in which is combined 18 tools and articles. Practical, useful, made of first quality steel, fully guaranteed. Sells in every home, store or shop. EASY SELLER. BIG PROFITS. Write quick for terms and FREE SAMPLE to workers. Send no money. A postal will do.
P. THOMAS MFG. CO., 8124 Wayne St. DAYTON, OHIO

ALL FOR 68c
Your choice of a
KIMONA OR SHIRT WAIST
design stamped on 2 yards of LINWEAVE, our catalog showing over 600 Art Embroidery designs and 70 different embroidery stitches. ALL DELIVERED FOR 68c.
P. W. Keller Co. Waterloo, Iowa



THE BEST LIGHT

makes and burns its own gas. Costs 2c. a week to operate. No dirt, grease nor odor. A pure white light, more brilliant than electricity or acetylene. None other so cheap or effective. Agents wanted. Write for catalogue and prices.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th Street, Canton, O.

Army Auction Sale Bargains

Army Revolvers	$1.65 up	Army Tents	$1.40 up
" Rifles	1.48 "	" Swords	.30 "
" Shotguns	2.25 "	" Uniforms(new)	1.25 "
" Haversacks	.10 "	" Leggins, Pair	.15 "
" Saddles	3.00 "	" Gloves, "	.22 "
Pistols, used	.50 "	" Overcoats	2.50 "

Large catalogue with 1912 supplement 400 pages, regular military encyclopedia 5000 illustrations mailed 25c stamps. FRANCIS BANNERMAN, Military Goods from Gov't Auction, 501 Broadway, N. Y.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package
SPECIAL DIETETIC FOOD
Flour for cases of KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES REQUIRING RATHER STRICT DIET
Unlike other goods. Ask your physician. Leading grocers. For book or sample, write
FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

City Missionary Work Wanted, a man for house-to-house tract distribution and city Missionary Work on undenominational lines. State age, experience, former occupation, and send photo. A middle-aged or elderly man preferred. Address Lock Box 254, Steelton, Pa.

25 NEW EASTER POST CARDS 10c
All Different in Gold and Beautiful Colors. REGAL MFG. CO., Desk 8 Battle Creek, Mich.

QUEEN OF SHEBA'S VISIT TO KING SOLOMON

THE Queen of Sheba's Visit to King Solomon is one of the most famous incidents in the history of the ancient world. The oriental magnificence of King Solomon's Court brought forth the exclamation, "The half has never been told." The beautiful picture shown herewith, from Ridpath's History, illustrates but ONE event out of all the THOUSANDS that make up the history of every nation, ancient and modern, all accurately and entertainingly told in the world-famed publication,

Ridpath's History of the World

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, IN REVIEWING THIS GREAT PUBLICATION, SAID IN PART: "Ridpath's History of the World may be regarded as a complete library in itself. No other work of its kind has ever supplied a History so well suited to the needs of all classes and conditions of men. We mark the marvelous influence of Christianity upon the world's progress. He would be a blind reader of history indeed who did not discern, throughout all, the influence of a great Omnipotent hand, guiding and developing all things. We cheerfully commend this most popular and complete of all world histories to our readers."

NEVER AGAIN SUCH A BOOK BARGAIN AS THIS!

We will name our price only in direct letters to those sending the coupon below. Tear off the coupon, write name and address plainly and mail now before you forget it. Dr. Ridpath's widow derives her income from his History, and to print our price broadcast for the sake of more quickly selling these few sets would cause great injury to future sales. Send coupon to-day.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY said: "I am familiar with the merits of Ridpath's History of the World, and cordially commend it to the scholar as well as to the plain people generally."

BISHOP VINCENT
said: "Ridpath's History is in clear and agreeable style, comprehensive in treatment, readable type and admirable illustrations. This set of books is a permanent college chair of general history in one's own house."

BISHOP NEWMAN
said: "In reading Ridpath I experience the pleasure often realized when looking at some grand panorama. The superb pictures of temples, palaces, scenes, events and men add a charm to the clear and vigorous style of the learned author."

HON. WM. J. BRYAN
said: "Dr. Ridpath's History of the World is a lasting monument to the author's intelligence and industry. It is thorough and comprehensive."

SUPT. LONG, St. Louis Schools said: "I unhesitatingly commend Dr. Ridpath's History of the World as the ablest work on that subject which I have examined. The engravings, maps and charts are alone worth the entire cost of the set."

HISTORY OF THE WORLD
RIDPATH VOL. I.
EGYPT. CHALDAEA. ASSYRIA. MEDIA. BABYLONIA. PERSIA.
RIDPATH VOL. II.
PARTHIA GREECE MACEDONIA.
RIDPATH VOL. III.
ROME. THE KINGDOM. THE REPUBLIC. THE EMPIRE.
RIDPATH VOL. IV.
BARBARIAN ASCENDENCY. THE MOHAMMEDAN ASCENDENCY. FEUDAL ASCENDENCY THE CRUSADES.
RIDPATH VOL. V.
THE PEOPLE AND THE KINGS. NEW WORLD AND REFORMATION.
RIDPATH VOL. VI.
THE ENGLISH REVOLUTION. AGE OF FREDK THE GREAT THE AGE OF REVOLUTION.
RIDPATH VOL. VII.
THE UNITED STATES GREAT BRITAIN
RIDPATH VOL. VIII.
FRANCE. GERMANY ITALY EASTERN EUROPE MINOR AMERICAN STATES. ORIENTAL NATIONS.
RIDPATH VOL. IX.
THE CLOSE OF THE NINETEENTH AND DAWN OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

Nine Massive Volumes
4000 Pages
2000 Illustrations

DR. Ridpath gives the history of every religion of mankind, and shows the slow but sure progress that has been made from Paganism to Christianity, from darkness to light. The customs and habits of people, the development of their science and literature and art, the growth of religion and education form a very vital part of this history, and that which gives the work its lasting popularity is the wonderfully beautiful and fascinating style in which it is written. To read this work is not only to increase one's fund of knowledge, but to improve the literary style in which we write or speak, and to expand and develop the mental powers.

EVERY American citizen should know the history of his own country and of the world to intelligently perform his full duty as a citizen in the government of this Nation. How else are we to judge of the great national questions that crowd upon us for decision except by some knowledge of the past? Read the history of mighty Babylon, or of imperial Rome as a kingdom, then as a republic, and finally as an empire, and familiarize yourself with her growth, development and decay. Then, when you know the cause of the rise and downfall of empires and nations, you will be able to intelligently discuss and decide the great questions that are pressing now everywhere for attention.

Why You Ought to Buy Ridpath's History Now

Because it is the only general history recognized everywhere as authority.

Because it is complete. It begins with the oldest civilization and gives the complete history of every country and every race; in fact, the history of mankind, including all achievements in war, discovery, invention, art, science, religion, philosophy and government.

Because it is the most beautifully illustrated of any historical work ever issued. It contains more than 2,000 illustrations. A famous educator has said that he considers the illustrations alone worth the entire cost of the set.

Because it will not only interest and instruct the average man or woman, but it will delight the children. It is so beautifully written that children will learn to love history reading. It will start them along the line of reading good things, of becoming interested in that which is true instead of reading novels and trashy literature.

Because the new ninth volume tells the story of recent, we might almost say, current events. It gives the complete history of the Boer War, the Spanish-American War, and the more recent Russia-Japan War. It brings the history of every nation right down to date.

Because Ridpath's History of the World is absolutely accurate and thoroughly reliable. Dr. Ridpath spent the span of an ordinary lifetime in writing the work.

Because this is your chance to buy it at a nominal price—much less than the work has ever been offered before or ever will be offered again—and you may pay in small sums monthly if you prefer. MAIL THE COUPON.

2
14-12

FREE COUPON

FOLD HERE. TEAR OUT. SIGN AND MAIL.

Western Newspaper Association

Christian Herald Bureau
140 So. Dearborn St., Chicago

Please mail, without cost to me, sample pages of Ridpath's History of the World, containing photogravures of Napoleon and Queen Elizabeth, engravings of Socrates, Cæsar and Shakespeare, map of China and Japan, diagram of Panama Canal, and write me full particulars of your special offer to The Christian Herald readers.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

No letter necessary. Just sign Coupon, or copy on Postal and mail.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

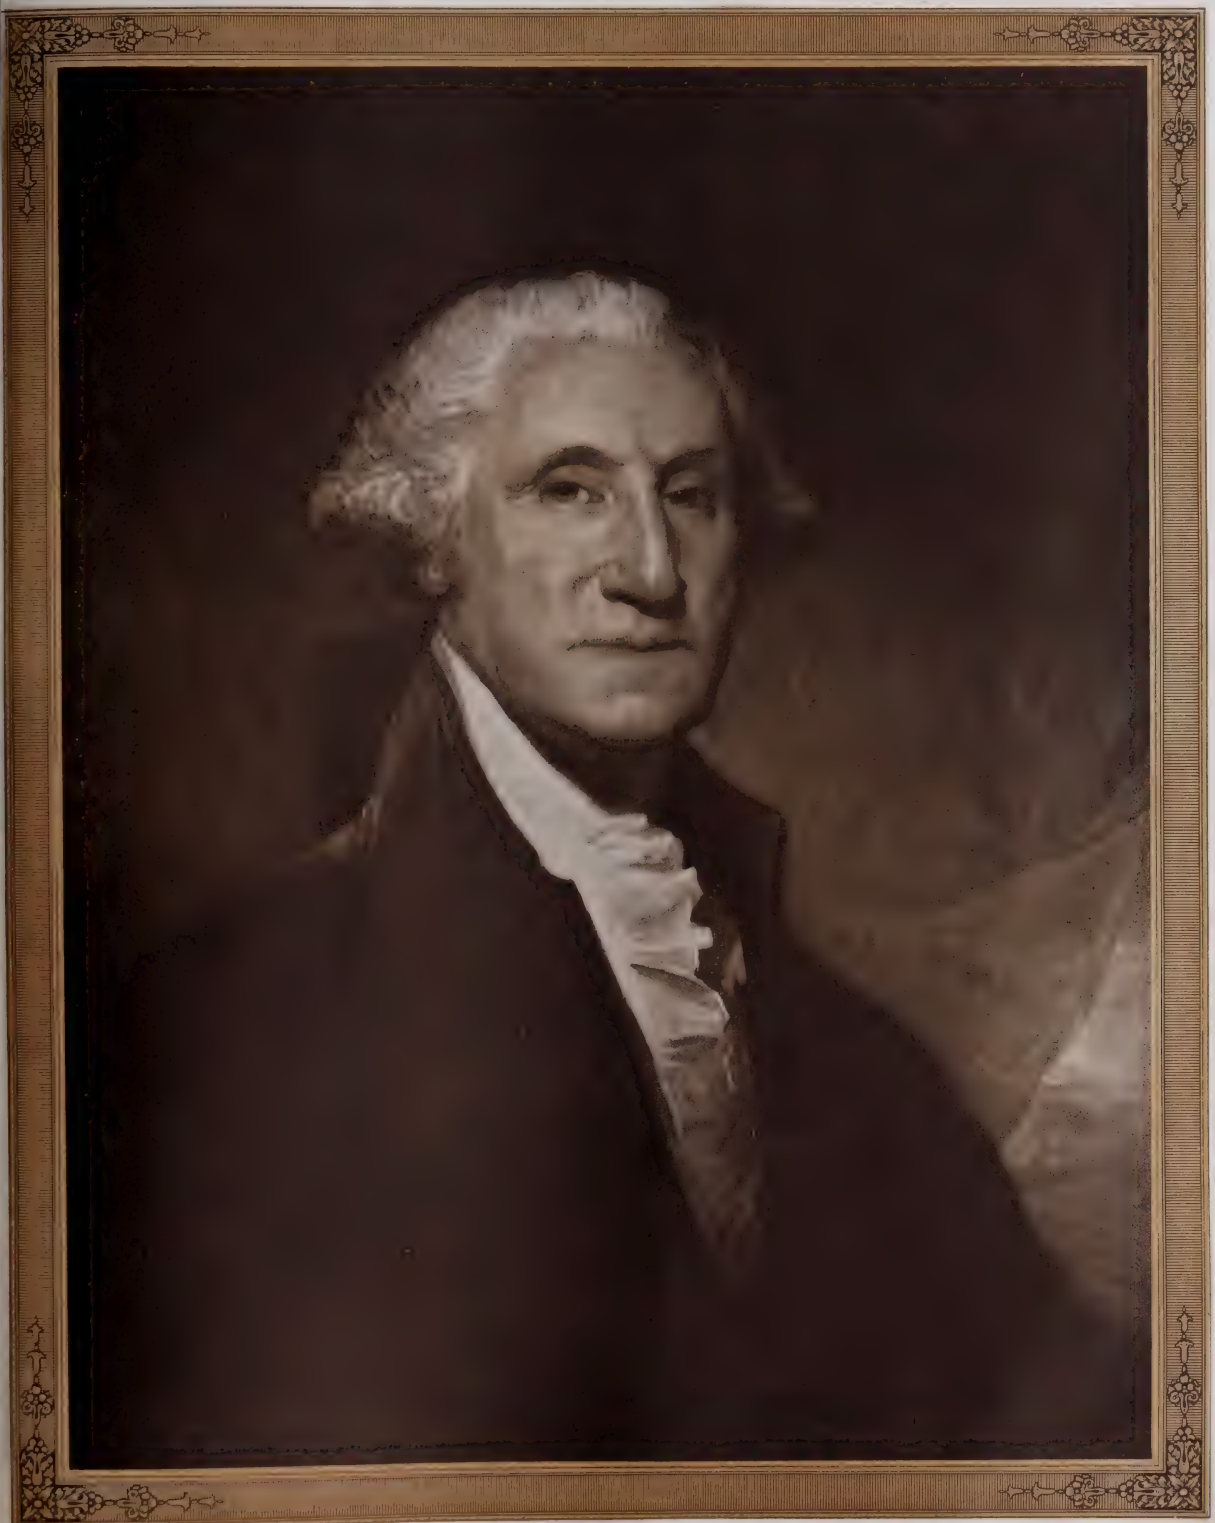
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 21, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 8. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



George Washington
From the Painting by Gilbert Stuart

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

W. G. H., Athens, Ga. Please explain Jer. 12: 5.

Jeremiah had complained of the prosperity of the wicked men of Anathoth, and how they had mocked at his prophecies. Jehovah rebukes him to strengthen his courage, and uses a proverbial phrase which means substantially: "If these unimportant people here are too much for you, how will you be equal to the task before you in Jerusalem where you must encounter the great ones? Is it in a time of peace only that you have courage? How then will you be able to face the dangers at the time of Jordan's swelling?" the reference being to the annual overflow when wild beasts who are driven out by the flood abound in the dense jungles along the banks. The rebuke was designed to arouse Jeremiah's courage and to increase his faith in God in view of the work before him.

B. F., Bloomington, Ill. What is the origin and significance of the title "reverend," as applied to ministers?

Its origin is obscure. It is known to have been in use as early as the thirteenth century. It was a recognized title at the Reformation. The Puritans applied it and Richard Baxter addressed his co-laborers in the ministry as "Reverend Brethren." In the early church the ministers were designated as "leaders." The title "reverend," which came into use later, referred to the character of the office rather than to the individual. It dignifies the work, rather than the worker. Paul, in calling himself an apostle, glorified his ministry (Rom. 11: 13) and this, rightly understood, is the case with "reverend," which, however humble the worker, honors the labor that is performed with a single eye to God's glory and the salvation of men.

Reader, Perkasie, Pa. Your article entitled "Is Church Union Possible?" interested me very much. I am very much in favor of church union. In a town of 2,000 population, where there are seven or eight churches, half that number could have a better service and church pews would be better filled if all members would have the Christian fellowship which that word signifies. To my mind, denomination should be written in very small letters or effaced entirely. All followers of Christianity should be of one fold, under one Shepherd. And if we can have union it must come in God's own way.

That is the only way in which it can possibly come. All efforts to force matters before the necessary preparatory steps are taken would only defeat the purpose. It is obvious that church union is practicable and even advisable in many small localities that are now overchurched; but the conditions are totally different in large cities. On all the essential points of the question your letter is in agreement with the views expressed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

H. H., Latrobe, Pa. Please give me the book and chapter in the Bible where it says: "Confess your sins before man and by man your sins will be forgiven."

There is no such passage in the Bible. Forgiveness is of God alone. Christ taught his disciples to preach repentance and forgiveness of sins, and while their successors in the ministry preach the same Gospel, no man has authority to forgive, although he may announce God's willingness to forgive the repentant sinner. Confession of sin may be made to the brethren (see James 5: 16); but nowhere does the Bible say that it shall be made in the ear of a priest, and nowhere is any one empowered to announce forgiveness of sin, save as it is the will of God to forgive the repentant sinner. Confession itself is an evidence of true repentance and a desire to forsake sin.

B. A. T., Troy, Vt. 1. Please explain Phil. 3: 12-21. 2. I was reading in a religious paper recently that all sickness is from the devil, not from God. What does THE CHRISTIAN HERALD think? 3. Is it right for a wife to give to the church and its different organizations and not say anything to her husband, who is an unbeliever?

1. Verse 11 tells what Paul has not yet attained, i. e., "the resurrection from the dead." In this sense he was not yet perfect, but in another sense he seems to consider himself and others "perfect" as he says definitely in verse 15. The words, "vile body," in verse 21 are translated in the Revised Version, "the body of our humiliation." Paul felt that his purposes, his intentions, his motives were perfect, but his body was a defective machine, not working out perfectly the designs of its Master. He longs for the possession of the "spiritual body" (I. Cor. 15: 44-55), which will perfectly perform its tasks. 2. It is probably true that God sometimes sends sickness upon those who are faithful. This seems the most reasonable interpretation of Paul's "thorn in the flesh." It is true he spoke of it as a "messenger of Satan," yet God permitted it to afflict him just as he permitted the trials of Job. Much sickness is of such a nature that it is hardly true to say it comes either from God or the devil. There are universal laws which govern all natural processes. They may be thought of as simply the methods by which God works. Some

Continued on last column

What a Subscriber Discovers in the Publisher's Office

THE Subscriber who objected to advertising visited the office again the other day and accosted the Publisher as follows:

"Do you know, I was greatly impressed by your argument on the necessity of advertising. I now realize very clearly how it benefits the subscriber by enabling you to give him a larger and better CHRISTIAN HERALD. But there are certain phases of your premium offers that I do not understand."

"Is that so?" replied the Publisher. "Why, I thought every reader understood them. We try to make them as clear and simple as possible."

"Well, maybe it is I who am dense; but it seemed to me that in one offer at least you discriminated against the old subscriber in favor of the new."

The Publisher gasped. "What!" he exclaimed. "Discriminate against an old subscriber? Good gracious! That is the last thing we would do. We want as many new subscribers as we can get; but we would not go back on our old friends."

"Well," answered the Subscriber doubtfully, "in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD you offered eight rosebushes to an old subscriber who induced a friend to send in a new subscription accompanied by $1.50. And yet if an old subscriber about to renew wanted those roses he was asked to send in 75 cents in addition to the price of his yearly subscription."

"Well, it seems to me the benefit there is all in favor of the old subscriber," remarked the Publisher.

"But if you could afford to give the roses free to the old subscriber for getting you a new subscriber at $1.50, why could you not afford to give them free to the old subscriber when he sends in his renewal at $1.50?"

"No," replied the Publisher. "You have twisted it the wrong way about. In the first place, we do not give these roses away free to any subscriber, old or new. We give them as a reward to the old subscriber for procuring us a new subscriber; and the old subscriber is entitled to that reward for thus helping us extend THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. The new subscriber must pay $1.50 for his year's subscription and the old subscriber must pay $1.50 a year for his subscription. That is the regular price of the paper. We are willing to pay the old subscriber for helping us, but surely the old subscriber cannot expect us to reward him if he does not work for us. If he wants the roses under such circumstances, surely it is but fair to ask him a nominal price for them."

"Then, if the new subscriber wanted the roses—"

"He would have to pay extra for them," interrupted the Publisher. "Our offer is open only to old subscribers who are interested in extending the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. I cannot make that too plain."

"Well, well!" replied the Subscriber. "I guess you are right about it. Only it never struck me that way before. Come to think it over, you would lose heavily if you offered eight rosebushes to hundreds of thousands of subscribers."

"Of course we would," replied the Publisher. "We feel we are giving full value in a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as the paper is bigger, better illustrated and all around finer than ever before."

"I've noticed it, and I am amazed that you are able to give a reward even for securing a new subscriber, in addition to supplying fifty-two numbers of such a good publication."

"Well, that is due to the peculiar character of the publishing business. You see here THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in full swing—editors writing, artists drawing, linotypes setting type, proofreaders watching for errors, electrotypers making the metal plates, great presses rolling out the printed sheets, binders putting them together—in short, a full organization conducting the business in an orderly manner. Now, say we are geared up to turn out half a million copies, have a demand for but three hundred and fifty thousand, and desire one hundred thousand new subscribers: how much would it cost to print the hundred thousand extra copies? Only the cost of the extra sheets of paper and the cost of binding, folding, addressing and mailing them. Not a cent more for editors, artists, linotypers, proofreaders, electrotypers, pressmen, etc. So you see an extra hundred thousand would not cost so much a copy as the copies we are already printing, and we can therefore afford to give rewards to present subscribers for securing new subscribers."

"But why is it so necessary to procure that extra hundred thousand?"

"There are two very important reasons. The first is to extend the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, to increase its power for good and make it a still greater means of multiplied blessing in spreading the Gospel. You know it is our ambition to enroll a million members. The second is that the more subscribers we have, the better will be the quality of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we turn out."

"How is that?"

"Don't you remember how in our last talk I explained that the amount you and other subscribers pay for an annual subscription is not really enough to pay the expense of turning out a year's copies; how, in fact, we are dependent on the amount of advertising the paper contains? Well, the greater our circulation the more will we be able to charge for our advertising, and the more we can afford to give you a bigger and better paper—better articles, better stories, better pictures. We can only give better quality if we have the money to buy it. Why, do you know that during 1911 we gave you 109 pages of solid reading matter (not advertisements) more than you received in the fifty-two issues of 1909?"

"I see. Everybody is benefited by the increasing circulation."

"Exactly," replied the Publisher. "And that is why we want you subscribers to help us. You are more than mere subscribers. You are our partners. The whole splendid history of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a story of co-operation. It is our subscribers who have supported our charities. We have simply directed their benevolences—have told them where the needs were and passed on their bounty to the needy ones. It is they who form this big Family which is trying to make the world brighter, cleaner, more spiritual and more joyous. Don't you think we are right in asking them to go out and help us get new people to join the Family? And we are glad to be able to reward them not only to the extent of flower premiums, but by giving them the brightest, cleanest, bravest, cheeriest, most interesting, most helpful magazine in the world."

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

of these, it is true, inevitably produce pain; but most pain arises from attempted or accidental violation of these laws. The New Testament teaching, reiterating and emphasizing many Old Testament promises, is that God is usually willing to heal sickness, whatever its cause or source, in answer to the prayer of faith. 3. It is always best to avoid everything that has any hint of deception. Every wife should receive regularly an allowance from the household income to be spent according to her independent, personal wishes. Better still, she should have equal right with her husband to all the household funds. But deception would only make it more difficult for the Christian wife to win her unconverted husband to the faith.

S. K., Fort Collins, Colo. 1. By what religious denomination is the Bowery Mission run? Is it Protestant or Catholic? 2. Give the genealogy of Tamar, the mother of Pharez? Was she of the house of Abraham? 3. Where may we find the genealogy of the Virgin Mary?

1. The Bowery Mission is Protestant and undenominational. The teaching is evangelical and all denominations are represented among the speakers. 2. She was presumably a descendant of Canaan, the grandson of Noah. Abraham, on the other hand, was a Chaldean, and descendant of Shem in the ninth generation. 3. In constructing their genealogical tables, the Jews reckoned wholly by males. When the line passed to the grandson through a daughter, the daughter herself was not named, but her husband was counted as the son of the maternal grandfather. This explains how Joseph, son of Jacob, who married Mary, daughter of Heli, is counted in the genealogy as Heli's son. The genealogy in Matthew shows the descent of both Mary and Joseph from Solomon, while the genealogy in Luke shows their descent from Nathan. (The last question in your letter is unanswerable.)

Miscellaneous

Many readers have written us concerning the pamphlet Little Moonflower, which tells the story of child-suffering in China. Copies will be sent free to any address on request by postal.

A. R., Elm Creek, Neb. 1. Don't know. 2. At a banquet it is not considered a breach of etiquette to decline intoxicants. 3. Some church settlements have gymnasiums for exercise, but we have only heard of one where boxing and wrestling are taught under church auspices, and consider it wholly out of place.

Dorothy F. E., Katonah, N. Y. The language employed in I. Cor. 7: 7 and 9: 5 would seem to imply very clearly that Paul was never married. In the latter passage, Paul implies that for the sake of expediency, he did not exercise his right to marry. He did not wish to impose an additional burden of support on the church and he also wanted to devote his time unreservedly to the Lord's work—hence he remained single.

W. W. M., Winnipeg, Man. 1. If possible, he should make restitution direct to the person wronged, or to his heirs. If this be impossible, let him devote the equivalent to charity or some other form of Christian work, in lieu of restitution. 2. We do not believe an evangelist would snub any one on the supposition of backsliding. He would rather strive to help him to spiritual restoration. Why not see the evangelist and state the case clearly to him?

D. N. F., Eaton, W. Va. The distinction drawn in I. John 5: 16, 17 is that while intercession in prayer for one who is a sinner but "not unto death" is in harmony with God's will, to intercede for one who has sinned against the Holy Spirit (Mark 3: 29) is presumption, as though we would imply by our petition that we were more merciful than God himself. It should be noted that Jesus, in his prayers, interceded not for the world, which had hardened itself in unbelief, but for those who had been given to him out of the world.

Reader, Bridgeport, Conn. 1. The study of astrology, for the purpose of ascertaining its supposed influence upon human affairs and the destinies of men, is not to be confounded with practical astronomy by which natural phenomena may be calculated and predicted. The first is a pseudo-science, and is to-day employed by charlatans and humbugs. The latter is one of the oldest and noblest of sciences. 2. A young girl who encourages the attentions of a man who drinks runs a great risk of forming an attachment which may cloud her whole after life with sorrow and regret. 3. We are responsible for whatever influence we may exert upon others. Hence, if our example in thought, word and deed would save others, and we withhold that influence, we are accountable for such neglect.

THE BEST OF GIFTS

I am more than pleased with the Women of the Bible. Like everything from Mrs. Sangster's pen it is both instructive and interesting. Also accept thanks for the Almanac. It is replete with information. I think it the best gift you have ever given your subscribers. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has become a household necessity in our home.

Newburgh, N. Y. M. F. L. THOMPSON.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 21, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

The Strikers Kept Back from the Mills by the Militia

The Strikers Parading on Canal Street, Lawrence

QUIETING DOWN AT LAWRENCE

IN SPITE of the agitation of professional strike leaders, and although the basic problems of the disturbance are as yet unsolved, the saner element among the textile workers has triumphed in Lawrence. The violence that made necessary the presence of twenty-one companies of infantry and four squadrons of cavalry has almost entirely disappeared and a fair settlement by arbitration is expected. The feelings of the general public have now swung back to the attitude of sympathy for the great body of strikers which they held before the arrival in Lawrence of Joseph J. Ettor, the cause of most of the violence of the strike. The whole situation is an example of what a bit of well-meant but blundering legislation and a firebrand labor leader can accomplish. A well-known mediator in industrial disputes recently summarized the situation as follows:

"The new Massachusetts law reducing the hours of labor for women and children from fifty-six to fifty-four hours a week no doubt precipitated the disturbances in Lawrence, though it did not have the same result in other mill towns affected. Some time ago, when by a similar law hours were reduced to fifty-six per week, the mills did not reduce wages. This year, on account of dull business and unfavorable prospects, the mills were unable to pay the same scale for less hours of work. The result was that while the law was intended for the benefit of the workers, its operation brought about a decrease of 4 per cent. in their earnings.

"Revolutionary socialists seized this opportunity to incite the workers, most of them foreign born, to rise against the mill-owners. The situation was taken out of the hands of the regular labor organizations, which are part of the American Federation of Labor, by a radical organization called the Industrial Workers of the World. The new leaders counseled destruction of machinery; a war against the employer class generally was agitated rather than improvement of local conditions. There was no calm consideration. The mob spirit prevailed. In the Washington mills, for example, a crowd of men broke down the doors, flourished knives, pistols, and used clubs freely. They stopped machinery and drove men and women from the looms by actual physical violence.

"As a result the State militia was called in and now the mills are turned into armed camps and the streets of Lawrence are patrolled by soldiers. Out of 25,000 operatives in Lawrence about 15,000 are employed by the American Woolen Company. All sorts of contradictory stories have been circulated concerning wages and conditions. The strikers have issued a statement that wages average $6 a week. Rev. Dr. Herbert S. Johnson of Boston reports that the books of one mill show an average of $9.24 for men, women and children. Another mill shows an average of $9.36. The mills are far beyond the average in construction and modern sanitary appointments. Provisions for light and air are unusually good. In one of the new factories, moving stairways are in operation."

The wage reduction is really the only grievance of the operatives and a settlement for a new scale of payment can best be arbitrated under the conditions of ordinary business. A competent authority says:

"In my judgment, there can be but one fair solution to the present trouble (arbitration). A test of endurance between the mills and the operatives will establish nothing of value."

Though the soldiers are still in the streets, the city seems almost as if enjoying a holiday. Crowds move everywhere and the greatest good nature seems to prevail. There has already been and no doubt there will be more distress among the poorer classes of workers who have no savings upon which to draw. Assistance has been rendered those actually in want by various philanthropic societies by the opening of soup kitchens and the formation of bread lines.

The Fire Hose and Cold Water as a Deterrent of Violence

A SERMON

By

Rev. D. J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D.*

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

TEXT: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Ps. 119: 105

THE most remarkable book of the fourth century was The Confessions of Augustine; the most remarkable man of that time was its learned author; and the most remarkable woman was Monica, his mother. She had dedicated him to the ministry in his infancy. When he left home to pursue his education she gave him a Bible with her fond farewell. As time passed, in the free-thinking atmosphere of the universities, he suffered a total eclipse of faith. He wandered farther and farther from the true religion until he found himself in the cold region of doubt and intellectual despair. He was sitting in a garden at Rome, lost in despondency, when a child's voice was heard in the distance singing a song with this refrain, "Tolle, lege." As he entered the house his eyes fell upon his neglected Bible. Tolle, lege! "Take, read!" And, reading, his faith came back to him.

Why We Should Read the Bible

I wonder how many Bibles there are, inscribed with these words by a loving mother's hand: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path"? My mother wrote it on the fly-leaf of the Bible she gave me when I left home. I was going out into the world; away from the influence of home and the family altar; no more to be tethered by a mother's apron-strings. It was the best she could do: to give me a prayer and a light for my pathway.

Have you such a Bible? Where is it? In some forgotten place? On the top shelf of your bookcase, covered with dust? Tolle, lege! Take it down, brush away the dust, and read it!

But why read the Bible? Because we need light; and this Book professes to be a light for the journey of life. We walk in darkness; the darkness of sin and sorrow, of doubt and unbelief. We stumble on the dark mountains. He is a singularly fortunate man who, in front of the great problems that have to do with life and immortality, does not feel the need of a lamp to walk by.

But how shall we read it? That depends altogether on whether we believe it or not. You may not be a Christian; you may never have accepted Christ as your Saviour, or the Bible as your spiritual guide. In any case, however, it would be well to read it.

And, first, read it honestly. You say you want to know, to begin with, whether it is the Word of God. This is its claim; and the only way to refute or verify that claim is to open the Book and search it. But you must do that without bias. The Bible is entitled to a "square deal." So much is due from you as an honest man.

It is, however, not an easy thing to approach the Bible without prejudice in these days. The air is so full of anti-Biblical sentiment that a hostile bias is almost inevitable, in the nature of the case. In some of our theological seminaries the students are exhorted to read the Bible as mere literature. They are advised beforehand that its trustworthiness is an old-wives' fable, a fond mother's dream, to be put away with other childish things. Thus the bias pro is supplanted by a bias contra; and fair dealing is practically out of the question.

Read It With an Open Mind

It is obvious that if there is to be no bias in favor of the truth of Scripture there should certainly be no bias against it. So much is necessary in the interest of common honesty. If any man will thus address himself to the careful reading of this Book, with a mind open to conviction, his verdict is a foregone conclusion. He will surely come to regard it as the veritable Word of God.

But suppose he decides that it is not so? Shall he then go on reading it? Just as he chooses. It then becomes a matter of relative unimportance whether he reads it or not. To be sure, it is the great masterpiece of literature and he would be wise to familiarize himself with its poetry, its eloquence, its philosophy, etc. But, after all, he will take only the same sort of interest in the Bible as in Plutarch's Lives, or Shakespeare's plays, or Æsop's Fables, or the Arabian Nights. He reads only because he perceives that he cannot be liberally educated without it.

But suppose that, on examination, the Book commends itself to him as the true and trustworthy Word of God? Then it follows that he must read it in a different way. As an honest man he stands now committed to its truth. If he be a minister, he must honestly maintain and defend it. If he be a church member he will find that loyalty to the Scriptures is involved in his covenant vow. The truth of the Book has ceased to be an open question for him. That has been settled. The Bible is no longer in the common category of books. It stands out, far and away, beyond and above them all, distinguished and differentiated by the fact of its inspiration. He thinks of the Bible as Moses thought of the burning bush. The Desert of Midian was full of acacia bushes; but there was only one from which the voice called "I am that I am!" So to the believer there is only one Book so inspired that God is its author, in such a sense that it is divinely said to have been "breathed of God."

So then he reads with a prejudgment in its favor. He reads because he regards it as a lamp unto his feet and a light unto his path. He reads not to discover whether the Book is true or not, but with the expectation of finding truth in it. It is his friend the Bible; and as a friend it clasps his hand and leads him along the way.

Second, it should be read systematically, just as one attends to the common needs and obligations of life.

This reading should be done at regular times. In the morning? Surely; for then we pass, alone and otherwise blind, into the unknown country of another day. At night? Without fail; for then again we pass into an unknown country where we are wholly dependent upon the care of God.

It should be read also in some methodical way. A good plan is to read it seriatim; that is, through and through, from beginning to end.

Read It Systematically

It should be read, also, by books and, not infrequently, a book at a sitting. Does that look like a terrible task? Let us see. The longest book in the Old Testament is the Psalter, which occupies about sixty pages; not nearly so long as Spenser's Faerie Queene. The longest book in the New Testament is the Gospel of Luke, which is about the length of one of Shakespeare's plays. The Story of Esther is seven pages long; and the sweet pastoral of Ruth is three pages; neither of them as long as a short magazine story. The difficulty, therefore, is an imaginary one. The habit of reading the Scriptures in brief and choppy portions only is not calculated to create a proper interest in it. We would not think, for a moment, of reading other books that way.

Third, it should be read critically. The Bible is not afraid of fire and acid. When Christ said "Search the Scriptures," he used the word ereunate; a technical word used of a hound on the scent. It suggests a most severe scrutiny. And this Book is worthy of it; the secret of eternal life is in it.

You ask, "What helps are needed to reach and study the Scriptures in this way?" Get a Cruden's Concordance, a Bible dictionary and a short Commentary; and you will need nothing else. But whatever helps you use, be sure you do not farm out your thinking to any other man. Be your own Biblical expert. Let no man take thy crown!

But, after all, the best help to the understanding of the Bible is the Bible itself. The way to interpret Scripture is to compare Scripture with Scripture. Use the marginal references, to this end.

And form the habit of topical study. To illustrate: take the word "Love" or "Repentance" or "Faith," and follow it up in your Concordance until you get the tout ensemble of the matter in hand. It was thus that Mr. Moody made himself the wonderful Biblical expert that he was. He came upon the word "Grace" in a difficult passage of Scripture, and began to trace it through the Book in parallel passages. The further he went the more absorbed he became. In his Concordance he found two columns of references to the word; and when he got through with them he was so filled with the subject of grace that he stopped the first man whom he met on the street and mentioned it. "What do you mean by grace?" asked the man. Mr. Moody replied, "I mean the grace of God which bringeth salvation and hath appeared to all men."

In this critical study of the Scriptures you will find difficulties, no doubt. You will come up against many problems which will baffle you. Is that to be wondered at? Daniel Webster wisely said, "If I could understand the Bible with my finite mind, I could not possibly believe that an infinite God made it." Do not expect to solve all difficulties. Let it suffice that they are not against reason. The fact that they are above reason is nothing against them. Lay them aside, as you lay aside the bones at your Thanksgiving dinner, not expecting to masticate them. Leave the dark and difficult things to God. Be satisfied to eat what is edible, and to apprehend so much as is necessary to meet your present needs and solve the vital problem of the endless life.

Fourth, read it practically. What you need as a follower of Christ is an infallible rule of faith and practise; and here you have it.

That means, on the one hand, that you are to believe what it says. It solves every one of the great questions of the spiritual life. And it solves them with a "Thus saith the Lord." You may not always be pleased with the doctrines which it presents or with its way of presenting them; but inasmuch as God's thoughts are not as our thoughts, our personal opinion must not prevent or abbreviate our loyalty to the Word of God.

Read It as a Rule of Conduct

And, on the other hand, as the Book is our rule of conduct we must read with the intention of following it. This is what is meant by the statement that "all Scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work."

If you take the Bible as it stands you will find yourself provided thus with a Creed and a Moral Code; and these two are a sufficient equipment for our spiritual life.

Fifth, read it carefully. For, inasmuch as spiritual things are spiritually discerned, we are constantly dependent upon the Spirit of God. In the last prayer of our Saviour, in his final interview with the disciples in the upper room, he besought for them the unspeakable gift of the Holy Spirit, who should "lead them into all truth."

The Spirit anoints our eyes with eye-salve that we may see. There is many a man who looks into Scripture and sees nothing but meaningless hieroglyphics. There is many another man who, reading the clearest statement of truth, is repelled by it. All this for want of the Spirit's eye salve; for our natural eyes are blind to spiritual things. (I. Cor. 2:14.)

Read It to Know Jesus

And the Spirit also illuminates the pages of the Book, so that things appear there which are not visible to other eyes. And the one thing which the open eyes of the twice-born man can clearly see in Scripture is "the Name which is above every other that is named in heaven or on earth." To him the face of Jesus looks out of the Oracles; his voice speaks in every truth and precept; his hands beckon in "the exceeding great and precious promises." Thus reading with prayer he holds the key to the inner place of truth.

"In nomine Jesu" was the legend that floated from the topmast of the Pinta when Columbus sailed through the Pillars of Hercules in quest of Eldorado. In the same Name we search the Scriptures, in the light of the Spirit, for the hid treasures that make us rich toward God.

A missionary on the frontier was called to a farmhouse, five miles across the trackless prairie, to minister at a deathbed. It was midnight when he set out to return; and the skies were black and lowering. The farmer gave him a pine torch, saying, "It will light you home." The missionary said, "It is so little; do you think it will hold out?" The farmer answered, "It will last to light you home." The missionary said, "The wind is blowing hard." The farmer answered, "Don't be afraid; it will resist the wind and light you home." The missionary said, "There's a rain coming on." The farmer answered, "Draw your cloak about the torch and the rain won't hurt it; be sure it will light you home." So I say concerning this blessed Book, "Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom; lead thou me home!" And it will! It will lead you along the steep paths and through the deep waters and on past the shadow of death. It will light you clear home, to the gate of heaven and the City of God.

---

* Pastor, Marble Collegiate Pulpit (Reformed), New York City.

Poems Worth Knowing

LOVERS of good poetry will find in this column every week, a short lyrical poem selected from the best work of English and American poets of the past and present.

A great poet is not necessarily great in all his productions; and what is called a minor poet is not always "minor." The greatest poets often have lapses of dulness, and those of lesser poetical distinction have occasional Pisgah sights or moments of unusual inspiration.

Some literary critics assert that there is no such thing as a long poem—that such compositions are merely series of small poems linked together by more or less dull and labored verse.

Edgar Allan Poe, whose place as the foremost American poet is now unchallenged, says: "I hold that a long poem does not exist. I maintain that the phrase 'a long poem' is simply a flat contradiction in terms. I need scarcely observe that a poem deserves its title only inasmuch as it excites by elevating the soul. The value of the poem is in the ratio of this elevating excitement. But all excitements are, through a psychical necessity, transient. That degree of excitement which would entitle a poem to be so called at all cannot be sustained throughout a composition of any great length. After a lapse of half an hour at the very utmost, it flags; fails; a revulsion ensues; and then the poem is in effect and in fact no longer such."

As the present writer is strongly inclined to agree with this dictum, his endeavor will be to select only short poems, and those the best of the many poets whose verses shall hereafter appear. In some instances, also, short selections will be made from their longer poems.

The reader who follows and preserves these verses may make a collection worth having and will from time to time be introduced to certain poets whose works are not now readily accessible in book form.

The Pulley

WHEN God at first made man,
Having a glasse of blessings standing by,
Let us (said he) poure on him all we can;
Let the world's riches, which dispersèd lie,
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beautie flow'd, then wisdome, honour, pleasure:
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that alone, of all his treasure,
Rest in the bottome lay.

For if I should (said he)
Bestow this jewell also on my creature,
He would adore my gifts in stead of me,
And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature:
So both should losers be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessnesse:
Let him be rich and wearie, that at least,
If goodnesse leade him not, yet wearinesse
May tosse him to my breast.

George Herbert

George Herbert (1593-1632), the author of these quaint but beautiful verses, was born in the reign of Queen Elizabeth in the year 1593. He died in his fortieth year in 1632. He was rector of the parish of Bemerton, near Salisbury, England. His poetry is characterized by a quaint beauty and a rare musical quality. While not a great poet, the originality of his themes, his deep sincerity of spirit and beautiful character have given him a place in the literature of his time peculiarly his own. He was passionately devoted to the English Church, its service and its music; and all of his poems are of a devotional nature.

Is It Easy to Get Rich?

BY EUGENE THWING

SOME of our millionaires have been telling us how easy it is to make money—what a simple matter it may be for "any young man" to get rich. Andrew Carnegie, testifying before a congressional committee a few weeks ago, chatted smilingly about his millions, almost as a young girl would gossip over her candy or her ribbons. "It is so easy to make money," he said, jauntily; but he neglected to reveal the secret for the toiling multitudes who have schemed, and struggled, and fought in vain to learn it, and who now are only bewildered by his words.

Frederick Weyerhauser, a Western multimillionaire, is more explicit. He has amassed money enough for himself, and now he gives, as a working formula, the following rules:

Make up your mind to work, and work hard.
The surest way to make money is to save money and to use what you have.
Don't be afraid of long hours or constant attention to your work.
Work can be made a joy, an economy, a pleasure, if you combine an object worth while with the determined ambition to win.
Work, where the interest of the man who works is centered, becomes a source of real gratification, of honest pleasure and accomplishment.
Any young man can get rich, can succeed in business, if he saves, if he has a definite and honest purpose and is so filled with the purpose that work ceases to be a hardship and becomes a privilege.
Look at things with optimism in your heart.
Go into some small business and work to make it into a big one.

. . .

ANOTHER view is found in the testimony of George M. Reynolds, head of the $200,000,000 Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, who says that he began as a bank messenger at the age of fourteen. He has never lost a day through sickness, has never taken a vacation, does not drink or smoke; does not play any outdoor games and has no interest in them; does not even take exercise; has no literary likings; has no country home; works nine hours a day. "Make your business your pleasure and marry early. These are my rules," he says. A testimony from the other side of the family on his plan of life would be edifying.

Now, having these very confident and more or less explicit rules, let us, every one, cheer up, breathe deeply, and straightway tackle this "easy job." In a few years we ought all to be wealthy if the millionaires are right.

Surely wealth is a thing worth striving for. Life is so short, even at the most, that we may very well employ every moment of it in the most zealous accumulation of wealth. All our plans may be made to focus on this one object. All our energy and talents may be brought into action for it, and our ambition may feed upon it without restraint, because to be rich is the thing that will make our life worth the living.

. . .

PERHAPS, however, it may be wise to decide at once what wealth really is. One essential quality would seem to be permanence. A gambler who has thousands, or even millions, to-day and is penniless to-morrow through another turn of the wheel which gave him to-day's money, would hardly be called wealthy. A family living to-day in elegance covered by mortgages and notes liable to be foreclosed to-morrow would not be regarded as wealthy by those who knew the facts.

Man has always sought for ways to make wealth permanent. Government bonds are secure for a while, but even they mature after a certain number of years, and the money is set adrift on the sea of financial hazard again. Land, perhaps, is the nearest approach to permanent property, so that it has been named real estate, but it is very hard for one owner to hold it long, or to pass it on as he wills. The present laws of most States forbid entailment beyond a specified time.

Man's life is permanent, only a few years at the very beginning of it being spent in this temporary place of work. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that no possessions of money or land which attach themselves only to this little fragment of his life can justly be regarded as his wealth, if wealth must have permanence.

. . .

REAL wealth, like the real life of a man, "consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Money and lands may be valuable aids in acquiring wealth if rightly used, but it can be gained without them. All riches must be held in stewardship for employment in creating wealth. Miss Helen Gould stated in a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some years ago her belief that "Wealth is a trust," and it must be so used as to realize the best possible return for the One to whom all wealth belongs. But the vital fact is this: The poorest man or woman, as measured by the dollar sign, may be richer than the millionaire who has no vision of trusteeship and who has not converted his money into wealth.

Not what is gathered into barns and into banks, but what is distributed to meet human need is true wealth. Not what a man gets out of life for himself, but what he puts into it for others makes him rich. Time, talents, opportunity, health, all these are priceless riches given in trust for the producing of a wealth which shall accumulate through the years where moth and rust do not corrupt, where thieves do not break through and steal, where mortgages are not foreclosed, where wills are not contested.

It is easy to get rich. It is possible to grow wealthy beyond all comparison with the millionaires of oil, or steel, or lumber, or gold. It is possible to find great and permanent joy in heaping up riches in service and helpfulness—in working day by day as the administrator of a royal wealth and a royal love. It is possible to get in return a wealth not found in any of the treasuries of earth, but which shall be eternal in the heavens.

Do You Know Your Bible?

OUR readers are showing again their interest in Bible searching. Answers have kept coming in from everywhere—New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Nebraska, California, Texas and almost all the States between, and from Ontario, Nova Scotia and other provinces of Canada. Some send letters with their answers, telling of their enjoyment of the work.

One or two of the questions are capable of more than one answer, and in these cases full credit has been given to those answering by a passage not scheduled in the lesson. Some variations, however, could not be accepted. For instance, some readers named Moses as the first "Doctor of Laws." Moses is nowhere called this; he was a maker of laws.

Correct Answers

1. What one thing does the Bible say God cannot do? Ans. Cannot deny himself, Titus 1: 2 ("Impossible for God to lie," Heb. 6: 18; cannot look on iniquity, Heb. 1: 13; cannot be tempted with evil, Jas. 1: 13).
2. What was the longest drought ever recorded in the Bible? Ans. Three years and six months, Luke 4: 25; Jas. 5: 17; I. Kings 17: 1 (and 18: 1).
3. Where is the first mention made of beggars? Ans. I. Sam. 2: 8.
4. Who said: "To obey is better than sacrifice?" Samuel, I. Sam. 15: 22.
5. Who was the first to be known as a Doctor of Laws? Gamaliel, Acts 5: 34.
6. What verse contains in five words the journey every Christian has accomplished? "Passed from death unto life," John 5: 24 (I. John 3: 14).
7. What was the first anti-migration movement and how was it frustrated? Gen. 11: 1-9.
8. What good man was divinely warned to curb his ambition and not seek great things for himself? Jeremiah, Jer. 45: 5.
9. Who delivered the first Gospel sermon, taking a passage as a text and expounding it? Peter, Acts 2: 14, 16-21.
10. What are the requirements, as Jesus named them (in a single verse), for the bringing forth of good fruit? Luke 8: 15 (John 15: 4; Matt. 13: 23; Mark 4: 20).
11. What aged man had his son killed by a boy to whom he had shown kindness? Jehoiada, II. Chron. 24: 22.
12. In connection with what operation are physicians first mentioned in the Bible? Embalming, Gen. 50: 2.

Answers were still coming in at the time of going to press, but of those received for publication the following are on the Honor Roll: Three readers answered all 12 correctly: Mrs. A. P. Fassett, Eliza J. Fuller, Miss H. R. Towne; 19 answered 11 correctly: Charles Allen, Mrs. Thomas H. Bedford, John Bissett, Mrs. T. W. Cole, Mrs. Anna M. Furman, John W. Gish, Mrs. Louise C. Goss, Lois L. Hoyt, Mrs. Ella M. Jackson, Mrs. M. T. Jones, Nellie Lovell, J. H. Master, Anna Meister, Alfred Morton, Myra A. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Raynor, Leonore L. Reese, Helen S. Scammell; 26 answered 10 correctly: Mrs. B. L. Bailey, Mrs. O. C. Barnes, Theophilus Bauer, Mary A. Blanchard, Maud F. Brackett, William E. Camp, Harriet P. Calkins, Mrs. M. T. Case, Mrs. J. A. Clapp, Jennie Cunningham, Sallie Davidson, Duke Davis, Mrs. Henry Davis, Mrs. William Findlay, Mrs. A. L. Freeman, Mrs. C. H. Gilbert, Adam Laidlaw, Kate Lipscomb, N. K. McLeod, Mrs. T. S. Officer, Alberta B. Reynolds, Mrs. James Robertson, C. A. Shurtleff, Mrs. Sarah A. Strong, Mrs. A. W. Stockwell, Mrs. C. G. Waterson; 35 answered 9 correctly; 32 answered 8 correctly; 44 answered 7, and so on.

Bible Questions, List No. 2

Answers should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD within two weeks.

1. What two psalms are repeated almost in full in other books of the Bible?
2. What Old Testament king was prospered until he became irreverent and was then afflicted with a fatal disease?
3. Who chastised with briers the chief men of a city?
4. What kitchen utensils now in use are referred to in the Bible?
5. What excellent statement of religious optimism, especially appropriate to a farmer, can you find in one of the minor prophets?
6. When, where and under what circumstances was an open-air fire built in the rain?
7. Where is the word of God compared to rain and snow?
8. In what verse is the gladness which God sends declared to be greater than the joy from successful crops and rich living?
9. What books of the New Testament were written by Luke?
10. Which of St. Paul's epistles is fullest of expressions of joy and thanks?
11. In what two expressions, of six words each, did Paul sum up the motive of his life?
12. Where is the account given of a poor man who asked for money and received something better?

Swept to Death on Niagara's Ice

WHEN Niagara's great ice bridge suddenly broke and moved out on February 4, thousands of people along both the Canadian and American shores stood helpless witnesses of one of the most startling and heartrending tragedies that have ever taken place at the Great Falls. For weeks great fields of ice had been coming down the river, piling up against the barrier until it was sixty to eighty feet thick. The jam was about 1,000 feet wide and in some places a quarter of a mile in breadth. For two weeks it had offered safe passage to the hardy, and on that day a great crowd of excursionists had gone to view the wonder.

Just at noon there was a crack and a rumble, a shudder of the ice, and the bridge was afloat, broken from the anchorage made by zero weather. There were hundreds on the ice, but all except seven made the shore before the floating mass had really moved. Those left behind were Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Stanton of Toronto, Burrell Heacock and Ignatius Roth, Cleveland lads, and three men whose names were not surely ascertained. The last three men shouted to the others, and by running at top speed over the broken ice made safety. The two boys ran for the Canadian shore.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanton started first toward the American shore, but were stopped by open water. Back they ran toward the Canadian side. When hardly more than fifty yards from the rocky shore the woman fell on her face exhausted.

"I can't go on; I can't go on," she cried. "Let us die here."

As the woman fell the man tried to get her on her feet and drag her along the ice, calling for assistance to Roth and Heacock. Heacock turned back and helped support the woman. Roth struggled along over the hummocks, getting close to the open stretch of water at the Canadian end of the jam. He was afraid to trust himself in the icy waters, but a riverman jumped out to the fields of ice with a rope, and half carried, half dragged the boy ashore.

At first the floe that bore the Stantons and Heacock had moved slowly, and the better part of an hour had elapsed when it reached a point midway between the Falls, where it started, and the first of the rapids. Mr. Stanton stood with his arm about his wife and Heacock beside them, the boy seeming to be looking on every side for a way of escape. Then the floe broke and sobs rose in a thousand throats as the two pieces rocked and threatened to overturn. They settled at last to swifter voyaging, but now Heacock was alone on one piece, which was a hundred yards in the lead in the race to death, and the Stantons stood together on the other. The boy waved his hand to his companions in distress as his floe moved off from the other.

Canadian firemen were sent to the lower steel arch bridge and there took station with a rope. Other Canadian firemen had two ropes down from the cantilever bridge, about 300 yards above. Heacock saw the ropes dangling from the bridge and made ready to catch one. Coolly he took off his overcoat and poised himself on the tossing floe. In his course dangled one rope, and a second was moved toward him. He caught that held by Officer Kelly of the Ontario police force and a company of about twenty railroad men—caught it, and jumped from the ice. The gale had made it sag with a score of yards of slack. His weight pulled it taut and he fell into the river. The men above hauled stoutly but steadily and Heacock was pulled from the water.

The Great Ice Bridge at Niagara Falls

Hanging in the wind, whirling as the rope twisted, the boy swung to and fro. He tried to twine his legs about it, but it seemed to evade their clutch as if some demon whipped it away. Soon he showed that his strength was spent. His hands slipped and he slid down a dozen feet. He was half way to the top, nearly a hundred feet above the river. He struggled harder than ever to twist his legs about the line and save his fast numbing hands. He pulled the rope under his arm, but it whipped away. Then the agonized watchers saw him bend his head in desperation and try to fasten his teeth in the cords. He slipped, caught himself, slipped, snatched at the rope, missed and went down.

The boy struck a piece of ice, tried to stand up and fell to his knees. He looked around in a dazed way and raised his hand feebly to wave to Stanton. Then the ice that held him crumbled and sank and he was gone.

As the Stantons were hurried down toward the lower steel arch bridge some one let down a slender rope. Mr. Stanton, with his arm about his wife, moved her and himself so that it should strike them as they passed below the bridge. He caught the rope and, working like lightning, tried to tie it around Mrs. Stanton. He worked like a madman, but the rope broke and he and his wife fell as it gave way. He helped her to her feet and as she pressed to his bosom he looked up to those who had tried to save him, nodding as if in thanks and acknowledgment and waving the broken and frayed end of the rope to show what had happened.

There was still a chance, as all who looked down upon the man and woman knew. One of them might be saved by the rope that had failed Heacock. Stanton caught the rope and the experts at its upper end quickly paid out yards of it to help him in his efforts to tie it about the body of his wife. He struggled hard, but he seemed to have become numbed by the cold and his earlier struggle. He could not knot the line.

Only a few seconds were given him for this effort, for the floe was shooting under the bridge at express train speed. As it swept the man to the slack and the line drew taut he was dragged erect. He might have held it and been saved. Such a thought never entered his mind. He tossed it loose to put his arms about his wife and prepared to meet the fate that he then saw was certain. They clasped each other in a last embrace and then both knelt upon the floe. The man drew his wife's head to his breast and threw back his head as if looking above in prayer for the woman he loved and was dying for. Into the great surge of the first rapids sped the floe, shivered and whirled, and into the waters and the spume Mr. and Mrs. Stanton disappeared from human eyes, still together.

"YOKE," "STAFF" AND "ROD"

A SYRIAN neighbor of ours felled a tree in a wood, three miles away, to be used in the construction of a house which he is building. The tree is about ten cubits long and eighteen inches in diameter. Four staves were fastened on it at equal distances from and parallel with each other. On a recent holiday, a score of friendly neighbors met in the wood and eight of them shouldered the staves and proceeded along the rough and crooked paths. The carriers were relieved at intervals by their willing companions. In due time, the beam was brought to its destination and a feast followed, which the owner provided for his neighbors in recognition of their labor of love.

We always help each other in such matters. A comparatively light load is usually carried by means of a shoulder staff, shouldered by two men only. It is different, however, when the owner of the work is some local tyrant, a government officer or a foreigner who desires enormous blocks of stones or other heavy loads to be conveyed over the Syrian hills and across valleys to distant places. In such cases the task-master gives neither feasts nor wages and is not slow to use the rod of the oppressor to force greater activity on the part of those who seem to him slow or languid.

The word translated "oppressor" (Isa. 9: 4) signifies to us an overseer of men who are doing forced or unpaid work. In cases where the loads are heavy and bulky, the carrying staves are fastened below the back of the necks of the men along the upper part of the shoulders, thus painfully suggesting the yoke on the necks of animals. The breaking of "yoke" and "staff" and "rod" means exchange of tyranny for justice and liberty. This is the sense of the passage as a whole (Isa. 9: 1-6).

Shweir, Syria. G. HOWIE.

A Market Scene in Syria

General Notes

—THAT SENATOR LA FOLLETTE is actually out of the presidential campaign, as the result of his recent breakdown at the Publishers' dinner in Philadelphia, is now generally accepted as fact by the press of the whole country. He will probably go to Europe for recuperation during the next three months. All his speaking engagements have been canceled.

—INDICTMENTS HAVE BEEN returned by a Federal Grand Jury at Indianapolis, Ind., and warrants issued for the arrest of thirty-two labor leaders, held by the government to have been criminally connected with the McNamaras and McManigal in planning and executing over one hundred explosions in various States in the last six years. March 12 has been fixed as the date for the arraignment of the accused. The amount of the bonds called for in the individual cases aggregates $300,000.

—ONE OF THE strangest and least expected developments in the Chinese struggle is the attempt of the crumbling Manchu power to effect an eleventh-hour compromise by which the boy-emperor will be recognized as the spiritual head of the nation, while the actual executive is elected by the people. This striking idea is credited to the genius of Yuan Shi Kai; but the probabilities that it will be accepted or even seriously considered are exceedingly slight. The people are everywhere preparing for the general inauguration of a republic.

COULD NOT DO WITHOUT THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Have received my premium book, Women of the Bible, and also The Christian Herald Almanac, which I prize very highly, and I thank you very much. I could not do without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is such a comfort to me.

New Haven, Conn. MRS. GEORGE PHELPS.

THE NAVAJO AND HIS COUNTRY

BY W. R. JOHNSTON

Field Superintendent, the Mission to the Navajo

THE Indians of our country are not "a vanishing race." The latest official census places them at 322,000 as against 270,000 ten years ago. "They are not a dying people." They are not passing from the stage of human affairs, forced out by advancing civilization, but are a growing people who have much of their way before them.

It is a pathetic fact that many people are prejudiced against them because the Indian's side of many a sad story has never reached civilization. They cannot speak our language, and have no way of putting their wrongs and sorrows before the people who would be their friends. We have heard much of "the bloody redskins" but read the government records of the Indian wars and even there it will be found that the Sioux Commission, composed mostly of military men, appointed to make investigation as to the cause of certain Indian wars, states in its report: "That he, the Indian, goes to war is not astonishing; he is often compelled to do so. Wrongs are borne by him in silence that seldom fail to drive civilized men to deeds of violence." But the Indians want to forget the sad past, and under great difficulties are seeking by honest toil to support themselves and their families.

Here are some facts regarding the largest tribe in the United States; many of the same conditions exist in other tribes. The Navajos, numbering 30,000, live in northern Arizona and northwestern New Mexico. They occupy an area about as large as the State of Pennsylvania, most of which is a desert. Here for centuries they have made their own living by raising sheep and goats. A part of the wool is woven by their industrious, resourceful women into the beautiful and durable Navajo blankets, which promise to become a fair competitor of the imported rug. On account of scarcity of water and forage for their flocks and the fact that there is but little of the land that can be cultivated, their lot is not an easy one; but they keep up the struggle, which is rendered more difficult each year by the further and often illegal encroachment of the white man. They are the special wards of our nation, and the day is rapidly approaching when they must touch elbows with our civilization, which will be the final solution of the "Indian problem," but they are not prepared for that contact.

By act of Congress in 1867 every Indian in the United States is entitled to a deed to land for a home. If he prefers he can leave his reservation and select his land from any unoccupied public domain in the United States. In face of the plain provision of the law, recent history is strewn with instances where their homes have been usurped by the white man, because they were ignorant of the law enacted for their protection, and their guardian in many cases has failed them at this critical period.

Navajo Boys Tending the Tribal Flocks on the Desert

Here is a simple case that will illustrate: A settlement of Navajos lived in Cocomino Basin, Arizona. Their forefathers had lived there before them; there for generations they had tended their flocks and supported their families. Under section four of the general allotment law they were entitled to these lands, but the white man came into the country in search of range. He wanted Cocomino Basin; true, the Indians had their homes there,

Pesh-la-ki Et-set-Tie, a Navajo Tribesman

but what did that matter? One cold winter morning with a deep snow on the ground a posse of armed white men rode into the Indian settlement and demanded that they take their flocks and leave at once. The Indians pleaded for their homes, but to no avail. They were forced to take up their line of march through the deep snow, and to add terror to the weeping women and children the white men fired their guns in the air and then set fire to the Indian homes. They were driven twenty miles and forced across the river to a barren country, where they had no shelter for their families or forage for their flocks. There they faced one of the severest winters that country has ever known.

In a treaty with the Navajo in 1868 they were promised a schoolhouse and teacher for thirty children. Forty-four years have gone by and, according to government figures, there are 8,000 Navajo children. Last year there were 1,330 of these children in government and mission schools, leaving, in face of the treaty promise, more than 6,000 children of this one tribe that have never seen a schoolhouse, growing up in pagan superstition.

A recent examination of 2,000 Navajos revealed the fact that twenty per cent. of them were afflicted with trachoma, the dread eye disease, so infectious that our immigration regulations prevent foreigners from landing on our shores when trachoma is in evidence. Recently an epidemic of measles swept over the Navajo and Hopi Indian country—not a serious disease with proper care; but so many of them live beyond the reach of our stations, and have only the "medicine man," whose dark incantations and cruel practises are beyond description. In October our field nurse drove twenty-five miles to a neighborhood where measles had been raging. On approaching a hogan (the conical shaped hut of the Navajo) she saw a staff set up just outside the door of the hut, with a bunch of eagle feathers and arrows fastened on top of it. On entering she found a child, less than two years old, seriously sick with pneumonia. The "medicine man" had "diagnosed" the case and said, "The evil spirit of the eagle that you killed last year is causing this trouble," and he was singing his weird chant and pouring cold water on the poor little sufferer to "drive away the evil spirit."

The combined school, medical and mission force does not reach more than 7,000 Indians, leaving 23,000 of these people back in their desert and mountain homes waiting! Waiting for the teachers, waiting for the doctors, waiting for the herald of the "good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people." If this generation of Navajos is to have a chance to hear the good news of the Gospel the present mission force and equipment will have to be strongly reinforced. The mission to the Navajo and other Indian tribes of the Southwest is an interdenominational mission, incorporated, and has been in the field fifteen years. It has grown from two to twelve missionaries and three native helpers and two stations. The work is supported by voluntary contributions. The officers of the board give their time without compensation, so that all contributions go direct to the work on the field.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—A BILL HAS BEEN introduced by the Nationalists in the Russian Duma, prohibiting the admission into Russia of Jewish citizens of the United States. In the same bill, provision is made for a general increase in the customs tariff, with special duties to be levied against American goods.

—BOTH BY WAY OF London and San Francisco come reports that on January 28 an imperial army of 10,000 men under General Chang Fun was decisively defeated by a Canton republican army under General Wong Ching, near Kuchan, a station on the Tientsin-Pukow Railroad, about one hundred and twenty-five miles north of Nanking. Four hundred Manchus are reported to have been killed. The imperial army retreated twenty miles to Wongsanpo, says the dispatch. General Wong's army, which numbered 8,000, captured the city of Chimak, in Shantung Province.

—SECRETARY MEYER OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT has issued a statement strongly opposing the attitude of the Democratic caucus in the House which favored a reduction of the battleship building program. He pronounces it "a step backward," and says that, even with the continuous program of two battleships a year, the United States would still fall behind its present effective naval strength, as within a year from this date four of our battleships will become non-effective. One dreadnought built by a foreign power in excess of the number we build would be equivalent to wiping off our list six battleships at a stroke. He contends that to protect our coast line and our colonies, we must have a strong sea-going fleet as the only sure defense of the country.

—EARLY IN FEBRUARY an electrician in Waterbury, Conn., utilized a powerful electric current to thaw frozen water pipes in a way that has been heralded almost as a discovery. The pipes along the entire range of a fine residential street were frozen solid. Instead of waiting for the services of plumbers and diggers the superintendent of the Housatonic Power Company hitched a transformer to the trolley wires, and, reducing the voltage, charged the frozen pipes by means of a wire at each end. Within sixty-five minutes the water was running freely. The property owners concerned figure that they must have saved nearly $300.

—THE TOTAL LOSS on the morning of February 2 of the British submarine A3, with the whole of her crew of eleven men, after collision with the gunboat Hazard off the eastern end of the Isle of Wight, adds another to the long list of similar accidents which have occurred in the British navy in recent years. Besides the regular crew of ten men and a lieutenant on board the A3, the admiralty states that three other lieutenants were on the vessel, going through a course of instruction, and were drowned when the submarine sank, making a total of fourteen deaths. The submarine went out of harbor to carry out a series of diving and torpedo exercises, and sank like a stone immediately after her collision with the gunboat Hazard.

—THE COLONIAL COUNCIL of St. Thomas, Danish West Indies, unanimously adopted a bill on February 2 granting a concession to a Danish company to deepen the harbor of St. Thomas and build wharves, docks for the largest of steamers, shipyards, and warehouses. According to a recent dispatch from Copenhagen, Prince Waldemar, a brother of Queen Mother Alexandra of Great Britain, was to be made president of the Board of Directors of the Danish company formed in Denmark to develop St. Thomas. The company, it was stated, considered that with the completion of the Panama Canal St. Thomas would prove a valuable and important harbor, and become the international commercial and shipping center of the West Indies. The company, it was said, purposed to spend about $7,500,000 on the project. According to a bill introduced in the Danish Parliament, the government was asked to grant the company a concession in the harbor of St. Thomas for ninety-nine years. The bill made St. Thomas and St. John, a nearby Danish island, free ports.

—THE UNREMITTING WARFARE which is being waged by the weavers against the non-unionists in the mills of Manchester, England, has caused the authorities to draft a large body of extra police into the city from various points of Lancashire for the protection of the workers who do not belong to the unions. The unions also refuse to recognize the Roman Catholic weavers, who have organized a union of their own. The disturbed condition in the Lancashire cotton trade began at Christmas, when 2,500 operatives at Accrington refused to work with three non-unionists. The mills were stopped for three weeks, during which the operatives lost $3,000,000 in wages, while the spinners, who were placed on half pay, sacrificed about $1,215,000. It was estimated that the total cost to employers and workers was $30,000,000.

—THAT PEOPLE COULD actually be suffering from famine almost within the shadow of the capitol—just seventy miles southeast of it, to be exact—will probably prove a surprise to many persons; but it is a fact that there are a number of towns on the lower Potomac, Leonardtown being the largest, where the food supply ran so low that it became necessary to pool the entire amount and to issue narrow rations to all the people in the town and vicinity. This was due to the fact that these towns are remote from a railroad and depend entirely on the Potomac River steamers for their food supply. The severe cold blocked the river with ice, and the steamers were unable to make any trips for some time. Following an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, a revenue cutter was sent to break the ice so that the supply steamers might reach their usual landing places.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Turn on the Searchlight

THERE are indications that the investigation microbe is to have another tilt with the Department of Agriculture. It is only a few weeks ago since the Department was under the searchlight on the pure food question, and some very strange doings were disclosed, which could hardly be regarded as being in the public interest. Now comes Congressman Frank D. Clark of Florida, who proposes to stir up things in another quarter, and has succeeded in inducing the House Committee on Expenditures to invite Secretary Wilson's Department to tell what it knows about the selling by speculators of Florida swamp lands at fabulous figures to credulous investors throughout the country.

Congressman Clark makes some startling allegations, which, even if true in the most fractional degree, are such as to call for a thorough public inquiry. He says, in substance, that certain land speculation concerns have been exploiting submerged tracts of the Florida Everglades, advertising them widely as desirable property, and that they have taken in millions of dollars for lands at $50 and $60 an acre which originally cost them 50 cents an acre, the lands in question being under from two to ten feet of water, and with no prospect of being drained for years to come. This, of course, is a serious charge, but it assumes a still graver aspect in view of the declaration by two members of the House of Representatives that an adverse official report on the drainage of the Everglades by an Agricultural Department engineer was suppressed, or at least buried in the Department archives. That report, had it been published, would have warned investors, and saved thousands of them from irrecoverable loss. Further, it is charged that a warning circular, giving information to inquirers about Everglade lands, was stopped by the Department's order.

Of course, no one will credit the charge that any branch of our national government, or any set of officials, would knowingly aid in the promotion of doubtful land schemes. Least of all do we believe that Secretary Wilson would permit his Department to be used for such purposes. There is, doubtless, an official side to this strange story, which may change things materially when it is told to the House Committee. By all means, let the whole truth come out. While we agree with Secretary Wilson that his Department is not run "to protect fools who don't know any better than to buy something they never saw," we are also strongly impressed with the fact that the American people have a right to expect common sense in every branch of the national government and due guardianship of their interests, from whatever direction they may be threatened.

What Consecration Means

IN the biography of Hudson Taylor, the famous missionary who became the founder of one of the greatest missions of modern times, the story is told of his spiritual consecration to the Lord's work. We refer to it now because the question of consecration is one which is uppermost in the minds of many of God's children, who have felt the call to put self and all self-seeking aside. Hudson Taylor was a young man when he took the decisive step. He had longed for a life of active service and he finally resolved to place himself unreservedly in God's hands and to be "utterly at his disposal." This resolve, once taken, stood to him as a sacred and irrevocable pledge. Here are his own words describing the feelings of the moment:

> I felt I was in the presence of God, entering into covenant with the Almighty. I felt as though I wished to withdraw my promise, but could not. Something seemed to say: "Your prayer is answered, your conditions are accepted." And from that time the conviction never left me.

All of his after life was lived in accordance with this pledge. He found, as others have done in like conditions, that his work was blessed and multiplied beyond all expectation. His goal was China, and so pitifully small was his worldly provision that he wrote: "It seemed to me probable that I should need to do just as the Twelve and the Seventy had done in Judea—go without purse or scrip, relying on Him who sent me to supply all my need." But he did not begin work unprovided. In 1853, under the auspices of the Chinese Evangelization Society, he sailed for the land of his future labors. On the way, during his five months' voyage, he prayed the prayer of faith for the work about to be undertaken. For years his life was one of hardship and constant peril; but the work grew amain. Friends came to the support of the young missionary; able assistants joined his forces and in twenty-five years he had surmounted every difficulty and founded one of the largest missions the world has ever known.

The story of this single life of consecration and its triumphant results, in the face of innumerable difficulties, should be an inspiration and an encouragement to others. God never allows his own work to fail, nor does he permit the loyal and devoted laborer in his vineyard to stand alone and unsupported. Though the toil may be long and the task arduous, there is always a harvest awaiting the earnest man or woman who, without a thought of self, lives only to labor for God and the redemption of lost humanity.

A Doubtful Innovation

THAT any advantage of real value is to be gained by the introduction of sensational novelties in a church during the Sunday service, has always seemed to us to be extremely doubtful. We hear of pastors who "lighten" the usual program with secular features, as though the radiance of the Cross were not sufficient to "draw all men," as Jesus promised. And now the sweet strains of the old hymnal are to be supplemented by a modified calliope in the form of a whistling accompaniment. At a church near Hackensack, N. J., two Sundays ago, the pastor summoned twelve young lads of the Sunday School to the platform at the evening service, where they went through a program more suited to the ball field than to a religious meeting. They marched around to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and finally faced the audience, where they were introduced as the Boys' Whistling Club. They then gave the club yell in rousing fashion. It was startling, if not edifying, and was followed by a promenade during which the club whistled the hymn, "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," followed by another, "Wonderful Words of Life," with organ accompaniment. It was explained that the club yell was specially intended for outdoors, but as it had a Scriptural application, the pastor had permitted it for this occasion only. He explained that in his efforts to interest the boys in the church and Sunday School, he found that the whistling proposition appealed to them and he confidently expected soon to have a large attendance. The boys are being enrolled in what is known as the National Boys' Whistling Club, with a constitution and by-laws pledging the members to temperance and to refrain from profane language. Now, there is nothing that a healthy boy likes to do better than to whistle, and the pastor in question, like the Pied Piper of Hamelin, will doubtless get many recruits. One cannot be easily reconciled, however, to whistling as a part of the religious service. It cannot be classified as prayer, praise or exhortation. As a means of interesting the boys, it may go very well for week-day meetings; but we should hesitate to counsel such an irreverent and unseemly innovation for regular services. It is hardly an example which other churches will be likely to follow.

The Lenten Privilege

ANNUALLY as the Lenten season returns Christians of every denomination enter its open door of privilege and opportunity. Many churches have noon-day services for those who cannot afford time to turn aside and pray in the earlier or later day. We may keep Lent in our homes by a spiritual retreat from the world, letting its dust fall from our garments while we avail ourselves of extra intervals for prayer and communion. The social world suspends a portion of its gaieties, and much of good work is done for the poor and the sick and the tempted, by women who have spent the earlier weeks of the winter in a round of receptions and amusements. We may not be called upon to keep a literal fast in Lent, but we may refrain from idle gossip, from the unkind thought and the critical word, and with greater zeal we may imitate the Master. As we approach him in real prayer, we shall find it true that "closer is he than breathing, nearer than hands and feet." The Lenten days should make us stronger to meet life's appointments and disappointments, stimulate us to greater effort in Christian work, and comfort us with the comfort of Christ, if we have been bereaved or saddened.

The Antiquity of Man

SEVERAL months ago, we noted the discovery in East Anglia of a skeleton beneath an undisturbed layer of clay and boulders, and we stated then that, in the opinion of expert geologists, this "find" probably antedated any other ancient human remains. This conclusion is now reinforced by many scientists who have recently examined the evidence connected with the "find," and who agree that it belongs to a pre-glacial date. Now, a point is reached where the scientists are strangely at fault. The Neanderthal skeleton found near Dusseldorf, Germany, in 1857, was declared to be of a most primeval type, but post-glacial, whereas the new East Anglia "find," though conceded to be pre-glacial, closely resembles the skeleton of the modern man. Here is the record of the principal discoveries:

Date	Location	Age (Estimated)
1857	Neanderthal (Ger.)	100,000 years
1866	La Naulette (Belg.)	Indefinite
1866	Spy (Belg.)	Indefinite
1907	Mauer (Ger.)	400,000 years
1909	La Chapelle (Fr.)	Indefinite
1911	E. Anglia (Eng.)	Pre-glacial

The essential point that troubles the scientists—and especially those who have taken pains to impress upon us their judgment that the three "finds" of 1857 and 1866 bore strong evidence of an early evolutionary stage—is that this latest discovery, which all seem to regard as belonging to an age almost immeasurably distant (from 400,000 to 750,000 years), puts back the date of evolution to what for the want of a better term may be called the "vanishing point." One scientist, in view of the new light now afforded, writes that the conclusions formed regarding the Neanderthal type (assuming them to have had certain simian-like qualities) were evidently premature and that "it is now clear that they were survivors of a stock which had deteriorated, and not progenitors of our race. If we have to accept the theory of evolution (and it is still only a theory), it is a puzzling fact that man has changed so little in 100,000 years." Professor Keith, another recognized authority, holds that the latest discovery puts evolution back "hundreds of thousands of years." Meanwhile it will be interesting to note the attitude of scientists generally toward this new "find" of an undeteriorated human stock, who lived in the far-off "morning of the world," and who is no more to be compared with certain degraded types that came thousands of centuries later than the civilized Caucasian of to-day to the lowest type of African pigmy or Solomon Island cannibal.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, February 21, 1912

	PAGE
George Washington. From Painting by Gilbert Stuart	Cover
Our Mail-Bag	178
Quieting Down at Lawrence	179
How to Read the Bible. Sermon. By Rev. D. J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D.	180
Is It Easy to Get Rich? By Eugene Thwing	181
Poems Worth Knowing	181
Bible Questions	181
Swept to Death on Niagara's Ice (Illustrated)	182
The Navajo and His Country (Illustrated). By W. R. Johnston	183
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	184
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	185
The Birth of the New China. By A. Raymond Kepler	186, 187
Around the Cozy Home Hearth (Illustrated). By Margaret E. Sangster	188
The Catspaw (Illustrated). By Alice Garland Steele	189
American Girl Papers (Illustrated)	192
Brander Cushing's Ambition. By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	193, 194
Bishop Darlington's "Lighthouses"	195
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	196, 197
Young People's Societies	199
Centenary of Peace	199

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Jumps from Liberty Statue

FREDERICK R. LAW, a professional steeplejack, jumping from the arm of the statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island the other day, dropped 272 feet to the five-pointed parapet around the base of the figure. He had intended to drop to the ground 312 feet from the torch, but fell straighter than he had calculated and landed sooner than he had expected. He had invented a parachute which is worn about the neck and head, and he made the leap to demonstrate the success of his invention. Permission was granted to Mr. Law by the War Department, which is interested in experiments relating to the protection of aviators, to attempt the feat. Captain Leonard Wiseman, U.S.A., in charge of the Signal Corps school on the island, ordered the little steamer Osprey to stand by in case Law should fall into the bay. Law crawled out upon the rim of the torch socket with the strange looking device of ruffles about his neck and head. He held up his right arm for a rudder, then leaped out. He had descended only a few feet when the folds of the parachute began to spread and assumed the shape of an umbrella. He hit the ground harder than he expected and hurt his ankle, though not seriously. The moving picture men were on hand to record his every movement, including the fall. The very next day Franz Reichalt, an Austrian tailor, in testing a new parachute he had invented, jumped from the first platform of the Eiffel Tower in Paris, 185 feet high, and fell like a stone to the ground and was instantly killed. Reichalt had long been interested in aviation. He had tested his device in the courtyard of the house he occupied, and was certain of its success. Specialists doubted its ability to open speedily enough to save the inventor. It was hard to get government permission for the experiment, and it is said there was a stipulation that a dummy be used. But it was publicly known that he was going to make the trial himself. He clambered over the hand rail and threw himself forward, but the parachute never opened, and his descent was one of unbroken acceleration, 185 feet to the ground. His body was a shapeless mass when the gendarmes picked it up. The accident caused a protest to be raised against a repetition of such experiments, except with the fullest approval of the best specialists. It is possible the government may forbid the experiments by aviator Guillaume, who has arranged to fling himself in a few weeks from a monoplane when 1,000 feet above the ground and alight with the aid of a parachute. In the progress of scientific discovery there is more or less danger, in that of aviation it is the maximum of peril when the best knowledge and prudence are present. But society should put better safeguards to the visionary and reckless persons who are ignorant or regardless of the fatal perils they invite. Sure tests of an invention should be made before a precious life is put in the balance. Wisdom must be united with prudence.

I wisdom dwell with prudence. (Prov. 8 : 12.)

Wages of Sin Is Death

A WOMAN of wealth and her young husband committed suicide with gas the other night. To a reporter the woman said a few days before the tragedy: "You and I and Fred, young, heedless, cynical, living in this reckless town of New York, may laugh sometimes at old things like the law and religion, when they say 'thou shalt not.' We may think that phrase was written for old fogies. Also we may sneer at 'The wages of sin is death.' But, my friend, there comes to all of us, sometimes, the knowledge that the law and religion are right. What they say we shall not do we cannot do without suffering. I have learned that. Also, the wages of sin is death. It's worse than death—it's a hell on earth." Oh that these persons, stung to death by their own consciences and by the rebukes of friends, had gone on to the rest of the verse, "but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." Oh that they had fled to Christ in their desperation and found that his blood can make any heart, however black, whiter than snow, and redeem any life from wreck, however complete.

For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. (Rom. 6: 23.)

Julia Ward Howe's Industry

MRS. MAUD HOWE ELLIOTT, daughter of Julia Ward Howe, addressing a woman's club in New York recently, spoke in reference to her mother's old age. She said it was not such a wonder that her mother lived to be ninety-one as it was that she should have done such splendid work between eighty and ninety. When Mrs. Howe was eighty-seven she wrote in her diary these wishes for the year: "I wish for work, useful and honorable, and as remunerative as it shall please God to send." Mrs. Elliott said that her mother received but $5 for the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season. (Job 5 : 26.)

Girl That Saved Two Hundred

MISS KATE SKELLY, whose bravery twenty years ago saved from death 200 passengers on a train, the wrecking of which she prevented, died at Boone, Ia., the other day as the result of an operation for appendicitis. On the evening of July 10, 1891, heavy rains destroyed eleven out of the twenty-one bridges on the Des Moines River on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. Miss Skelly, a girl sixteen years old, asked her mother to let her look for her father, a section foreman on the road. The girl took a lantern and went out into the storm. She found a bridge down near by and knew that a train would be due soon. She started on the run for the station at Moin Goma, four miles away. The wind blew her lantern out and she had to crawl on her hands and knees over some trestlework that remained. She reached the station just as the train pulled in and then fell fainting on the ground. The legislature of her State rewarded her bravery with a grant of $5,000. In 1904 she was made station agent of the place where she had saved the train. Here is but another act of superb womanly heroism; but women have worked just as hard and unselfishly for the salvation of the souls of people from moral evil.

Photos copyrighted by Towers Engraving Co.

Frederick R. Law and His Jump From Liberty Statue

He that converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins. (James 5: 20.)

Petroleum as Food

THERE was a time, not very far in the past, when petroleum was counted good for nothing but to cure rheumatism by rubbing the muscles on the outside. Since then it would be difficult to name the different kinds of practical uses to which it has been put. The list includes illuminants, lubricants, and fuels of many kinds, as well as drugs and dyes already hard to count and promising to be innumerable. So when a scientist recently claimed that he had extracted a product from this mysterious and complex substance that would make an excellent food, there was surprise expressed first, and then the opinion that the man had probably discovered a new article of food. It would seem a long way from the filthy odors of the crude mineral oil to the delightful fumes and delicious taste of an article of food, but the miracles of modern science and discovery have done even stranger things than to effect such a transformation. The fundamental element is there and there is a strong likelihood that it will be separated from its unpleasant ingredients in the form of a palatable and nutritious food. Vegetable oil was an important article of food among the Jews as it is among most of the nations of the Far East.

I will give you the rain of your land in due season, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil. (Deut. 11 : 14.)

Loaded Turkeys with Sinkers

A BUTCHER with a shop on Third Avenue, New York, was sentenced to three months in the penitentiary by Justice Steinert for loading his turkeys with one-pound lead sinkers. He had a large stock of Rhode Island turkeys, in each of which he had carefully tucked away sixteen-ounce weight of lead. Inspector Albert Lutz of the Bureau of Weights and Measures discovered the fraud, seized the fowls, and entered a suit against the butcher which has ended in his conviction. A butcher who had been in the business for about forty years told us recently that he had been compelled to go out of business because his conscience would not let him adopt some modern methods against which he had to compete. He said that with the seller of meat to him on one side, and the "percentage" or graft of the cooks and agents of rich customers on the other, to which he would not agree, the only course of honor for him was to quit. He told us of a butcher applying for employment, who gave as a recommendation that he could make his wages on the scales, meaning by giving light weight. Light weight and short measure are not confined to the butcher business. They are resorted to by bad men in all lines of trade. They are an abomination to good men and women and to God.

A false balance is abomination to the Lord; but a just weight is his delight. (Prov. 11:1.)

Jewels and Mummies Discovered

BY a cablegram from Cairo it is learned that the Egyptian Exploration Fund Expedition made a sensational discovery at Abydos. One tomb saved from vandal hands by the building of another one over it was found to contain a dozen coffins of limestone. Each coffin held a mummy wrapped in the usual bandages of blue and gold, the painting on which was as fresh and bright as ever. A Twelfth Dynasty tomb when opened disclosed the mummy of a woman round whose neck was a string of beads, and at whose left hand were three scarabs, one of them being a superb amethyst. In the tomb were alabaster vases containing the dye with which the occupant used to paint her eyebrows and eyelashes. In a great cemetery the excavators came across the skeleton of a woman deep down in the sand. They had buried her with her jewels, bracelets of cowries and beads of cornelian. What a marvelous work the spade is doing, and how grateful the world should be to it for its discoveries that teach such lessons to the living and confirm and emphasize the truths of the Bible! The revelations of the spade of Abydos cause the most serious reflection, as the frailty and vanity of this earthly life reach their climax in the jewels and the bones asleep together. One of the women of rank had long black hair, and her skull wore a crown of jewels of every description, and on her finger was a ring of five fine scarabs, one of which bears the cartouche of Shishak, an Egyptian king of the Thirty-second Dynasty, who sacked Jerusalem in the time of Rehoboam.

And it came to pass in the fifth year of King Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem; and he took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house. (I. Kings 14: 25, 26.)

THE BIRTH OF THE NEW CHINA

BY A. RAYMOND KEPLER, SHANGTAN, CHINA

A Scene in Hankow After the Fire Started by the Manchus

The Southern Revolutionary Army in the Field Under the Command of General Li Huan Hung

The Great Fire at Hankow as Seen From the River

EARLY in November an article in this magazine on the unrest and scattered uprisings in China asked the question, "Will China become a republic?" and now the answer seems to be at hand. The Manchu dynasty has to all intents and purposes given up the fight.

The simultaneous announcement by cable early in February that Yuan Shi Kai had received permission from the throne to organize a republic in the North in conjunction with Dr. Sun Yat Sen's Southern Government, the arrival at Nanking of Wu Ting Fang, the Republican Minister of Justice, and Tang Shao Yi, the representative of the imperial premier, and the extension of the armistice, indicate the approaching end of the struggle and future amicable negotiations looking to organization acceptable to both sides. Again has China surprised the world—not excluding the Manchus. Even the Chinese themselves were taken by surprise. Not because, half a century after the Tai Ping Rebellion, the Sons of Han have freed themselves from the Manchu yoke, for those who have been in touch with Chinese affairs and the growing spirit of patriotism knew that this was inevitable. It is the suddenness of the outbreak, the lightning-like rapidity with which it spread over the empire, the universal support it received from the people, the orderliness and restraint of the revolutionaries — it is these aspects of the revolution at which we are all amazed.

For more than ten years Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his confrères have carried on their propaganda, the visible results of which are now at hand. During these years, he has been a fugitive from his country with a heavy price offered for his head by the Manchu Government. He organized the Gêh Ming Tang, a phrase originating in Japan, which in Chinese means "The Sever Authority Party." It really means the society which has for its object to sever the authority of the Manchus.

In China, the Gêh Ming Tang confined its efforts almost solely towards winning the military officials and the soldiers. Dr. Sun estimated that if the revolution could but be successfully launched at one strategic center, he could count on the general discontent of the masses with the Manchu rule to impel the other important centers spontaneously to fall into line with the revolution and make it a success. The events of the past four months testify that Sun Yat Sen was mistaken neither in his estimate of his countrymen, nor in his selection of method.

Plans for the Revolution

Himself a Cantonese, his first choice was Canton as the center where the revolution was to be launched. All plans were made accordingly, but the attempt last year proved abortive. Wuchang was next chosen as the place to launch the new ship of state. Strategically, no better place could have been chosen. In the very center of China, the vice-regal capital of the Provinces of Hunan and Hupeh, the key to the Yangtse Provinces—it was a city so well fortified that, could the local garrison once hoist the red flag over the city, it would be most difficult for the imperial troops to retake it.

After the Gêh Ming Tang had once decided on Wuchang as the base of operations, they lost no time in making definite local plans for the revolt, and local members became busy preparing bombs and other implements of destruction. Just what was the exact date originally set for the outbreak in Wuchang is not known, though it is rumored that the middle of January, 1912, was the time appointed for the event. This much is certain—that the revolutionaries were forced to take premature action, because, through the accidental explosion of one of the bombs in the Russian Concession in Hankow, the viceroy became cognizant of the plot, secured the names of over a score of revolutionists, beheaded them, and the end of the beheading was not yet manifest. Whereupon, the revolutionaries concluded that it behooved them to act—even though it be premature—and by the evening of October 12, one day after the viceroy, Jui Cheng, began his wholesale beheading, Wuchang was in the hands of the rebels, the viceroy a fugitive in hiding, and the red rebel flag floating over the capital of the Hukwang Provinces. By a single swoop, the rebels gained control of Wuchang, Hanyang and Hankow with arsenal, granaries, and a large supply of funds.

It was for this that Sun Yat Sen had worked and planned. His part of the work for the time being was finished, and his mantle of leadership temporarily fell upon another, Li Huan Hung, an English-speaking, broad-minded, self-sacrificing soldier, who was asked to become generalissimo of the rebel forces in the Wuhan cities when the appeal was made to the arbitrament of the sword.

The Manchus' Failure

If Viceroy Jui Cheng, himself a Manchu, had loved his emperor more than life, or if Yin Chang, general-in-chief of the army, had been more expeditious in despatching Northern troops to Hankow, and in giving battle to the rebels, or if the Northern troops had simply taken advantage of their victories in the early skirmishes, and held the positions which they had won, instead of falling back to their original positions after they had routed the rebels, the uprising in Wuchang would have experienced the same fate as that in Canton; the Southern provinces would still be outwardly loyal and the Manchus secure on the Dragon Throne for some time to come.

But Jui Cheng soon took to flight, and Yin Chang took more than a fortnight to gather a sufficient number of troops to drive the rebels from Hankow. However, it must be remembered that Yin Chang's task was a most difficult one. Of all the troops under his command, he did not know what regiments might, at the critical moment, turn over to the rebels. He could rely absolutely only on the Manchu corps, and it is said that during the Battle of Hankow, in the disposal of his troops, he kept the Manchu corps in the rear, so as to fire on the Northern troops at the moment any should show the slightest signs of defection. Again, the esprit de corps of the Han troops was naturally much greater than that of the Northern troops, where its absence accounted for their failure to take the fullest advantage of their victories. The Han soldiers were fighting for a cause—a conviction—for their country. The imperials were brought South to Hankow under the guise of participating in the autumn maneuvers, and in their first skirmishes used cartridges with wooden bullets, used by the armies at the time of maneuvers, but utterly useless for real warfare. Many of the unused cartridges were found lying on the battlefield, having been cast away by the Northern troops when they discovered that it was "the real thing." Even then, the troops were told that they were fighting, not an organized rebel army, but a band of robbers who had seized the Wuhan cities. When the true situation revealed itself to them, their ardor was naturally dampened. Consequently, the imperial troops did not win a decisive victory and, in the meantime, city after city, and province after province, was declaring its independence of Manchu rule.

Hunan was the first province to emulate Hupeh's example and turn "Han." The first material indication we had in Hunan of the seriousness of the Wuchang revolt manifested itself in the scarcity of money. Hunan is dependent upon Hankow for its supply of currency. When the rumors of the revolt reached the masses, those who had silver hid it, and as the local banks were unable to renew their supply from Hankow (since all the banks at the latter place were closed), it soon became impossible to procure a dollar. Business was at a standstill.

When Hunan heard of the Hupeh revolt, the revolutionary spirit immediately began to manifest itself among the troops in Changsha, the provincial capital. The foreign consuls, fearing an outbreak, asked all the foreigners to leave the city and congregate on the island in the Siang River, opposite the city, on which the British Consulate and the residences of the customs staff are situated.

On October 21, a telegraphic dispatch was received, stating that the rebels were utterly routed in Hankow. Immediately, the local situation in Changsha resumed its ante-bellum attitude; the army no longer breathed imminent revolt—the foreigners returned to the city—all was peaceful along the banks of the Siang that night. On the following day (Sunday, October 22), when it became known that the news of the previous day was manufactured and that the revolutionary forces were still holding their own against the Northern troops, the Changsha soldiery wasted no time but immediately hauled down the dragon flag and hoisted the white flag over the yamens and garrisons.

There was no disorder or confusion in the city during these hours of transition. A stranger could have walked through the streets of that historic capital and been unconscious of the great events that were transpiring within its four walls. Edicts were soon posted in all parts of the city, enjoining the people to be orderly and protect foreigners and foreign property—thieves and looters to be immediately beheaded.

The End of the Da Ching

Within a few hours, every soldier was wearing a white band around his arm, while from almost every house was hanging the white flag with the character "Han" written upon it. "Han" was the name of an early pre-Christian dynasty and ever since then the Chinese have called themselves the Sons of Han.

When the writer reached the post office, he found that the sign on the outside no longer read "Da Ching"—The Great Pure Post Office ("Ching" being the name of the present dynasty), but the "Da Han" Post Office. Likewise, the government bank was immediately converted from the "Da Ching" to the "Da Han" Bank, while the calendar was changed to read four thousand six hundred and ninth year of Hwang Ti, who was their first emperor, instead of the third year of Hsuan Tung.

The following day, the neighboring city of Siangtan—soldiers, civil officials and populace—quietly followed in the wake of their provincial capital; and thus, city after city in that province hoisted the white flag and gave its allegiance to the new order of things—though what this new government was to be had not yet been determined upon.

The day after Changsha hauled down the Dragon Flag, I went to Hankow to attempt to procure several thousand dollars in bullion, and bring the same back to Hunan to relieve the missions of their financial embarassment. It was the first steamer that left Changsha after the local coup d'état, and the steamer was crowded with refugees—many being petty officials. While we were passing through the Tung Ting Lake, the young wife of an official jumped overboard. She had had a quarrel with her husband and took this uniquely Oriental method of spiting him. She did not sink but kept floating, face down, on the water. A lifeboat was immediately lowered and she was recovered and brought back to the steamer. Although the doctor on shipboard labored over her for almost an hour, she could not be resuscitated.

A SPECTATOR'S STORY OF THE WAR

When we reached Hankow, we found the two armies separated by less than three miles, and on the eve of conflict. More than a fortnight had passed since the red flag was unfurled and, excepting for a few unimportant skirmishes, the two armies had not yet joined battle.

The writer, with a newspaper correspondent, inspected the rebel forces and entrenchments the day previous to the battle. They must have had at least fifteen thousand men in their entrenchments, which were spread out on either side of the Peking-Hankow Railway, defending the approaches to Hankow. Everywhere we found them alert, eager for action, their small guns loaded and manned—and all scanning the horizon in the direction of Seven Mile Creek, where the Northern troops were waiting the order from Yin Chang to advance. They were all most cordial and friendly to us, and frequently asked our opinion of their entrenchments, for in their estimation all foreigners are experts in matters military.

Very few of the rebel soldiers knew even the elementary principles of warfare; many had never held a rifle before their enlistment. One regiment was composed of rickshaw coolies—men who had been pulling rickshaws in the foreign settlement of Hankow a few days previous. Many were lads of sixteen and eighteen. What could these raw troops do against the trained regulars from the North, even though they outnumbered their foes four to one?

At dawn on the following day (Friday, October 27), we were awakened by the artillery fire. The Imperialists had crossed Seven Mile Creek and were advancing on Kilometer Ten. The Han troops, well entrenched, were holding their own, when Admiral Sah steamed up the river with four of his cruisers. The Han trenches were perpendicular to the river, so that when Admiral Sah opened fire upon these trenches, his shell swept them from end to end. The slaughter was frightful, and no troops could hold those trenches. There was nothing to do but retreat. Nothing daunted, the artillery turned their guns upon the cruisers, and shells were seen dropping all about the ships. But the guns were of too small a caliber to have any effect on the armored vessels.

Soon the wounded began pouring in, and we were kept busy disarming them and sending them into the hospitals in the concessions. They felt they needed to apologize to us for their retreat and asserted that they could have repulsed and defeated the Northern troops had not Admiral Sah come upon the scene with his warships. One silk-clad Chinese gentleman asked if it were not in violation of the rules of modern warfare for the naval forces thus to assist in a land engagement!

Though the revolutionaries were obliged to withdraw from Kilometer Ten, they so stubbornly resisted the imperial advance that for four days the battle raged behind the foreign concessions before the Northern troops occupied Hankow—and another month passed before they obtained possession of Hanyang. By that time, the revolution was so widespread and firmly established that these Hupeh reverses could not stem the on-rushing tide. Moreover, the capture by the Han army of Nanking neutralized the results of the Hupeh defeats.

As soon as the Northern troops occupied Hankow, they took kerosene and the torch and began their barbaric work of destruction. For three days and nights, beginning with October 31, the city was wrapped in flames, at the end of which time over three-quarters of the city was a mass of ruins. The section bordering on the Foreign Concessions was all that was left of the great commercial center of China. The normal population of Hankow was about 800,000. The great majority of these had early left the city and returned to their native villages, so that, when the conflagration began, only several tens of thousands were living in the doomed area. Of course, looting forthwith became a strong feature of the situation, though if any one was caught with loot, he was immediately beheaded, and his head and the loot hung up as a warning to others.

In the light of the Battle of Hankow, what shall be our estimate of the Chinese soldier? The trained regular troops of the North showed excellent organization and perfect discipline. Their advance was systematic in lines of companies with a skirmish line ahead. The latter advanced from cover to cover, keeping as excellent a line as at drill, while the main line followed up by short advances at frequent intervals. This is the expression of an American army officer who witnessed the battle. Another American army officer told the writer that he considered the Northern, modern-drilled Chinese soldier the equal of any soldier in the world.

As we look into the immediate future, what are the prospects? The rule of the Manchus is at an end, and it seems to be an assured fact that the future government of China will be republican in form. One cannot, after all, help but look with regret at the passing of the Manchus. In the coming months of reconstruction, China greatly needs tried and experienced statesmen. It is a pity that the passing of the Manchus will deprive China of the advice and help of true, capable leaders—for not all the Manchus are incapable and unworthy. Prince Kung, the head of the Opium Reform Bureau; Prince Su, the former president of the Ministry of the Interior; Duke Tsai Tse, former president of the Ministry of Revenue; Prince Pu Lun, the first president of the Upper House of the Imperial Parliament; Yin Chang, former minister to Germany and president of the Ministry of War; Tung Fang, who has twice been assassinated and again resurrected, according to the reports sent by the Associated Press—all these and many others, less noted but equally capable and honest and worthy and experienced men, will make their exit from China's political arena at this crisis, when men of experience and worth are invaluable. Because of this we cannot but regret the forced exodus of the Manchus from Peking.

The masses think that a republic will mean a great reduction, if not the abolition, of taxes. But no government can be conducted without resources. By prohibiting the growth and importation of opium, by abolishing the likin, a great source of revenue will be taken away. Where will the government procure revenue to make up for this loss? The revolutionary authorities have issued proclamations abolishing land taxes, likin, arrears of taxation and all the petty impositions under which China has groaned; but there is nothing yet to show what they propose to institute instead, for the conduct of the ordinary business of government. Taxes repealed are likely to cause infinitely more discontent when reimposed, even in modified form, than if they had never been touched. Unrest, occasional riots and uprisings will be bound to occur in the next few years, just as America experienced her period of unrest immediately following the Revolutionary and Civil Wars. Let the Western nations but look on with patience and sympathy—see that the integrity of the empire is maintained, and not interfere in the purely national affairs unless asked to do so.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, Provisional President of China, Leaving Shanghai for Nanking

The Relief Movement

The Central Famine Relief Committee recently organized in New York for the purpose of sending aid to the famine sufferers in China has chosen the following officers: Chairman, Right Rev. David H. Greer, D.D.; Vice-Chairman, Hon. Whitelaw Reid; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Hon. Joseph H. Choate, John D. Crimmins, Robert W. de Forest, Hon. Seth Low, Robert C Ogden, Hon. Oscar S. Straus; Treasurer, Jacob H Schiff; Secretary, William B. Millar. The committee includes many men prominent in philanthropy, finance and general business. They are:

Stephen Baker, Nolan R. Best, Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., George C. Boldt, Arthur Brisbane, Thatcher M. Brown, James G. Cannon, Andrew Carnegie, George B. Cortelyou, Robert Fulton Cutting, Cleveland H. Dodge, Charles S. Fairchild, John H. Finley, John Foord, Colonel E. W. Halford, Edward S. Harkness, A. Barton Hepburn, Adrian Iselin, Arthur Curtiss James, General Thomas L. James, O. R. Judd, A. D. Juilliard, W. M. Kingsley, Adolph Lewisohn, Hamilton W. Mabie, V. Everit Macy, Alfred E. Marling, William G. McAdoo, Silas McBee, St. Clair McKelway, D. W. McWilliams, J. P. Morgan, Jr.; William Fellowes Morgan, John R. Mott, William C. Muschenheim, Morgan J. O'Brien, Adolph S. Ochs, E. E. Olcott, George Foster Peabody, George W. Perkins, Eugene Philbin, Henry Phipps, Ralph Pulitzer, William Reick, Herman Ridder, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., William Jay Schieffelin, I. N. Seligman, L. H. Severance, Albert Shaw, William Sloane, Robert E. Speer, James Speyer, Melville E. Stone, Samuel Thorne, Oswald G. Villard, Paul M. Warburg, J. Campbell White, J. E. Williams, James Wood, John W. Wood, General Stewart L. Woodford.

The committee, which was formed at the suggestion of President Taft, has issued an appeal in behalf of two million people now facing starvation and pestilence in China. It will work in co-operation with the Central China Relief Commission in Shanghai. Contributions sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this purpose will be forwarded to Bishop Greer's committee.

The Famine Orphans' Plea

FROM many States we are receiving letters from readers, expressing a deep interest in the famine orphans of China, for whose support appeal was made in this journal. There are nearly two thousand of these little boys and girls in the various mission orphanages, and provision is asked for the support of some seven hundred who, unless we can find patrons for them, will be utterly unprovided for. In the present terribly disturbed condition of affairs in China, with war and famine raging, the situation of the missionaries is a most trying one. Beset by perils on every side, they are loyally standing by their work, and especially shielding the little orphan waifs whom God has committed to their care, and who have thus far been supported by the kindness of our people. Many of the missionaries have written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, pleading in behalf of the children, and we cannot believe that our friends, who have done such splendid service for Christ and humanity in China, will turn a deaf ear to the cry.

Some of the letters received during the week show a warm sympathy for the famine orphans. We have space for a few extracts only: "Enclosed please find $1 to use for the orphan children of China," writes A. B., Cortland, N. Y. "I hope that God will bless it for the good of humanity." D. T. M., Concord, N. H., sends $50 for the same purpose. A friend, who called at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, handed in $10 for the orphans, but declined to give any name. E. C. D., Whigham, Ga., sends $5 through W. E. T., Ashburn, Ga. E. O. T., Hebron Highlands, Mass., sends $2 and a list of eleven friends whom he wishes to receive the Little Moon-Flower booklet, which we are sending free to all who are interested in the orphans. Miss A. T., New York, sends $1 "to feed a child for two weeks." Mrs. L., Oswego, Ill., sends $1, adding, "I wish it were more, may God richly bless you and them."

All contributions in aid of the orphan children of China should be addressed: CHINA FAMINE ORPHAN FUND, Bible House, New York.

Around the Cozy Home Hearth

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Care of Little Children

ONE day not long ago a little four-year-old girl was brought home from a hospital where she had had a critical operation. The child had been very ill and had been nursed with the greatest care, and her home-coming was a festival, not alone in her own house, but in every house in the neighborhood. People vied with one another in kind attention to the little one, and when Sunday morning came a friend sent in a tray with a tempting breakfast crowned with a beautiful flower. "Here is a surprise," said the mother, but the smiling child said positively, "It's lovely, but it isn't a surprise. It's something I expected." The processes of a child's mind are mysterious to grown people, who can often tell very little of what their thoughts are, or by what method of reasoning they reach conclusions.

I sometimes think that our greatest danger in caring for little children is that of mistaking their point of view. Their world is no higher than the ceiling of the nursery. Father and mother are to them personages of great importance, yet they cannot explain, let them be ever so confiding, just why they do and say certain things at certain times. They may seem obstinate when they have no such intention; they may drift into mischief when they are bent on investigation. A grown-up woman remembers that when she was a very small child she watched with fascinated interest the slender column of water that poured from a spout when her mother was making tea. Day after day she watched it, a slender silver thread, falling from a tea kettle into a teapot, and more and more the marvel grew as to what might happen should she put her finger into the descending column. One day the temptation became irresistible and she suddenly put that dimpled finger into the scalding steam. The result was, of course, a painful burn, and no one who saw the occurrence could at all appreciate the child's reason for so stupid an action. The act, however, was not stupid. The child was in the mood of the explorer and did only what many grown people do in taking a risk in order to make a discovery. She had not been able in her small mind to comprehend anything about that column of water, and she was too young to consider the difference between cold and heat.

Little children are often wantonly punished by big men and women who take an unfair advantage of juvenile helplessness. In many cases reward for right doing is much better as an educational factor than punishment for wrong-doing. The mother of seven children said one day that in the review of their upbringing she realized that she had been unjust to the older children. "I have learned," she said, "to depend upon atmosphere and example in these days, and the younger ones in this household have been brought up without much recourse to penalties."

Children who are well are usually happy, and children who are happy are usually what we call good. Here let us inquire whether we are good ourselves. Our mental state should surround our children with an atmosphere of peace. Flowers thrive in the sunshine; so do children.

. . .

Perilous Kisses

A BABY is the most kissable being in existence. A child holding up a face like a blossom, rosy and sweet, seems made for kisses, yet the kissing of the nursery brood should be prohibited not merely to strangers and visiting acquaintances, but to adoring grandparents, aunts and cousins. Let the mother and father kiss the little ones, if they wish, but the world in general should be contented without making this demonstration. A baby's hand may be kissed, but not a baby's lips. Kisses often convey contagion, especially in the season when colds are prevalent. A cold in the head is a disagreeable malady, and may be the precursor of a cold elsewhere. The person who has it should keep it, and so far as may be possible, establish a strict quarantine lest the cold be given to a friend. Love should be at pains not to spread contagion by a kiss.

The Princess Alice of Hesse, said to be the favorite daughter of the late Queen Victoria, died many years ago of diphtheria. She had passionately kissed her dying child and was herself taken from her children in consequence.

Time was when women, meeting one another on the street, stopped to kiss in public, and time was also when friends calling in the afternoon, whether intimate or not, whether the call was casual or on business, or friendly and affectionate, kissed as they came and went. This is fortunately not the fashion at present. It never was a wise fashion, and it probably will never return.

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

A Scene in One of the Great Tea Gardens at Uje, Japan

AMONG all the industrial and agricultural developments that have taken place in Japan during the last two decades, none has been more interesting or remunerative than has been her entry into the tea business of the world. Though for centuries Japan has grown tea for her own use, her export business is of comparatively recent origin. The hardier varieties of the tea shrub, from which is taken the exported product, are now cultivated in large areas in many parts of the Japanese archipelago.

. . .

Must Coasting Be Forbidden?

THE games of each season have their perils. This winter accidents to boys who have been coasting have been chronicled in various places. Other winters have been equally noted for casualties sometimes fatal and sometimes terminating only in wounds and bruises. The charm of a headlong race down a hill on a sled when one is eight, twelve or sixteen is scarcely to be put into words. The blood dances, the pulse thrills, the eager joy overflows, and there is in it the keen, deep pleasure that we all have in swift motion, whether it be in a sailboat racing before the wind, in a motor-car rushing across the landscape, or on a toboggan coasting at rapid pace to its goal.

In our cities boys have free playgrounds, but their chances for healthful winter sports outside of a skating rink are few. In the suburbs and the country, there are still steep streets, rural parks and hills that lend themselves to the delight of the coaster, but in these days when automobiles are many, and in the country where limits are not invariably regarded, there may be fatal accidents because of collisions between the boy's sled and the man's machine. To throw the blame on the chauffeur is not necessarily just. Every one familiar with automobiling is aware that he who drives a car leads a life of the greatest anxiety, and though he may be a model of discretion, is never sure that he shall not unexpectedly find himself too late when a victim meets him on the road. An individual motor-car is much more dangerous than a flying express. The railway train is run by schedule over tracks that have a right of way. It is otherwise with the private car that runs along the common road. The question that confronts village authorities at the moment is whether to forbid coasting as a winter pastime for children and young people, or to interpose larger legal cautions between the coasters and the owners of automobiles. The boys will never be fifteen again. The day is fast coming when the grinding machinery of business and bread-winning will crush the high spirits that are the birthright of youth. Why forbid the boys to coast? Why not instead set aside for their use desirable hills and roadways, and erect near these signs such as those with which we are familiar at grade crossings? Let the motor car slow its progress when it reaches these spots. Let the grown man and his friends, intent on pleasure, and the delivery car, intent on business, alike arrest their speed until the children's sports are found out to be safe.

. . .

About Interruptions

UNLESS one has learned how to sidetrack the immediate engagement when interrupted by a visitor, a great deal of valuable time will be lost. When we have set aside an hour for a special piece of work we are not always pleased to receive a call from a book agent. An interruption that makes a demand upon our sympathy, or affords an occasion for saying a kind word, ought to be welcome although it disarranges the plans we have made. I mention the book agent because many people treat him or her with scant courtesy, when instead there should be special politeness shown to one whose life is spent in prevailing on reluctant customers to become enthusiastic patrons.

The busy women, whatever her occupation, suffers not a little from the invasion of her time by idle friends. They have not much to do, except to bask in the sunshine, whereas her time is filled with duties that cannot be shirked. So far as it is possible, she should guard her working hours from interruption, but inevitable interruptions should not be met with irritation. The secret of accomplishing a great deal is in going straight on every day with the thing in hand without the slightest reference to mood. This being done, the next step is to have convenient shelves in the mind on which, at an instant's notice, the thing that is being done may be laid away to be resumed again in the next half hour. If not in the next half hour, she who has learned the art of sidetracking and attained it to perfection, may lay her work aside for a day, a week or a month, and take it up again without the loss of anything essential.

Mothers ought to guard themselves against being impatient when the children interrupt them. When the boys and girls rush in with their endless questions that only mother can answer, never turn away from them with an air of annoyance. The children are the most valuable assets in the home. Sidetrack other things, but give the children the best of your time. You will be repaid.

THE CATSPAW

BY ALICE GARLAND STEELE

THE new mayor sat in his inner office alone. It was the first day since his installation that he had been left free to take stock, as it were, of his high calling. He glanced about him; the fine mahogany fittings had been bought by his predecessor, a man of the people, brought up on the outer edge of respectability, and yet with a soul that recognized, commercially, the value of carven wood and Bokhara coverings.

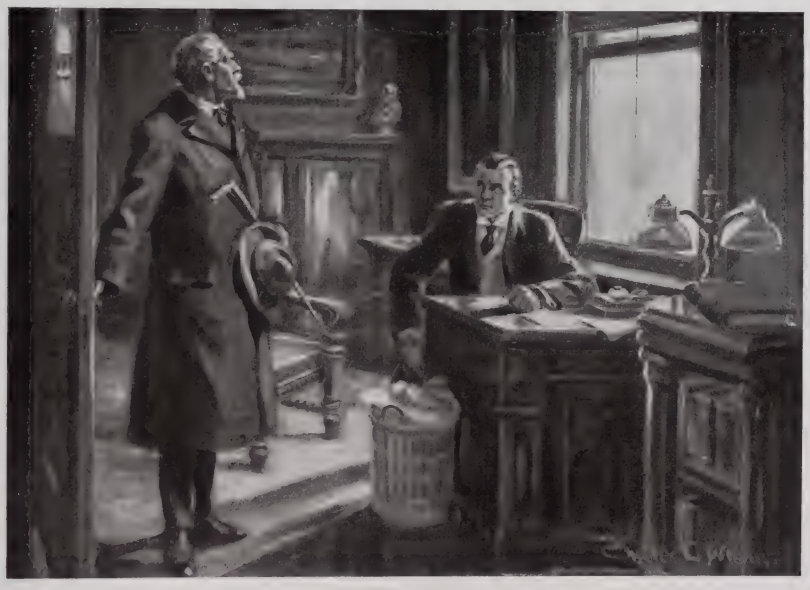
Fordyce knew him to the core, though they were of opposing parties, and in separate social worlds, knew him as a force that he must reckon with in future, for McGee was a man with an eye to future running, and the paper of his party had given two columns to his recent boasts that he could yet "take a whack at the governor's chair." Fordyce, strong in the success of the hour and conscious of his superiority in all the things that counted, yet had a moment of concern. He had high backers in this vivid Western city, and he was already chosen and set apart for further and more brilliant uses, and yet, in spite of his youth and his confidence in his own ability to "make good," he realized that any false step, any unwise move, might lose him the game for all time to come.

He stared at a rather gorgeous "visitor's chair," and laughed a little. It was wonderful how this game of politics got into one's blood! He'd been in training for it for seven years, and now they had let him loose in a big field of his own. He drew a long breath and got up, walking slowly to the window.

In the square below a small knot of loungers had gathered. The city was in workaday guise. Pale clerks and thin stenographers hurried across the asphalt. And six months ago how gay it had all been, the noisy, swaying crowds, the flashlights, the hoarse-voiced orators, the waving bunting and the bands! But that end of it was over.

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart.

He had been reading the Recessional that morning on his way down town and somehow, as applied to his own special case, the thing had haunted him; the shouting had died out, and his captains had departed, all but Evarts—he, of course, was still on deck and, well, everything.



"'It was mo', suh, than belief,' he said stiffly. 'It was faith, suh, and faith dies hard'"

He owed Evarts a lot—his past training, his present success; and all the brilliant future that was to open up—that, too, would be Evarts's gift. Fordyce had no thought of cutting loose from any of it; the thing couldn't be done. Evarts was just the moving finger that wrote upon the wall, and if anyone failed to understand, well, Evarts took the trouble to explain—and to be obeyed, that was all!

Fordyce threw back his head and laughed, then he went back to his desk again. His secretary had appeared in the doorway—

"A gentleman to see you, sir—he wouldn't give me his card. He said just a friend of Senator Evarts."

Fordyce ran his hand through some loose papers. "All right, Barty, show him in," and then he sat a moment, waiting. A friend of Evarts—they were many and various, but none could be denied.

It proved to be Robertson, of the Lloyd Robertson Company; and Fordyce stiffened at once. The man was Evarts's sworn enemy. But Robertson, suave and strangely at his ease, began to speak:

"This is not official," he said blandly, "in fact, Mr. Fordyce, it's quite the other way. Now that little matter of the company's, that affair of paving those blocks north of Dwyer Street, you of course understand that it was necessary to use it as a political issue of your campaign—you understand, of course, that Senator Evarts—"

Fordyce pushed his chair back. "Kindly leave Evarts's name out of it," he said distinctly. "And what I cannot understand, Mr. Robertson, is your referring to this matter at all—it was the issue of our campaign, and an issue of public and individual rights. We probed the transactions pretty thoroughly, and the senator, I think, aired his sentiments in a way to leave no doubt in the company's mind of his attitude. I am afraid you must consider the subject closed."

Robertson had drawn off a suède glove and was manipulating a fountain pen. "I think," he said dryly, "there is, well, a little misunderstanding. It was, as I said, a necessary political move, Mr. Fordyce, but merely that. He was leaning forward, gazing at Fordyce—"The senator, you see, happens to be one of our largest stockholders."

Fordyce regarded him blankly.

"We even thought," went on Robertson evenly, "you might like a few shares yourself. Evarts wrote us to offer them to you."

"What do you mean?" Fordyce had risen, keeping his self-control with an effort. Robertson had risen, too, the answer already on his lips.

"You must realize, Mr. Fordyce," he said, "that the airing of that series of contracts was a part of the game. It's a pretty big game, I know, and when one is new to it, as you are, some of the moves seem foolish. I'm not in politics myself, but the company is, in rather a heavy way. And when Evarts found it necessary to spoil the company's good name he promised to supply an equivalent!"

"In other words," Fordyce said quietly, "you—you bought him off?"

"Not exactly." Robertson was smiling. "He has been on our books for ten years."

Fordyce sat down again, but his face was a little pale. "Senator Evarts," he said, "is my friend, and, as you know, my political backer."

Robertson swept the air with two fingers. "He's the whole party."

Fordyce nodded. "He's the party, yes—in a way, and the party stands for certain big principles. I know—" Fordyce stammered, "it isn't always possible to—to carry them through, but bribery and graft and double dealing have got to be left out of the game I play! As for your statements about Evarts, you'll have to substantiate them, that's all!"

Robertson took time to light a cigar. "Perhaps," he said, "you would like to see the senator's note. It's a personal one, but I don't mind." He handed over a folded paper, and Fordyce frowned a little as he recognized the familiar handwriting.

"See Fordyce," it read, "as soon as you like. Tell him that I sent you. You may find him a trifle obstinate, but when you explain things he'll understand what he has to do. And I think it's only due to him that you put him down for one hundred shares in the company's stock. EVARTS."

Fordyce sat back in his chair; he was beginning to realize many things, one of them, that Evarts had constituted himself captain of Fordyce's soul!

Robertson leaned across and laid a folded paper on the corner of the desk. "You'll find it correct," he said laconically. "Certificate is made out for one hundred." He rose, pulling on his glove." The senator," he said slowly, "is a very remarkable man."

But Fordyce didn't answer; he was staring at the paper on his desk. When he looked up again, Robertson was gone.

Mechanically he reached over and let the paper slip between his fingers. So this was what men called a bribe! So simple a thing! He began to wonder what his wife would say when he told her that he was a stockholder in the company he had assailed in public so bitterly. His wife didn't know the game or the rules. To her it was just "serving one's country" to be alderman, or mayor, or president; he had had no such illusion; he knew he was in it for what he could get out of it, but he had at least intended to play fair.

He pulled out a private drawer, carefully placing the certificate inside and turning the key—he knew he was going to keep it. He got up, pacing the strip of Bokhara nervously; was it so dishonest after all? Would his opponents, in his position, have hesitated? There were two—one, Colonel Duplane, a relic of war days, chosen by the leaders of a Fusion ticket in collusion with Evarts, that he might turn the tide of a certain voting contingent away from the other big party, and so strengthen his own cause — a catspaw. Fordyce had seen him twice; once, years ago, in a military parade, riding ahead of a small company with tattered battle flags, and once on the eve of election. The other man, Brannigan, well, he wouldn't have stopped—unless it was to ask for a hundred more!

Fordyce, turning, heard Barty's voice expostulating in the outer office, and then another raised in protest, a voice with a Southern note in it—"And you tell him, suh, that it is Colonel Duplane, suh. That is all I want you to do."

Fordyce swung wide the door. "Colonel," he said, "won't you come in?" and Barty, with a little shrug, turned to his typing again.

"This is Mayor Fo'dyce, suh? Thank you! It's a disgrace, the way our public men, our great men—are hedged about, suh. It wasn't so in the old days!" The colonel was holding out his hand—" I wanted to see you, suh, to personally extend my felicitations. A despatch was not enough."

Fordyce smiled. "It's very good of you," he said.

"I wanted to say further," said the colonel, still standing, "that I'm glad you have beaten me, suh! I am old and you are young, but I have followed yo' careeh with interest, and youth can best serve our beloved country."

"Fordyce regarded him a moment; the military cut of the outer coat with its Grand Army button on the left breast. "You," he said, "have served it, colonel, in a way that may never be possible again."

"You mean this?" the colonel touched his button. "Well, suh, it was not the easiest way! I was a very young man, and a Virginian, suh, but I followed Grant into Vicksburg, and my brother was on the other side of those trenches."

Fordyce nodded. "I understand," he said.

The colonel sank into the gorgeous "visitor's chair." "I have spoken to Lincoln," he said, "and

Continued on next page

What Shall I Wear?

THIS question does not trouble the patron of the "NATIONAL." She has for her selection the whole of the season's desirable styles.

With the "NATIONAL" Style Book in your home, the only question for you will be: Which of all the new styles do I like best? What is most becoming to me?

The "NATIONAL" Style Book, sent to you free if you merely ask for it, shows all the new styles in every kind of apparel at prices that will save you dollars on your Spring apparel.

The fashions are beautiful but the prices are wonderful—are wonderfully low. You will be surprised, charmed with the extra additions you can make to your wardrobe without additional cost—providing only you shop at the "NATIONAL."

Your "NATIONAL" Style Book will show you

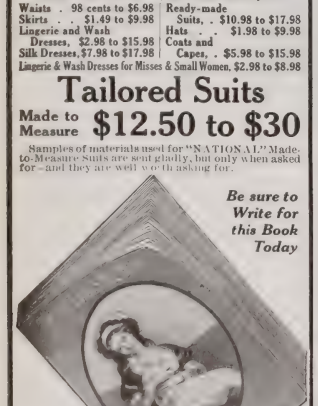
Waists . 98 cents to $6.98	Ready-made Suits, . $10.98 to $17.98
Skirts . . $1.49 to $9.98	Hats . . $1.98 to $9.98
Lingerie and Wash Dresses, $2.98 to $15.98	Coats and Capes, . $5.98 to $15.98
Silk Dresses, $7.98 to $17.98

Lingerie & Wash Dresses for Misses & Small Women, $2.98 to $8.98

Tailored Suits

Made to Measure $12.50 to $30

Samples of materials used for "NATIONAL" Made-to-Measure Suits are sent gladly, but only when asked for—and they are well worth asking for.



Be sure to Write for this Book Today

200 Pages of Newest Fashions

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and expressage on all our goods to any part of the world. Every "NATIONAL" Garment has the "NATIONAL" Guarantee Tag attached. This tag says that you may return any garment not satisfactory to you and we will refund your money and pay express charges both ways.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT CO.

218 West 24th Street, New York City

THE CATSPAW

Continued from preceding page

I knew and loved Robert E. Lee. And I tell you what, suh, when, in this last campaign, I got up on the platform and saw the crowds, those men, suh, and their devotion made me feel so small and inferior that I couldn't say a word!"

Fordyce stared at the Grand Army button. "Colonel," he said, "I'm almost sorry that you didn't win!"

The colonel bowed his head. "Thank you, suh—thank you—but I hadn't a chance, Mr. Fo'dyce. When they put me up I knew it, I told them so when they came to me out there in my little Illinois home. 'Boys,' I said, 'I'm just an old warhorse, turned out to grass—let me stay here,' and Ma'tin L. Stevens, he just stepped in and said, 'Colonel, yo' country needs you'—that ended it. I went into it, Mr. Fo'dyce, fo' all I was worth!"

Fordyce frowned. "I wish,'" he said again, "you had won."

The colonel smiled whimsically. "I don't know, suh. I'd have turned a good many things upside down! But I'll tell you what, suh, I'm proud of the fact that they chose me. I didn't mind losin' on that ticket"—he looked over at Fordyce. "It stood fo' big things, Mr. Fo'dyce! The men who backed me were pure and simple and honest, and when they put an old man like me on top just because I was honest, too, and loved my country, they gave me a decoration, suh, that I'll wear to my dyin' day!"

Fordyce stirred. Evarts and his crew, the men who had used this simple-hearted old soldier for their own uses—he could have smitten them, man by man, between the eyes! "Then you believe, colonel," he said slowly, "in honor—among men?"

The colonel slapped his knee. "Of co'se I do, suh, as I believe in my own honor, or yo' honor, Mr. Fo'dyce!" The colonel suddenly flushed. "In spite," he added gently, "of what false demagogues have said about yo' backer."

Fordyce stared at him a moment, his lips working into a twisted smile. The "Catspaw," then, was a dreamer of dreams! He looked away uneasily, to see again Evarts's handwriting on the wall. Slowly he turned in his chair. "I wish," he said, "colonel, I wish you were right!"

"And I am right, suh," the colonel insisted. "In this beloved country of ours there are ten thousand men who have not yet bent the knee to Baal!"

Fordyce stopped him. "I'm not one of them," he said, "Colonel Duplane. I've been out of that running—for the last half hour."

The colonel drew back a little. "I don't just happen, suh, to get yo' meaning."

"It's very plain," said Fordyce dryly. "I—have been obliged—to accept a bribe, that's all."

The office grew strangely silent; the world outside, with its pride of life and its strife of tongues, seemed all at once a city far removed and indefinite; inside there was only the beating of blood in Fordyce's temples, as he stared across at the old man. He was throwing himself on this man's honor, prompted to a confession that he had scarcely made to his own soul. Yet he knew that he was safe!

The colonel moved a trifle; his eyes were charging Fordyce with military directness. Suddenly he smiled sunnily. "I don't believe you, Mayor Fo'dyce," he said.

Fordyce was conscious of a spasm of pain between his brows. His wife would have answered him so, and smiled like that! "Nevertheless," he said slowly, "it is true. In my desk at this moment there are one hundred shares that have come to me as the price—well, of silence. I am going to keep them, Colonel Duplane."

The colonel rose to his feet. "Then, suh, I wouldn't change places with you, old man as I am, at this moment—fo' anything in God's universe!" He was fumbling with his coat, buttoning it across his breast.

Fordyce, a little pale, watched him. "I wonder," he said, "why I've told you anyhow! I should like to have kept—your belief."

The colonel, his hand on the door knob, paused. "It was mo', suh, than belief," he said stiffly. "It was faith, suh, and faith dies hard. I'll bid you, Mayor Fo'dyce, a very good mawnin.'"

Fordyce, when the door had clanged, went feverishly to his work again. Evarts figured in it rather largely, and the other men who had run him through. He turned from it with relief, to the fantastic duty of marrying a couple from the Italian quarter, enthusiastic bidders for this virtue of his office. Since they were the first, and since something in the shy, dark eyes of the bride reminded him of Marian, he handed her back the fee, adding to it from his wallet. But he cut short her vivid thanks, and Barty made quick work of their dismissal.

He lunched with one of Evarts's aides. They rode uptown to the "Raleigh," seeking a quiet corner at the end of the room, and Fordyce found himself listening uneasily to Evarts's emissary. He felt all at once conscious of the cords stretched across so many open ways. Evarts's "thou shalt not" loomed large upon his line of vision. There was to be a dinner that night, in honor of his installation, and Evarts wanted to be sure of his speech; he himself was up State, but would be there in time for its close. Meanwhile, there were certain guarded statements to be coupled with its grace of utterance, and certain omissions which at the last moment Evarts deemed wise.

"Look here, Manners," Fordyce interrupted, "we are sweeping aside precisely the things that carried us through!"

"Oh," Manners agreed, "if you put it that way, of course."

"Well," said Fordyce, "I don't like it."

Manners turned. "My dear chap, neither does Evarts—but there you are."

Fordyce frowned. "I shall use, in that speech, my own discretion—and I shall face those issues—as I think best," he said definitely. Then he went back to his office, but only to deny himself to all visitors.

As he sat heavily before his desk, or walked from end to end of the inner office, he could hear Barty's "The mayor cannot be disturbed." Barty was the one being who hedged him in, made him for the moment safe, even from Evarts! Evarts was becoming an obsession.

He sank down suddenly in his chair and stared across at the opposite wall, fancying he could read there Evarts's final word, "Obey!" It was a fine word—but always one's captains must be higher than one's own soul—able to lead one, at need, through shot and shell and smoke that baffled vision, over—he paused—the trenches! Suddenly there faced him, across the emptiness, a man with the brow of an idealist, under hair worn thin, the man who had known Lee and Lincoln, and who wore in his coat the button of the Grand Army of the Republic—the Catspaw! It sickened him with the sense of his own failure. He wheeled in his chair abruptly—

